

from the desk of
Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 1

Copyright © 2022 Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

All rights reserved.

ISBN: 978-1-956909-00-5

from the desk of
Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 1

FEBRUARY I, 2010MAY II, 2010

Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

CONTENTS

Chapter 1: Peculiar Indeed	1:1
This Blog	1:1
The Kingdom of Heaven Contrasted With Hell .	1:2
The Church and Apologetics	1:2
Words Matter	1:3
Questions and Answers	1:3
I Didn't Know	1:5
Principles and Rules	1:5
Email	1:6
Truth	1:8
Explanation	1:9
What's in a Name	1:10
Not for Entertainment	1:11
Daniel	1:12
Valentine's Day	1:12
Apostasy	1:13
Two Women	1:13
In Response to a Critic	1:17
Infidelity	1:17
Salesmanship	1:17
Personal Responsibility	1:18
BYU Visit	1:18
Second Anointing	1:20
After the Gold Rush	1:20
Who Can Be a Seer?	1:21
Peculiar	1:22
Social and Cultural "Rights"	1:23
What Have You Seen Lately?	1:25
Chapter 2: Grow in Light	1:27
Adam-ondi-Ahman	1:27
Slippery	1:29
Venus	1:34
Consider This	1:34
Visit to the Nephites	1:35
It's All About You	1:37
Truth – Anything More or Less	1:38
Self Government and Self Discipline	1:39
Comments	1:40
Jumping Out a Window	1:41

This is Important	1:44
A comment on Adam-ondi-Ahman	1:44
Increasing Light	1:45
What's in a Name?	1:46
Baptism of Fire	1:47
Popularity or Persecution?	1:48
The Telestial	1:51
Argument	1:53
A Tennessee Ward and the Lord	1:53
Elder Oaks at Harvard	1:54
Becoming One.	1:55
Missionaries in Chile	1:60
Trials	1:61
Elder Oaks	1:61
Keep the Commandments.	1:65
Cool Change	1:66
Chapter 3: Angels and Mysteries	1:69
The Sacrifice	1:69
His Words Are Commandments.	1:70
Conference on Chiasmus	1:72
Temple Work.	1:73
Judging	1:74
Declining Numbers	1:75
Repent and Come Unto Me.	1:78
How Beautiful Upon the Mountains	1:79
True Blue, Through and Through	1:80
An Emphasis on Doctrine	1:81
A Lifetime of Service.	1:83
Heeding the Warning.	1:83
Institutional Charisma	1:84
You Just Never Know	1:85
Angels.	1:85
Wo, Wo, Wo	1:86
IMO (in my opinion)	1:88
Alma 41:15	1:88
My Scriptures	1:88
With Respect to the Leaders of The Church	1:89
Amber Dubois	1:90
Genius	1:91
Chapter 4: What Guarantee Do We Have?	1:93
Nadab and Abihu	1:93
Raising the Bar	1:94

Equinox	1:95
Reincarnation	1:96
Baseball Season	1:96
All Things Bear Testimony	1:97
Ordinances	1:97
Christ's Victory	1:99
A Little Leaven.	1:99
Patriarch Smith.	1:99
Powerful Doctrines.	1:100
Seriously	1:100
Patriarch	1:100
Do We Have a Guarantee?	1:104
Judgment.	1:105
It's YOUR Eternal Salvation	1:107
Posted by the Moderator	1:108
Accuser of Our Brethren	1:110
The Lord is in Charge.	1:112
Samson.	1:113
Different Interpretations	1:114
True and Living	1:115
Concourses of Angels.	1:116
Explanation.	1:116
Shepherds of Israel.	1:117
Amos Was No Prophet's Son	1:118
Daylight Savings.	1:119
Disgraced.	1:120
Christ's Touch.	1:122
Common Consent.	1:123
Why a Teleprompter?.	1:124
Valiant	1:124
Ask, Seek and Knock.	1:125
Faith, Belief, Knowledge	1:126
Adam and Eve	1:126
It is Enough For One to Seek Him	1:127
Strangers and Angels	1:128
Nicodemus	1:128
Twelve Oxen	1:130
How I Study the Scriptures	1:131
Weekend Movie.	1:132
Dumbing Down?	1:133
Satan Fell From Heaven.	1:133
Continual Worship.	1:135
Prophets and Entropy	1:135

Witch of Endor	1:136
Stake Conference	1:137
A Public Service.	1:137
On a Scale of 1 to 10	1:137
Priesthood	1:139
Heroes	1:140
The Importance of Personal Revelation.	1:141
The Problem With Too Much Praise.	1:141
Near Death Experiences	1:142
Chapter 5: Truth Is Independent	1:145
Godliness	1:145
The Education of All of Us	1:146
White Stone and a New Name.	1:147
First Principles of the Gospel	1:150
Truth	1:152
Abinadi's Message.	1:153
Central America or North America?.	1:155
HBO and Politicians	1:156
All is Well in Zion	1:156
An Explanation.	1:157
Have You Heard Christ Sing?	1:158
What a Difference an Inning Makes.	1:159
The Word of God	1:160
Adoptionism	1:161
Joseph's First Vision	1:162
Process Not Event.	1:162
President Packer's Testimony	1:165
Believe it is Possible	1:172
Spring Baseball.	1:172
Cycles	1:173
God of Truth	1:174
"dried up with thirst"	1:174
The Fruit at the Bottom of the Bowl	1:175
The Lamb and the Lion	1:176
General Conference	1:177
Pollutions	1:177
Just the Commandments.	1:178
Boyd K. Packer's Testimony, Part 2	1:180
Tithing.	1:181
Repent and Be Humble	1:182
Various Creation Accounts	1:183
Where Do Your Fast Offerings Go?.	1:184
Ideas and Thoughts	1:185

Las Vegas	1:186
Creation Ceremonies	1:187
Section 132	1:187
Chapter 6: My Glasses Aren't Rose Colored	1:193
"What it Means and What it Does Not Mean"	1:193
Encouragement and Example.	1:194
Unique and Individual Experiences	1:194
David Christensen YouTube	1:195
April 6.	1:195
President Monson	1:195
Presiding Patriarchs	1:196
D&C 46:13–14	1:197
"Schizophrenic?"	1:198
Chapter 7: D&C 132	1:201
D&C 132, Part 2.	1:201
D&C 132, Part 3.	1:205
D&C 132, Part 4.	1:207
D&C 132, Part 5	1:210
D&C 132, Conclusion.	1:213
Chapter 8: Grow Where You Are Planted	1:221
Outgrowing the Church	1:221
Creation Accounts	1:222
Holy Ghost	1:223
That Was Funny	1:224
Why Not the Cross?	1:224
Fast and Testimony	1:226
Current State of Things	1:227
Follow Christ In All Things.	1:230
Missionary in Kenya.	1:232
Chapter 9: Humor Requires Underlying Truth	1:235
THE Remnant	1:235
The Individual and Truth	1:236
Record Keeping.	1:238
My Calculations	1:239
A Parable	1:240
Mark Twain.	1:242
The Battle is the Lord's.	1:242
Mosiah 18:8–10	1:247
Forward or Backward.	1:248
A Confession	1:251
LDS Books	1:253
Egypt and Egyptian	1:256

Violence and the Violent	1:259
A Student of the Lord	1:261
BYU Women’s Rugby	1:263
Pax Americana	1:263
Seeking for and Obtaining Gifts.	1:267
Truth = Truth	1:269
Why The Second Comforter ?	1:271
Lectures on Faith No. 6	1:274
FYI	1:278
Chapter 10: The Traditions of Men	1:281
The Traditions of Men, Part 1	1:281
The Traditions of Men, Part 2, Continued.	1:286
The Traditions of Men, Part 3, Continued.	1:293
Kim Smith Concert.	1:297
Ultimate Source	1:298
“ . . . for it shall be sweet unto them.”	1:299
Who Will Save You?	1:302
Faithful to the Gospel of Jesus Christ	1:303
What Can They Share?	1:304
What Does it Mean to Possess Your Soul?	1:305
Chapter 11: Awake and Arise	1:309
Awake and Arise	1:309
Get Busy!	1:314
God is no Respector of Persons	1:316
Opposing Wickedness Through Violence	1:318
Holy Ghost vs. The Holy Spirit	1:320
A “friend” of God.	1:323
Abraham and Sarah	1:326
Repentance and Redemption	1:327
Communication From the Lord	1:329
Sacred Things	1:333
Eternal Life and the Covenant Marriage	1:334
Two Ships Pass in the Night	1:339
Purpose of Teaching.	1:341
The Same is Required of All	1:343
Clarification	1:347
Blessed are the Peacemakers	1:349
Is it Your Hope to be a Part of Zion?	1:355
I Am A Fool	1:359
The Process is Everything	1:360
Belief Becomes Knowledge	1:362
Conference on Chiasmus	1:364
Qualifying for the Blessings	1:364

Go About Doing Good	1:366
Chapter 12: Philosophies of Men	1:369
Philosophies of Men.....	1:369
This is Why I Didn't Like it	1:371
Constantine and Correlation.....	1:376
Correlating the Chaos	1:384
Peoplehood	1:388
Micah Chapter 3	1:393
Mother's Day.....	1:395
"Of Strong Faith and a Firm Mind".....	1:395
Why Wait?	1:397
Charge to Twelve	1:400
What Lack I Yet?	1:407
Be Careful What You Ask For	1:409

PREFACE

These volumes have been assembled, laid out, and made print-ready by the work of volunteers. I've said that only about 30% of the effort to create a book is in the writing, and the other 70% is in the labor to bring it into print. The conscientious way the voluntary work has been done is appreciated most of all by the one who wrote this material. That deserves first mention in this Preface.

These volumes were written over years, and were posts on a website when first written. Over time the website became an easy forum to deal with some important issues that perhaps deserved to be treated in a more formal way. The voluntary effort to compile the writings into a published set accomplishes that objective.

The contents have been divided into chapters and individual posts were given titles. These divisions appear in the Table of Contents to help readers navigate through the volumes.

Although the Internet today is widely available, there are increasingly loud social and political voices urging widespread censorship of content. Ideas that threaten a singular viewpoint are increasingly under attack. The time may come when any website devoted to religious and moral values will be censored and unavailable.

In addition to censorship, there are malicious characters that use ransom-ware to capture websites, and other computer viruses that corrupt or delete material. Given the uncertainty of any electronic database, it is prudent to make a printed copy of anything valuable to preserve it from corruption or loss.

The original content of the website has been preserved with no material changes. Despite best efforts, however, there were typographical errors and errant dates that have been caught and corrected in this publication. Also, some of the spontaneous spoken materials that were transcribed in the way they were originally said have been edited to make them more readable. Their content was left unchanged, but run-on sentences were reworked to make them suitable for a reader.

The website continues to have material added to it, and therefore this set cuts off at the time of publication. If time and resources permit it, another volume capturing on-going content may be added in the future.

October 30, 2021

Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

Sandy, Utah

INTRODUCTION

So long as the original, smoldering, light of the Restoration remains, all that is required to ignite a new fire is the breath of the Spirit blowing on the spark. That breath of life comes from the word of the Lord. To the extent these volumes reflect the Lord's word, the credit for stirring the reader to remember Him and His Gospel belongs to Him.

A Note to the Reader:

This multi-volume series covers blog entries beginning in 2010. Scripture references in the text refer to the LDS versions of scripture found in the King James Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine & Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. Beginning about March 2018 the scripture cites change to the Restoration Edition of the scriptures. Cites of the Restoration Edition scriptures are typically denoted with OC, NC and T&C references e.g., (NC Matt. 8:10), or alternately (1 Ne. 1:22 RE) setting them apart from the former LDS scripture version references. For those interested, a scripture reference conversion tool that allows navigation between the various scripture references and versions can be accessed at: <https://scriptures.info/Scriptures/ReferenceTranslator>

CHAPTER 1

Peculiar Indeed

FEBRUARY 2010

FEBRUARY 1, 2010

This Blog

I'm trying to put into a blog what would require many hours of individual emails and conversations. Hopefully this will both answer the many questions I keep receiving and allow me to stay productive with my family, job and Church responsibilities.

COMMENTS:

Kelly Brad Cox · JUNE 19, 2010 AT 1:06 AM

Denver,

Do you think parents should allow their children to have premarital relations in their parents home with the parents knowledge? If not how should this issue be handled so as not to offend the children or if that is not possible what is the best way to handle it so as to not cause a huge blow up where the children feel their free agency is being violated? I myself believe the parents should not allow children to have relations in their home but it is a very touchy issue causing many problems when the issue is brought up. I feel this is a problem that many parents in the church are struggling with right now. I know of three instances in my own experience where this has occurred and each time it has been the cause of much anguish and problems.

Kelly Brad Cox

Denver Snuffer · JULY 2, 2010 AT 2:06 PM

Kelly,

Perhaps that questions might be better asked over on this blog: <http://mormonmatters.org/author/joanna-brooks/>. Joanna Brooks answers all kinds of questions like that.

Truthfully, I don't feel qualified to address that subject for someone else.

Best of luck

Denver Snuffer

FEBRUARY 1, 2010

The Kingdom of Heaven Contrasted With Hell

It is a misnomer to speak of the “kingdom of the Devil” because the description presumes something more organized than is the case. It is difficult to organize when fear, hatred and anger are the primary motivations. Love is a far more cohesive, creative and loyalty producing motivation. All that Satan does is designed to destroy itself, as well as all those who follow him.

FEBRUARY 2, 2010

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Apologetics

I am a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and am loyal to it as an institution and as the proponent of a faith. Although I am keenly aware of the flaws any body of men and women will display, those weaknesses inherent in the human condition do not diminish the greatness of an institution. I believe in constructive explanations about shortcomings, ways to understand or process what appear to be flaws. In that sense only do I believe in apologetics. To deny the existence of shortcomings is, I believe, to depart from the warnings given to us by Christ, Nephi, Mormon, Moroni, the Apostle Paul, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and others. I like the comment made by President Hugh B. Brown about us Mormons: “We are a lay church; and this gives rise to much mediocrity.”

It helps to have a sense of humor if you’re going to try to be a faithful Mormon. It also requires thick skin.

FEBRUARY 3, 2010

Words Matter

I worry about things being attributed to me from private conversations or speaking events where the public was invited. I choose words with great care. The difference between truth and error can be quite a fine line in some important matters. Therefore, when I say, teach, write or answer a question with exact language in mind, and the listener or reader does not retain the distinctions when they attempt to repeat what I’ve said, I wind up being confronted with things I never said, don’t believe and would never teach. One of the reasons for this blog is so I can control what is attributed to me. I’m very willing to be held to account for what I teach or write. But I’m not willing to be held accountable for someone else’s understanding or partial recollection of statements I have made.

FEBRUARY 9, 2010

Questions and Answers

I get asked a lot of questions. The other day someone asked how “to write only what the Spirit directs?”

Answer:

That requires something quite subtle and hard to keep. The presence of the Spirit, its constant companionship, guidance and influence is so refined and difficult a matter to put into words that even the scriptures do not give an adequate account of the process.

Obedience is required, but there are obedient people who are utterly without the Spirit. Obedience can make a person rigid and unyielding, when they ought instead to be meek and pliable.

Discipline is required, but not if it makes a person dogmatic. The word “disciple” is derived from discipline, but a disciple follows the Master. A disciplined man can be on his own errand, rather than the Lord’s.

These words, like so many others fail to capture just how great and fine a balance is required for the Spirit to provide direction.

Meekness is required, but not in the way the world thinks of meekness. I’ve tried to explain the true quality of meekness shown by the Lord and His followers in Beloved Enos. It involves power, strength, and certitude.

The process almost defies words. It is very real, in fact tangible. But the way in which you know it to be right involves an ability to feel the balance, taste the good, harmonize with the greater intelligence which pervades everything that is. It comes from Him. It is Him, in a very real sense. All things were made by Him, bear record of Him, and are a testimony of His way.

Writing the words of eternal life require someone to have eternal life. They can still be mortal, but they need the promise of eternal life. So I suppose the Lord’s admonition: “Seek first the kingdom of God, and all things shall be added thereto” really answers the question. Or as told to Hyrum: “Seek not to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word.” The one must precede the other. At least the statement of the Lord to His disciples, and the revelation to Hyrum Smith seem to indicate as much.

FEBRUARY 9, 2010

I Didn't Know

I was amused to find that my wife (who physically maintains this blog for me) had already made it active. I've been sending stuff to her to post, but figured it would be a while before this actually became something available for readers.

I'm also surprised that some people have already found it. I got an email today thanking me for it. So I did a search and found the blog is actually up and running and can be found through Google.

OK, then, welcome to this blog. If you're reading it, you've found it too. I'll try and add something at least every few days. Hopefully something that will matter.

FEBRUARY 10, 2010

Principles and Rules

Question by someone: What is the difference between "principles" and "rules"?

Answer by me:

Assuming you define "Principles" as the underlying reason for the commandment, then you're also speaking about what the Apostle Paul called the "Spirit of the law" as opposed to the "letter of the law." He said the "letter killeth" but the "Spirit giveth life." I think he was right. Any rule can be abused. Any rule can become broken even when it is being kept. Rules can become harsh taskmasters, inflicting punishment when they were designed to bless. The underlying principle, however, always seeks to bless. The underlying principle was designed as a blessing. When the rule begins to oppress, then it should be abandoned in favor of the principle.

Rules have and do change. But principles remain constant. The brutality of the rules was exposed by Christ when He healed on the Sabbath. He did that specifically to demonstrate the futility of ignoring the principle, while only adhering to the law/rule.

In the English common law tradition there were cases “at law” and cases “in equity.” They divided the Courts into separate forums, where courts of law could not do equity. But courts of equity could ignore the provisions of law, modify them, or establish a higher principle which resolved fairly a dispute despite some legal impediment to the relief sought. That tradition follows the Lord’s example.

Principles ennoble. Rules preoccupy.

FEBRUARY 10, 2010

Email

Below is an email I am going to send in response to any new emails. I regret having to do this, but as should be apparent from the content below, I am forced to do so:

Over the past few years I have had the pleasure of meeting, talking, and associating with many new people. I have had the opportunity to engage in meaningful discussions about the gospel, about books I have written, and about other subjects that help move along the truth of the restored gospel. I have been contacted by people far and wide who have read what I have written, and as a result, have wanted to meet or talk with me. Some people have wanted to meet over lunch on a weekday. Others have come to my office to meet with me. Some have made appointments, others have just dropped in. I have spent countless hours talking with people on the phone. There are those who have wanted to attend the temple with me, and I have made arrangements to do so. This has been a great blessing to me. However, it has grown now to the point that I can no longer accommodate the many requests.

On any given day, I now receive dozens of email questions from people I know or am acquainted with, as well as people I don't know, who want answers to questions they have as a result of something I have written or for other various reasons. I've been asked to meet at the temple, to come to someone's home and talk, to allow someone to come to my house to meet with me, to visit in my office, or to do other things for them. I have been given articles, manuscripts, plays, DVD's, video tapes, books, letters, and other media and asked to read, edit, and/or give an opinion about the materials. I have been asked to speak on numerous occasions at various functions, which I have done on a few very rare occasions. Right now there are over a dozen requests to speak at places in Utah, California and Arizona.

I have sincerely tried to be available to everyone in whatever capacity they have asked me. I have given up a great deal of time in order to respond to requests when people have sought me out. I have enjoyed these wonderful associations and opportunities. Many of these have been blessings to me. I have learned much and I love the opportunity to discuss, teach and learn the truth, and to be taught by others.

It is with regret however, that I will no longer be able to make myself available in this way. Last Monday was when it reached a point I decided I could no longer continue in the same way. Before the day was over I spent six hours answering emails related to books I have written. I have a wife and several children who need my attention, and an active law practice which requires my full time work. My family and business suffer from neglect when I spend excessive time answering Gospel questions. I employ 6 people whose families depend upon my productivity at work. They have been very patient with my diversions over the last several years, but they deserve better from me as an employer.

Despite the inability to be available directly, my wife and I have come up with a plan which will help solve the problem, I hope. My wife has agreed to maintain a website where I will post answers to questions I have received over the years, comments or things that I believe may be edifying, or whatever I think may be beneficial as a result of something that comes from a reader. I will try to update it at least weekly.

The address will be: <http://denversnuffer.blogspot.com>

Thank you for understanding these problems. I hope the solution will still allow me to be of service to anyone who asks something of me.

Kindest Regards, Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

FEBRUARY 11, 2010

Truth

When we receive truth we are expected to live our lives in conformity with the truth we've received. We shouldn't expect to receive more if we do not live what we've already been given. Living in conformity with such truth as you already have is also always required to avoid deception. It is simply not possible to harvest additional light while refusing to live the light already given. False spirits visit with those who invite them by their misconduct, rebellion or wickedness. Hence the need to constantly re-evaluate how you live and the choices you make.

FEBRUARY 11, 2010

Explanation

I was asked a question which provoked this explanation of the book, The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil:

The book was written to cause the reader internal reflection. There really isn't a "punch line" in the book. My testimony is essentially incidental; merely affirming that the principles taught in the book are true.

I worry that reading only the testimony, divorced from the explanation of how someone moves along in personal progress to the point they receive that personal witness, will make it just another "feel good" read. The book is a manual. It isn't designed to make people feel good. It is designed to get them to do something.

I worry that whenever people read of others' spiritual experiences they assume that because they have read about such things they are somehow "included" or "worthy" and that they are linked to God as a result. The book is designed to awaken people to their own lack of an existing link: then to cause them to resolve to establish that link for themselves.

So I think taking only the testimony alone contradicts the whole purpose for which it was written. The testimony was merely a brief, nine word ratification of the book's teachings. The focus was, and is, on receiving an audience with Christ. The book is a manual for the reader to do that for themselves. The reader, not the author, is the focus of the book. Indeed, with only brief exceptions, my personal presence intrudes into the book to highlight how to do something wrong. Then the book explains how to get it right.

FEBRUARY 12, 2010

What's in a Name

In response to a question asked today:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a temporary institution which will cease to exist after this life. There is no vision, revelation, scripture or statement promising us that the church as an institution will continue to exist after mortality. What the scriptures, visions, and revelations do tell us about the eternal description of the saved is that it is “the Church of the Firstborn” or “the Church of the Lamb.” Membership in that group is separate from membership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Nephi uses “Church of the Lamb” (see e.g., 1 Ne. 14:12) to describe the latter-days group over whom the Lord will watch. Interestingly, although Joseph had this revelation before him when he organized the church, he did not choose the “Church of the Lamb” as the organization’s name.

When modern revelation refers to those who inherit the Celestial Glory, it calls them members of the “Church of the Firstborn” (see, e.g., D&C 76:67 also 93:22). Those who are chosen in our day to belong to the Church of the Firstborn are shown only one way in which that takes place. In a revelation given to Joseph Smith while translating the New Testament, Section 77, Joseph gave this explanation of the latter-day 144,000 saved persons in verse 11: “they are they who are ordained out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, by the angels to whom is given power over the nations of the earth, to bring as many as will come to the church of the Firstborn.”

At the time Joseph received the explanation recorded in Section 77 (March 1832) the church had existed for over two years. When the official name was given in 1838 (D&C 115:4) the name chosen for the earthly, temporary organization was The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints — not the Church of the Firstborn.

The Church of the Firstborn exists on the “other side” so to speak. You qualify to get there by how you live here. But you have to be invited into that church by the “angels to whom is given power” to extend that invitation.

FEBRUARY 12, 2010

Not for Entertainment

I was reading in the first volume of the Joseph Smith Papers and came across a letter written by Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde upon their return to Kirtland after their mission to England.

During the interim things had broken down in Kirtland with lawsuits, cross accusations and apostasy. Although the missions had been a great success, with more than fifteen-hundred converts joining the Church, when they returned they found the existing Saints in disarray.

They were immediately confronted with criticism of Joseph and other Church leaders by the residents of Kirtland. In the letter to Joseph Smith, received on July 6, 1838, they responded to the criticism they were hearing with a comment which stood out to me. It would make a good motto:

“The faults of our brethren is poor entertainment for us” (JSP, Vol. 1, p. 280).

I like that. I think it is still good enough advice to remain true over a century and a half later: The faults of the Brethren are poor entertainment for any of us.

FEBRUARY 13, 2010

Daniel

When Daniel saw the Lord he “alone saw the vision” (Dan 10:7) and not those who were with him. The others felt the great presence (v. 7) but saw nothing. The physical effect upon Daniel was exhausting. He collapsed and had to be strengthened (v. 10). Three times he collapsed and three times he was touched by the Lord to strengthen him (vs. 10,16,18). It was real and VERY physical. Yet he alone saw the Lord. It is always so. Hence Paul’s comment “whether in the body I cannot tell; or whether out of the body I cannot tell” (2 Cor. 12:2). It IS physical. But those who are excluded merely feel the terrible presence, and see nothing. Those included are like Daniel and Joseph Smith, left exhausted from such encounters (see JS-H 1:48).

FEBRUARY 14, 2010

Valentine’s Day

Today is Valentine’s Day. Although I’m hundreds of miles away, my thoughts are with my wife. David and Solomon clearly never found a wife to be their equal, helpmeet, love and joy. I pity them. I have she who completes me; my queen and high priestess, love and companion, wise counselor and faithful friend. She is the standard against which all other women are measured, and all others found to be wanting. She is home.

I have yet to see a marriage I think the equal of my own.

The final parable in Ten Parables begins deliberately. I hope readers realize how important that discussion is to the way things really are.

FEBRUARY 15, 2010

Apostasy

I was asked whether those who are in the middle of an apostasy can detect that it is underway.

Yes and no: Yes, as to isolated individuals. No, as to the institutional mindset or they would have done something about it. The Great Apostasy began sometime during the second century. But you have to get down to the Protestant fathers in the 1500's and thereafter before there is any widespread shouting about what has been lost. For the intervening thirteen centuries people respected authority, and trusted that the leaders had the keys to save them.

I can't imagine the courage it took for Martin Luther to refuse to back down when he was confronted with thirteen centuries of history telling him he was wrong. We really do owe a debt of gratitude to him, and those who followed after, for ultimately establishing religious freedom. Americans more than any other people are the direct beneficiaries of that courage.

FEBRUARY 16, 2010

Two Women

TWO WOMEN

A Parable by Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

Once there were two women.

One was born to privilege, whose family had great wealth. The other, named Martha, was born poor.

They both grew up and at length Martha married, but the woman of privilege never did marry. As adults both women felt the need for motherhood.

Martha bore seven children.

The woman of privilege spent seven years in college studying child development and education, eventually receiving her Ph.D., but never married, nor had a child.

Now as coincidence would have it, the woman of privilege inherited her parents' home and moved back into the wealthy neighborhood in which she was raised.

Martha's family needed more room and searched for a house. They found a modest home located in wealthy neighborhood which had once been a servant's. Now the servant's home needed repairs, and few were interested in a home which, in comparison with the others around it, seemed merely a servant's residence.

Martha however, believed there was an advantage for her children to grow up among the children of greater privilege and therefore purchased the unwanted house.

And so it was that the woman of privilege and Martha came to live in the same neighborhood.

Martha, ever eager to learn more, had read books to better understand parenting. She was surprised to learn one of her favorite teachers lived in her neighborhood.

As coincidence would further have it, both the woman of privilege and Martha were called upon to serve together in teaching neighborhood children. They spent many hours together, but oftentimes did not agree.

For Martha, the experience of raising her own children led her to view things differently than the woman of privilege whose experience was based upon study, borrowed understanding and the science of others.

After six years, Martha concluded the conflicts between them were insurmountable.

In the seventh year, Martha concluded that if the woman of privilege could gaze into the eyes of her own children for but five minutes, she would know more than she did now, notwithstanding the many years of study which she had devoted to child development and education.

In the eighth year, Martha concluded it was her responsibility to teach the woman of privilege, and so the occupant of the servant's house undertook the burden of teaching the needy but unwilling.

It was a role that would require many years, with only limited success. Pride is unbecoming in a pupil; and meekness ever required of a teacher.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · FEBRUARY 24, 2010 AT 1:00 AM

You point out well in most of your books that we can learn truth but that doesn't mean we get to teach it. We need to be lead by the Spirit to teach truth.

I believe this principle applies to all truth and not just to the mysteries of godliness. In my experience, it's wrong to teach people things before they're ready to hear it. To teach them prior to their being ready (or prior to being led to do so by the Spirit) just sets them up to be condemned. They hear stuff they aren't ready to handle and that makes them stumble even more. Even the simple Word of Wisdom is in this category.

I don't think it's enough that Martha knows the truth. If the Spirit is directing her to teach the privileged woman, that's a different matter.

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 25, 2010 AT 11:59 AM

This is a subject which the scriptures raise and we all need to resolve for ourselves. Alma's teaching about the balance between what you know and what you teach found in Alma 10:9-11 is just one place where the issue is raised. Included in Moses' endowment teachings, restored through Joseph Smith, and inserted into the narrative is the warning:

“And now they are spoken unto you. Show them not unto any except them that believe” (Moses 1:42; see also 4:32). Yet the account now appears in the Pearl of Great Price and can be read by anyone.

Hugh Nibley remarked that the greatest protection for the mysteries is the general disinterest.

A 10th Century Muslim teacher named Al-Ghazali preserved a saying from Jesus Christ which taught: “He who bestows knowledge on the ignorant wastes it, And he who withholds it from the worthy has done them wrong.”

The issue only arises when someone is in possession of sacred knowledge. Anyone who has attended the Temple becomes qualified to confront the issue. Of course, there are other ways of attaining to sacred knowledge which should be guarded. But the issue finally comes down to two questions:

1. Is it the kind of thing which is absolutely prohibited from being revealed, except at a certain place where the information is only to be discussed? If so, then the prohibition ought to be respected at all times and in all places, except where it is permitted to be used.
2. Is it the kind of pearl which ought not be cast before swine? If so, then the issue comes down to whether the discussion is with a swine. If so, then it will do them no good if you give it to them. If not, you have done them wrong by withholding.

The chief defect in handling sacred knowledge lies in the inabilities of the teacher. All great truths are simple, as was demonstrated in The Second Comforter. I am going to add a comment to the main board today on this issue. But in the hands of a great teacher, such as Christ, truth becomes a melody woven into a great hymn, which causes the listener to rejoice and exclaim in a chorus: “Hosanna!” In the hands of a clumsy teacher even great truths are so awkwardly put, so poorly explained that even a worthy student will have trouble accepting it.

FEBRUARY 16, 2010

In Response to a Critic

In response to a critic of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

I believe Joseph Smith was a prophet, and you do not. I'm content to let you disbelieve. Why are you not content to let me believe? One of us is clearly mistaken, but I am content with both my belief and your disbelief.

Of the two of us, I think your hostility toward my position reveals an underlying insecurity about your confidence in your position.

I am prepared to be everlastingly judged on the basis of my beliefs. I insist the Lord has every right to hold me accountable for what I believe, do, think, say and how I behave.

FEBRUARY 17, 2010

Infidelity

If a man is unfaithful to his wife, he will be dishonest in his business dealings and in his other relationships. Hence the saying: "an adulterer is a liar." The two go together.

FEBRUARY 17, 2010

Salesmanship

Recognizing a problem is not solving it in the same way that a diagnosing an illness is not treating it.

It is always the first step, however, to recognize a defect. We don't solve a lot of problems because we fail to acknowledge their existence.

Then there are those who will argue that a defect is not really a problem, but a feature. Don't be fooled by salesmanship. Defects are never features.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 AT 6:46 PM

This was a comment in response to a question about problems with the LDS Church.

I think it is always more helpful to be positive. Whether there are problems or not, we are better off discussing how to improve. However, we cannot do that without recognizing that there are some problems.

FEBRUARY 17, 2010

Personal Responsibility

I have tried to lessen the burden imposed upon Church leadership in the books I have written. The Saints need to be more accountable for their own progress and understanding. The books impose responsibility upon the reader to establish their own communication with God, and then to assume responsibility for their own progress.

Whatever intelligence we attain unto in this life will rise with us in the next. Seeking to gain in intelligence, or light and truth, is always individual, never collective.

FEBRUARY 18, 2010

BYU Visit

I need to preface my remarks below with this: My son attended a Catholic High School for a year and had the wonderful experience of being in the minority there. I have lifelong friends who are Catholic. My family was Baptist and my sister remains a devoted Baptist. I have friends of many faiths, or no faith at all. Some friends have been LDS, and lost their faith altogether.

Some have converted from LDS to Catholic. All these wonderful people are valued friends. I attend annually a Presbyterian service blessing the Scottish clans with a dear friend. My friendships have nothing to do with the friend's faith.

Now, that having been said, I was down at BYU about a week ago. [While there, I was surprised to find that several of my books were for sale in the BYU Bookstore. Somehow I thought Benchmark Books in Salt Lake was THE local distributor.]

While walking about the campus I was reminded just how much I like being a Latter-day Saint. We're quirky, even peculiar people. There's a lot about us to laugh about. But underneath it all Latter-day Saints really try hard, in our strange way, to be good, decent people. The struggle to be that is met with frequent failure. But the exercise is good.

Devotion to any faith is good for the souls of mankind. In many ways we are not at all superior to other groups. I remember the talk given by Pres. Faust about the killings of the young girls in the Amish school a few years ago, which was followed by the compassion of the Amish victims' families to the widow and children of the murderer. If we were to hold up a contemporary group in the United States who most succeed in living a Christ-like life, it would likely be the Amish. Nevertheless, I really like being a Latter-day Saint and in fellowshiping and struggling with my fellow Saint. I find it joyful. I love the Saints. Even as I sense very keenly our many shortcomings. For me, it is still joyful to live as a Latter-day Saint.

FEBRUARY 18, 2010

Second Anointing

I've gotten numerous questions this last week on the subject of the "second anointing" or "second sealing." This is not a subject which I think invites a lot of open discussion. I've intentionally avoided it in my books.

Here's what I think is appropriate to explain: It is an explanation of what is required to get to the point you are prepared to meet the Lord. It is essentially a manual. It stops short of explaining what the Lord, in His on-going ministry to mankind, will do to prepare the individual for what comes next. That is His ministry. The Holy Ghost brings you to the Lord. The Lord brings you to the Father. That book was written to help you come to Him.

Beloved Enos is an explanation of what the results are, once someone has received the Lord's ministry. It takes Enos' record and uses it as a basis for the explanation.

Between the text of The Second Comforter and Beloved Enos, what is omitted is a description of the sacred ordinances involved in what is termed "the second anointing." I do not feel inclined to go into that.

FEBRUARY 19, 2010

After the Gold Rush

I've been a Neil Young fan since his Buffalo Springfield days. Among his acts of kindness over the years, he saved Lionel Trains from bankruptcy in 1995, because he is a model train fan. That affection grew from his relationship with his autistic son.

In any event, here is an A Cappella version of his After the Gold Rush song; one of the great anthems of modern rock. I found this on YouTube and thought it memorable.

(link: <https://youtu.be/d6BzTC-Q6Nqo>)

FEBRUARY 19, 2010

Who Can Be a Seer?

I was asked recently.

“Who can become a seer?”

I answered this:

You could probably substitute “seer” for “prophet” in Moses’ lament: “Would to God all men were [seers]”. The purpose of seership is the same as any other gift of the Spirit: to acquire knowledge of truth. And, assuming “God giveth liberally to all men,” as James promised us, it would follow this was among the things He intended all men to experience.

Read the description of the conditions of post-mortal residence in the presence of God given in Section 130. The “seership” experience there is commonplace. The “sea of glass,” or earth on which they dwell is a great Urim and Thummim, as well as the “white stone” given to them. The result is that ALL occupants of that sphere are seers. Accordingly, we should assume that we obtain our first instructions here to prepare us for living there. Seership, being necessary for life there, is something we ought to expect to be included in the Lord’s tutelage while we are all here.

ALL of us are to “covet the best gifts” on the one hand; and on the other “there is no gift greater” than seership. (That’s Paul and Ammon being quoted.) It follows necessarily, therefore, that we should be seeking to have some experience with this gift here in mortality.

FEBRUARY 20, 2010

Peculiar

The gentiles seem determined to end their reign. According to an announcement from the Church this week, missionary work is being shifted from European and North American populations into Latin and South America, Africa and Asia.

I’ve thought for some time that the failing conversion rates are the inevitable result of the “marketing” system being used by the Church. What distinguishes the Restoration from other faiths is our doctrine. We have been de-emphasizing doctrine for years. We try to seem more and more like another Christian faith. We aren’t. We are quite different. The reason to convert lies in our doctrinal differences.

No one is going to live the Latter-day Saint lifestyle who thinks that we are just another mainstream Christian church. To pay tithing, refrain from coffee, tea, alcohol, smoking and serve in Church leadership roles at considerable personal inconvenience and sacrifice requires our Church to be more than just another mainstream church. If that is all we are, most people (especially devoted people) are going to want an easier form of belief, like Methodism, Presbyterianism or Catholicism. If they offer the same doctrine as we do, then they will win.

I am a Latter-day Saint because I believe the doctrine. I am not a traditional Christian because I believe their creeds are false and they teach for doctrine the commandments of men. Unless someone comes to believe that, there is no reason to leave a traditional Christian denomination and become a Latter-day Saint.

FEBRUARY 21, 2010

Social and Cultural “Rights”

In the Church News there is an article about religious freedom being eroded by encroaching social and cultural “rights” which conflict with religious freedom. The case of Perry v. Schwarzenegger in California, which challenges the Proposition 8 vote was cited by Elder Lance Wickman, the Church’s General Counsel (lawyer). In that case the public’s decision to prohibit same-sex marriage is being challenged on the basis that voters cannot negate a fundamental right.

The Church is alarmed about the growing potential for conflict between social and cultural “rights” on the one hand, and the free exercise of religion on the other.

The deeper problem the Church has with their position on this legal conflict in California, is the position taken on the Salt Lake City ordinance the Church endorsed a several weeks ago. In that decision, the Church announced that employment and housing were “fundamental rights” which same-sex attraction could not forfeit. The Church endorsed the use of coercive governmental power to compel employers and property owners to permit homosexual employees and renters, upon pain of punishment by the Courts. This was an extraordinary departure from past positions of the Church, and represented the first time the Church approved governmental compulsion against employers and property owners to protect homosexual conduct.

The effect of the Church's change in view on the Salt Lake City ordinance was almost immediate. A follow-on state-wide survey after the Church's changed position showed that there was a dramatic shift in Utah's view of tolerance toward homosexual behavior. Essentially, Mormons all over Utah fell in line behind the Church's new attitude.

Now the Church is attempting to sound the alarm about legal encroachment of cultural/social views (read homosexuality) into other areas which will inevitably conflict with religious liberty. But the Church has already conceded the argument. By extension of the Church's position with respect to housing and employment, the only question to answer is what to define as a "fundamental right." If housing and employment, then why not marriage? How does that distinction get made? And if any judge, anywhere, or ultimately five of the nine Supreme Court Justices, decide that marriage is a "fundamental right," then the result will follow that religion cannot prevent the practice. And if religion cannot prevent the practice of this "fundamental right" to marry despite a couple's homosexual orientation, then the LDS Church cannot prohibit or limit homosexual marriage practices anywhere. Not even in their own marriage ceremonies. For to do so would invade a "fundamental right" of the persons involved.

It will take time for the arguments to wend their way through the courts. But ultimately the Church's position on the "fundamental right" of homosexuals to be employed and housed without discrimination, using the coercive force of the government to protect that "right" against employers and property owners, will be the same reason the government will force the LDS Church to be coerced into acceptance of homosexual marriage. The LDS Church's own words/press release and public relations spokesman's words will be the reason cited by the Court against the Church, at the time the decision is reached. The Court will announce that the LDS Church has already recognized the need for governmental power to be used to protect fundamental rights of housing and employment. The Court will rule the Church must, therefore, accept as a fundamental right marriage, as well.

FEBRUARY 22, 2010

What Have You Seen Lately?

Saturday my wife and I ate downtown in Salt Lake City. Instead of taking the Interstate back home, we meandered back to State Street and then down State Street. It was between 6:00 and 7:00 pm on a Saturday evening. I was surprised to see that there were eight tattoo parlors open at that time, all of which had customers and some of which were quite crowded.

I also saw that Salt Lake City hosted a three-day tattoo convention in February.

CHAPTER 2

Grow in Light

FEBRUARY 22, 2010

Adam-ondi-Ahman

At the first great priesthood meeting held at Adam-ondi-Ahman, there was Adam, who conducted, and seven High Priests who were in attendance. The “residue” of those who were present looked on, but the meeting involved these seven High Priests and Adam.

The appearance of the Lord at that meeting was an appearance to the eight, who were involved in the ceremony in which Adam’s calling and election was made sure. The on-lookers who were present did not see the Lord, although they could sense something important was underway when the Lord “administered comfort” to Adam. Only those who had been initiated into the High Priesthood were permitted to participate and to view the Lord as He appeared and ministered. You can read about this event in D&C Section 107:53–56.

We assume the great meeting to be held at Adam-ondi-Ahman in the future will involve a great crowd, and it may. However, if it is a repetition of the pattern from the first, there will be a small number, perhaps only seven or eight, who will see the Lord, with the residue merely sensing something of importance is taking place. (See my earlier post on Daniel's visitation with the Lord.)

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · FEBRUARY 24, 2010 AT 12:32 AM

Do you mind telling what you are basing your statements on that the Lord's appearance at Adam-ondi-Ahman at the time of Adam was only to the 8 and not to the rest of those who were present? I read the reference you gave, D&C 107:3–56, but can't see the detail there, so it must be somewhere else (perhaps personal to you).

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 24, 2010 AT 2:40 PM

Anonymous:

The description in D&C 107:53 refers to Adam giving a blessing to "them." You have to determine to whom the word "them" refers.

I wrote elsewhere about Daniel and the way in which the Lord's appearance was veiled from others who were present, Daniel alone seeing the vision. The same is true of the Lord's contact with Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus. Those with him did not have the same open vision.

When Joseph and Oliver saw the vision in the Kirtland Temple, they were behind a drawn canvas veil, and others were in the building. They didn't see what Joseph and Oliver saw.

In the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, the visions which were opened to some were not to others.

There was an inner group of high priests for whom the Lord's appearance would be appropriate and they are named. Naming means something. The rest are referred to as "the residue" and are not named.

These patterns are very real. They are set out in scripture because they are real. There is a great difference between being one of "the residue" of good people and being a clearly named high priest, particularly when you encounter the number of seven for the meeting. The number is also important, as I've explained in books I've written.

The picture people get into their heads is difficult to remove. But this process is dependent upon the preparation of the individual, not membership in a group. I've associated importance with elements of the revelation which others may not think important. I believe naming the seven, the number of them (seven), identifying them as high priests, calling those others "the residue" and leaving their names out of the narrative, and the overall setting takes this incident and puts it into the Daniel/Kirtland Temple/Apostle Paul category of visions of the Lord. Where some present are excluded and only a specific group or individual whose presence was specifically invited by the Lord, are permitted to stand in His presence.

It is a terrible thing to enter into the presence of the Living God. Not all who are righteous are prepared for that. Hence my reading of the verses.

FEBRUARY 22, 2010

Slippery

I pay close attention to the Church and its leadership. I take careful note of what is said, and by whom. The closer you listen, the clearer the Church's methods and means become. They really don't take a great deal of effort to conceal things.

The Church is quite important to me. It deserves my careful study. Therefore I do not mind giving it the attention which it requires to understand what the Church is doing to cope with the various pressures, trends, and difficulties it encounters daily.

The Church's study of public opinion is so careful, so well done, and so frequently updated, that in his October, 2006 General Conference talk, Elder Jeffrey Holland made the following observation:

Not often but over the years some sources have suggested that the Brethren are out of touch in their declarations, that they don't know the issues, that some of their policies and practices are out-of-date, not relevant to our times. As the least of those who have been sustained by you to witness the guidance of this Church firsthand, I say with all the fervor of my soul that never in my personal or professional life have I ever associated with any group who are so in touch, who know so profoundly the issues facing us, who look so deeply into the old, stay so open to the new, and weigh so carefully, thoughtfully, and prayerfully everything in between. I testify that the grasp this body of men and women have of moral and societal issues exceeds that of any think tank or brain trust of comparable endeavor of which I know anywhere on the earth.

This statement was based upon the Church's on-going public relations survey taking, opinion polling, and focus group studies. When I attended a valley wide leadership meeting, at which Elder Russell Ballard spoke, he mentioned that from the Church Office Building he had watched focus group discussions the day before which came in by video feeds from Chicago, Seattle, and several other cities (whose locations I do not recall).

When the Church changed its position and supported the same-sex attraction ordinance in Salt Lake City a few weeks ago, the Church's spokesman made the following public announcement of the Church's reasons for the change:

There are going to be gay advocates who don't think we've gone nearly far enough, and people very conservative who think we've gone too far; the vast majority of people are between those polar extremes and we think that's going to resonate with people on the basis of fair-mindedness.

This is the language of opinion polling. The words "going to resonate with people on the basis of fair-mindedness" are the words of social sciences. The decision was not a “revelation” but a change in position based upon the polling which showed the position change could be safely made. The Salt Lake Tribune made the following report on January 30, 2010:

When Salt Lake City embraced anti-discrimination ordinances for gay and transgender residents last fall—snagging a landmark endorsement by the LDS Church and widespread support from city officials—more shifted than public policy. Public opinion—throughout Utah—jumped, too. Support for some gay rights, short of marriage, climbed 11 percentage points across the state from a year ago, according to a new Salt Lake Tribune poll, and shot up by 10 percent among Mormons. Two-thirds of Utahns (67 percent) favor employment protections and safeguards for same-sex couples such as hospital visitation and inheritance rights, up from 56 percent in January 2009, when pollsters asked the same question. (This year’s survey of 625 frequent Utah voters has an error margin of plus or minus 4 percentage points; last year’s was 4.5 percent.) Opposition dropped, overall, from 40 percent to 23 percent. Among LDS respondents, it plummeted from 48 percent to 28 percent. ‘This isn’t a gradual change of attitudes. This is a fairly dramatic jump,’ says Matthew Burbank, chairman of the University of Utah’s political science department. ‘Clearly, the fact that the LDS Church was officially endorsing this position had an impact on people.’ A similar number of respondents, 66 percent, also say they support expanding Salt Lake City’s anti-discrimination policy—the first of its kind in Utah and already mimicked in Salt Lake County—throughout the state.”

COMMENTS:

Gia Đình Vĩnh Cửu · FEBRUARY 23, 2010 AT 10:37 PM

Mr. Snuffer:

First, let me introduce myself. My name is Elijah Lawrence, I'm a 3L at the "classless" law school to the north, and I'm trying to be like Jesus. I don't intend to practice law when I graduate but I have a deep respect for good attorneys.

I was introduced to your writings by my uncle, Brian Black. I've read The Second Comforter, and am reading Beloved Enos, and both have triggered new thoughts for me, so I consider them to be good.

I have a couple questions regarding your assessment of the churches support for ordinances providing employment, housing, and other rights to gays. I understand you are busy and I don't want to further take you away from your family and work, so if time doesn't allow it please don't feel inclined to respond.

Question 1: Why do you feel the church has changed its position by supporting this recent ordinance? I actually had an institute teacher say the same thing to me two weeks ago. I have yet to read any statement by the church opposing legislation which allows gays housing, employment, and other rights. My understanding was that the church was and is opposed to gay marriage, but beyond that nothing was ever articulated by the church. I know many members interpreted that to mean granting any rights to gays was in conflict with the church's position, but I think that was based on a misunderstanding by church members. Is there a particular statement from the church opposing legislation affording such rights to gays?

I agree with you that any state that passes such legislation is tacitly acknowledging sexual orientation as a protected class, which makes it difficult to then argue that prohibiting gay marriage is constitutional.

Question 2: If (maybe when is the more realistic word given the current trends around the nation) the Supreme Court ends up ruling that laws restricting marriage to only a man and women violate the Equal Protection clause, why do you think the church will be required to perform sealings for homosexuals? My humble understanding (and it is humble—I'm a lowly 3L) of constitutional law is that such a ruling by the Supreme Court would merely force state actors to perform civil marriages to any who requested one. The church would still be free to restrict entrance into the temple to those worthy according to church standards, and limit the sealing ordinance to heterosexual unions. Isn't it the case that even if the church had not lifted the ban on the priesthood and continued to deny the priesthood to blacks that it would be in the church's legal prerogative to do so? Again, my knowledge of constitutional law is limited, and I'm excited to see you engaging these issues.

All the best, and thank you for Beloved Enos—it is my “escape” from my law textbooks. =)

Elijah

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 24, 2010 AT 1:24 PM

Gia Đình Vinh Cừ:

Your uncle baptized me. Therefore you must hold him to account for all the mischief which has followed in the wake of that ordinance. He is one of my dearest friends.

I taught Institute to the U of U law students for two years. It was a great experience. I still have some of those former students contact me from time to time.

As to Q1: The Church told us why they changed their position to support legislation. I quoted the statement in the post. They believe it will “resonate on the basis of fundamental fairness” and will only be opposed by those on either end of the spectrum. Significantly, the Church did NOT say this was a matter of either inspiration or revelation. It was a change in policy to the extent that the Church had never supported such legislation before. Done for the reasons they explained. If they want to amend or supplement the explanation, they can obviously do so and then I will respect that additional statement. But in the absence of a further explanation, they said why they did it and I accept their explanation. The Church had been quite clear their opposition was as to marriage. Their silence on other “rights” was something which would not allow someone to read into, or out of the silence any meaning other than the Church opposed same-sex marriage. I don’t impute motive when there is no basis to do so. But it was a change to support the ordinance, and the meaning which can be read into it is the meaning the Church itself gave for the change.

Q2: I do not think coming successes by the homosexual community in the Courts will necessarily extend to Temple sealings (at least not at first). But if the Church retains the ability to perform civil marriages, then in my view the progression of the argument will result at some point in the Church not being permitted to use that authority discriminatorily. So LDS Bishops will be permitted (read that required once the Courts have finished ruling on the various claims of discrimination) to perform civil marriages/unions for homosexual unions. The challenge for the litigators seeking to use the law to change social norms, once the door is opened, is merely to put the legal issue to be decided by the Court in the right way so as to compel compliance.

FEBRUARY 23, 2010

Venus

I was with John Pratt on Saturday and he mentioned his new article on Meridian Magazine <http://www.meridianmagazine.com/> called “Venus Testifies of Christ.” I went home and read it and thought it was just delightful. He makes the case that Venus was the star which foretold all the great events in the Lord’s life. You can find the article on Meridian Magazine on-line.

FEBRUARY 23, 2010

Consider This

When I joined the LDS Church there were approximately 3 million members. That was in 1973. We have now over 13 million. That means that there are approximately 10 million Latter-day Saints with less experience with the Church than I have. What an odd thing to consider.

President Monson, President Packer and Elder Perry are the only remaining members of the Presidency and Twelve who were already in place when I joined the Church. All the others were added to the Twelve after I joined. Again, that is an odd thing for me to consider. I can't imagine a Church where all the Presidency and Twelve were called after I joined.

I was thinking about all those who were in the First Presidency and Twelve when I first joined:

It was (to me) terrible to lose President Kimball. I'd grown quite fond of him from a distance in New Hampshire and Texas. Then when I went to law school, his son Ed Kimball taught at the J. Reuben Clark Law School, and President Kimball would come to visit his son. We'd run into him in the elevator or hallway and I grew even more respectful and attached to him.

Who didn't absolutely love Elder LeGrand Richards? What a delight it was to listen to him.

Elder McConkie and Elder Peterson were doctrinal giants. I went to both of their funerals because I had such a personal sense of loss at their passing.

FEBRUARY 23, 2010

Visit to the Nephites

I was asked about the difference between my explanation regarding the timing of the visitation of the risen Lord to the Nephites in The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil, and the timing proposed by Bruce R. McConkie and Joseph Fielding

Smith. I put the visit at the end of the thirty-fourth year, they put it immediately following Christ's resurrection. I responded as follows:

I won't respond or rebut the argument. I don't think it is important to resolve the matter. It is only important to understand the issue. From the things these men wrote, it is clear that Elders McConkie/Smith reason how it could have been immediate, despite the fact that the text says it was the difference between the beginning and end of the thirty-fourth year. The anchor of their argument is that the people were showing each other the great changes which took place during the destruction. They reason that this would have been immediately after the destruction, otherwise there would be no reason to be pointing it out.

I account for this by recognizing that the festival season caused a migration later in the year. At that time their presence at the Temple site would have introduced them to the destruction for the first time, despite the fact the great quaking and tempests had ended eleven months earlier. I also account for the various appearances of the Lord to "other sheep," as well as the forty-day ministry at Jerusalem in my reckoning.

However, I do not think it important for someone to disbelieve McConkie/Smith. It is only important how one decides to read the scriptures. Borrowed opinions are just that. People need to read the scriptures and decide what they mean for themselves.

In the book I refer to the "ceremony of recognition." This ceremony has a specific order. It begins with an embrace. The headnote (written by Elder McConkie) says "hands, feet and side" as the order. The text, however, refers to the side, then the hands and feet. That ceremony, so far as it is appropriate to do so, is explained in the text of The Second Comforter.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 24, 2010 AT 1:44 PM

LouN said:

From my understanding only the Presiding High Priest (PHP)/Prophet/President of the Church can declare Official Church Doctrine.

If this is true, could you please tell me: during what time period was Bruce R. McConkie the PHP/Prophet/President of the Mormon Church?

Once a man becomes the PHP/Prophet/President, is it OK to quote things he said before he was sustained as PHP/Prophet/President as if he were already sustained as such?

Was Bruce R. McConkie the PHP/Prophet/President at the time he wrote and published the definitive work on Mormon doctrine entitled “Mormon Doctrine?”

I agree with your understanding. And Bruce R. McConkie was never a President. A lot of people quote what was said before a man became Church President as if it had been said while President, but the distinction remains both unclarified and important. Until the Church resolves how to treat prior teachings of a President everyone is left to decide for themselves what significance to attach to them.

You know Elder McConkie wasn't President when he wrote Mormon Doctrine, and that the President had Elder Peterson review it for errors only after it had been published. Elder Peterson came up with a number of errors – in excess of a thousand – which resulted in changes between the first and later editions of the book.

FEBRUARY 23, 2010

It's All About You

I received an email over the weekend which finally helped me understand a reaction to The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil. Apparently there are readers who think that the book is about me. It isn't. It is entirely about the reader.

If someone reads it trying to get to a ‘punch line’ or great ending, they are reading with the wrong intent. The book isn’t about that at all. It is a manual. Its purpose is to provide the reader instruction while they are on their own path back to the presence of the Lord.

To the extent that there are any personal matters in the book, they are designed to illustrate common mistakes. My mistakes and errors are set out in the beginning of the chapters. Then the chapter explains how to get the principle right. Other than showing how poor a student I have been, my presence in the book is entirely secondary. I do bear testimony about the truth of the teachings, which I think is required for a book of that nature. But the book is entirely about you, the reader.

I reiterate several times in the text that it is not a book for every reader. It is not publicized, advertised, or promoted in any way. It is entirely a word-of-mouth book which will find appropriate readers without any effort on my part to promote it.

FEBRUARY 23, 2010

Truth—Anything More or Less

I’m in the unique position of being powerless. I preside over my family, nothing else. I write for all others only to persuade. I will not be penalized if someone who reads my writing rejects it. The question then is really not: “what is my motivation,” but instead: does the Spirit ratify the things I have written to you?

There is an alarming statement in D&C 93. It follows the definition of truth found in D&C 93:24: “Whatsoever is more or less than this is the spirit of that wicked one who was a liar from the beginning” (D&C 93:25); meaning that we are all required to find the truth. Anything more or anything less is evil and means we have been deceived. In addition, the follow up to the parable of the Ten Virgins found in D&C 45:56–57 warns everyone that the five foolish virgins who will not take truth as their guide are going to be hewn down and cast into the fire.

These decisions about what truth you must accept are important, but can only be made by trusting the Spirit. You should look to the Spirit for the answer to where and what is truth in this day of so much deception. Marketing, by its very nature, is deception (See, The Marketing of Evil: How Radicals, Elitists, and Pseudo-Experts Sell Us Corruption Disguised As Freedom, by David Kupelian). All of modern commerce is based on deceiving you. Making you think you need something when you do not. Exciting your envy to get you to purchase something you really don't need. So when it comes to the truth, you will need to demonstrate some “sales resistance” to Satan, and not be fooled into rejecting truth although it comes from a lone voice, crying from the wilderness (as has been so often the Lord's pattern in the past).

FEBRUARY 24, 2010

Self Government and Self Discipline

Self-government implies self-discipline. Freedom requires self-restraint in conduct and speech. People are free to say whatever they want, but when they want to say things that endanger others, then you have to consider limiting speech. That is always unfortunate. Ultimately, unless people share common values, common beliefs, and a common sense of proper conduct you cannot have “freedom” and “self-government” because it will end in violence.

When everyone agrees on first principles, there is little need for speech-limiting laws. When, however, something is deeply offensive and insulting to one group, and valued highly by another, cycles of debate end in cycles of violence.

The United States' Constitutional form of government presupposes an agreement on fundamental first principles. As that common consensus diminishes on fundamental principles, our form of government is increasingly less likely to work. If the "Elders of Israel" are going to save the Constitution, it will not be through legislation or litigation, but by conversion of people back to a common set of beliefs. Only then Constitutional government has a chance to survive.

FEBRUARY 24, 2010

Comments

You learn all the time in life. I've now learned that comments can take as much time as you let them; and if every comment gets a response, then using a blog to try to simplify will not work either. See previous post here. As a result here is how it appears it may work:

My wife, who is doing the mechanical work on this blog, will moderate comments and post them at her sole discretion. You must appease the goddess if you want to get something approved by her and onto the blog.

There are those comments which will get responses from me. Sometimes directly within the comment section of the post. Sometimes as a new post. Not every comment will get posted, and not every posted comment will get a reply. The hope is that everything of particular value to people/readers will get onto the blog. Also, feel free to talk amongst yourselves in the comment section. Be nice—remember the goddess is moderating.

I'm hoping this will not become a full-time job. Primarily because I still work for a living and blogging doesn't earn anything. It is merely a form of public service for the bored internet surfer who may be interested in Mormonism and related stuff.

P.S. We reserve the right to keep trying to make this work better.

FEBRUARY 24, 2010

Jumping Out a Window

When I first joined the LDS Church I thought every Latter-day Saint had revelations, visitations by angels, and miracles in their lives. I thought, the Joseph Smith story was the common experience for those who were members of this Restored Church.

It took a few years before I realized that it was the exception, not the rule, that such miraculous experiences took place. I learned that most saints were more akin to Hugh Nibley's description of his grandfather, a member of the First Presidency, who said that if he ever saw an angel he would "jump out the window."

I think there is a tendency to avoid discussing any contemporary occurrence of the miraculous in our individuals lives within the Church because of the frequent association of such things with deceivers and the deceived. In contrast to that fear, Moroni affirms that angels appear only to those with "a firm mind" (Moroni 7:30). How odd it is that we have this juxtaposition: On the one hand, in our day it is viewed as being evidence of a weak mind, or dubious character, and on the other Moroni asserts it is evidence of a "firm mind." One or the other has to be incorrect.

I think such things are experienced less because we talk of them less. As we talk of them less, we increase our doubts about such things. Doubt and faith cannot coincide.

So was Christ weak-minded or of "a firm mind?" Was Saul of Tarsus deceived or a deceiver, or instead a godly man who received notice from heaven? What of Joseph, Alma, Moses, Peter, Mary, Elizabeth, Agabus, and John?

Today we prefer our miracles at a distance. When we do accept the occasional miracle, we want it to be separated by culture, time and reduced to written accounts from the deceased. We think it's safer that way. Society trusts that when the miraculous has been reduced to history alone it can then safely be the stuff from which PhD's and theologians extract the real meanings. After all, our scientific society only trusts education, certification and licensing; not revelation, visitation and ministering of angels. Well, even if that is not as it should be, it is at least as Nephi said it would be:

They deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men. Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work. (2 Nephi 28:5-6)

COMMENTS:

jw · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 at 7:51 PM

A couple years ago our stake patriarch visited our ward to give a talk. The moment he announced he was going to talk on a rarely discussed topic, ministering angels, I could sense a collective tensing-up of the congregation, as if to say "No, don't talk about that!" I was stunned. Later that day I was home teaching a family and mentioned the talk, and they straightaway changed the subject.

The supernatural makes people nervous. I'm beginning to think that we, collectively, have been brainwashed (I mean that literally) that supernatural events are evidence of insanity and generally being a nutcase. It is not tolerated well in society.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 12:00 PM

jw:

Right. My point. So we chase them away; then wonder why the stories of the miraculous only happened at the beginning of the Restoration.

Anonymous · MAY 14, 2010 AT 1:13 PM

My question to this post is how is one to know if what they have been experiencing is deception, delusions, or truly a miracle?

I ask because my whole life (49 years) I have been keenly aware of “others” beyond our awareness. I tend to “see” beings and things and have tried to hide it most of my life due to persecution. Many of the things I “see” have been validated medically or in other ways, but other experiences cannot be validated.

When I use this ability to help others, news sometimes leaks out & I have been called everything from a nutjob to a witch and usually by priesthood holders.

There is a man in Seattle (if I remember correctly) who fully believes he is Abraham and fully lives this delusion. He is an extreme example but it has made me question my own sanity in several of my experiences. I’ve prayed for years about this as well as studied and cannot find a conclusive answer.

So again I ask how can one truly know if what they are experiencing is from God or a delusion?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 14, 2010 AT 4:31 PM

It always comes down to a few things:

1. Does it testify of Christ or invite to believe in and accept Him and His role as Savior?
2. Does it edify, uplift and bring you to do what is noble or good?
3. Does it reveal to you something consistent with prior revelations, commandments or scriptures given from God?
4. Are you living your life to the best of your ability in conformity with what you have been taught in the Gospel, as contained in the scriptures? (By “best of your ability” I mean that you have no glaring sins which you have not repented and forsaken. It is unlikely you will entertain a true messenger when you are deliberately in a state of rebellion against God.)

If the answer to all these questions is “yes” then I would trust what you receive. If any of them are answered “no” then I would not trust what you have received.

FEBRUARY 25, 2010

The Comment Moderator (Goddess) Thinks This is Important

A comment on Adam-ondi-Ahman

The description in D&C 107:53 refers to Adam giving a blessing to “them.” You have to determine to whom the word “them” refers.

I wrote elsewhere about Daniel and the way in which the Lord’s appearance was veiled from others who were present, Daniel alone seeing the vision. The same is true of the Lord’s contact with Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus. Those with him did not have the same open vision.

When Joseph and Oliver saw the vision in the Kirtland Temple, they were behind a drawn canvas veil, and others were in the building. They didn’t see what Joseph and Oliver saw.

In the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, the visions which were opened to some were not to others.

There was an inner group of high priests for whom the Lord’s appearance would be appropriate and they are named. Naming means something. The rest are referred to as “the residue” and are not named.

These patterns are very real. They are set out in scripture because they are real. There is a great difference between being one of “the residue” of good people and being a clearly named high priest, particularly when you encounter the number of seven for the meeting. The number is also important, as I've explained in books I've written.

The picture people get into their heads is difficult to remove. But this process is dependent upon the preparation of the individual, not membership in a group. I've associated importance with elements of the revelation which others may not think important. I believe naming the seven, the number of them (seven), identifying them as high priests, calling those others "the residue" and leaving their names out of the narrative, and the overall setting takes this incident and puts it into the Daniel/Kirtland Temple/Apostle Paul category of visions of the Lord. Where some present are excluded and only a specific group or individual whose presence was specifically invited by the Lord, are permitted to stand in His presence.

It is a terrible thing to enter into the presence of the Living God. Not all who are righteous are prepared for that. Hence my reading of the verses.

FEBRUARY 25, 2010

Increasing Light

Teaching is marred by the ineptitude of teachers. It does not matter how complex a subject being taught is, a good teacher will make it both simple and enjoyable to learn. When a subject becomes difficult to understand, more often than not it is because the teacher does not understand the subject well enough to make it simple.

For the Gospel, teaching is a matter of increasing light in the one learning. To do that the student must learn how to improve their obedience to true principles. Only someone's obedience to truth will lead them to greater truth. The teacher's obedience cannot and does not benefit the student of the gospel if the student is unwilling to receive greater light and truth by obedience.

The necessary obedience is not obedience to a man, or men, or a set of rules devised by men. It is not even obedience to a rigid set of commandments. Obedience and fidelity must be directed to the Lord. No matter how well someone may teach for doctrine the commandments of men, those who hear will never gain more than a form of godliness, without any power.

We all must progress in the same way Christ did. He grew from grace to grace, until at last He was called the Son of God. He had the fullness of grace and truth. Read John's testimony again found in the beginning of D&C 93. Pay attention to the first verse of Section 93, because it is the summary of what John's testimony will include.

The teachings are real. Increasing light is real. But each must gain it in the very same way as Christ and all those who have followed Him gained it.

A good teacher will always work himself out of a job by teaching how to find light without him. A bad teacher will call attention to himself, and try to make others dependent upon him. The worst teachers are those who want to control those who will listen to them and to dictate what they do, what they think, and how they must follow. Christ, and the light He brings, liberates, making each person an agent for themselves. Satan's plan is to put us into bondage, controlling us and making us fear.

FEBRUARY 25, 2010

What's in a Name?

The site we use for this blog has the unfortunate label of "Followers" for those who read the blog, or receive regular updates on new posts. The website comment goddess who works to manage this has attempted to change the name to "Readers" but can only do that within the fields open to be changed.

Now I realize those who follow this are “Readers” and only “followers” in the sense that they receive update notices. I acknowledge the insult given you by the Google label.

As an aside, if you really are a “Follower” then let me make one thing clear: You don’t want to follow me. You should be a follower of Christ. He can really do something for you. I cannot.

That having been said, now let’s go on being bemused at Google’s unfortunate choice of monikers for those who read a blog.

I’m really appreciative of the ability this forum has to reduce the need for repetition with many people. I hope it is convenient for readers, too.

FEBRUARY 26, 2010

Baptism of Fire

The question has come up about how the Lamanites could receive the baptism of fire and “know it not” when it happened. Whole books have been written on this subject and I can’t do it justice in a blog. So I won’t try. I’ll make a brief comment:

The alternatives are:

They knew something happened, but didn’t know what it was or what it should be called.

They didn’t realize something had happened at all.

If the reason is 1, then the result is un-troubling because without a vocabulary to label the event it is easy to understand why they “know it not.”

Much more troubling is reason 2. What if the baptism of fire is an event so subtle it could escape detection? And if that is the case, then how is one to know when or if they have experienced it?

Some writers have made the baptism of fire such a remarkable event that it connotes salvation, even exaltation itself. For those who accept that definition of the event, then to reduce it to an undetectable occurrence seems to somehow diminish it.

Joseph described the effects of the Holy Ghost on a Gentile (purges the blood and remakes them into an Israelite), and on a descendant of Israel (pure intelligence). [I'm not going to give the cite from the Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, because I don't have a copy with me while I'm writing this. So you look it up.] Both effects Joseph describes could be felt in a minimal way. Neither would require it to be dramatic.

"Fire" is a description of quickening, purging sin, and receiving the love of God. [Beloved Bridegroom gives a great explanation of fire as a symbol of the love of God.] If you are living in conformity with such light as you have been given, receiving this kind of "fire" would not necessarily be physically detectable. The real place where it would begin to show would be as a person prays, and then begins to receive answers, or "pure intelligence" as Joseph put it. "A sudden flow of ideas," which the recipient knows is beyond their capacity to think of or accomplish, would be another way in which the recipient would recognize its presence.

I think it is altogether possible for either explanation to be true. No matter which explanation, I don't believe it diminishes in any way the importance of this baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost. It is, in my view, the event marking the beginning of the process by which someone becomes ultimately a new creature. It is not the end of the journey. I would use other words to describe that.

FEBRUARY 26, 2010

Popularity or Persecution?

A recent trend with Latter-day Saint scholars has been the publishing of several books that try to make Mormonism seem like Protestant Evangelicalism. I do not believe the Restored Gospel of Jesus Christ is much akin to anything in Historic Christianity, and thankfully very different from Protestant Evangelicals. It is instead a return of Primitive Christianity as found in the New Testament. That is quite a different thing than what Historic Christianity has become, and almost altogether alien to Evangelicalism.

I believe the Church will advance only by acknowledging the differences, explaining them and showing what great things Historic Christianity has lost. Unless we have something different and important to offer, there is no reason for anyone to become a Latter-day Saint.

The opening statement of Christ to Joseph Smith in the First Vision ought to be the point we most emphasize. It was the many defects with Historic Christianity and its creeds which provoked the Lord to open the heavens again and start this great, final work. When we neglect that message, and try to seem like another brand of Protestantism we are neglecting the only reason for our Church's existence.

I know it is not up to me. And I do not challenge the right of the leaders, whom I sustain, to make decisions. But, if I could make a scourge of ropes and drive the social scientists out of the Church Office Building, I would. I think opinion polling and focus group results are worse than meaningless, they are misleading. It is an exercise in followship, not in leadership. If you see a trend through polling, and jump in front of it, that does not make you a leader. It makes you a clever follower.

I suppose this post is nothing more than proof of my tendency to err in judgment. But it is an honest and well meaning error which isn't being tried by the Church at present. When it was tried, in the early years, the newspapers railed against us, editorial cartoons mocked us, mobs persecuted us, and in turn the Church grew in numbers so dramatic that a single set of missionaries sent to England baptized nearly 7,000 converts. The distinction caused by the persecution was valuable. Certainly not in a public relations sense, but very much in a “harvesting of souls” sense.

Sharp distinctions give the disinterested a reason to consider our message. Persecution attracts the honest who want to know why the persecution is happening. Joseph believed, and history has proven that persecution is the heritage of the righteous. Its absence may not really be a good thing. The cost of trying to avoid it is at the expense of forward progress. This is evidenced by the decrease in convert baptisms we see at present.

I have never seen any statement in scripture affirming that becoming popular in the eyes of the world was good or desirable. On the contrary, I see the Book of Mormon listing that as one of the great evils (See e.g., 1 Ne. 22:23).

COMMENTS:

Tom · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 AT 12:28 AM

Love the blog. Having read several of your books, it's nice to have a running commentary of what you're thinking on a daily/weekly/monthly basis or however often these posts end up being.

On this topic of popularity and persecution, I find it incredibly difficult to affect change, insofar as I feel inspired to do so (e.g., my own household). We've essentially gone from a culture (inside Mormonism) which shunned “mainstream” America in the mid-1800s to one which wants nothing more than to be “mainstream” America, which wants to “shake hands” all around. At all levels, we, as individuals, want to be accepted by everyone, rejected by no one. This typically means we go must go out and “impress” others with the “things” we have, because we seemingly, though we'll never admit it, take great pride in those “things.” This is equally applicable to spiritual things and doctrinal beliefs.

Just today, for example, my wife reiterated how Pres. Hinckley had once counseled the members of the church to get as much education as possible because “the world will pay you what it thinks you’re worth” (republished in the April 2009 New Era, p. 19). On its face, that statement is obviously true. The world does pay us what it thinks we’re worth. End of story. Implicit in that statement, though, are many things left unsaid, especially on this topic of popularity and persecution.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 7, 2010 AT 10:53 AM

I’ve thought that a case can be made that we have been reactionary throughout our history. The Church was abused by the United States, and as a result became uber-American, to disprove claims against us. When Reed Smoot’s hearings were underway, the Church was abused by the Republican party. As a result we became uber-Republican, to purchase peace with that party. When Evangelical Christianity abused us, we have made an effort to align with them, becoming uber-mainstream. We have oftentimes “answered” our critics by changing our behavior to subtract what they criticize and add what they advocate to our behavior.

FEBRUARY 26, 2010

The Telestial

Here’s a troubling thought to ponder: The Telestial are those who have received and bear testimony of their faith in prophets, such as Paul, John, Moses, Elias, Isaiah, Enoch, and Joseph Smith, but who “received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus” (See D&C 76:98–102).

Security therefore lies not in following men, even men identified in the verses who are true prophets, but only in following Christ and receiving His Gospel and testimony. What an absolutely uniform, individual obligation the Gospel imposes upon everyone.

COMMENTS:

db Schroeder · MARCH 2, 2010 AT 12:41 AM

My question has always been: What becomes of the true believers in Christ, that had the best of intentions, who were not LDS? -In the Spirit World will one of us teach them by saying: "Oh by the way, guess what, you had most of it right w believing in the Savior, but you need to know more to have the fullness of His Gospel, are you ready to progress and learn more"? Will it be a Pride issue at that point for them, or will those who love Christ, say, "How foolish of me while on earth of course I want to advance! I'm sorry for not recognizing that the fullness was there. Please forgive me and teach me now, so I can progress further and do what it takes to have all the requirements to enter into the Presence of the Lord. Is that the scenario of how it will all play out? What say you counselor?"

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 2, 2010 AT 11:30 AM

db,

People who will "accept Christ" will always be interested in obtaining ordinances from Him. The more difficult problem is willingness to accept Him. The less difficult is the ordinances. We perform those vicariously.

Alvin died before the ordinances had been restored, but Section 137 lets us know Alvin was not in any way limited by that. He was among those for whom vicarious ordinances were performed first.

The great hurdle for those who claim religion is described in Section 76, verses 99–101. To be a "follower of Christ" is something different from being a fan of Christ's, or a follower of a "prophet" rather than Christ. In fact, the verses there might well be evidence that those who accept the mantra "follow the prophet" have substituted a false standard for the correct one. We are not supposed to say we are of "Paul, and of Apollos and of Cephas" (all of whom were true prophets, by the way). We are not supposed to claim we are a disciple of the man holding any mantle or office. We are required to "receive the testimony of Jesus, [His true messengers].... and the everlasting covenant" (v. 101). I've inserted the words: “His true messengers” into the quote in place of “neither the prophets” because if you use the scriptures as a guide, I think there may be a difference between what we think and what the Lord does. I don’t want to rule out the possibility that history in our day will repeat itself, and a voice crying in the wilderness will come without rank, authority, position or status which the Lord commissioned. Someone like Abinadi, Samuel the Lamanite, Isaiah, Lehi, John the Baptist, and even Christ. I’ve tried to discuss this possibility in Come, Let Us Adore Him in a way which highlights just how difficult it can be to really follow Him. He’s always requiring us to find the truth through our hearts, not by relying on presumed infallible institutional means. That can be a trap.

I think you can be a perfectly content, active, recommend-holding Latter-day Saint and “follow the prophet” but not follow Christ. Therefore the more relevant question is whether we who have received the ordinances have also received Christ. Because both are required. We all have to receive Him, and then receive the ordinances, just as He did.

It is a perfectly equal Gospel, you see. No-one has any great advantage. Including Latter-day Saints.

FEBRUARY 27, 2010

Argument

I’ve never won an argument with the Lord.

FEBRUARY 27, 2010

A Tennessee Ward and the Lord

I have a friend in Tennessee who emailed me this week about a Latter-day Saint congregation he visited a few Sunday’s ago. The congregation was of mixed races, and the meetings were louder, more animated and lively than the “typical” ward. He quite enjoyed it. His description of the visit made me long for the mission field again. In the mission field there are widely divergent congregations.

But the Wasatch Front is far different in texture and tone than anywhere else. I think there are people here who believe a stoic face is required to be reverent.

My impression of the mortal Lord is that He was gregarious, lively, filled with life, and given to smiling often. He surely was challenged by serious men involved in conspiracies to have Him killed, and for them His responses were serious. But He was filled with life, and love and humor. His many analogies drew from the common man's experience to teach with simplicity the deepest of ideas. I think He would have fit into the Tennessee ward my friend told me about.

I think when the scriptures note "He wept" it was because His normal demeanor was so upbeat, so positive and hope-filled that weeping stood out by contrast.

I've only sensed that I genuinely offended Him once. All other errors and mistakes have merely "bemused" Him, even though I have felt terrible from my end. He is a patient Teacher. Who knows exactly when you are ready and then how best to teach.

FEBRUARY 27, 2010

Elder Oaks at Harvard

Elder Oaks spoke to law and divinity students at Harvard this week. The talk was recorded and may be broadcast between General Conference sessions. He spoke for about 45 minutes then took questions. Among the comments he made was that neither the Church nor Evangelicals would identify Mormons as Evangelicals. He also noted the hostility of higher education to religious values and beliefs, despite the widespread religious convictions of Americans.

FEBRUARY 27, 2010

Becoming One

The idea of being “one” (as Christ put it in His great Intercessory Prayer in John 17:20–23) has been oftentimes misunderstood and the source of abuse. There should be nothing compulsory about this process. “Oneness” is a byproduct, and not an end. When we seek it as an end, then we have missed the opportunity to achieve it.

Believing “oneness” is achieved by making people think alike, look alike, be alike, or behave alike is so wrongheaded as to be Satanic. The ideal expressed by Christ as He prayed to the Father was that we should each attempt, in our limited capacities, to be more like Christ. The closer we approach that ideal, the more we become “one” as a byproduct. Merely giving a list of behavior as the way to “oneness” is not only foolish, but it is impossible. It must come from within, and cannot come from without.

Paul’s 14th Chapter of Romans is actually the only way in which “oneness” can be attained. Let everyone decide what they believe will make them closer to Christ, and allow them the freedom to follow that path. Let all others refrain from judging the behavior of others. Whether they “eateth herbs” or “eateth meat” let each be free to do what they believe to be right before God. “Judge not him that eateth: for God hath received him.” Let everyone do what in their own heart they believe is right before God, because God will respect anything done on His behalf. And let everyone else refrain from judging these honest efforts, but bear with one another.

This will give rise to widely diverse behavior, but will result in an absolute uniformity of intent. Everyone should be free to do what they believe God is asking them to do. And everyone should also respect the honest efforts of others.

Over time, perhaps over generations, behavior will grow closer as a result of the purity of the underlying intent. Not because someone is compelling uniformity, but because light and truth will eventually bring harmony.

Being “one” just as building Zion cannot be a goal in itself. It is always a byproduct of the kind of people which changed hearts produce.

In a private conversation with someone a few years ago he commented that he wished the definition of “Mormonism” would be changed. He thought that anyone who was willing to accept the ordinances of the Church ought to be regarded as being Mormon, no matter what else they may differ on. I’ve thought about his comment for years now. I’m inclined to see a great deal of wisdom in that idea. I’ve grown to see that those comments echo the earlier writings of the Apostle Paul.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 AT 7:45 AM

I really like and appreciate what you’ve said here, but I’m confused by the last paragraph. If someone is willing to accept the ordinances of the Church, what else could they be but a Mormon? Your friend must be referring to something here that I’m not catching. Please clarify.

Denver Snuffer · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 AT 6:37 PM

The fellow who made the remark was excommunicated for “apostasy.” He wanted to be a member, but wasn’t allowed back into the Church. His lament was that even if his personal views were objectionable to others concerning doctrine, he was willing to accept the ordinances and believed in their power to save. Therefore, he thought the definition of “Mormon” should be broad enough to permit anyone who would receive the ordinances to be a Mormon.

I thought about this for years. This definition would allow, for example, a Catholic Bishop to be baptized into the Church, receive ordinances from our Church, and yet continue to be a Catholic Bishop. Although this may seem odd at first glance, I see nothing wrong with it. He would have to reconcile his preaching with the things he accepts in our ordinances, but that would be up to him. Similarly, a Buddhist, Hindu, or Muslim who would accept our ordinances could be viewed as “Mormon” because he/she accepted the rites.

Joseph said he did not think Latter-day Saints should be like the Methodists. That is, we should not have creeds which establish borders and keep people out.

In one sense, once someone accepts the truth of Joseph Smith’s status as a prophet, realizes our new scriptures are from God, then receives the ordinances of the Gospel, they are really on their own individual journey to increase in light. We can try to help in an organized way through Sunday School, Sacrament meetings, Priesthood and Relief Society, Primary, Stake and General Conferences, but really the individual must find the path back for themselves. By widening the definition of Mormon to include anyone willing to accept the ordinances, we are acknowledging that if someone sees power in the ordinances they are converted to the truth. Being fully converted, and fully acknowledged by God is a long process thereafter. So why would we try and “herd” people when they can’t be herded in any event.

I could go on, but I try to keep posts quite short. This is a big topic, but I would just say: Think about it. Why not? This post on “Becoming One” describes how this process must be “without compulsory means” (D&C 121:46). We need to relax. Teach the upside. Set a proper example. Convert gently, by persuasion and example. Then allow people to come along at their own pace. When enough truth and light is offered in a kindly, gentle and persuasive way, they will come.

jw · FEBRUARY 28, 2010 AT 7:29 PM

That’s a very interesting idea. How far are you willing to take it?

For example, when I was a missionary in Germany, I tracted out a really great family. They wholeheartedly accepted the gospel, but had one problem: they were having a hard time quitting smoking. For this reason they could not be baptized, and to my knowledge they never did (hope I'm wrong). Should we have baptized them anyway and hope for the best? (The WoW wasn't a commandment initially anyway, but made one.)

In another example, some missionaries liked to tract Afrikaners because they were 'easy' to get baptized, but they just as easily slipped away, largely due to cultural differences and not fitting in.

In the case of the family, maybe we should've just baptized them. We don't automatically ex someone just because they have a smoking habit. The Afrikaners, on the other hand, would in many cases accept baptism, but would it do them or anyone any good if they just walked away into the sunset like they often did? Is there somewhere to draw the line?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 11:51 AM

jw:

I wouldn't draw a line. Remember the Ethiopian eunuch that Philip met near Gaza. One brief encounter, in which Philip explained a passage in Isaiah was about Christ. The eunuch believed, Philip baptized him and they departed from one another. The eunuch "saw him no more; and went on his way rejoicing" (See Acts 8:26-39).

Now I can't begin to explain the problems which this eunuch would have had to encounter and overcome as a result of being baptized. But Philip did it. He didn't try to integrate him into a program, nor to organize him into a quorum, but to simply deliver the message of salvation and ordinance of baptism.

I respect and obey the Word of Wisdom. I can state that with a clear conscience when in a temple recommend interview. I support it without any mental reservation. But I do not think it a virtue. I have no trouble with the fact Christ drank wine. Nor do I have any trouble with the fact Joseph Smith was drinking wine the day of the martyrdom to lift the spirits of those confined in Carthage Jail. I do not view that as a moral lapse by either Christ or Joseph Smith. At one point we had a wine mission in Southern Utah, where we produced our own domestic supply of wine. I also do not think I have any moral superiority as a result of being a teetotaler. It does not invest me with any greater value before God. I suppose it reduces the likelihood I will contract some diseases, and reduce the likelihood I will die in an accident. So it has value. But not in a “God likes me better” sort of way. At least in my view.

I’d baptize anyone willing to receive the ordinances and let them receive such benefit as they can obtain from them. I would make Mormonism a movement and not just an institution. And I’d let the institution acquire such followers as would be willing to participate. But those interested in joining the movement and receiving ordinances would be permitted, if I were able to make the decision.

You must understand that this is exactly WHY I think I am not in a position to make such decisions. I’m just not an “institutional” guy. Therefore I do not think in those terms. I value the institution and support and sustain those who serve in it. I do whatever calling they ask of me. But I view the Gospel of Jesus Christ as encompassing all mankind, all truth, and any who will come to Christ everywhere. Not matter how minimally they may be willing to go in their first steps. The Church is Christ’s tool to be used to advance His work. But, as I have shown in Beloved Enos, it cannot and does not encompass all those things which the Lord presently has in His inventory for bringing salvation to mankind.

Jonathan · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 8:46 AM

I am in total agreement with you on this idea of oneness being a byproduct of trying to live Christ like lives. I do have one concern, however, you wrote: “ Let everyone do what in their own heart they believe is right before God, because God will respect anything done on His behalf.” What of atrocities done in the name of religion or God? For example, the Christian crusades, religious extremists? How does this ideology prevent someone from slipping into a relativism? It seems to me that in these extreme cases these people are doing what they think God really wants of them.

I don't mean to "stir the pot," but I think this is a legitimate concern. Should we just allow this type of behavior and idly stand by?

I am interested to hear what you have to say.

Thank you.

Jonathan

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 11:55 AM

Jonathan:

I do not believe in atrocities in the name of Christ. I believe in meekness, gentleness, persuasion, love unfeigned and no control or compulsion as part of the Gospel. The moment someone begins to exercise control, dominion or compulsion over the souls, minds or bodies of men, amen to their priesthood and amen to their participation in the Gospel of Jesus Christ (See D&C 121).

I think we have a long way to go in getting where we need to be. But the way to get there is by example. We need to live and learn correct principles. Once that is done we can begin to be in a position to teach correct principles. And correct principles allow people to govern themselves.

If someone is tempted to commit atrocities they really are without understanding of Christ's teachings. They need to be taught. I've written a chapter on this in Eighteen Verses. That book is about the major problems facing modern Mormonism.

FEBRUARY 28, 2010

Missionaries in Chile

According to this morning's Deseret News, all LDS missionaries in the affected areas of Chile are safe and accounted for. My wife suggested that there are readers outside Utah who may want news like that put onto the blog.

FEBRUARY 27, 2010

Trials

On Friday Marie Osmond's son died in LA of an apparent suicide. My heart goes out to her. Some trials in life are not meant to be understood, but only to be endured. The suffering from unexplainable ordeals can bring us closer to the Lord, who alone can comfort us in such extremities.

In Chile there are over 200 dead and many missing. There is a race to rescue about 100 people trapped in a building. Aftershocks and injuries threaten those who are trapped.

There are no magic words to console those who endure tests in mortality. But we do have the promise from Him whose word is law and cannot return to Him unfulfilled: "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. 7:17). If God intends to do this in the final day, the only God-like conduct we can imitate is to lessen the burdens felt by those with a sense of loss today.

MARCH 2010

MARCH 1, 2010

Elder Oaks

My wife also suggested I add something about Elder Oaks' talk at Harvard, since some readers may not have access to the information:

When discussing our beliefs he explained that personal revelation is fundamental to Mormon beliefs. "some wonder how members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints accept a modern prophet's teachings to guide their personal lives, something that is unusual in most religious traditions. Our answer to the charge that Latter-day Saints follow their leaders out of 'blind obedience' is this same personal revelation. We respect our leaders and presume inspiration in their leadership of the church and in their teachings. but we are all privileged and encouraged to confirm their teachings by prayerfully seeking and receiving revelatory conformation directly from God."

When asked by a Divinity School student why Joseph Smith was any more reliable than Mary Baker Eddy, he responded:

If you want to know go to the ultimate source. The answer to that question can only come from God himself. That's what I encourage anyone who asks me about it. I can't promise when it will happen with anyone, but I can promise it will happen.

COMMENTS:

Allen · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 8:51 AM

While it is true that we all are entitled to personal revelation as to whether or not a leader's inspiration is from God or man; if my personal revelation conflicts with a leader's "revelation" then the common response from leaders is: "You am the one who is getting the wrong answer. You are the one who has been deceived."

In other words, in practical application, the leader is always right and the member is always wrong. The leader's revelation always trumps the member's revelation. The leader can say whatever he wants and claim it is "revelation" and that immediately overrides any inspiration the member may have spent many days fasting and praying about. Where is the accountability in that? There is something deeply disturbing about this.

April Roundy · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 11:07 AM

I agree with Allen. More times than I care to remember have I been told by my priesthood leaders, including my husband, that I have been deceived. I have been in almost every calling in the church that a woman can have. Am I not given personal revelation in my stewardships? I truly believe in personal revelation, even the scriptures testify to it, and I am a devout believer in angels, which also the scriptures testify of, however, as in Allen's case, the same is for me. I am in the wrong. Please, Denver, if you are so inspired to comment, it is greatly appreciated.

Tom · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 1:28 PM

I'll add another witness to what Allen stated. A few months back we had a lesson on obedience. The jist of the lesson was obedience, while a direct quote had it at obedience "to the apostles and president of the church."

As the discussion went forward, a couple of people came forth with the idea that we must live by personal revelation, that we must be prophets in our own right (Num 11:29, Rev. 19:10) and be led by that voice. A number of my fellow quorum members stated, somewhat surprisingly, that the personal revelation we receive as individuals is questionable and cannot be relied upon because we tend to insert our own personal feelings, desires and wants in place of that revelation. And, while we ("average" members) have this propensity to conflate personal revelation with our own desires and wants, the leadership of the church does not have that problem.

As I walked out of class, I overheard one member state that personal revelation is "scary" and "cannot be trusted."

So, although I agree with what Dallin Oaks stated in theory on this subject, I nevertheless note that the everyday practice of church members is at a different and inferior level.

The only thing I would suggest is to, as Denver noted in a recent post, "At some point ... you will find that individual service and obedience to God's will for you will create disharmony between you and others." That disharmony is to be expected, especially given the individuality inherent in following Christ and the Gospel.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 1, 2010 AT 6:17 PM

From the comments it appears that both of you believe you received actual inspiration/revelation and that the critical priesthood leader was wrong in the assertion that you hadn't been inspired. I will accept your premise for this response, because I have no basis to do otherwise.

A priesthood leader who pits himself against another person's inspiration always runs the risk of losing the respect generally afforded him. Therefore, any leader would be well advised to condemn another person's inspiration only when it is absolutely necessary and when he is absolutely certain he is right. Sadly, that kind of self-control is not often used.

The RULE is that most of those who have had or will have a "presiding" office in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will not perform their office responsibilities well. Joseph wrote from Liberty Jail, "We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion" (D&C 121:39). He also wrote: "Behold, there are many called but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men..." (Id. v. 34-35). The EXCEPTION is when someone actually does perform their office with meekness, pure knowledge and love unfeigned.

We should not be surprised at failings, lapses and abuses. That is the norm. We should be appreciative when we encounter the opposite. That is the occasional and delightful exception.

Just muse over this question: How many Latter-day Saint wives if they were free to choose over (and be promised the return of their children they had in their current marriage) would go back and marry the same man? If a man cannot live so as to make the woman to whom he is married love and admire him as the husband and father in her home, how can such a man hope to hold authority over others outside his family? (That is an important question which WILL be asked in the Day of Judgment.)

I expect very little from church leaders. I do not look to them as the example of truth and light. I look to Christ. I find His example extraordinary. He was meek; in the way I explain meekness in the book Beloved Enos. That alone is the test of how to hold priesthood authority. I'm thankful when I have, as I do now, a Stake President whom I admire and have no reservations about his character, nature or behavior toward others.

Notice that in Joseph's statement he refers to "a little authority as they suppose." Implicit in that statement is that they have actually lost authority because they have abused it. When they do, "the heavens withdraw themselves, and amen to the priesthood or authority of that man" (121:37).

It's all in the scriptures. We have far too high of expectations of our fellow man. And we have far too many excuses for our own lack of charity toward them. Support men who preside over you. As Paul put it: "Be subject to the powers that be." Good advice. I don't envy those who try to preside in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Most are trying hard to do what they believe to be right. So I support them, pray for them, and do what they ask. But they do not define for me the standard to follow. Christ alone is that standard. In comparison to Him we all look inadequate.

MARCH 1, 2010

Keep the Commandments

I was asked about a list of "commandments" to keep. The person was sincerely trying to keep the commandments, but lacked a comprehensive list of them.

It is not possible to list all commandments. In one sense there are only two: Love God. Love your fellow man. All others are extensions of those.

If you love God you will do what He asks of you. Whenever something comes to your attention He would have you do, you do it. For example, Christ was baptized and said to "Follow Him." So because of your love of God, you follow Him.

But Christ also showed repeatedly, that the second commandment was greater than the rules. Keeping the Sabbath day holy, for example, was subordinate to loving and freeing His fellow man. He freed men from sin on the Sabbath by forgiving sins. He freed them from physical injury or disease by healing on the Sabbath. Both were considered work, and therefore an offense to the commandment to keep the Sabbath day holy.

Your individual path back to God will begin with following the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. At some point, however, you will find that individual service and obedience to God's will for you will create disharmony between you and others. Can't be avoided. If you're following Christ, you will find the same things He found. Helping someone in need will take you away from Church meetings on occasion. You can't make a list and keep it, because as soon as you do the list will interfere with loving God and loving your fellow man.

So the whole matter can be reduced to this: Follow Christ, receive the ordinances, accept the Holy Ghost, who will teach you all things you must do. Any list beyond that will inevitably result in conflicts and contradictions.

MARCH 1, 2010

Cool Change

I think Cool Change was Little River Band's greatest song. I found this video on YouTube which couples the song with video of swimming dolphins and whales.

These are mammals in the video. They are warm blooded and breathe air. Because they must breathe they are required to return to the surface. But in the video they seem to be playing, jumping, enjoying the jump into the heavens and out of the waters where they live. One of the dolphins leaps and twists like one of the Olympic events we just finished watching.

The upward leap seemed a symbol to me of what all life here was intended to do: reach up joyfully to that God who gave us life. Hope you enjoy the video and song as much as I did as I watched it with a daughter last night.

CHAPTER 3

Angels and Mysteries

MARCH 1, 2010

The Sacrifice

Abraham's great test in sacrificing his son Isaac was all the more difficult when you consider he was nearly sacrificed when he was younger, by his father, on an altar, in a false religious practice. When the true God whom he worshiped asked him to sacrifice his beloved son, Isaac, Abraham was put in the exact position he knew from his own past experience to be evil. Despite this, Abraham complied.

Then God Himself provided a sacrifice (Gen. 22:8).

Not the ram found in the thicket on that day, but a living Son, later—in a direct corollary to what had first been asked of Abraham.

Many have stood back in amazement and considered the task given to Abraham to be outrageous, inexplicable and offensive. It was. But it was designed to make us realize how outrageous, inexplicable and offensive the sacrifice of God's Only Begotten was on our behalf. Abraham was one of the few men whose experience allowed him to identify with God the Father.

MARCH 2, 2010

His Words Are Commandments

A great resource for understanding how to gain eternal life is found in D&C 1:38. The Lord's word is law. What He says will not return void. It will all be fulfilled.

Immediately following his father's death, Moroni writes concerning the plates his father had made, which he was then completing. He recorded that the plates are "of no worth" in an economic sense, because of the Lord's "commandment" (Mormon 8:14). He says the Lord had spoken the words: "no one shall have them to get gain" (Id.). This means that since the Lord had spoken that the gold plates could not be obtained for economic gain, this meant the Lord had "commanded" that the plates could not give a person any economic gain. The only gain to be had was "of great worth" to the soul.

Moroni equates the Lord's remark on the plates' lack of economic value to a "commandment." This is exactly how it works. This is what D&C 1:38 is affirming, as well:

What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same.

Salvation consists in getting the word of the Lord spoken to you as a promise of eternal life. When you obtain that word, it cannot be broken. It becomes a "commandment" of the Lord's which cannot fail. This is the kind of commandment we should seek.

I've tried to answer questions about "commandments" and I've tried to discuss the subject more fully in The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil. Instead of focusing on a list of things to do or not do, I would commend to you the idea of getting from the Lord those words which will assure you eternal life. Not His words spoken to others found in scripture, but words spoken by Him to you. If you obtain this from Him, then you have a sure promise, though the heavens and earth pass away. This more sure word guarantees you, by covenant from Him whose words cannot fail, that you will be granted life with Him.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MARCH 2, 2010 AT 11:03 AM

Wow, I really enjoyed this post. How does a person come to know such a thing has been spoken to them? I've heard one response that indicated there would be little reason to ask the question given the event. I recognize similar words in the ordinances of the Gospel, in a Patriarchal blessing, words of priesthood blessings and assurances in scriptures. All words that apply to the individual, me in this case, the ordinances even done in my own name by one of the Lords assigned and called servants. I have confidence in the ordinances and in the Lords word. I can accept them as the Lords word to me. Yet sometimes, but not always, there lingers an uncertainty. The amount varies depending on the day. Some occasions there is no uncertainty. So my question is, where to go from there. Can anyone speak to this?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 2, 2010 AT 12:29 PM

In The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil I showed how Nephi's ability to receive answers from the Lord progressed. It began with first being able to believe in his father's, Lehi's, words. His heart was softened.

He remained true and faithful to this answer, even defending his father. As a result the capacity to receive answers grew. It progressed to the point that, after he had shown the willingness to sacrifice all things, including his life if necessary, he was able to receive an audience with the Lord. The full account is set out in The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil.

This pattern is the same for all of us. It is the most frequent pattern in the Book of Mormon. It was what Joseph Smith did to receive the First Vision, and to receive what followed thereafter.

This pattern is also repeated in the book of Enos, as I set out in the book Beloved Enos.

It was meant for you to receive the “more sure word of prophecy” in this life. All of us were expected to receive this. It is open to all, and God is no respecter of persons. He will do the same for everyone as He will do for anyone. All are invited to come to Him.

MARCH 2, 2010

Conference on Chiasmus

Yvonne Bent has been researching sacred geometry for over ten years. As a result of her research, she submitted an art project that was displayed in the Church’s 8th International Art contest at the LDS Conference Center in Salt Lake City. A photo of her work was in the Ensign magazine, as well.

Added to her study of the Articles of Faith and sacred geometry, a milestone connection was made to demonstrate the same pattern as we see in the Hebrew literary style called chiasmus appearing in other fields and even in nature itself.

Yvonne Bent has organized a conference on May 15, 2010 at the Rose Wagner Auditorium in downtown Salt Lake City to have various presenters address conference attendees on the widespread sacred patternism, including chiasmus. She invited me to speak, and I will be among those who will participate in the program.

The conference will consist of lectures from persons who have discovered remarkable chiastic patterns in art, literature, architecture, science and math. In the evening there will be a concert to demonstrate the chiasm pattern in music.

I do not yet have the final information about the event, but thought I'd put this brief announcement on the blog for those who may be interested.

COMMENTS:

Kaisie · MAY 16, 2010 AT 6:43 AM

How did the conference go? I just read this today and see that I missed it my a day. I'm currently reading, "A Beginner's Guide to Constructing the Universe: The Mathematical Archetypes of Nature, Art and Science" by Michael S. Schneider. Will there be another conference in the future? Does Yvonne have a website or blog about the conference?

Thanks so much,

Kaisie :)

Denver Snuffer · MAY 16, 2010 AT 7:57 AM

On May 5th there was a post on this blog announcing that the conference had been postponed and I would make a further announcement in the future. Right now materials intended for the conference are being gathered for publication. A further announcement will come on this blog as the information becomes available.

MARCH 3, 2010

Temple Work

In relation to the world's population there are statistically fewer LDS each year. Our birth rate is declining and our baptism rate does not even begin to keep up with world population growth. In other words, each year there is far more temple work to be done than there was the year before.

COMMENTS:

Tom · MARCH 4, 2010 AT 11:50 PM

On this subject...when you mention that there is "far more temple work to be done than there was the year before" I wondered something.

To the extent we believe in revelation, continuing, lasting, insightful revelation, what role does revelation currently play in temple work?

I have heard some very powerful stories about temple work and mortal/immortal angels playing a key role in finding essential information in someone's genealogy, but for everyone who is going about it in a spirit of revelation and truth, I'd guess there are a number of others who do it just to get the numbers done.

I guess what I'm saying, from your standpoint, what role does revelation play in the actual performance of temple work? Performing the work – as Woodruff did with some of the Presidents of the U.S.A. and their 2nd Anointings – when those on the other side are ready for it would seem to be when it should be done. But, in actuality is the practice (from what you've seen) to just “check off a list” and get everyone's work done ASAP, or something better?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 5, 2010 AT 10:03 AM

Institutionally we have the “Name Extraction Program” to get names from the census and other sources without regard to anything other than accuracy. Every name identified has work done for them.

For my own family, since I'm the first member of the church on either my mother's or father's side, I've been busy doing any names I can find. However, I have to say, both my Patriarchal Blessing and my personal experience has shown this personal, family quest to be filled with spiritual contact between myself and my ancestors. I referred to one of those experiences in The Second Comforter.

I think it is a mixture of both. But “getting it done” is the primary motivation.

MARCH 3, 2010

Judging

When Christ made His Twelve Disciples in the Americas “judges” over those people in the great Day of Judgment, He did not empower them to use their own discretion to reward or punish others.

He said they would judge others “according to the judgment which I shall give unto you, which shall be just” (3 Ne. 27:27). That same standard would apply to His Twelve Apostles in the New Testament (See Matt. 19:28). Christ Himself will provide the decision for us all; those Twelve will have the honor of announcing it.

I’ve often thought that with the standard set by the Lord in the Sermon on the Mount (“Judge not, that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged” - Matt. 2:1-2), that any time a person is given the opportunity, they should forgive others, just as Christ admonished us (See Matt. 6:14-15).

Those who think presiding over a ward or stake gives them an opportunity to dominate others are taking an extraordinary risk against their own eternal interests. My counsel would be to err on the side of forgiving, and never on the side of condemning. Even the woman taken in the act of adultery was told by the Lord: “neither do I condemn thee” (See John 8:1-11).

Christ’s teachings were meant to be applied internally to check our own behavior. Not externally as a means to judge or condemn others. If you see something amiss in other’s conduct, then persuade them by your example to be better. Lectures are almost always useless. An example is compelling.

MARCH 3, 2010

Declining Numbers

There was an article on Mormon Times about the declining baptism rate the Church is experiencing. The article can be found at: http://www.mormontimes.com/mormon_voices/mckay_coppins/?id=12892. I thought it was odd to approach this subject in an article which maintains there is nothing unusual about a declining rate of baptisms.

The prophecy of Daniel was that the stone cut out of the mountains without hands would roll forth, grind to dust the prior world orders, become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth (Daniel 2:34–35). Daniel’s interpretation included that God will establish a kingdom in the latter days which shall never be destroyed, nor left to other people. It will break into pieces and consume all other kingdoms and stand forever (Id. verses 44–45).

To the extent the Church claims to be this kingdom, or rock rolling forth, it should be expected to increase in size, and momentum, as it rolls forth to fill the earth.

The Church ceased to distinguish between baptisms for “children of record” and “converts” some years ago. Numbers are given in April General Conference. Last April’s conference statistical report included this statement: “Converts Baptized: 265,593.” There was a separate category for “Children of Record.” but there was no separate category for “Baptisms of Children of Record.” That used to be a separate category. Since it’s elimination, I have had the impression that “Converts Baptized” included all numbers, including baptisms of “Children of Record.” If that is so, then for the last recorded numbers of baptisms you would need to go back to eight years earlier, take the number of Children of Record, and subtract that number from the “Converts Baptized number to get the actual number of Converts. Eight years earlier from the number given in last General Conference, the statistical report announced that there was an increase of 81,450 Children of Record. So the actual number of baptisms of Converts alone would be 184,143. That appears to me to be the real number of Converts, exclusive of baptisms of Children of Record.

Now the Church hasn’t provided this separate number for Children of Record for about a decade now. And I can’t be certain that the “Converts Baptized” category is actually an amalgamation of the two. But I think it is. If so, the decline from the time of President Kimball to today is more than significant, it is catastrophic.

I believe the only reason to convert to our faith is our doctrine. Since the Church has de-emphasized doctrine, the trend of lowering missionary success has confirmed my belief in the necessity of teaching doctrine. Not just in the Teach My Gospel program, but in every aspect of the Church, from Sunday School and Primary to Stake and General Conferences. Doctrine is what distinguishes us.

Deseret Book has actually told me that “doctrine books do not sell.” They are interested in fiction, which can be read in one or two settings.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 4, 2010 AT 9:02 AM

I’ve never wasted a single meeting. Since I carry my scriptures, I find that I am able to get something out of them even if the teacher is not covering anything which holds my interest. (My presence in the class shows support for the teacher. And since no one can tell why I’m looking at my scriptures, it is not disruptive because people should presume I’m following the discussion or lesson.)

Tom · MARCH 4, 2010 AT 11:44 PM

Denver,

Along the lines of what you wrote in the original entry, do you feel that the Kingdom of God and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are synonymous terms which can (and are) used interchangeably?

You touch on it by stating, “to the extent the Church claims to be the kingdom... ,” but no amount of claiming makes it so, unless it really is so.

John Taylor, and others, have stated that the Kingdom of God is much bigger than the Church itself. The Church, as necessary as it is at this stage, is still only a temporary “institution” to use your term.

Regardless of what John Taylor stated, I’d love to read your thoughts on the matter. If you’ve already written about it in one of your books, a simple reference would suffice.

Thanks!

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 5, 2010 AT 10:14 AM

Tom,

The statement of John Taylor’s was consistent with Joseph Smith’s establishment of the Council of 50. That council included non-Latter-day Saints. It was the beginning of the “Kingdom of God” as an institution. Both members and non-members are to be part of that Kingdom when it is established. But it will be an outgrowth of the Lord’s work through the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to establish that kingdom. They are related, and will cooperate, but I’ve always understood them to be separate. We have one with us. We hope to see the other come.

MARCH 3, 2010

Repent and Come Unto Me

There is this interesting statement by the Lord found in D&C 10:67–68:

Behold, this is my doctrine—whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church. Whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore he is not of my church.

The statement requires us to Repent, and then

Come unto Christ.

Repentance is a lifelong process. As we get further light and knowledge we have to incorporate it into our lives and change behavior. Over a lifetime, this should be dynamic, not static.

The more difficult explanation is to “Come unto Him.” It is my view that this includes fully receiving Him into your life as did the brother of Jared, Nephi, Enos, Enoch, Abraham, Moses, Joseph Smith, Daniel, Isaiah, Jacob, Mormon, Moroni, Alma the Younger, Paul, and so many others who have testified of Him. That is a subject so great that the entire body of scriptures exist to help us accomplish it.

Significant, too, is that whatever is “more or less” than this is not “of my church” according to the Lord. So we have to take great care to not overstate or understate this doctrine of His.

Adding endless requirements by the commandments of men is “against Him.” Similarly, any failure to declare the essential nature of coming to Him is also “against Him.” I think the first verse of D&C 93 is a formula for coming to Him. That formula declares that, when it is followed, you will see His face and know that He is.

MARCH 4, 2010

How Beautiful Upon the Mountains

The feet of those who walk upon the mountains crying peace are beautiful (Isa. 52:7) because they are clean from the blood and sins of their generation.

In the ancient ceremonies involving animal sacrifice, blood was shed upon the ground and the feet of those involved in the rites became bloody. The blood of the sacrifice upon the feet became a symbol of the sins for which the sacrifice was offered.

The feet of those who walk upon the mountains crying peace are cleansed from that blood. Christ’s washing of His Apostles’ feet was to symbolize this cleansing which He alone could provide. He employs no servant to provide such a cleansing (2 Ne. 9:41). These feet, washed by Him are, therefore, beautiful because they connote the sanctity of the one crying peace.

“Crying peace” because the only thing which stills the mind of man, and brings rest from the trouble of this world, is the atonement of Christ. That is why it is called “the rest of the Lord.” When cleansed, it becomes the consuming desire of those who are clean to bring others to partake. Just like Lehi’s dream, when those who had eaten of the fruit of the tree of life ate, they immediately invited others to come and join them.

“Upon the mountains” because the mountain is nature’s symbol of the ascent to God. The climb represents repentance and purification of the soul. When a person stands upon the top of the mountain, she appears to be part of heaven itself and no longer earthbound. Her profile is with the sky, symbolizing the completion of the ascent back to God.

It is beautiful. All of it is beautiful. All of it is a reflection of the purity and intelligence of God, whose ways are higher than man’s ways as the heavens are higher than the earth (Isa. 55:8–9).

MARCH 4, 2010

True Blue, Through and Through

I’ve been thinking about an incident in the young life of Joseph F. Smith. He was outside a camp gathering firewood when a group of Mormon-haters rode into camp and scattered all the men. Joseph F. considered running for a moment, but then decided to go confront them. He walked with his armful of firewood back into the camp, right up to an armed man who was cursing the Mormons.

The man bellowed at Joseph F.: “Are you a Mormon?”

Joseph responded: “Yes siree; dyed in the wool, true blue, through and through.”

The man was so disarmed that he grabbed Joseph F.’s hand and told him he was the “pleasantest man I ever met!” (with a few obscenities mixed in.)

I like that story. I consider myself a “true blue, through and through Mormon.” Despite that, I know we have problems and many flaws. The scriptures foretell our many deficiencies. But human weaknesses and shortcomings are no impediment to the Divine origin of Mormonism; nor its ultimate destiny.

I think it is an error to have an unreasonably high opinion of ourselves. Conversely, it is an error to conclude that all is lost because of our shortcomings. We are full of sins and errors, slogging along making institutional and individual errors daily. But we are also, institutionally and individually, called to be involved in God’s work to redeem His children. He loves us all, with a love which can overcome our many failures.

MARCH 5, 2010

An Emphasis on Doctrine

In addition to what I posted earlier about baptism rates, there is another number which is somewhat misleading. The total member numbers reported in General Conference never deducts for those who are excommunicated or who voluntarily ask to have their membership terminated. There is likely a doctrinal reason for that. When a person is excommunicated they are re-baptized to return to membership, but they are not re-ordained to the priesthood. They are given a blessing to reinstate their covenants and blessings, including authorization to begin using priesthood again. But they are not re-ordained. Although they are excommunicated, they retain some affiliation despite the severance. Nevertheless, most people do not assume someone who has been excommunicated would be counted in the number of total members, but it is my understanding that they are.

Also, I've heard estimates from as little as 25% to much more than that as the percentage of members for whom the Church has completely lost contact. That is, there is some significant number of members whose membership is so tenuous that the Church has nothing but a record. There is no address, no way to contact them, and no information about whether they are living or deceased. These people continue to be counted in the total membership number despite their complete absence of contact with or from the Church.

With the significantly lower fertility rate, and an aging population, the Church's future will not be anything like the projections of Professor Stark. That is, unless something changes.

I agree that there may be many reasons for the decline. However, the most prominent of reasons in my view is the de-emphasis on doctrine. As a convert to the Church I know what attracted me to become a Mormon. It had nothing to do with the formulaic discussions of the missionaries, slick marketing or good arguments. It had to do with doctrine. I DIDN'T WANT to be a Mormon. Quite the contrary. But I knew I should become a Mormon because their doctrines came from God and answered questions other faiths could not begin to answer.

I'd like to see the trend return to a dramatic increase of numbers. In fact, I think there are many millions in the United States alone who are only kept from the truth because they do not know where to find it (D&C 123:12). We won't attract them to the Church until we begin again to emphasize doctrine.

MARCH 5, 2010

A Lifetime of Service

I do not know President Monson personally. But his history is well known to all of us. He was a Bishop while in his 20's, a Stake President shortly thereafter, and then called in his late 30's to be a member of the Quorum of the Twelve. He worked for Deseret News before becoming a full time General Authority. Essentially his entire life has been church service, both in his profession and in his calling.

If you want to see what The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints would produce if a life were entirely the product of the institution and experiences derived from serving in and under that institution, you have that in President Monson.

It is clear to me that he absolutely trusts the system which produced all his significant life experiences. The last two vacancies in the Twelve were filled by the senior president of the Seventy. This would make Elder Ron Rasband the next one in line to fill a vacancy in the Twelve. He (Elder Rasband) is a member of my stake.

MARCH 5, 2010

Heeding the Warning

There is an interesting article in Meridian Magazine about the Chilean earthquake. The Mission President and his wife went about preparing the missionaries for the earthquake before it happened. This was because they had received a prior warning. The article can be read here: <http://www.ldsblog.com/churchupdate/100303chile.html>

What is most interesting to me is that the warning came to the wife, not the husband. He respected her revelation, and they went together to proclaim the warning. Meridian Magazine, which is a Church-owned website published this article. It delights me when there is recognition of the entirely democratic way in which revelation comes to us. And when we find a married couple without jealousy about such things.

MARCH 6, 2010

Institutional Charisma

There was an article in the Church News about a symposium at BYU dealing with the “Organization and Administration of the LDS Church.” The article can be found here: <http://www.ldschurchnews.com/articles/58903/Symposium-deals-with-the-institution-of-the-Church.html>. The article mentions a paper delivered by Professor Bushman titled “Joseph Smith and the Routinization of Charisma.” Among other things, Professor Bushman asserts the church’s “genius can be largely explained in the fact that the expectation of divine revelation has been built into the very administrative structure and offices of the Church, an expectation attributable to the Prophet himself.” This is what he asserted also in Rough Stone Rolling.

From the two thousand year example of the Roman Catholic Church, I fear presumptions like these. There is a profound difference between actual revelation and an “expectation of divine revelation...built into the very administrative structure and offices of the Church.” He uses comments from Joseph Smith to support the assertion, while ignoring the revelation in Section 121 cautioning that while many may be called, few are chosen. He ignores the revelation that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority as they suppose they begin to immediately exercise unrighteous dominion. Without confirming revelation given to every member of the Church, as a constant check on abuse, the destiny of Mormonism will be a repeat of the history of Catholicism. A Holy American Empire will replace the Holy Roman Empire, both of which have or will resort to blood and horror as the means to reign over mankind. The bedrock of the Gospel is the testimony of Jesus. The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy (Rev. 19:10). That is the charisma the scriptures tell us to trust.

There is absolutely no historical precedent we can point to which confirms that charisma can be safely institutionalized. There are an abundance of examples, however, of men abusing religion to gain control over others to satisfy their pride, to exercise control and dominion over others, and to gratify their vain ambition. The only check against this are the individual testimonies of the few, humble followers of Christ. Nevertheless, we are told that in our day even they are going to be led into error oftentimes by those who teach them the precepts of men (2 Ne. 28:14).

MARCH 6, 2010

You Just Never Know

Went to baseball practice this morning. My youngest daughter plays on a boy's team (she's the only girl). Today in a scrimmage she was the only one to hit a double.

MARCH 6, 2010

Angels

There is a system by which men learn the mysteries of heaven and are saved. That system is set out in Alma 12:29–30:

- First, angels are sent to prepare men/women.
- Second, they are allowed to behold the Lord's glory.

- Then they converse with the Lord, at which point they are taught the things which have been prepared from the foundation of the earth for their salvation.
- All of which is driven by the man/woman's faith, repentance and holy works.

This is in keeping with Joseph Smith's revelation about those chosen to become a member of the Church of the Firstborn. They are chosen by the holy angels to whom the keys of this power belong (D&C 77:11).

If this isn't happening, then faith does not exist on the earth any longer (Moroni 7:37).

Ministering angels are an indispensable part of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. That is why those keys were restored so early on in this dispensation, and are so widely disseminated into the Church membership (See D&C 13 and D&C 107:20).

MARCH 6, 2010

Wo, Wo, Wo

Enoch's powerful testimony to his condemned contemporaries included this question: "why counsel ye yourselves , and deny the God of heaven" (Moses 6:43). Men in that day preferred to have the counsel of men instead of the word of God, from God.

Nephi spoke of the "Zion" of our time and said: "Wo be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost" (2 Ne. 28:26).

Now having one "wo" pronounced upon a people is a warning of condemnation in this life. Their ways do not prosper and they suffer setbacks because they listen to the precepts of men. They fall back. More concerning is when three "wo's" are pronounced upon a people. The connotation being a condemnation which will last beyond this life and into eternity. So I take the following statement with some considerable seriousness:

[T]hey have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men. O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord, wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell. (2 Ne. 28:14–15)

Three “wo’s” pronounced and three names of God used to make that warning. False doctrines and whoredoms are an equivalent in this passage. That is, you are “whoring” after other false gods, and betraying the true Lord God Almighty, when you preach false doctrines which assure you, in your pride, that you are safe, elect, chosen and better than others. Such teachers are condemned three-fold.

What an interesting problem we have in front of us. No-one can trust in any man or men. All of us are required to hear God’s voice, and follow Him.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MARCH 6, 2010 AT 11:49 PM

I choose to hear God’s voice. I seem to have a challenge in hearing these days. Prayer, fasting, studying...I am striving...what can I do differently to “hear Him”?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 7, 2010 AT 2:30 PM

First, live by everything you know to be right. You do not have to follow something you have not yet been taught. But you do have to live true to what you’ve already been given.

Second, ask God. The inquiry of the rich, young man: “what lack I yet?” is a good question. Or, as Joseph put it, as to “know of your state and standing before God.” He alone knows the answer to that. We all tend to underestimate the significance of our virtues, and overestimate the importance of our mistakes.

MARCH 7, 2010

IMO (in my opinion)

I think that Alma 41:8 should be cross referenced with D&C 130:7.

The footnote at Alma 41:10b should also include Deuteronomy 32:8–9.

MARCH 7, 2010

Alma 41:15

Alma 41:15 includes this thought: “For that which you do send out shall return unto you again.” Profound thought. I do not believe you have to await the afterlife or Judgment Day to realize the truth of this statement.

Therefore, I try to take care what I “send out” for fear of how it may return unto me again.

MARCH 7, 2010

My Scriptures

I have several sets of scriptures. The one I prize the most used to be my every-day set. Into this copy I have added only additional cross-references and footnotes. There are no other marks. I suspect that I have added between 11,000 and 15,000 additional cross references and footnotes in red pencil to this set. It has become so valuable a study set that I do not take it out of my home.

I have a “retired” set which is literally falling apart. I used that set to teach from 1980 to 2000. It is tattered, and has very little, if anything, marked or added to it. I keep that set in my desk drawer at work.

Then I have a new set which has become my every-day set. I take it to Church with me.

None of these sets have thumb-indexing on the pages. I HATE that stuff. It distracts me when I use the scriptures. Both of the first two sets were “Type A” sets which Deseret Book used to publish without thumb-indexing. You can’t get a “Type A” set like that anymore. I tried. Even talked with the management at Deseret Book. Can’t be done.

So I bought a “Type B” set, which is the same paper as a “Type A” but just not genuine leather bound. Much cheaper set. Then I took that set to Schafer Bindery in Salt Lake and had them bind it with a real leather cover. So I have a “Type A” set, without thumb indexing, and it only cost in total about $20 more than if Deseret Book made a proper set and sold them.

MARCH 7, 2010

With Respect to the Leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

I balance my deep respect for these men, and profound awareness that no-one is really equal to the burden which WE impose upon them, with the knowledge that I alone am responsible for confirming through revelation all truth. Now, I say “the burden which we impose upon them” to distinguish between what the Lord and scriptures says are their duties on the one hand, and the mythological duties which we have put upon them. The scriptures and the Lord do NOT make them omniscient. As a group the Saints do. That is the first great error, and it is not the leader's error but the saints'.

I've seen many, many mistakes made by the Brethren. But I loved them and sustained them and have refrained from being overtly critical of them.

It is not an institution which will be saved. Indeed, the institution is doomed to be confined to this world, and not pass into the next. But, it is the individual who will be saved. Individuals, however, must receive what the institution offers to obtain salvation. Therefore respect for the church is necessary. It's role is essential. It's authority from the Lord.

MARCH 8, 2010

Amber Dubois

The body of missing 14-year old Amber Dubois was found and positively identified Saturday. Her body was placed in a shallow grave. The morning she disappeared she went to school with a check to pay for a young lamb she intended to raise as part of her membership in the Future Farmer's of America. Her remains were identified using dental records.

During law school we studied sociopathic behavior as part of criminal law. Sociopaths are incapable of empathizing with others and are not at all affected by the harm or pain they cause to others. When you combine sociopathic personalities with sexual disorientation and violence, the lethal combination produced is simply beyond reformation. I do not think it wise to ever release a violent sexual predator back into society. It is still too soon to know, but it appears Amber was the victim of the same sexual offender who was charged with another young woman's murder about a week ago. Amber's body was found by searching the same area as his last known victim. He was out on parole from earlier violent sexual offenses.

I not only mourn Amber's death, but also the incapacity of the criminal system to have protected her and perhaps many other unknown victims yet to be discovered. Release of sociopathic sexual predators from prison should never occur.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 16, 2010 AT 6:06 PM

Today the man who killed Amber pled guilty. California agreed not to seek the death penalty. This brings the question of who murdered her to a conclusion. May her family receive peace. She was only 14 when he abducted and murdered her.

MARCH 8, 2010

Genius

Joseph Smith was the first, great restorer of lost light in this Dispensation. He restored doctrine, authority, ordinances, scriptures and the organization for the Church. His ministry was one of the greatest among men in any age.

The second great restorer was, in my view, Hugh Nibley. He shed light on antiquity using the scholar's tools while calibrating the recovery of ancient truth using the restored doctrine, authority, ordinances and scriptures which Joseph had bequeathed him. Hugh Nibley's legacy as a restorer of lost truth from the past is second only to Joseph Smith's.

Joseph's genius was unique and inspired. So was Hugh Nibley's. In the case of Hugh Nibley, he inspired a whole generation of students and produced a small army of those who intended to follow his example. It is not as easy as it seems, however. From scholarly disciples, to FARMS to now the Maxwell Institute, the effort has produced some good fruit. but you cannot institutionalize genius. The great contribution of Brother Nibley is simply something that cannot be replicated or continued.

Genius will always be (as Will Durrant put it while intending to be derisive): “isolated and unruly.” It could not be tamed in the schools of Greece, nor can it be captured in the halls of BYU. Credentials will never become a substitute for inspiration.

CHAPTER 4

What Guarantee Do We Have?

MARCH 8, 2010

Nadab and Abihu

I was asked about the relationship between Nadab and Abihu's death and the Day of Atonement ceremony. I responded as follows:

Remember that these two saw the Lord in sacred space (on top of Sinai with Moses) earlier in their lives (Exo. 24:9–11).

Despite their earlier audience with the Lord, they were not authorized to enter the Holy of Holies. Only the chosen High Priest, and then once an year, only on the Day of Atonement (Lev. Chapter 16; 23:26–32).

They entered into the Holy of Holies when they were not authorized, and burned incense contrary to the Day of Atonement ceremony. They were not authorized to be there nor to do what they did. Therefore they were struck down (Lev. 10:1–3). The Lord reminded Moses after their death that those who are going to enter into that place must be “sanctified” before entering, hence the Day of Atonement ceremony being a prerequisite for entry.

Later Jewish tradition required the High Priest to have a rope tied to his ankle when he entered the Holy of Holies, so that his body could be recovered if he were struck down without the necessity of others entering the room.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MARCH 9, 2010 AT 9:56 AM

This comment opens a new question. When did the Jewish tradition of wearing a rope tied to the ankle get instituted? Did Zacharias wear such a rope when he was delayed by the Angel Gabriel? Where do you research this kind of information? Hugh Nibley's books or other books or other sources?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 9, 2010 AT 1:50 PM

Anonymous,

Wearing a rope was Second Temple, at least.

Zacharias was not in the Holy of Holies, but in the Holy Place, outside the veil. They did not need a rope there. In that room at least three priests entered morning and evening every day; and more once a week when the shewbread was replaced. Also when the menorah was serviced more would have been required for that duty, as well. All of whom were in the Holy Place, not the Holy of Holies.

I can remember a lot more than I can keep in a bibliography. The source would require me to rummage about in my library. That's inconvenient. I can make the comment to stimulate thought, but you'll need to go research it to locate a source. (It may be in Edersheim's book on the Temple, but I'd have to check.) I don't recall Nibley making any comment on this, but he may have. His books are indexed well enough you may be able to search just the index and see if he commented on it.

MARCH 8, 2010

Raising the Bar

The name of the policy which eliminates a large population of desirous young men from serving a mission was really unfortunate. "Raising The Bar" implies that these young men do not measure up.

Repentant young men who have been involved with serious sexual transgressions during their teens are by and large denied the opportunity to serve. So, also, are young men with medical conditions which require significant treatment or medications.

As a result of this program, there have been tens of thousands of young men who have not served. The missionary force dropped from the high 60,000's to the low 50,000's and has remained there. Those who have been excluded who wanted to serve have quite often felt judged and alienated as a result. Many have either left activity or left the church altogether. They form a body numbering now in excess of 100,000, and as they marry, have children, and raise their posterity outside the church they will eventually number in the millions.

Calling this program "Raising The Bar" has essentially precluded a change. You can't "Lower The Bar" without seeming foolish, or to invite n'er do well's.

I've seen what this program has done to young men who wanted to serve, and who would have been allowed to serve before the program was announced. I've tried to overcome their sense of rejection by the church, and have succeeded in only one case. The others have essentially all told me that the church had rejected them and therefore they intended to stay away.

MARCH 9, 2010

Equinox

The Vernal Equinox is Saturday, March 20th. It is that moment that arrives every year where everything is in balance, light and dark are balanced and nature everywhere from pole to pole is showered equally with the light and life of heaven. It occurs twice a year, and not again until the Autumnal Equinox in the Fall.

The First Vision aligned with the Spring, the date of which is not recorded. However, as Michael Quinn noted in his work (using borrowed research), the Smith family in general and Joseph in particular, would have associated power with the event. It is not unlikely that the First Vision occurred on the Vernal Equinox, just as Moroni's visits always coincided with the Autumnal Equinox.

For our day, the Autumnal Equinox is the more significant. The Vernal is associated with life, birth, beginnings, restoration and newness. The Autumnal is associated with death, closing, judgment and endings. We live on the cusp of the end times. Though there remain a great many things to be done, our era is the time when history is about to close out.

Observing the Vernal, Autumnal and Solstices was something done from ancient times, in ceremony and in ritual. Whole cities were built aligned to the cardinal directions of the compass and the lights of heaven. The lights of heaven were given to us first as "signs" and secondly as "seasons."

Don't let them pass by unnoticed. Otherwise you note less than even the plants and the animals whose life cycles and behavior acknowledge the passing of such events.

MARCH 9, 2010

Reincarnation

Yesterday at lunch I heard a great line from the Maharaja: "Reincarnation is only for the ignorant." Made me laugh.

MARCH 9, 2010

Baseball Season

High School baseball begins today. Hope it doesn't snow.

MARCH 9, 2010

All Things Bear Testimony

In reflecting back on John Pratt's recent article on Venus and its tie to the Lord's life, I have concluded that the phrase "under the earth" as used in Moses 6:63 is referring to the cycles of the "wandering stars" or planets. It does not refer to the subterranean composition of the earth's mantle.

Venus disappears on the horizon, taking it "under the earth." Then it reappears again, symbolizing the resurrection of the Lord. Venus being the great symbol of Christ, as John Pratt has shown.

As Val Brinkerhoff has also shown in his The Day Star - Reading Sacred Architecture volumes, the orbit of Venus tracks a pentagram in the sky over its eight year cycle.

Toyotas and light beer are of more interest to us than the procession of the equinoxes through the zodiac. All things do bear testimony of God. But we prefer the billboards on the side of the highway.

MARCH 9, 2010

Ordinances

Oddly, ordinances were intended to communicate an inner message of redemption and holiness. Instead, they get looked upon as credentials. They aren't. Possession of ordinances without inner holiness is meaningless. On the other hand, D&C 137 shows that possession of inner holiness, while lacking the ordinances, will not be an impediment. (We can send anyone with a card to the temple to take care of the ordinances. But how infrequent it is that we produce a redeemed and acceptable soul to our God and Father.)

COMMENTS:

Gentleman · MARCH 10, 2010 AT 8:42 AM

How do you reconcile this to D&C 52:14 And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations —

¹⁵ Wherefore he that prayeth, whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me if he obey mine ordinances.

¹⁶ He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek and edifieth, the same is of God if he obey mine ordinances.

¹⁷ And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you.

¹⁸ And again, he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruits, even according to this pattern, is not of me.

¹⁹ Wherefore, by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases under the whole heavens.

According to the Lord's own voice obeying the ordinances are an integral part of identifying when someone is on the path of truth vs. being on the path of error.

D&C 137 seems to apply only to those who did not have an opportunity in mortal life. For everyone else there is no excuse.

Denver Snuffer · March 10, 2010 at 1:02 PM

Gentleman,

I see no conflict. When anyone is offered truth, they are obligated to follow it. When we reject truth we risk judgment. I'm speaking about all people in the post. Including those who are raised in other religious traditions, know nothing about ours, and whose lives are good and hearts are right before God. They may advance in light and truth more than even we do. But eventually they will be offered and will need to accept the ordinances. While those of us who have the ordinances and think they are means to an end, or tickets to rewards, but whose hearts are not right before God, really are not "obeying mine ordinances." They can and sometimes do use the ordinances to justify a refusal to obey them, or more correctly abusing them rather than obeying them. They were meant to convey something deep within, sacred and holy. Not to justify us but to bring us to repentance and contrition. I constantly worry that I err by not receiving what has been offered, choosing instead to think myself more than I am. Repentance is the only safe activity to bring us safely back to Him.

MARCH 10, 2010

Christ's Victory

Christ's great victory was won by this simple formula: "He suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them" (D&C 20:22).

MARCH 10, 2010

A Little Leaven

Sometimes it is the thinnest of threads which keeps a people from judgment. A "little leaven" or a "little salt" can save a whole lump. The want of "five righteous" has and can destroy a whole city. When you consider so thin a thread as that, you must surely realize there are no private sins. Each life has cosmic meaning.

MARCH 10, 2010

Patriarch Smith

The Patriarch of the Church is Eldred G. Smith, now aged 103 years. His office used to ordain the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints using the hereditary priesthood line running back to Father Smith, Joseph and Hyrum.

Eldred G. Smith was made Emeritus in 1979, but continues to have an office in the Church Office Building.

MARCH 10, 2010

Powerful Doctrines

I've been reading Alma's teachings on priesthood in Alma 13. There are some startling things in there. We underestimate the depth of doctrine preserved in the Book of Mormon. Pre-earth life is unmistakably taught there.

Ordination to the high priesthood reckons from before the foundation of the earth. Power in that priesthood is derived from heaven (as D&C 121 teaches).

These powerful doctrines are not even imagined by other faiths or traditions. Among us it is hardly understood, and we possess the scriptures that teach it.

MARCH 10, 2010

Seriously

There's an article which estimates that 16% of the population (teens to 49 yrs.) of the United States has genital herpes. You can read it here: <http://www.reuters.com/article/idUSN0923528620100309> or a wire hair brush to scratch with...

Now there's an advertisement for the law of chastity...or anti-itch Gold Bond...

The woman/man has not been born who is worth forfeiting what is lost by breaking covenants with the Lord.

MARCH 10, 2010

Patriarch

When I first joined the church we sustained the Patriarch of the Church, along with the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve as a "Prophet, Seer and Revelator." I would expect that at some point Patriarch Smith will be succeeded by his oldest, direct, descendant, unless there is still a living sibling of his upon whom the office would devolve (which I doubt).

When the office was established, it formed an independent line of priesthood authority. This line was not be dependent upon selection by temporary office holders drawn from many family lines. Instead the Smith family, through whom the church was restored, would hold this hereditary office forever. It will be interesting to see how this office is handled in the future.

COMMENTS:

MissMel · MARCH 10, 2010 AT 9:46 PM

As a Smith descendant, I am curious about this. Once Eldred dies, would this office theoretically go to his eldest son or any Smith descendant who is the oldest? The reunions are full of white hair, so its anybody's guess...everyone seems to be over 90 or under 10....

Tom · MARCH 11, 2010 AT 12:03 AM

I thought that when Patriarch Smith was given "emeritus" status back in 1979 that it was never to be filled again. Is that wrong or is it not yet known what will happen.

Quinn notes in one of his books (Extensions of Power, p. 131) the following:

Whenever a patriarch after 1844 tried to magnify his presiding office, the Twelve and First Presidency recoiled in apprehension. However, when individual patriarchs seemed to lack administrative vigor, the Twelve and First Presidency criticized them for not magnifying their office. Few men could walk such an ecclesiastical tightrope. For various reasons the First Presidency and Twelve were in conflict with seven out of eight successors of the original Presiding Patriarch, Joseph Smith, Sr. The hierarchy finally resolved the situation on 6 Oct 1979 by making Eldred G. Smith an "emeritus" general authority without replacing him. This permanently "discontinued" the office of Patriarch to the Church... vacating the office in 1979 ended the conflicts. However, according to Brigham Young's instructions, the 1979 action made the church vulnerable: "It was necessary to keep up a full organization of the Church all through time as far as could be. At least the three first Presidency, quorum of the Twelve, Seventies, and Patriarch over the whole Church ... so that the devil could take no advantage of us.[15]" It is beyond the scope of this analysis to assess such metaphysical vulnerability. Administratively, however, the decision to leave the patriarch's office vacant after 1979 streamlined the hierarchy and removed a source of nearly constant tension.

Denver Snuffer · March 12, 2010 at 8:52 AM

Joseph Smith, by revelation, established two presiding offices: The President of the High Priesthood and the Patriarch of the Church. The President (Joseph Smith) presided. But the Patriarch stood by with keys to ordain the next President and provide for orderly transition from one President to the next.

The Patriarchal office is by lineage or descent. That way it cannot be stolen by an interloper; thereby creating a separation of power inside the one Church (or kingdom).

Joseph became President through divine ordination by the Lord and messengers sent by the Lord.

Brigham Young was sustained as President, relying upon his ordination as an Apostle.

John Taylor was also sustained, relying also upon his ordination as an Apostle.

These precedents were relied upon through Joseph F. Smith, who had an ordinance/ordination accompany his assumption of the office of President of the Church. That ordination was performed by his half-brother, John Smith, the Patriarch of the Church.

Heber J. Grant was conflicted about the Patriarch because he considered himself a descendant of Joseph Smith by sealing and the Patriarch was competition to that; and therefore he did not want the Patriarch to ordain him president. He had the Twelve ordain him. He also initiated the name change from “Presiding Patriarch” to “Patriarch to the Church.”

Heber J. Grant’s practice continued thereafter.

Interestingly the term “Prophet” was not applied to a living man holding the office of “President of the Church” until 1955, during the administration of David O. McKay. The term “Prophet” until that time always meant exclusively Joseph Smith, and not the office holder of President. Before then it was “President Young” and “President Taylor” and “President Woodruff” and so on. However, in 1955 the Church News began a new practice of referring to the living President McKay as a “Prophet.” It was felt that changing the reference to the living President would result in quicker acceptance of direction from him, and less criticism of the President. (President Grant was the most unpopular Church President in the Church’s history, and that was something they hoped to avoid happening again.) It worked. No-one wants to reject counsel from a living prophet of God.

So since that time the practice has been for living Presidents to continue to be referred to by the title “Prophet” by all General Authorities and other leaders. However, I have noticed that the President never refers to himself as “Prophet” in any declaration I have been able to find. He accepts that term as used by others, but does not apply it to himself.

The recorded times when a Church President was asked if he was “a Prophet” include testimony by Joseph F. Smith when asked by the Senate Committee in the hearings to seat Senator Smoot. His response was “my people sustain me as such.” President McKay was asked by a reporter and his response was “look me in the eye and tell me I’m not a prophet.” President Lee essentially repeated the same response to a reporter as President McKay. And when he was interviewed by the Press President Hinckley essentially repeated Joseph F. Smith’s response, saying in effect: “I’m sustained by the Church as such.” There may be others, but those are the ones I recall at the moment.

All of which is, I suppose, interesting history. I of course, sustain as “prophets, seers and revelators” the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve every Ward Conference, Stake Conference, General Conference and temple recommend interview.

Anonymous · MARCH 13, 2010 AT 2:34 AM

It is interesting history...but, once made into an “emeritus” calling, does it die with Patriarch Smith? I suppose, by lineage, the calling never ceases...but as a practice of the church it could end with this “emeritus” status, could it not?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 10:30 AM

Although he is emeritus, he nonetheless retains the office. It isn't gone just because he is emeritus at present. Nor, for that matter, is the office gone if it is neglected and unfilled. It still exists in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Just as the First Quorum of Seventy existed in Section 107, though it was not filled until President Kimball did so. It was nevertheless part of the restored Church.

If they elect to let it lapse into a vacancy, it does not eliminate the existence of the office. It just shows neglect to fill it. A thing for which I presume those responsible will be accountable to the Lord.

MARCH 11, 2010

Do We Have a Guarantee?

I've been thinking about the “guarantee” we have as Latter-day Saints that God takes peculiar delight in us. We're His “chosen” and He looks down from heaven and grins broadly when He considers our enlightened advantage over our fellowman. I'm not sure I can reconcile that happy view of our circumstances with His frank assessment of us in D&C 112:23–26.

I'm thinking that the first order of the day for me is repentance.

MARCH 11, 2010

Judgment

Since the Lord reserves to Himself alone the final judgment (3 Ne. 27:27) I think we overstep our privileges when we presume our judgment of others is our right. In fact, the irony of judging while holding priesthood office is that the one judging may be the one really on trial. They hold office, are given “keys” and are upheld by other saints to see whether they will execute the assignment in conformity with D&C 121, using gentleness, meekness, persuasion, kindness and love unfeigned. If they don’t, they fail the test, and in the process establish the criteria and means by which they will be judged.

Ironically, the one judging is the one really on trial, and the one being judged will be a witness against (or for) them.

Things are different than we think. And that is as it should be. Otherwise the hearts of men could not be put on display here in this life, and the proving that this estate was designed to accomplish would fail.

We should be afraid to hold office over others. We should have pity or compassion for those who are called to these positions. Instead, we envy those who hold offices in the church. Nephi counseled against this (2 Ne. 26:21).

Now is the great day of deception when darkness covers so much of the social order that madness reigns. If you just turned the light on and saw our day as clearly as Nephi did you’d marvel at the abundant foolishness, vanity and errors we entertain. To do that you only need to read what Nephi wrote and realize he’s talking to and about US; not those who will never read the book.

We're being tested. More importantly, I'm being tested. So I need to "work out my salvation with fear and trembling before the Lord" just as Paul suggested (Philip. 2:12).

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MARCH 13, 2010 AT 2:31 AM

Denver...

...can you elaborate on "judge righteous judgment?" (John 7:24).

I have always taken it to mean what you wrote (i.e. judge not the person). Recently, however, I have some proclaim that "judge righteous judgment" would mean "judge no judgment," given that none are righteous here on earth and all our paradigms are skewed.

I think this "judge no judgment" is correct in the sense of judging others, a person. But, are we to believe that we can't judge ("evaluate") things, events, situations, teachings, etc., as well?

What say you?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 10:26 AM

We necessarily make judgments daily. We have to in order to function in life. However, when it comes to deciding the righteousness of another, I leave it entirely to the Lord. I sustain others in what they are asked to do, without making it my responsibility to decide whether God approves of them or not. If they are difficult for me to abide, then I pray for my attitude to soften. If I am told they are not right before God, I ask that He do something about them.

There are just too many things in my own life, under my control, which I have yet to master. That is where I fight daily. Inside my own bounds. The "macro" picture doesn't matter much because of how limited an influence I have there.

I believe very much in the principle of a "little salt" and a "little leaven" which can preserve even an entire nation. My responsibility is to become that salt, become that leaven. Such a daunting task is more than enough to occupy my time and thoughts.

MARCH 11, 2010

It's YOUR Eternal Salvation

When it comes to the subject of one's eternal salvation, I can't understand why someone would simply trust others and leave it to them to tell them what is necessary. I should think everyone would study this matter night and day, and reach their own conclusion about what is important, what is not, what will save, and what is simply foolishness.

Joseph said he advised all to go on and search deeper and deeper into the mysteries of God. Alma said about the same thing in Alma 12:9–11.

When it comes to sacred knowledge, the absence of curiosity and relentless inquiry is evidence of apathy and indifference. Joseph posed the question in The Lectures on Faith of how we can hope to inherit the same reward as the ancients without following the same path as they did. Great question, that. Brings to mind Abraham's description of his own relentless search to find God in Abraham 1:2. I think that is the formula. As is also D&C 93:1.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MARCH 13, 2010 AT 9:01 PM

What do any of us know about ourselves, God or where we came from and what we are that was not told to us by someone else? Someone else who was also told by others.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 10:21 AM

We are dependent upon others initially for all we know. But we get experiences which allow us to independently know things for ourselves. This is true of the seasons, mathematics, astronomy, friends, life and God. There may be a number of things in life about which we will remain dependent upon others for our knowledge, but God should not remain one of them. He is as knowable as your own living grandfather, whom you may visit only from time to time.

db schroeder · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 10:53 PM

So Denver, are you saying don't pepper Heavenly Father overly, but trust in your own judgement when it necessitates to do so. Also be sure to be humble enough to ask for strength and wisdom as you proceed along your decided path on a certain issue. In other words, when the training wheels come off, don't ask HF to put them back on, go in Faith, asking for help as needed ?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 15, 2010 AT 2:51 PM

No, I'm saying you can know God just as you know any other person. And you can visit with, or more correctly be visited by Him. Read The Second Comforter: Conversing With The Lord Through The Veil and you will see how knowable I believe God to be.

That having been said, I do think there are times when it isn't necessary for God to respond to questions we ask Him. When the famine gets bad enough, we'll decide for ourselves to go down to the Nile Delta in Egypt to save our lives (See Abr. 2:21). Our common sense and instinct for self-preservation is just as serviceable as a commandment from God to go where food is growing in times of famine.

MARCH 12, 2010

Posted by the Moderator (she thinks it important)

I think this is interesting history. I should like to know more of this kind of thing.

Joseph Smith, by revelation, established two presiding offices: The President of the High Priesthood and the Patriarch of the Church. The President (Joseph Smith) presided. But the Patriarch stood by with keys to ordain the next President and provide for orderly transition from one President to the next.

The Patriarchal office is by lineage or descent. That way it cannot be stolen by an interloper; thereby creating a separation of power inside the one Church (or kingdom).

Joseph became President through divine ordination by the Lord and messengers sent by the Lord.

Brigham Young was sustained as President, relying upon his ordination as an Apostle. John Taylor was also sustained, relying also upon his ordination as an Apostle.

These precedents were relied upon through Joseph F. Smith, who had an ordinance/ordination accompany his assumption of the office of President of the Church. That ordination was performed by his half-brother, John Smith, the Patriarch of the Church.

Heber J. Grant was conflicted about the Patriarch because he considered himself a descendant of Joseph Smith by sealing and the Patriarch was competition to that; and therefore he did not want the Patriarch to ordain him president. He had the Twelve ordain him. He also initiated the name change from “Presiding Patriarch” to “Patriarch to the Church.”

Heber J. Grant’s practice continued thereafter.

Interestingly the term “Prophet” was not applied to a living man holding the office of “President of the Church” until 1955, during the administration of David O. McKay. The term “Prophet” until that time always meant exclusively Joseph Smith, and not the office holder of President. Before then it was “President Young” and “President Taylor” and “President Woodruff” and so on. However, in 1955 the Church News began a new practice of referring to the living President McKay as a “Prophet.” It was felt that changing the reference to the living President would result in quicker acceptance of direction from him, and less criticism of the President. (President Grant was the most unpopular Church President in the Church’s history, and that was something they hoped to avoid happening again.) It worked. No-one wants to reject counsel from a living prophet of God.

So since that time the practice has been for living Presidents to continue to be referred to by the title “Prophet” by all General Authorities and other leaders. However, I have noticed that the President never refers to himself as “Prophet” in any declaration I have been able to find. He accepts that term as used by others, but does not apply it to himself.

The recorded times when a Church President was asked if he was “a Prophet” include testimony by Joseph F. Smith when asked by the Senate Committee in the hearings to seat Senator Smoot. His response was “my people sustain me as such.” President McKay was asked by a reporter and his response was “look me in the eye and tell me I’m not a prophet.” President Lee essentially repeated the same response to a reporter as President McKay. And when he was interviewed by the Press, President Hinckley essentially repeated Joseph F. Smith’s response, saying in effect: “I’m sustained by the Church as such.” There may be others, but those are the ones I recall at the moment.

All of which is, I suppose, interesting history. I of course, sustain as “prophets, seers and revelators” the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve every Ward Conference, Stake Conference, General Conference and temple recommend interview.

MARCH 12, 2010

Accuser of Our Brethren

There is really no reason to complain about the church. That is a role I would never want to assume. Satan’s title is “the accuser of our brethren” (Rev. 12:10). Of what does he accuse them? The answer is of all their natural failings, mistakes, shortcomings and errors. We are all ample examples of such shortcomings. No matter how good a life we may lead, we all fall short. The answer to this problem is not to accuse others but to forgive them. We cloak others in a robe of charity, and we in turn merit charity.

This is why Christ requires us to forgive all others. We get forgiveness as we give forgiveness to others. There is an extensive discussion of this in Come, Let Us Adore Him. It is true doctrine.

I think avoiding the role of “accuser” and filling the role of patient forbearance with others’ shortcomings is the only wise course in life.

COMMENTS:

Allen · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 9:30 AM

While I completely agree that we should look for the good in our leaders and forgive their imperfections, the trust we are expected to have in our leaders and their decisions, does not mean we should blindly follow them no matter what their personal actions are. At what point does a leader’s personal behavior effect the decisions he is making and the counsel he is giving in his church calling?

I have a friend whose now deceased grandfather was a stake patriarch at the same time he was having an affair with his secretary. Other stake presidents and bishops have been convicted of sexual abuse and are now serving prison terms.

At what point do we just forgive them and move on with our lives and when do we start to question their leadership decisions and counsel? One could argue that the patriarch’s previously mentioned affair was affecting the blessings he was giving. If I were someone who received a patriarchal blessing under his hand while he was having an affair, could I expect to get another more inspired blessing from another patriarch?

The whole idea of trusting in a man to give you messages from God seems to be full of pitfalls. When does a leader's personal actions affect the inspiration he is receiving? None of us can accurately judge when he is and when he isn't. That's the dilemma.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 14, 2010 AT 10:14 AM

Stake Presidents are required to regularly read the Patriarchal Blessings given in their stake.

I sustain leaders, period. I let the Lord decide when and how to remove them. If I think they are unworthy, I make it a matter of prayer and take it up with the Lord. Until He removes them, I bear with, sustain and support them.

That does NOT mean I trust in their inspiration. Unless I have an independent confirmation, I trust no man. Salvation is too important to trust in any arm of flesh.

MARCH 12, 2010

The Lord is in Charge

I was asked if there was a day coming when men/women will be required to condemn those in the church whose conduct does not measure up. I responded:

There is certainly a day of separation coming. Angels are already begging to begin that process. The Lord has told them "not yet" but promised them it will happen "by and by" as His preparations continue.

The Lord is in charge. We needn't worry about how His purposes will all be fulfilled. Patience with the larger picture is easier when we realize that for each of us the smaller, individual picture is what is important. We have plenty to do individually to receive our invitation into the Church of the Firstborn. As we do what is necessary to receive that invitation, then we will become more effective ministers of salvation for others. Worrying about the salvation of all others before being saved ourselves is a needless thought.

The evil of this day is sufficient (Matt. 6:34) because it really is enough to live well one day at a time. Eternity will be composed of living well one day. For God all is as one day (Alma 40:8). When we have done that, we are ready to receive eternity. Until then, worrying about the larger and more chaotic picture of what is going on keeps us from changing the only environment over which we have any influence or control. That is the environment of our hearts.

MARCH 13, 2010

Samson

I teach the Young Men tomorrow and will be discussing Samson's life and example. He conforms to one of the great patterns of men sent by the Lord to deliver His people. That often repeated pattern includes:

- A couple or woman who cannot bear a child because of some infirmity, age, infertility, barrenness, or lack of marriage.
- A promise made that a son will be sent.
- The woman/couple receive a son despite the infertility problem before.
- The son then comes and plays a role which alters the course of the Lord's people.

This was the case with Abraham and Sarah, to whom Isaac came. Manoah, to whom Samson came. Elkanah and Hannah, to whom Samuel came. Zechariah and Elizabeth, to whom John was sent. Mary and Joseph, to whom Jesus came.

There have been many others, but their stories are not always recorded or known.

Sampson was a Nazarite, the covenant terms of his dedication to the Lord is set out in Numbers 6. Among other things, a Nazarite was not to cut his hair during the time of the covenant. This was the reason Sampson's hair cutting was so significant. It represented the final break of the covenant.

Sampson was a Messianic figure. He foreshadowed the Lord.

There is a statement in Matthew that Christ was to be called a "Nazarene" (Matt. 2:23). That conflicts, however, with the later inquiry of Nathanael recorded in John 1:46: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" The more likely statement Matthew was referring to was that the Lord was to be "called a Nazarite" meaning he was under the covenant in Numbers 6.

I've written a parable about the way in which Sampson's life mirrored the Lord's in Ten Parables.

I believe that if we had a full account of the Lord's life we would realize just how much Sampson's life foreshadowed the Lord's. A hint of that is contained in that parable in Ten Parables.

MARCH 13, 2010

Different Traditions, Different Interpretations

In Stephen's testimony just prior to his martyrdom in Acts, he gives an account of Moses which does not appear in our version of the Old Testament. In Stephen's explanation, he attributes to Moses the knowledge that he was going to be a deliverer of Israel even before he killed the Egyptian (See Acts 7:24–25). According to Stephen, Moses was frustrated that the Israelites failed to recognize him as their deliverer.

Our account instead tells us that Moses was called by God, to his surprise. When called, Moses responded: "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?” (Exo. 3:11).

This goes to show that there were different traditions reflected in the biblical accounts. Just as there are references to scriptural books which we no longer possess.

The relevance of personal revelation, and the need for continuing revelation, remain apparent even if you want to understand the very scriptures we believe in. Hence the almost immediate reaction of Joseph and Oliver to receiving the Holy Ghost and how scriptures took on new, even previously hidden meanings (See JS-H 1:74).

I was taught from the New Testament all my childhood by a mother who was a Baptist. When hands were laid upon my head after baptism, I re-read the New Testament and thought it was a new book.

MARCH 13, 2010

True and Living

The Lord’s reference to the Church in a revelation received on November 1, 1831 as “the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth” (D&C 1:30) was true for the following reasons:

First, the Church was established by revelation, visitations from angels, and delegation of authority.

Second, it was “living” because the authority and gifts were present and unfolding; and new scripture and revelations were being received.

Third, it would continue to grow in knowledge, light and truth as further ordinances and rites were restored.

Finally, it was “true” because it taught the doctrines which gave converts the tools with which they could grow in light and knowledge until the perfect day (D&C 50:24).

The Lord's description in 1831 is what we should aspire to have said about us still, today. But, of course, that would require us to also be "true" and "living" in the same way as the Church in 1831.

MARCH 13, 2010

Concourses of Angels

The object of this mortal existence is to develop faith. We need adversity and a sense of isolation from God in order to develop the character necessary to be like God. There is a test underway. But it is conducted by a benign and friendly heavenly host, whose primary purpose is to develop in us a godly character and charity toward one another.

Men and women may see Christ in vision or in an appearance as a solitary personage. But no person has ever seen God the Father without also seeing a host of others. They are referred to in scriptures as a "heavenly host," or "numerous angels," or "concourses of angels." There is a reason that a company is always shown at the appearance of the Father. You should look into the matter. Within the answer lies a great truth about God the Father.

MARCH 14, 2010

Explanation

Just a short word of explanation:

I write all the posts and the reply comments which go onto the blog. However, I do not have time to maintain the site itself. My wife does all the posting, editing, maintaining, etc. She takes the comments I write and puts them into the blog itself. Therefore, when you are reading anything on this site from me, you are reading what she has mechanically put into the site using the forms, etc. required to make it work. I appreciate very much the time she devotes to doing this, because I simply cannot take that time at present to do it myself.

So, when you send comments they go to her at the blog site, as well as a designated email address, then, when appropriate, she forwards them to me. I will respond to her and she will put them up onto the blog.

MARCH 13, 2010

Shepherds of Israel

In Ezekiel 34:11–12 it is written:

Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds: woe be unto the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.

This description could be applied with several layers of meaning. However, the one I like best is the interpretation which relates “feeding” to teaching truths. Shepherds were given the calling of teaching the “flocks” of Israel higher truths which would exalt them. However, they instead focused their ministry upon things which were trivial, did not raise the inner lives of the “flocks,” and stirred up those who followed them into envy and strife. These shepherds were unworthy, condemned with the pronouncement of “woe” upon them and warned by the prophet.

Fortunately, Ezekiel’s message goes on to promise that in the latter-days the Lord will:

both search [His] sheep, and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. (34:11–12)

We are in that latter-day time now. He is seeking. But notice that throughout the description of His latter-day work, He alone takes credit for finding and feeding (34:13–17).

When He has gathered enough to establish again His kingdom, He will then make a new day in which “my servant David” will be the “one shepherd” over them, in that Millennial Day (34:22–24).

We’re supposed to be getting gathered now in anticipation of becoming numerous enough for there to be a Millennial King provided for us. We’re supposed to be in contact with the Lord as He alone gathers us in this latter-day. It is a glorious vision for which we should rejoice.

MARCH 14, 2010

Amos Was No Prophet’s Son

In a vision given to Amos, the Lord showed him a plumb line. This was the method used to establish a straight wall (Amos 7:7–9). When Amos delivered the message he received, the king threatened him. Amos’ answer was succinct:

I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet’s son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit; And the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, go, prophesy unto my people Israel. Now therefore hear thou the word of the Lord: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Therefore thus saith the Lord; Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land: and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

(Amos 7:14-17)

Prophets in the past have come from obscure places. They quite often resisted delivering a message which the audience wanted to hear. Instead they corrected the behavior of a fallen people. There were no opinion polls, no focus groups to shape the message they delivered. Their words corrected, jarred, condemned and served as a warning which could allow the faithful to change the path they were on whenever needed. The Apostle Paul coined a term for teachers who taught doctrines that reassured those who ought to be condemned. He said such people “heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears” (2 Tim. 4:3). I presume “heap” means they get quite a few of them.

I’m pleased we live in a day of living prophets again, and that we receive stern warnings from time to time from those who know the Lord. Such occasions provide us all the opportunity to be warned, repent, change our ways and approach nearer the mark of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus (Philip. 3:14).

MARCH 14, 2010

Daylight Savings

We celebrated Daylight Savings by neglecting to reset the clocks and missing Sacrament Meeting. Apparently this was a widespread celebration in our ward, with less than half making it to the meeting on time. I sense a family tradition in the making here.

MARCH 15, 2010

Disgraced

Both the Republican leaders of the Utah Legislative Senate and House were forced to resign this year. The Senate leader because of a DUI. The Representative leader because of a sexual relationship with a minor many years ago, which he paid $150,000 campaign money to buy her silence. In connection with the latter scandal, the church-owned Deseret News was aware of the sexual misconduct eight years ago, but kept silent until other news of the matter became public.

The problem with any political machine owning a state is the same everywhere. It really does not matter if that machine controls the city of Chicago or the State of Utah, the result is the same. People do “favors” for the insiders, and the public suffers as a result.

Utah’s reputation as “the reddest of red states” is well deserved. The competition to fill these seats for the two involved in the scandals is internal to the Republican Party. The result of doing so will not be unlike what has long been the case here in Utah, where only one side controls everything.

Both of these men were Latter-day Saints. They are victims of the corrupt political domination every bit as much as the public has been. Without a healthy opposition party, there is no real check upon misbehavior and excesses.

I’ve always thought that opposing views and people speaking their mind is healthy. Without some criticism of a person’s plans and ideas you simply get a chorus of “yes men” chanting how inspired or worthy or good all ideas are, no matter how flawed or foolish. Utah’s two fallen leaders are “family men,” one of whom was known as a champion of “family values.” It’s almost as if he had shopped with focus groups to know what words to use to get elected, without any regard to what was within his heart.

Now is the great day of opinion polling and focus group directed marketing, in which the substance of any group of political leaders is always hidden behind the carefully crafted message intended to market image. Indeed, image is everything in this day of deceit.

So, choose your leaders carefully. They will all sound the same. It will not be the vocabulary which will distinguish the evil and corrupt from the true and good. It will only be what lies within them that will differ.

COMMENTS:

Gentleman · MARCH 15, 2010 AT 6:34 AM

I'll respectfully disagree with your statement: "It will not be the vocabulary which will distinguish the evil and corrupt from the true and good."

If you listened to the Republican presidential debates during 2008 it was very clear who was "polished" for the media and who was speaking from their own personal heart and experience in defense of the Constitution.

I personally think that it is getting easier, not harder, to distinguish good from evil (where I define this as those in support of constitutional principals and those willing to usurp freedoms).

If you know right from wrong (as defined in scripture and beginning with the War in Heaven) it is very clear to me who we should be supporting politically and who is dangerous. What we need are more people waking up to this realization. Unfortunately the majority think that the smooth words of leaders who have evil intents sound good...

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 15, 2010 AT 11:13 AM

I don't trust either political party. But I have noticed that neither one says they intend to destroy the family. Neither one says they are going to oppress and imprison us. Neither one says they will destroy the Constitution. Instead they claim that their social programs will support the family, make life more fair, and give us protection against things which harm or threaten us. Whether it is a war on poverty or war on extremists it doesn't matter. "Privacy" and "freedom of choice" sound good, actually. I think I want privacy and I want freedom to choose. But I don't want 30 million unborn killed. No one says they are in favor of killing the unborn. Those words will offend. So it is "privacy" and it is "freedom of choice" and other euphemisms. It isn't a one-way street, however. "Protection" and "national strength" are also good ideas. But when it comes to reading every email sent or received by private American citizens, I don't think anyone is in favor of that.

Both sides triangulate into growing governmental control using the buzz words of saving something good, or defeating something bad. The actions, however, are not revealed until it is already a new fence or obstruction limiting our freedom even as it is celebrated as a "protection" for us.

I'm not affiliated with either political party. My wife, on the other hand, has been a Republican state delegate. But, then again, I went to BYU and she went to Utah. So there's a certain underlying tolerance we exact from each other.

MARCH 15, 2010

Christ's Touch

Ceremonial uncleanness under the law of Moses could be spread from the unclean to the person who came in contact with them. Uncleanliness could be spread.

A tradition grew among the Jews that the altar of the Temple could not be profaned, and that if an unclean person came into contact with it, the altar did not become unclean but instead the person coming into contact with the altar became clean. We have two examples of persons relying upon this tradition in the case of Job in the Old Testament and Zacharias in the New.

Joab was to be killed by Solomon, and he knew he was to die. To die in contact with the altar was to die clean, and so Joab fled to the tabernacle, took hold of the altar and was killed there. The ones sent to kill him hesitated because they also knew they were killing a clean man, and had to be told a second time to kill him by Solomon (See, 1 Kings 2:28–34). Solomon did not care that Joab would die clean.

In the case of Zacharias, his death is not recorded other than in a passing reference by Christ as He confronted the scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 23:35). Joseph Smith said this reference was to John's father.

In the case of Christ, the tradition had fulfillment. He touched the unclean, but communicated cleanliness to them. Whether it was the woman with an issue of blood, a leper, or the dead, touching them did not make Him unclean, rather it made those whom He touched clean.

MARCH 15, 2010

Common Consent

My car insisted it was 5:36 this morning as I drove my daughter to Seminary. The Honda was not yet in on the collective conspiracy to sustain the loss of an hour by our common consent.

My daughter got out the owner's manual while we were driving and helped me convince the car to sustain the new hour. Now the Honda is also in on the conspiracy by common consent to change our bearings in the universe.

It still gets light and dark as before, but we call it something different. Happily, the Honda does not contradict that illusion anymore.

We cannot control the reality in which we live, but we can use our collective agreements to pretend it is otherwise. Now we awake and arise at a different time, but call it an hour later. Common consent is a powerful thing. It can be used to change how we look at time itself.

MARCH 15, 2010

Why a Teleprompter?

My wife and I were watching a KBYU broadcast of a speaker using a teleprompter to deliver a talk to students there. What a remarkable difference there is between an extemporaneous talk, given from the heart, and someone reading a teleprompter.

I think it is high tribute to President Obama that his use of a teleprompter is so casual and conversational that you cannot detect he is reading the comments. He actually seems to be speaking spontaneously when he uses one. That is a great gift, unfortunately not shared by many other public speakers.

When a talk is read off a teleprompter and sounds like reading, the speaker sounds insincere, even robotic. I wonder why we see them used so often anymore, even at BYU Education Week, among small audiences. When you rob a speaker of spontaneity, you deprive the audience of a connection which might have been made.

I can't read a talk. I can try, but I always drift off into a conversation and leave the script behind.

MARCH 16, 2010

Valiant

Those who receive a Terrestrial estate include “they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus; wherefore, they obtain not the crown over the kingdom of our God.” D&C 76:79. This means that they actually did have a testimony of Jesus, were on the right path, received the Gospel and accepted it, but failed to be “valiant” in their testimony.

I do not believe this means rigid, dogmatic, insistent or bellicose. In fact, the religious people having these qualities have historically been the greatest persecutors of the few, humble followers of Christ in all generations.

I believe this means they were willing to suffer much for the Lord. To follow Him in meekness, gentleness, kindness, persuasion, and love unfeigned. To bear the crosses of this world, and to return good for evil. Valiance is measured by the patience you show to your fellowman when they say all manner of evil against you falsely, for His sake. It is measured by the things you suffer willingly and without complaint.

It is not to get a reward in this life. Nor is it to be given acclaim, recognition, applause or chief seats.

It is to minister to others, rather than to be ministered unto.

When I think of the greatest examples of such conduct as would be truly described as “valiant,” I think of mothers and what they have done and do to bring, bear, love and raise children in this world. Creation itself is renewed every time a new, innocent life is brought into this world.

MARCH 16, 2010

Ask, Seek and Knock

James promised the Lord would answer those who lack knowledge and ask with a sincere heart (James 1:5–6). The Prophet Jeremiah made a similar promise. In Jeremiah’s promise the words are a quote from the Lord. He said: “And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart” (Jer. 29:13)

He is approachable. He wants us to approach Him.

MARCH 16, 2010

Faith, Belief, Knowledge

The psalmist’s words, “by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer[.]” (Psalms 17:4) refers to all the words of God. Not just those in scripture alone, but also those that came from “thy lips” O Lord. The Lord visited with the psalmist as he recorded: “thou hast visited me in the night” (Psalms 17:3).

This idea of God’s visitation with those who follow Him is as ancient as creation itself. Belief was always intended to grow into faith. Faith was always intended to grow into knowledge.

MARCH 16, 2010

Adam and Eve

Adam and Eve could not have children while they were in the Garden of Eden. They lacked the capacity to bear children in the innocent state in which they then existed. See 2 Ne. 2:23.

They had been given the gift of childbearing as an endowment from God. The endowment of the capacity did not mean they had the means or understanding at the time to act upon it. Without the fall, they would not have been able to act on the endowment. They were like little children who are born male and female with the capacity to one day become parents, but who are immature and innocent, and therefore unable to bear children.

The great offense was in Satan’s control of the timing. Had they remained in the Garden throughout the Sabbath day of rest then they would have received the commandment to partake of the fruit in the Lord's timing. At this point they would have moved from their innocent state into a condition not unlike the Millennial day. The "fall" would have transitioned to a Terrestrial state, rather than a Telestial state.

MARCH 17, 2010

It is Enough For One to Seek Him

The Gospel of Jesus Christ, in a fullness, with power to save and exalt, remains intact on the earth. Whenever there are those who come to Him, He will quickly come to them.

Since salvation is always an individual event, the failure of others to search for and obtain the great blessings which He makes available to His followers is not and never has been predicated upon the success of a group.

It is enough for one to seek Him. But when two or three are gathered in His name, He will not leave them comfortless, but will respect their faith, heed and diligence.

Lamenting about the decay all around you will not help you draw closer to Him. If you detect that decay, then your eyes have been opened, and you should do something about it in your own life. Condemning the failure of others has not advanced a single soul in history. It is true enough that the Lord may require by the constraint of the Spirit that people be "reproved betimes with sharpness" but only "when moved upon by the Holy Ghost" (D&C 121:43). But the Gospel of Jesus Christ consists in gathering light and truth, which is not accomplished by focusing upon the failings of others (D&C 93:28).

MARCH 17, 2010

Strangers and Angels

Here was my thought to the kids last night as they were getting ready to for bed:

“Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares” (Heb. 13:2). I believe that. I think it happens more often than people generally believe or even think possible.

MARCH 17, 2010

Nicodemus

When Christ taught publicly and could be heard daily, there was no need to approach Him at night in private. However, Nicodemus, a Pharisee member of the Sanhedrin, came to Jesus to examine Him “by night” without his peers knowing that he was making this contact. Christ knew the heart of Nicodemus, and put the matter squarely to him:

“Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God” (John 3:3).

The assertion made here is:

“Verily, verily” — meaning that Christ was capable of announcing truth.

“I say unto thee” — meaning that Christ was capable of making commandments, establishing conditions, announcing the requirements for salvation. Indeed, Christ was putting Himself into the position of Moses, becoming a lawgiver.

“Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of heaven.” — meaning that if Nicodemus intended to see heaven, Christ was declaring the condition for entry. Becoming a new creature was essential. Without newness, new birth, a new approach to life, all things which Nicodemus followed would lead away from the kingdom of heaven.

Nicodemus responded: “How can a man be born again when he is old? Can he enter the second time into the mother’s womb, and be born?” (John 3:4).

This isn’t a rhetorical or meaningless question, nor does it announce ignorance. Nicodemus is testing Christ. If this is a new lawgiver, and possessed the capacity to announce conditions for entry into heaven, then He needs to explain His meaning. This is a Pharisee Rabbi, asking a young, new Rabbi to set the matter plainly. Christ responded:

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of flesh is flesh: and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but cannot tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit. (John 3:5–8)

Now it is put plainly:

Born as a new man, by water (baptism) and Spirit (receive Holy Ghost) is required to “enter into the kingdom of God.” Without receiving these new ordinances from the new officiators (John the Baptist and Christ), the old ordinances will no longer be accepted. This is a call to Nicodemus to receive the new prophets then preaching. Without accepting these new prophets, he could not enter into God’s kingdom.

Flesh is just flesh. What is required to be able to go where God is will require every person to receive a new Spirit, new life, and become connected with heaven.

Heaven is unruly, unpredictable and blows without predictability. The Spirit is unruly, requiring things which men do not anticipate. It takes you places you have not been before. You cannot just sit within the councils of the Sanhedrin and reason with men's understanding. You must become inspired by a higher source. You must accept that new direction from above, or you will never enter into God's kingdom.

Brilliant. Christ taught the teacher. Now the matter is put to him: Will he receive a new life, and leave the old one? Will he become born again.

How hard it must have been for a man in Nicodemus' position to approach Christ. The fact he came at night testifies to the discomfort of his circumstances. Yet Christ, in patience, told him how to receive eternal life.

What a revealing encounter. We are the richer in our understanding for it having occurred.

MARCH 17, 2010

Twelve Oxen

The Temple of Solomon had a "sea" for washings of the priests. The description of that "sea" is found in 1 Kings 7:23–26. Significantly the "sea" sat upon the backs of twelve oxen (verse 25). Three were facing north, three facing west, three facing south, and three facing east.

In the time of the First Temple, these twelve oxen foreshadowed the scattering of Israel to the four corners of the earth. The destruction of the First Temple completed the scattering, which began at the death of Solomon, who was responsible the construction of the First Temple. When he died, the kingdom was divided north and south. The northern kingdom contained ten tribes, which would be taken into Assyrian captivity at about 725 B.C., and then be lost to history as they scattered northward. The remaining two tribes of the south were taken captive by Babylon at 600 B.C., and then a “remnant” returned. They were finally dispossessed of their land at 70 A.D. by the Roman destruction of Jerusalem, and scattered throughout the Roman Empire.

We also build fonts in Temples with twelve oxen bearing the font of water used for baptisms for the dead. These twelve oxen are also divided into groups of three facing north, west, south and east. Now, however, the oxen signify the gathering of scattered Israel. They also signify by their number, three, the concept of presidency or organization under restored priestly authority. The circle of twelve also are a symbol of restored, reorganized Israel in the latter-days to once again exist as a united people upon the earth.

MARCH 18, 2010

How I Study the Scriptures

I was asked about how I study. It was a good enough question I thought I ought to address it here.

First, I spent over 20 years teaching Gospel Doctrine weekly. To prepare for a class I would read the assigned scriptures on Sunday evening. Beginning Monday I would research in commentaries what others had said about the passages in the assigned lesson. Then before going to bed I would re-read the scriptures for the next lesson.

I would continue this process daily until Thursday. Beginning Thursday I would start to outline what I intended to cover in the lesson on Sunday.

Throughout the week I would listen to the relevant scriptures for the next lesson on tape/CD whenever I was in my car. So on the way to and from work I would listen and re-listen to the scriptures.

On Saturday I would pray then put a final lesson plan together. It took about 10 hours a week for me to prepare a 50 minute lesson.

In all the time I taught I never repeated a lesson. I tried to go deeper and deeper into the meaning of the material every time I taught it.

Today with that background I read books and scriptures daily. However, I take what I learn back into my scriptures and add cross-references or margin notes to make scriptural passages more meaningful for me. My scriptures have very little underlining and no coloring, but there are many notes and cross-references in them.

I try to tie any new concept I learn, no matter the source, back into the scriptures. Lately I have also taken to using an electronic version of the scriptures to help locate material or passages which relate to a topic.

MARCH 18, 2010

Weekend Movie

I watched a new DVD we bought from Deseret Book titled One Good Man.

If it was satire or intended as irony then it was quite good. If it was just a straight up drama then I hated it. Since it was an LDS product, and sold at Deseret Book, I assume it wasn't meant as irony or satire.

It offended me because the lead character was called to be a Bishop. This makes the hero a church leader. The hero treats one of his ward members as disposable, but goes out of his way for non-members and widows. It resulted in the inactivity of an entire family whose sole outreach by the bishop was to go Christmas caroling with his family on their porch. While there, he tells the wife that he, "hadn't seen them in church lately."

It was depressing. As irony it shows how a “good” man can’t always do good. Life is riddled with conflicts and unintended harm. So I like it as irony.

MARCH 18, 2010

Dumbing Down?

I had a friend suggest to me that the Lord was requiring the church to “dumb down” the curriculum. I absolutely reject that idea. It’s just preposterous. The Lord always offers light and truth to any who come to Him. It is men who turn away from what is offered.

MARCH 19, 2010

Satan Fell From Heaven

Satan was not thrown out of heaven until after this earth was created. Jesus remarked, “I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven” (Luke 10:18). Similarly, John’s revelation records that Satan “which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him” (Revelation 12:9). From this we know that Satan was not cast out until after the creation of this earth had prepared a place into which Satan could be cast.

Several of the astronauts who walked on the moon during the Apollo project reported having deeply spiritual experiences when they left the earth. One of them became a full-time minister.

C.S. Lewis wrote a science fiction trilogy in which the first volume titled Out of the Silent Planet made this earth isolated from the heavenly chorus because of its wickedness.

Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. (Revelation 12:12)

COMMENTS:

db schroeder · MARCH 19, 2010 AT 8:41 AM

I often wondered exactly when Satan had to make his exit.

I think if or because he took part in the Creation, that's where his ego helped get the best of him, and why he later found himself in the Garden- claiming it to be "his kingdom".

It's like the guy doesn't accept HF's Will, doesn't know HF's mind, but figures out parts it out later and then tries to thwart man's progression w different techniques.

However, man can check Satan every time, if he is in constant tune w Divine revelation and inspiration from Heaven when he lives his life accordingly.

It will never stop Satan's attempts, but we can be fortified against his techniques and methods -and read them a mile a way.

Kisi · MARCH 21, 2010 AT 8:24 AM

Great insights in both of these! Thanks. Out of the Silent Planet and that whole trilogy is one of my most favorite things that C.S. Lewis ever wrote.

Why does Satan appear in the Garden to Adam and Eve as a snake? The serpent is a symbol of Christ in both the Old Testament w/ Moses, and the Book of Mormon referring to the same. And then there's all the references to Christ as the "feathered serpent", Quetzalcoatl, etc. Was Satan trying to imitate Christ? We are also told to be "wise as serpents". I'm sure there's more to all this than I'm seeing. Can you add more insights for us please.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 21, 2010 AT 10:41 AM

I've written about this subject in Come, Let Us Adore Him.

Almost all false teachings originating from Satan turn him into God, and God into him. The great metaphysical god of Christianity, Judaism and Islam is bodiless, spirit, non-corporeal, etc. This is Satan.

He imitates, he destroys, he burdens and enslaves. God creates, originates and liberates. Those who are deceived by Satan bind others, put burdens upon them, enslave them. Those who follow God preach liberty and open the chains binding mankind.

MARCH 19, 2010

Continual Worship

After Christ's resurrection, when He had ministered to His disciples, and proven that it was He who had been crucified, Luke makes this interesting observation: "And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy; and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God" (Luke 24:52–53).

First, it is interesting because Christ had fulfilled the Law of Moses. Therefore, the rites of the temple of Herod were no longer necessary. Yet Christ's disciples returned to the temple "continually" to worship Him. Second, the temple was under the control of those who conspired to kill the Lord. Despite this, Christ's disciples were "continually" in the temple.

True worship by a true disciple is never impaired by the circumstances. We should not allow anything to distract us from our own "praising and blessing God." If it can be done in the temple of Herod after the crucifixion of Christ, it can be done today.

MARCH 20, 2010

Prophets and Entropy

I have been struck by how much of the message which Samuel the Lamanite and Abinadi both deliver have previously been the subject of Nephi's prophecies. Almost every bit of Samuel the Lamanite and Abinadi's messages are first included within Nephi's message. It is possible that both of these later Book of Mormon prophets were "restoring" to new generations the message originally taught by Nephi which had fallen into neglect.

The entire message of Joseph Smith was to restore what had been here before and become lost. The work of scholar Margaret Barker suggests that Jesus Christ was restoring First Temple theology and earlier lost traditions.

If the gospel was originally preached to Adam (and I think it was) then every prophet from that day until now has simply been restoring what was once here. Prophets fight the law of entropy. Mankind keep losing truths and prophets keep bringing them back.

One of the great “signs” that there is a true prophet on the earth is the restoration by them of truths which have fallen into disuse or neglect. True prophets are at war with entropy and decay.

MARCH 20, 2010

Witch of Endor

King Saul lost his counselor-prophet when he died of old age (1 Sam 25:1). Saul’s unstable conduct and unfaithful behavior precluded him from getting an answer from the Lord. “And when Saul enquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets” (1 Sam. 28:6). So Saul went to visit a woman who could conjure the dead. Saul had the woman conjure the deceased Samuel.

Saul had prohibited conjuring as a matter of law within the kingdom (1 Sam. 28:3). So think about what he’s doing:

- it’s illegal to go see a conjurer, so he’s breaking his own law.
- he goes to see the witch of Endor in order to get access to the dead prophet.
- so are we to trust the witch? or are we to trust the spirit that the witch conjures to be reliably Samuel?

Life really gets complicated for the superstitious and foolish.

MARCH 20, 2010

Stake Conference

Stake Conference weekend! That means that I'll be helping to minimize the crowds in the parking lot at the Stake Center by leaving my car at home. I'll also help out with the crowded seating problems at the Stake Center by leaving some seats open. I know it is a sacrifice to do this, but it's one I'm willing to make.

It's the equinox. I'm going to do something memorable.

MARCH 21, 2010

A Public Service

My youngest daughter plays on a 10-and-under boy's super league baseball team. They played in a tournament this week. In the first three games she was hit by pitches in every game. In one, the bases were loaded and her hit-by-pitch walk scored an RBI. I told her she had "RBI'd" a run and I was proud of her. She thought about it a while and asked, "What does RBI mean?" I said, "Run batted in." She replied, it should mean "Run by injury."

In the last game she hit a single and RBI'd 2 runs.

I noticed that the moms for the opposing teams all rooted for her when she was up to bat. The dads, however, were horrified that a girl was competing with their sons. I think she's doing a public service.

MARCH 21, 2010

On a Scale of 1 to 10

I've figured out part of the problem I have in discussing Mormon issues with others. Oftentimes there is a disconnect between how important the two parties view the subject being discussed. To illustrate the point, I'm proposing a completely arbitrary method of ranking an issue on a 10 point scale of ascending importance as follows:

1. Completely meaningless
2. Trivial
3. Relevant
4. Somewhat significant
5. Significant
6. Very significant
7. Important
8. Very important
9. Critical
10. Essential to salvation

When I think a subject is “1” and someone else thinks it is “10” then naturally I don't care about the point. They think I must be convinced of the point or I am going to forfeit salvation itself.

When that is the case, we don't connect very well. If we do reach an agreement, I don't think the agreement amounts to much. They on the other hand, think they've won a major point, or provided a valuable service. I would likely be bored with the discussion, and since I didn't value the subject's importance would probably offend the other party by my disinterest.

On the other hand, views change. At one point I am convinced that some behavior or conduct is either 9 or 10, only to later realize that it is more likely a 3 or 4. That change in attitude may be due to nothing more than living longer, getting more experience and developing a little humility about life and its challenges.

I think that a lot of discussions, disagreements and strong arguments are rooted in an assignment of different levels of importance to the subject.

For example, when I was an Elder's Quorum President, Home Teaching by Quorum members was something between an 8 and 10. I'm not an Elder's Quorum President any longer, and I go home teach my families because I really care about them. I like them. I want to be with them. I find them interesting. I've been 100% for many months and, if I miss at all, it is due to either their absence during the month or mine. But I try to keep in close touch, not because of some "assignment" but because I like them. If I were to assign a level of importance to home teaching now, based on the scale above, I would candidly give it a 5 or 6.

There are people who believe the center piece of the relief society room during a lesson is a 10. I don't relate well to that. And there are those who think President Monson's General Conference Addresses are a 1. I don't relate well to that, either.

Before a discussion begins about gospel subjects, I think it is always helpful to first find out how important the subject is to the person with whom you are speaking.

MARCH 21, 2010

Priesthood

The Priesthood is separate from the church. For example, when someone is excommunicated they are told to stop using their priestly authority. When they are re-baptized they are never re-ordained. They are simply given authorization to now begin using their authority again.

We do not re-ordain someone when they are re-baptized because re-ordination is unnecessary. They held priestly authority even while they were not a member of the church.

Priesthood preceded the church and is the basis upon which it was organized. It will last beyond the church, at least in the final,

Patriarchal form. That priesthood will endure into eternity, for it is the basis upon which the eternal family is predicated. The eternal family is the government of God, not the church. After this life, the church will come to an end. But the family, as a form of government, and priesthood of a Patriarch and Matriarch, presiding as a king and queen, priest and priestess, will endure.

MARCH 22, 2010

Heroes

I've been reflecting on the frailty of the human experience. We are buffeted and torn from the time of birth, tempted and beckoned to choose poorly, subject to hunger, fatigue and loneliness. The wonder is not that we see so much failure and frustration in mankind. Rather the wonder is that we see occasionally such heroic lives that shine like a brilliant star while lived among us.

The Deseret News had an article and pictures of the young Utah lives cut short by service in the military. For the families of these valiant men and women who died for our country's interests, the loss will be lifelong. They will hardly take a breath from the day of their son or daughter's death that the memory of their child does not stay with them.

I don't think we do enough to express our collective gratitude for those who have lost their lives for others. Whether they are in the military, police service, firemen or others who die trying to render noble service for the rest of us, we owe a debt of gratitude to these families.

MARCH 22, 2010

The Importance of Personal Revelation

In Section 19 the Lord explains what the words “endless torment” and “eternal damnation” mean. They are words of art, and are essentially proper nouns referring to God’s punishment (See D&C 19:4–12).

This is an enormous help in understanding the scriptures generally. Words are chosen carefully, and the Lord is deliberate in how He puts a message across. Things may not mean what we initially think they mean.

The scriptures are designed to reveal and conceal. They are able to reveal even very hidden and mysterious things to the understanding of mankind when we understand what is being discussed. Until the reader has been prepared for this understanding, reading the messages will not necessarily result in greater insight.

It is almost as if you have to know the answer first, or have it revealed to you. Then, while in possession of the truth, you can see that prophets and seers have been speaking about these matters since the beginning of time.

How often do we reflect on Christ’s “opening the scriptures” to His followers? This is something that ought to make us all think about how little understanding we obtain without first receiving light and truth from Him. Once again it points to the absolute necessity of personal revelation.

MARCH 22, 2010

The Problem With Too Much Praise

I think criticism is necessary to the human condition. When a great public official in Rome was given a victor’s parade, there would be a companion in his chariot whose responsibility it was to tell the man being celebrated that all fame is fleeting. Rome had it right on that score.

Sometimes a sincere and devoted man can offer his help best by giving criticism to someone he loves. When the only response which is tolerated is that the person is “doing great” or is “wonderful” there is stagnation and failure.

I love baseball. All young men should play baseball. It is a game of failure. If you only fail 70% of the time as a batter, you can become a Hall of Fame player. No amount of praise will compensate for a .110 batting average. Criticism is unnecessary.

One of the Simpson's “Treehouse of Horrors” episodes had Bart being omni-powerful. Because of his great powers, whenever anything bad happened people would say, “it’s good Bart did that.” This was to appease the all-powerful Bart. It only made him worse. Funny episode involving a cartoon character, but with a powerfully true underlying message. Too much praise corrodes. Worship of demigods inevitably risks making demons of them.

MARCH 23, 2010

Near Death Experiences

I was asked about Near Death Experiences and their interface with conversion. Here’s my take:

The advantage is that they know there is a continuation of life after the death of the body. However, whether they use that knowledge to advance in light and truth or not is individually determined.

Some have used NDE’s to become guru’s and sell books or give talks. That may detract from getting more light and truth. The thing about growing in light and truth is that it is always directly connected with the humility of the person. Humility or openness to new ideas and greater understanding is required to move from wherever you may be at present to a position of greater truth. It is that openness to new ideas which is indispensable to gaining knowledge of God.

Closed minds, particularly those that may grow out of religious experiences or beliefs, are not benefited by what great things God has to offer in the continuing education of His children.

Joseph Smith once commented that it will be “a great while after we have left this life before we will have learned” enough to be saved. It is not all to be understood in this life.

Openness to ideas and further instruction is necessary to continue in the path of truth and light. A NDE may open one's eyes to some truths, But the fullness of what is to be taught or gained from God is not given in a single experience or in a brief tutelage from missionaries. It is a lifelong quest.

CHAPTER 5

Truth Is Independent

MARCH 23, 2010

Godliness

I was asked about godliness.

The ordinances are helps, symbols and requirements. “Helps” in that they establish milestones that memorialize passage from one stage of development to the next. “Symbols” in that they point to a deeper meaning or spiritual reality almost always grounded in the Atonement of Jesus Christ. “Requirements” in that they mark the defined route taken by Christ as a mortal to fulfill all righteousness.

The power of godliness is tied to opening the heavens and receiving assignments, confirming revelation, or blessings from God. Promises given to others are not promises to you. Men are rarely reliable sources from which to attain the Word of God. It is the unfortunate condition of mankind that, so soon as they are given a little authority they begin to use unrighteous dominion. Heaven, on the other hand, does not dictate, abuse, misuse authority or entice you to do evil.

All power is tied to heaven. When the powers of heaven are withdrawn from someone, then their authority comes to an end and they have no power.

The ordinances as symbols point to the real thing. The real thing is Jesus Christ and His Gospel.

If you want to have the power of godliness in your life, it must be gained through Jesus Christ; access to whom is available to all men on equal terms.

MARCH 23, 2010

The Education of All of Us

I've been marveling at the irrelevance of higher education to the process of receiving light and truth.

PhD's are generally so schooled in their discipline that they view the Gospel in the light of their educational training. A scholar studies economics and then everything looks to him like it can be explained in economic terms. Or a scholar studies philosophy and then everything looks like it can be fit into a paradigm matching their school of thought.

I suspect the only book Nephi or Lehi had for their migration was the brass plates containing a version of the Old Testament. Slim library pickings for what great things those two prophets were able to receive through their lives. It isn't the volume of the books we possess which helps our search into deep truths. Indeed, our libraries may well interfere with knowing God. It is the depth of how we live the basic principles contained in the scriptures which let the light of heaven shine into our lives.

Joseph Smith's early education was so limited that our children have a comparable education at the conclusion of fourth grade. But what he learned from on-high, by revelation, made him a towering pillar of light and truth.

Joseph once commented that if you could gaze into heaven for five minutes you would know more that if you read everything that had ever been written on the subject. Now imagine the libraries that are filled with material written by the world's scholars and theologians about heaven. Those who have written include such luminaries as St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Augustine, Dante, Rabbi Bacharach and Buddha. Yet five minutes of "gazing" would supplant all they had to offer.

The wonder of it all is that so few are willing to trust a prophet's advice. We read endlessly uninspired books written by the uninformed, and bypass the process commended to us by the scriptures.

A bad education (which is most educations) is worse than no education when it comes to the things of heaven. When men are learned they think they are wise, and therefore have little reason to trust in God or revelation from Him to correct their misunderstanding. I think the Book of Mormon had something to say about that (See 2 Ne. 9:28–29, 42). I consider myself a fool. (That is the one advantage I have over those who also hold doctorates. I know it does not provide me with any advantages, but does impose considerable disadvantages because of its corrosion to my thinking.)

Heaven is an endless source of surprises. There's nothing mundane going on there.

MARCH 23, 2010

White Stone and a New Name

I was asked whether the white stone and new name in D&C 130 are the same as The Second Comforter. It was an interesting question and I thought I'd put the answer up here:

There are some equivalentents (i.e., if A=B and B=C, then A=C) in the Gospel when it comes to this subject. The ministry of The Second Comforter is to bring those to whom He ministers to the Father, and have them accepted by Him. This means that the Father accepts them as a member of the Heavenly Family, or in other words, promises them exaltation.

Since the end of that ministry is to have the person accepted by the Father as a son or daughter of God, then an equivalency can be drawn between the final outcome and The Second Comforter. This is what is done in D&C 88:3–5. Joseph Smith did something similar in a statement he made in which he put the voice declaring a person's exaltation first, and the visit of Christ and the Father with that person second. You can read about it in the Words of Joseph Smith, pages 3–6, but the most relevant excerpt is found below:

The other Comforter spoken of is a subject of great interest & perhaps understood by few of this generation, After a person hath faith in Christ, repents of his sins & is Baptized for the remission of his sins & received the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands) which is the first Comforter then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering & thirsting after Righteousness. & living by every word of God & the Lord will soon say unto him Son thou shalt be exalted. &c When the Lord has thoroughly proved him & finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazard. then the man will find his calling & Election made sure then it will be his privilege to receive the other Comforter which the Lord hath promised the saints as is recorded in the testimony of St John in the XIV ch from the 12th to the 27 verses Note the 16.17.18.21.23. verses (16.v). & I will pray the father & he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; (17). Even the Spirit of Truth; whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you & shall be in you (18). I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you (21). He that hath my commandments & keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. & he that loveth me shall be loved of my father.

∅ I will love him ∅ will manifest myself to him (23). If a man Love me he will keep my words. ∅ my Father will love him. ∅ we will come unto him, ∅ make our abode with him.

Now what is this other Comforter? It is no more or less than the Lord Jesus Christ himself ∅ this is the sum ∅ substance of the whole matter, that when any man obtains this last Comforter he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him or appear unto him from time to time. ∅ even he will manifest the Father unto him ∅ they will take up their abode with him, ∅ the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him ∅ the Lord will teach him face to face ∅ he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God, ∅ this is the state ∅ place the Ancient Saints arrived at when they had such glorious vision Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St Paul in the third heavens, ∅ all the Saints who held communion with the general Assembly ∅ Church of the First Born ∅c.

(This is an excerpt from Willard Richards' Pocket Companion contained in The Words of Joseph Smith.)

Since the white stone and new name mentioned in D&C 130:10–11 are referring to the state of exaltation and inheritance, and since the promise which The Second Comforter (Christ) is working to obtain for those to whom He ministers is the promise of exaltation, that equivalency may also be made. The difference as I see it is that those described in the verses in D&C 130 are in a future state, in which they have actually inherited the condition of exaltation, have entered into the Celestial Kingdom to dwell there and possess the white stone on which their new name is written; whereas the promises Joseph speaks of in the quote above and the promises in D&C_88 are given to a mortal and are to be realized fully in the future.

Now the promise of the Lord is reality itself. What He says will happen. His Word becomes the law of the universe (See D&C 1:38). Therefore when viewed with the eyes of faith, the Word is the reality, and the inheritance is immediate for those with faith. This is the reason why Joseph said when a man receives this last Comforter he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him or appear unto him from time to time. & even he will manifest the Father unto him & they will take up their abode with him, & the visions of the heavens will be opened unto him & the Lord will teach him face to face & he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God[.]

Finally, since the mortal who receives these things is already in company with the Lord and the Father, they are already occasional visitors in a Celestial Kingdom although they are still here in mortality, required to endure to the end, suffer death and then await resurrection. Despite this, they are celestial and their lives are punctuated by contact with celestial beings from time to time, as the Lord determines is appropriate or necessary.

MARCH 24, 2010

First Principles of the Gospel

Someone asked this question:

In one part of Come, Let Us Adore Him you talk about the Dispensation in the Meridian of Time. How “Men of good faith and sincere desire doing their best to follow after God, lost the light of the Spirit, then lost sound doctrine, and ultimately lost their covenant status and drifted into darkness.” Did you mean this collectively? Over time as a group? As an individual of good faith, sincere desire, doing their best to follow after God, losing the light of the spirit, then sound doctrine and later drifting into darkness.... How tragic. If after all that they still failed, what then is our hope for an individual now, in our dispensation? Are we doomed to the same outcome? I see many following the same course as anciently.

My answer:

It is troubling. It is the terrible problem of mortality. We are all prone to drift and fail. It is only by constant renewal of faith that we can hope to succeed. No matter how far we have come, what great things we have obtained, we are still subject to failure. This is why the FIRST principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: “faith, repentance, baptism and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.” We never outgrow these FIRST principles.

I believe them to be “FIRST” in the sense of primacy, not a singular event which happens and then you can take them off the list of stuff to do. They are primary. They are foundational. They are required to be used constantly. Therefore, they are “FIRST.”

So, we always go forward in faith. No matter how much we already know, we must use faith to go forward. We live within the limitation of linear time. We experience things in a flow that happens without our control. Life unfolds as an unknown to us, and we must cope with all it hands us from day to day. That requires faith to confront this uncontrolled, unfolding stream of time in which we are presently confined.

Repentance is required because even if we are doing what we should be doing we are always going to learn more. It is the nature of the Gospel that our light should increase. Whenever we learn more, we must change to reflect what we have just gained. Change is the heart of repentance.

Baptism is to have sins washed away. If you are already baptized, then the ordinance does not need to be done again, but the remission of sins and washing them away is required repeatedly. For those already baptized, this is done through the Sacrament. It is still required for us to have sins remitted.

The Holy Ghost should be a regular participant in our lives. Its renewed companionship is also primary. Its witness to us that we are on the right path is the only way to wage the necessary war against entropy which seeks to take you into darkness. It is the source of renewed light that always enlightens when it comes.

These are the only means by which we can avoid the same dismal fate as all others of all prior dispensations. We must do this individually. It does not matter if it is done collectively. I've yet to see any reason in the scriptures to expect great collective success by the Gentiles who inherit the Gospel in our dispensation. There are individual promises to the few Gentiles who will repent, have faith, be baptized, enter into the covenant and remain faithful. But the collective outcome is not particularly rosy.

MARCH 24, 2010

Truth

There is "truth" which exists independent of what we think or believe. (I use the word in the same sense as D&C 93:24–25.) Our collective forgetfulness does not erase truth. Nor does our vain imagination alter truth.

Whenever a doctrine is changed because of man's planning or arguments, then we are teaching for commandments the doctrines of men; just as Christ complained to Joseph in the First Vision (JS-H 1:19).

During the Third and Fourth Centuries the debates over "adoptionism" were causing doctrinal havoc for the Christian movement. As they solidified control over the movement, the leaders of the developing Historic Christian faith had a plan to cure the schism involving arguments that Christ was just a man who had been “adopted” at His baptism to become the Son of God. The original words spoken at His baptism came from Psalms 2:7. These words supported the “adoptionist’s” arguments. The answer was simple—change the text of the Gospels. So they edited the words and changed them from saying, “Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee” to instead, “This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased” (Matt. 3:17). That drove a stake in the heart of the “adoptionist” arguments.

Bart D. Ehrman has shown how this, and other controversies, affected the text of the New Testament in his book The Orthodox Corruption of Scripture: The Effect of Early Christological Controversies on the Text of the New Testament.

Patterns in history have a way of repeating themselves. Men almost always find it easier to change doctrine than to conform to the truth; and to edit books to fit their failures than to follow direction. Our challenge is to learn the right lessons from history. We should not succumb to the easy advantages of changing the principles our religion is founded on, in order to accomplish “good” and repel criticism by adapting to meet the critics’ arguments.

Truth is immutable and unchanging. We either conform to it or apostatize from it. We can’t change it.

How grateful I am to still have prophets among us.

MARCH 24, 2010

Abinadi’s Message

The significance of a prophet’s message can never be measured by the extent to which he is accepted or even acknowledged by his peers. In the case of Abinadi, he was an outcast whose origins and even ethnic affiliation are unknown. He is the only person in the Book of Mormon with this name. His lineage cannot be determined from the name, and whether he is Nephite, Lamanite, or some “other” is not disclosed.

His only credential was his message. He came to announce warnings, was rejected, and ultimately killed. He had no success with the people, and made only one convert.

Abinadi is a hinge character around whom the entire remainder of the Book of Mormon will center. His one convert, Alma, will become the spiritual leader of the Nephites, and that convert will become the leading writer of the Book of Mormon. Then his posterity will be the focus of the remaining history of the Book of Mormon.

Abinadi’s prophecies were cited from the time he delivered them to the end of the Book of Mormon. But measured by the events of his life, he failed. His one convert fled persecution and hid in the wilderness.

However, measured by the full sweep of history, he is the pivotal character, the central figure from the time of his appearance until the end of the Book of Mormon.

I think there’s a profound lesson in Abinadi’s appearance and legacy. If the Book of Mormon was edited by those who “saw our day,” and was edited to foreshadow our own history, then we ought to be cautious about discarding a message from someone like Abinadi.

The only meaningful credential is the content of the message. Trappings of office, genealogy, name, status, and standing were all irrelevant to Abinadi.

MARCH 25, 2010

Central America or North America?

I used to view the subject of where the events in Book of Mormon took place as one of those trivial matters (2 on my earlier scale). However, I've found that FARMS has become quite animated about the subject. They are quite critical of the North American model. This has somewhat raised the subject's importance in my view.

There are two views. One is that the events took place in Central America. The other is that they occurred in North America. The best explanation of the Central American setting is John Sorenson's book: An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, published by FARMS. The best defense of the North American setting is Bruce Porter and Rod Meldrum's book Prophecies and Promises: The Book of Mormon and the United States of America. FARMS gave a very critical review of the Porter/Meldrum book.

I used to think this subject was unimportant enough to allow it to remain undecided. After reading both sides' arguments, I am inclined to believe it has more significance if you accept Bruce Porter and Rod Meldrum's view. If you accept their view, then Joseph Smith knew something more about the Book of Mormon's events than Sorenson advances. Also the fit of Book of Mormon prophecies into a highly focused unfolding of events also follows. In fact, the D&C comes into sharper focus when you accept the Porter/Meldrum view.

I am inclined to now view this as an important or very important issue (7 or 8 on my earlier scale). I think everyone ought to read those two books and decide the subject for themselves. Since the Sorenson book was written first, and the Porter/Meldrum book is somewhat a response to it, I think they should be read in that order.

MARCH 25, 2010

HBO and Politicians

My wife has become a Republican County Delegate again. I stayed home.

Given the sorry state of the current political class, I'm just glad when the political scandal of the day doesn't involve sodomy of a parrot.

Sobbing politicians blubbering how sorry they are for the DUI/nude hot-tubbing with underage girls/oral sex or drug use require me to then explain to my kids things I would rather defer until they are older. What good is it to not buy HBO when the evening news features Republicans and Democrats confessing sins as sordid as anything we get in R-rated movies?

MARCH 25, 2010

All is Well in Zion

According to the Joseph Smith's First Vision, the Restoration occurred because of the apostasy of Historic Christianity. All churches "were wrong" and their "professors were all corrupt." "All their creeds were an abomination." The people who inhabited these churches "draw near [to God] with their lips, but their hearts are far from" Him (JS-H 1:19).

This is the historic moment which justifies the Restoration. It forces a choice upon the world. Mormonism is either correct, or it has no reason to exist.

This forces The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints into a dilemma. It must either proclaim that it is the only repository of saving truth, or it must strike a compromise which betrays the reason for its existence.

Jesus Christ did not intend to let those who follow the work He was to commission through Joseph Smith to become popular, successful, or live in peace. He intended to put them at odds with all the rest of the world. The very reason for His strange act was to notify anyone who heard about it that they were to repent, change, accept new truths, or remain “corrupt” and with “hearts far from Him.” It is an instant challenge to the world.

When we shape the message of the Restoration into a vocabulary which does not offend, we miss the point. We are REQUIRED to offend. We are REQUIRED to sound the alarm to “Awake! Arise!” When the message to those who accept the Historic Christian faiths is that “you’re OK” we are contradicting Christ’s opening statement to Joseph Smith.

All of this is only true if what we are doing is continuing the work begun by Joseph Smith. If we have abandoned what he restored, then never mind. We can fit in and get along. In fact, we can not only fit in and get along, but we can even mimic the other mainstream faiths of the day. We can adopt a positive mental attitude, and proclaim: “All is well in Zion, Babylon, Athens, Rome and Nineveh. In fact, all is well everywhere. Don’t get up. Stay asleep. We’re just here to help make you feel better about yourself.”

MARCH 26, 2010

An Explanation

This came to me through an email and I thought I should address it here. This is the email I received:

I got information through the grapevine about a woman who is claiming that Denver ordained her to do something and that he put his hands on her head and set her apart for some type of work.

I don't know all the details, but I was not happy when I heard that. I know that he wouldn't do that but thought that Denver should know that this woman is going around telling people this.

I thought I would put it on the blog and explain.

First, I don't have any idea what woman this is referring to; nor for that matter who wrote the information in the email. It was just forwarded to me, and I was given permission by the one who forwarded it to use it on the blog.

Second, I've not "ordained" a woman to do anything. Nor do I intend to "ordain" a woman to do anything.

Third, I have given blessings to my wife, daughters, home teaching assignments who are sisters, and other women who have asked from time to time, just as others do who hold priesthood and are asked to give a blessing. That has never involved "ordaining" a woman to some assignment or work.

Finally, the only women I have "set apart" for an assignment was done while I served in a Bishopric at BYU, or while serving on the High Council. Apart from that I haven't "set apart" any woman. I've done numerous "setting apart" assignments in Elder's Quorums, and other assignments, but those were men.

MARCH 26, 2010

Have You Heard Christ Sing?

I had the following article brought to my attention:

http://www.templestudy.com/2010/03/22/universal-creation-song/?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+Templestudyc+om+%28TempleStudy.com%29

It is my view that Christ's Sermon on the Mount was actually a hymn. It was announced as a form of "new law" or higher path. Those to whom He addressed it would have readily recognized the propriety of it being sung, as the article above reflects.

I was then asked if I had heard Christ sing. I replied, "We all have, but only a few can now remember it."

MARCH 26, 2010

What a Difference an Inning Makes

I was at the Alta-Jordan baseball game yesterday. It was almost unwatchable for the first three innings. There were 6 runs scored without a single hit. The 3-3 tie was the result of hit batters, walks, errors, and general bad play. Ugly doesn't even begin to describe the mess that went on in the beginning of the game.

Then both teams seemed to get over their hesitation and actually remember how to play again.

Jordan had an 11-6 lead going into the last at-bat in the top of the 7th inning. Alta needed 5 runs to tie the game. They put together a string of hits which pushed 5 runs over the plate and tied the game.

In the bottom of the 7th, Jordan got runners on, and had runners at the corners with only 1 out. Alta's defense rose to the occasion and kept them scoreless.

In the extra inning, at the top of the 8th, Alta pushed two runs over. Then held Jordan scoreless in the bottom of the inning to take a 13-11 win.

Worst three beginning innings of baseball I think I've seen in High School play. Best five innings thereafter I've seen. What a difference!

MARCH 27, 2010

The Word of God

We have a whole different mindset than did the ancients. We view things through the prism of Aristotle. We think that “reality” is what we can observe and touch and measure. However, there was once a mindset where what is “reality” was what God said. The Word of God alone was enough to make the reality.

When God said or promised something that was enough to make what God said true, real, and eternal.

God says: “You are my son, this day I have begotten you” (Psalms 2:7). When that occurred, it was enough to make a man a son of God. I don’t know if we even believe that possible now.

Today we assume if it is to happen at all it will be in the after-life. To the ancients, the person to whom this promise was made was instantly a son of God, even though he may have to live out a life in mortality before entering into the kingdom promised him.

The “king-making ceremonies” of the Egyptians, for example, made the Pharaoh a son of Horus and a God. He was a God on earth even though everyone knew that he needed to eat and breathe to survive. He would eventually die and be buried. He was a mortal - but he was a God. The promise was everything. The words of the ceremony, the effect of the anointing, the commitment to the man was enough to make him a God.

This concept of man becoming God hails from a different culture and time. One untainted by the “head of gold, arms of silver, belly of brass, etc.” It is from a time when the Eastern mind, (words are eternal, everything here is temporary and an illusion) was in place among those who are talking with God.

Christ took the Father's words so seriously that Christ became the literal embodiment of God the Father's words. He, Christ, was known as the "Word of God" because He remained true to every word spoken by the Father. If you want to know what the Father said, look to Christ.

So believing/accepting the words of God are critical to getting the true reality of what this life is all about.

MARCH 27, 2010

Adoptionism

I wrote a post about altering or rewriting scriptures to resolve doctrinal disputes. The example used was taken from the time before the New Testament settled into its final form. That example, "adoptionism" was rejected by the majority view, and ultimately the text of the New Testament was changed to make the doctrine "false" from the text. That change was made during the Third and Fourth Centuries as a result of what is now called the Christological debates.

Someone asked if I thought Christ was adopted. That wasn't the point of the blog post. But as long as the question was asked, here's my view:

No, He was the Son of God. However, even as the Son of God He still was required to be acknowledged by Him in mortality to be saved. Once He entered into mortality, took upon Him blood, He was subject to the Fall. Despite being subject to the Fall, He lived His life in such a way that the Fall could not have a proper claim upon Him. It was unjust He should die. When, therefore, death overtook Him, it was unjust. That injustice was the reason He could resurrect. The grave could have no just claim upon Him, and therefore death could be reversed in Him. The Father accepted Him as His Son while He was still in mortality. This was done because as a mortal, subject to the Fall, inhabiting a body with blood and the elements of corruption, Christ needed to receive the Father's acknowledgment as His Son, even though He was indeed His Son.

Now the adoptionist theory was contrary to this. They held the view that Christ was just another man and got adopted to become the Son of God. He was God's Son solely as a result of that adoption and not in any other way. I reject that idea.

But I accept that He needed, just as everyone else needs, to be baptized, receive the Holy Ghost, proceed through the ordinances of the Gospel, and ultimately receive His calling and election made sure. He said He needed to "fulfill all righteousness" and He did all that was required of any of us. God acknowledged Him as His Son. This is required for anyone to be saved. Christ showed the way and walked the path. So in that sense He, just as all of us, needed to be "adopted." Him because He was mortal. Us because we are conceived in sin.

MARCH 27, 2010

Joseph's First Vision

I was asked if Joseph Smith saw more than two personages in his First Vision. In the account written in 1835 Joseph stated: "I saw many angels in this vision."

The account in the Pearl of Great Price (written in 1838) omits any mention of this detail.

MARCH 28, 2010

Process Not Event

Almost everything about the Gospel plan is a process and not an event. There are events to be sure, but for most of us and for most of the time we are only working through the process.

A great deal of the scriptures have been written by those who have been through the process, and who are trying to give us instruction to repeat it in our own lives. “Events” which occur are in the scriptures, as well. But we will never arrive at the “events” unless we first realize there is a process and we begin to participate actively in that process.

The first chapter of Abraham, second and third verses, describes a lengthy process. It took decades to unfold. It was not merely that Abraham determined to do something and then it happened. He’s giving a recitation of the process whereby he became at last a “rightful heir” and a “prince of peace” who had “received instructions” and “held the right belonging to the fathers.”

His quest began in “the land of the Chaldeans.” His ordination would not occur until he was transplanted nearly a thousand miles to the place where Melchizedek would at last ordain and endow him (D&C 84:14). Shem was the “great high priest” we know as “Melek” (king) and “Zadok” (priest) or in other words Melchizedek (D&C 138:41).

[Bruce R. McConkie and President Joseph Fielding Smith taught that Shem was NOT Melchizedek. They reasoned that the meaning of words “through the lineage of the fathers, even till Noah” meant that there were generations between Noah and Melchizedek. And that since Noah was Shem’s father, there were no generations. I do not think the words refer to the “generations” after Noah, but to the generations before Noah. In other words, Noah received the priesthood through the generations going back to Adam, and then having that priesthood which began in the first generations, he conferred it upon Shem, whose new name was Melchizedek. It was this “great high priest” who conferred the priesthood on Abraham.

You should be aware that I am differing from what McConkie and Smith have taught on this issue.

I'm confident in my position and not persuaded by their reasoning, but you are free to believe who you choose.]

When we read the quick summary of Abraham in 1:2–3, we can wrongly presume that this was a quick event, not a long process. It was lengthy. It did not unfold without decades of desiring, seeking, receiving promises and then having them fulfilled.

A great deal of what we read in the scriptures is quickly describing the process. They can be misleading in that respect. Nephi's early account of his visionary experiences suggests instant clarity and understanding. However, Nephi took decades to unravel what he had been given. We are reading his third account. He first wrote it when it happened. Then he recorded it a second time on his large plates. It was not until he had received the commandment to prepare the small plates (on which he wrote the account we read in 1& 2 Nephi) that he finally gave us the third, refined, and completed account. This was decades later. He had "pondered continually upon the things which [he] had seen and heard" (2 Ne. 4:16) during the intervening decades. The account we have reduces the decades of reflection into a single, cogent statement.

The Lord does no magic. He aids us in our growth. We have to grow and overcome. Nephi's vision was something which, without decades of pondering, he could not state with clarity to a reader of his testimony. It is always required for us to conform to the Lord's understanding and abandon our own.

The comment by Moses in Moses 1:27–30 shows how despite the vision he could not understand. He had to ask, "tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?" It would take great effort to be able to catch up with the things he witnessed.

The Lord lives in a timeless state (D&C 130:7; Alma 40:8). We live inside time. When the Lord shows things to prophets from His perspective, it takes a while for men to comprehend what they have been shown. It is a process. Our effort is also required.

Men are not perfected in an instant. We do not learn, even with a Perfect Teacher, without applying ourselves. It sometimes takes, as in the cases of Abraham and Nephi, decades of pondering in order for us to understand and finally receive what has been given to us. In the meantime, the Lord gives us experiences in life which will allow our minds to open to what He has done for us.

Joseph's First Vision was originally his own conversion story. By the time of the third account (the one we have in the scriptures) it had changed into the opening of a dispensation for all mankind. It changed from Joseph's conversion into the herald call from heaven to all mankind. The years from 1820 to 1838 were required for Joseph to understand the difference. Same vision. Much different understanding.

So it is with all sons of God.

It is a process which unfolds. It unfolds, as we will finally come to realize, in perfect order, perfectly. If you want to read about it I have tried to describe it beginning with The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil

MARCH 28, 2010

President Packer's Testimony

I have enormous respect for President Boyd K. Packer. To me he is one of the great lights in the church. I know he had a role in the excommunication of seven "intellectuals" years ago, and that controversy remains today. One of those affected was a fellow who attended law school at the same time as I did. I feel for both him and President Packer. I do not feel inclined to criticize him, nor have I. I do wish the breach between my friend and the church were healed.

President Packer has given many important talks in his career. Perhaps one of the most significant was given in the October, 1977 General Conference. In it he made the following explanation of his testimony and of the testimonies of General Authorities. He is speaking of the time when he was first interviewed to be called as a General Authority by President:

President McKay explained that one of the responsibilities of an Assistant to the Twelve was to stand with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles as a special witness and to bear testimony that Jesus is the Christ. What he said next overwhelmed me: "Before we proceed to set you apart, I ask you to bear your testimony to us. We want to know if you have that witness."

I did the best I could. I bore my testimony the same as I might have in a fast and testimony meeting in my ward. To my surprise, the Brethren of the Presidency seemed pleased and proceeded to confer the office upon me.

That puzzled me greatly, for I had supposed that someone called to such an office would have an unusual, different, and greatly enlarged testimony and spiritual power.

It puzzled me for a long time until finally I could see that I already had what was required: an abiding testimony in my heart of the Restoration of the fulness of the gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith, that we have a Heavenly Father, and that Jesus Christ is our Redeemer. I may not have known all about it, but I did have a testimony, and I was willing to learn.

I was perhaps no different from those spoken of in the Book of Mormon: “And whoso cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost, even as the Lamanites, because of their faith in me at the time of their conversion, were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and they knew it not” (3 Nephi 9:20; emphasis added).

Over the years, I have come to see how powerfully important that simple testimony is. I have come to understand that our Heavenly Father is the Father of our spirits (see Numbers 16:22; Hebrews 12:9; D&C 93:29). He is a father with all the tender love of a father. Jesus said, “For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.” (John 16:27)

Some years ago, I was with President Marion G. Romney, meeting with mission presidents and their wives in Geneva, Switzerland. He told them that 50 years before, as a missionary boy in Australia, late one afternoon he had gone to a library to study. When he walked out, it was night. He looked up into the starry sky, and it happened. The Spirit touched him, and a certain witness was born in his soul.

He told those mission presidents that he did not know any more surely than as a member of the First Presidency that God the Father lives; that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Only Begotten of the Father; and that the fulness of the gospel had been restored than he did as a missionary boy 50 years before in Australia. He said that his testimony had changed in that it was much easier to get an answer from the Lord. The Lord’s presence was nearer, and he knew the Lord much better than he had 50 years before.

There is the natural tendency to look at those who are sustained to presiding positions, to consider them to be higher and of more value in the Church or to their families than an ordinary member. Somehow we feel they are worth more to the Lord than are we. It just does not work that way!

It would be very disappointing to my wife and to me if we supposed any one of our children would think that we think we are of more worth to the family or to the Church than they are, or to think that one calling in the Church was esteemed over another or that any calling would be thought to be less important.

Recently, one of our sons was sustained as ward mission leader. His wife told us how thrilled he was with the call. It fits the very heavy demands of his work. He has the missionary spirit and will find good use for his Spanish, which he has kept polished from his missionary days. We also were very, very pleased at his call.

What my son and his wife are doing with their little children transcends anything they could do in the Church or out. No service could be more important to the Lord than the devotion they give to one another and to their little children. And so it is with all our other children. The ultimate end of all activity in the Church centers in the home and the family.

As General Authorities of the Church, we are just the same as you are, and you are just the same as we are. You have the same access to the powers of revelation for your families and for your work and for your callings as we do.

It is also true that there is an order to things in the Church. When you are called to an office, you then receive revelation that belongs to that office that would not be given to others.

No member of the Church is esteemed by the Lord as more or less than any other. It just does not work that way! Remember, He is a father—our Father. The Lord is “no respecter of persons.”

We are not worth more to the onrolling of the Lord’s work than were Brother and Sister Toutai Paletu’a in Nuku’alofa, Tonga; or Brother and Sister Carlos Cifuentes in Santiago, Chile; or Brother and Sister Peter Dalebout in the Netherlands; or Brother and Sister Tatsui Sato of Japan; or hundreds of others I have met while traveling about the world. It just does not work that way.

And so the Church moves on. It is carried upon the shoulders of worthy members living ordinary lives among ordinary families, guided by the Holy Ghost and the Light of Christ, which is in them.

I bear witness that the gospel is true and that the worth of souls is great in the sight of God—every soul—and that we are blessed to be members of the Church. I have the witness that would qualify me for the calling I have. I’ve had it since I met the First Presidency those many years ago. I bear it to you in the name of Jesus Christ, amen.

I believe President Packer means it when he says his testimony was “the same as I might have in a fast and testimony meeting in my ward.” When someone in a position of Church leadership has an audience with Christ, we hear about it. Joseph Smith told us. Oliver Cowdery told us. Sidney Rigdon told us. So did President John Taylor, President Joseph F. Smith and David B. Haight. Their calling is to bear a witness of Him. When they have an actual audience, I believe they tell us.

The calling of the Twelve is to “bear witness” of Christ (D&C 107:23). Because of that calling, they must proclaim they have a “witness” even if it could be more correctly described as a testimony born of the Spirit. I accept their “witness” of Christ and believe it is authoritative. However, I do not read into their testimony what they do not put there themselves.

I accept the “witness” of the living Apostles, although it is a rare exception when one has an audience with Christ. In recent talks Elder Scott has gone to some length to testify and describe his own spiritual experiences. I trust in them. I trust him. I believe him to be an Apostle. It is not necessary for an Apostle in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to have a personal audience with Christ.

Years ago Elder Mark Peterson said he did not think it possible for a gentile to receive an audience with Christ. He thought that was confined to pure-blooded Israelites. Since he was a gentile apostle to a gentile church, he did not believe it possible for him to receive such an audience. As I understand it, that is the general view among the brethren. The charge given by Elder Oliver Cowdery to the Twelve (telling them they must receive an audience with Christ for their ordination to be complete) was discontinued in 1911 by President Smith. It was discontinued because so few had received that audience. But that does not make these men any less apostles.

I trust President Packer. I accept his testimony. I believe it is enough to qualify him for the work, just as President McKay told him. I am impressed with his humility in explaining his testimony in General Conference. It increases my trust in him as a servant of the Lord.

COMMENTS:

Joshua M. · MARCH 29, 2010 AT 5:58 PM

So are you saying that a gentile can not have an audience with the Lord?

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 29, 2010 AT 7:47 PM

No, that is not what I am saying. That was Elder Peterson's view. I have always had a contrary view. And I believe Nephi had a contrary view.

Sara · MARCH 31, 2010 AT 7:04 AM

Can you explain more to me about why any of the brethren would think they cannot have an audience with Christ? I know there can be different definitions of gentile, but what about becoming of the blood of Israel when we are baptized? If they believe that others have had such an audience, why would they not believe they can? Since I joined the Church and first read what Joseph Smith had to say about it, I have always believed it possible for me and anyone else, so it is disturbing to me to think the Apostles might not believe it. It makes me wonder if I have misunderstood all I have read and felt about this previously, although I don't believe I have. Can you explain this some more? Thank you.

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 31, 2010 AT 12:50 PM

There is a new blog post I wrote yesterday which my wife will put up later today or tomorrow (she's in charge of managing this blog site) which will give you the doctrinal explanation for both the view of Elder Mark Peterson and my own. I'd commend you to that. However, you should not "find it disturbing" that any person finds it a difficult thing to believe in. The leadership of the Church have more than a full time job. They manage a multi-national, multi-lingual organization with over 14 million members (according to a General Authority visiting my ward last Sunday). This is not an easy job for them. I think President Packer's General Conference address was intended to bring a little balance to our view of them. He is being candid. I think he wants us to have a more realistic view of them, and to stop holding a mythological view that is unsupported by the reality. Anyway, keep reading. My wife will get the post up in due course. Be patient.

Greg · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 4:32 PM

Do you happen to have a reference that you could point me to for the following statement? Thanks.

The charge given by Elder Oliver Cowdrey to the Twelve (telling them they must receive an audience with Christ for their ordination to be complete) was discontinued in 1911 by President Smith.

Greg · MAY 10, 2010 AT 10:05 AM

Thought I would come back and see if you've had a chance to comment. I'm familiar with Oliver Cowdrey's charge to the Twelve. Specifically, I am interested in the source to this charge being discontinued in 1911 by President Smith. Thanks. I look forward to a reply.

Denver Snuffer · May 10, 2010 at 5:42 PM

I'll put it up as a post today (May 10th) because it is too long for a comment.

MARCH 29, 2010

Believe it is Possible

The first step in the path back to God's presence is to believe it is possible. Without this, the rest of the path does not exist.

MARCH 29, 2010

Spring Baseball

Alta lost to Lone Peak in a snow flurry on Friday. They have another game set for Tuesday at Alta. It is supposed to rain. It will be interesting to see how much different snow and rain make the game.

There was one pop-up in the infield by Lone Peak which went "major league" height—nearly out of sight. In the snow, the Alta shortstop called for the ball, backing off the second-baseman. As the ball descended, the wind and snow pushed it and the shortstop drifted with the ball. By the time it came down, the shortstop had moved within twenty feet of first base. He actually missed the catch. Between the snow and wind the play was anything but routine.

Both teams played in the same conditions. So there's no excuses for the outcome. But I have to admit, I was grateful when it ended (despite the loss) because the weather made watching it so unpleasant.

I'm hoping the rain-play on Tuesday will be more tolerable to sit through.

Thankfully, state playoffs are generally played in warm, dry weather; and when you get far enough along, also on a neutral field.

MARCH 29, 2010

Cycles

I've been impressed with Isaiah the last few weeks. His words are timeless. He describes patterns which recur whenever people seek to follow God. It is little wonder Nephi chose to adopt many of Isaiah's words to describe what he (Nephi) had seen in vision.

I'm struck by how often one prophet will adopt the words of another prophet as his own. One of the great moments in scripture is when Jacob has his people come up to the temple, promising to give them a prophecy. When they arrive, he reads them the words of Zenos, found in Jacob Chapter 5. Then, after this long recitation of Zenos' words by Jacob, he adds the following:

As I said unto you that I would prophesy, behold, this is my prophecy—that the things which this prophet Zenos spake, concerning the house of Israel, in the which he likened them unto a tame olive tree, must surely come to pass. (Jacob 6:1)

That's it. His great prophecy: What Zenos said will happen!

I like that. Succinct. No messing around. Just telling these folks that this prophecy he read from another prophet was from God.

It's a profound message. We endlessly lose light. Then assignments come to prophets to bring back a little (or a lot) of it, and they restore again. We've been in the process of restoring truth since Adam. This is because we have also been in the process of discarding truth since Adam. It's a race between the discarding and the restoring. Mostly discarding seems to win.

MARCH 29, 2010

God of Truth

I was asked about the meaning of the statement in scripture that "God cannot lie." It is an important concept and it has a highly specific application. I have dealt with it at length in the book Beloved Enos. I would suggest reading the discussion there. If there are still questions, send me another inquiry.

MARCH 30, 2010

"dried up with thirst"

Isaiah prophesied about the effect of losing knowledge about God. He wrote: "Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge: and their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst" (Isa. 5:13).

This is an apt description of people when they are not "fed" with truth and light.

In contrast, Nephi wanted the Latter-day followers of Christ to have a "feast" to consume while toiling in this fallen, difficult time. But Nephi notes the “feast” will come to us from hearing the words of “angels” and not from the “arm of flesh.” Nephi taught us:

Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ. Wherefore, I said unto you, feast upon the words of Christ; for behold, the words of Christ will tell you all things what ye should do. (2 Ne. 32:3)

Whether we are to “feast” or be “famished” is up to us. Seek, ask, knock: it will be opened. Stay content, do not ask, seek, or knock: you will remain dried up with thirst.

MARCH 30, 2010

The Fruit at the Bottom of the Bowl

When I was in 9th grade the teacher asked me to read a short story aloud to the class while she went to the office. She asked that I do it because the class would likely listen if I were the reader, but if I were not then they would be out of control. Mostly because I was not a good listener at that age.

In any event, I read the story aloud. Despite the intervening years I still recall the thing. It was by Ray Bradbury and was titled The Fruit at the Bottom of the Bowl. The character in the story killed someone, and was cleaning up fingerprints from the murder scene. The cleaning went on as the story was narrated, and at some point it became apparent that the character had gone insane.

The story ended with the police coming and finding the person still there cleaning up fingerprints. The cleaning included the fruit at the bottom of the bowl. Fruit that had never been touched. The character was simply mad.

I think of that phrase whenever I see something completely mad. Particularly when I see behavior which is inexplicable. I’ve had a few “fruit at the bottom of the bowl” moments while on the High Council. I try not to have them while at home.

It just isn't necessary (or possible) to micro-manage your children's lives. Nor is it wise to try to micro-manage millions of other people's lives. Whether as a parent, as a government leader, business leader, or as a church leader, Joseph Smith's advice is still timely. He said the way he managed the church was to “teach them correct principles and let them govern themselves.” I'd like to see a return to that. In all parts of daily life.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MARCH 31, 2010 AT 12:56 PM

After looking at what you people are sending in, I told my wife I'm not going to let the guesses be posted. No, it isn't a tattoo I've wanted (I don't want a tattoo), nor the edict to stop asking people to open their scriptures during sacrament meeting talks, nor the raising the bar stuff I posted about earlier, nor the multiple earrings. I'm just saying that there are moments of madness we all seem to recognize at times and when we do it is a “Fruit at the Bottom of the Bowl” moment. Now stop guessing. (I have to admit though, some of them were quite funny.)

MARCH 30, 2010

The Lamb and the Lion

There is only one place in scripture where the Lord is identified as both the “Lamb” and the “Lion” in successive verses. You can find it in Revelation 5:5–6. In verse 5 He is referred to as “the Lion of the tribe of Juda.” In verse 6 He is called “a Lamb as it had been slain.”

The moment when the “Lamb” and the “Lion” lay down together is the time of His great return. He is both. A Lamb to those who are prepared at His coming. A Lion to those who are not prepared, for whom judgment will be poured out.

When you see that painting of the Lamb and Lion lying down together (we have one in our Stake Center), you are seeing the two great symbols of the Lord's Millennial reign.

MARCH 31, 2010

General Conference

April General Conference is upon us. I'm hoping to be able to see or hear some of it while at an out-of-state baseball tournament set for this weekend.

We have a tradition of attending General Priesthood meeting at the BYU Marriott Center. I'm worried that I won't be back in time for that session. I always like to attend with a larger group, and since you don't need tickets to attend at BYU, I like going there. All my sons grew up with this tradition.

If you're in Utah County or Salt Lake County, I recommend it. Outside of the Conference Center itself, I think it is the largest single body of priesthood attending that session of conference.

MARCH 31, 2010

Pollutions

The great latter day "pollutions" referred to by Mormon in Mormon 8:31 are the behaviors of men; not environmental waste. Mormon identifies what those "pollutions" are: "murders, and robbing, and lying, and deceivings, and whoredoms, and all manner of abominations."

Those are harsh indictments. But it becomes even more harsh when Mormon identifies US as the culprits. He calls us "pollutions." He tells us we have polluted the "holy Church of God." That can only mean the Restored Church. Sobering indeed.

“O ye pollutions, ye hypocrites, ye teachers, who sell yourselves for that which will canker, why have ye polluted the holy church of God?” (Mormon 8:38). Remember that Mormon saw us.

Jesus Christ showed Mormon US. He was in a unique position to accurately tell us what ails us (Mormon 8:35).

So why do we think ourselves in good spiritual condition? Why are we confident we aren't condemned by the Lord? Why do we presume that as Latter-day Saints we are safe. Why do we think Mormon is talking to all those other churches; churches who will never read his book, and therefore cannot be warned by it? It defies common sense, really.

We are in a lot of trouble. He's trying to help us. How foolish to think we can line up beside him and point the finger away from ourselves. He won't let us do that, you know. He's pointing the finger right at us.

MARCH 31, 2010

Just the Commandments

According to the Moses account of the creation, at the time the commandment was given to “not eat of” the tree of knowledge of good and evil, the woman had not been created (Moses 3:15–17). It was after giving Adam this commandment that the woman was created (Moses 3:21–23).

Eve's knowledge of the commandment came from Adam, not from God.

God's commandment to Adam was:

Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat. But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

The restriction placed on Adam was to “NOT EAT” of the fruit of that tree.

Adam’s explanation to Eve was different. Eve explained her understanding to the serpent when the serpent tempted her: “God hath said—Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die” (Moses 4:9). Eve’s understanding of the commandment varied from what had been given to Adam by the addition of the words: “NEITHER SHALL YE TOUCH OF IT.”

Adam added to the Lord’s commandment. This additional precaution was the error which set the transgression in motion. For when Eve saw the serpent touching the fruit and not dying, it lent credibility to the assertion that “ye shall not surely die” (Moses 4:10). Being innocent, and therefore vulnerable to deception, Eve could not know she was confronting a lie. Instead she saw with her own eyes that the commandment “not to touch” clearly did not result in death.

One of the great lessons of the Moses account is that adding to the commandments of God, no matter how well intentioned, is going to lead to error if not tragedy. We do as He asks. Without adding to, nor subtracting from what He has bid us to do, we should follow what we are asked by Him.

We cannot improve on His commandments. We cannot build a fence around His commandments by adding other precautions, gestures, supplements, or restrictions. When we do that we produce excess, rigidity, unintended consequences and error. We teach for doctrines the commandments of men. Inevitably leading to a form of godliness without any power. It’s an historic path to failure, diminishing power in the priesthood until it is gone altogether. Detracting from our spiritual as well as physical health. Removing our strength. Corrupting our posterity, as they are distracted from what they should receive as they seek for what they cannot attain by “some other way.”

I rather like Moses’ account.

APRIL 2010

APRIL 1, 2010

Boyd K. Packer’s Testimony, Part 2

Because of a question contained in the comments section under an earlier post, I am adding this explanation:

Elder Mark E. Peterson explained his view regarding The Second Comforter (a visitation by Jesus Christ with a believer) in conversations of his which have been repeated to me. He had been asked about the issue, and explained his view to those who asked. He believed that The Second Comforter experience was not available to Gentiles. He quoted 3 Nephi 15:20–24 as the basis for his view, which includes this statement by Christ to the Nephites at the time of His appearance at the Temple in Bountiful:

they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching. And they understood not that I said they shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice—that I should not manifest myself unto them save it be by the Holy Ghost.

I interpret the above quote differently than Elder Peterson. It is my view that this statement made by Christ was explaining His immediate post-resurrection appearances. Those were limited to the scattered sheep of Israel. These scattered sheep were unknown to each other, and therefore “lost” from each other’s knowledge. However, they remained (just as the Nephites) in organized and believing bodies of scattered Israelites. It was to these organized bodies alone that the risen Savior’s ministry extended immediately following His resurrection.

In contrast, in the latter-days the prophecies are to the contrary. In the latter days, Christ’s appearances as The Second Comforter have been without regard to any limitation of who may be visited. Now, those who believe who are identified with the Gentiles, are grafted into the branches of Israel and become part of the covenant people (See e.g., 1 Ne. 10:14).

With respect to the Gentiles in our day, it is promised directly to them by the Lord, through Nephi, that His appearances will include Gentiles, in very deed:

And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest himself unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling blocks— (1 Ne. 14:1). This is that day.

APRIL 1, 2010

Tithing

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a three-year system for collecting and spending tithes.

In the first year the funds are collected.

In the second year the funds remain invested while a budget is prepared for spending the tithing. In the third year the funds are spent.

During the time when the funds are collected (first year), they are put to use in investments or deposits which yield a return.

Similarly, while they remain invested during the second year, they also yield a return. When the third year arrives, and the funds are being spent on budgeted expenses, until the day they are spent they continue to collect interest or a return.

The amount of tithing collected in the first year is the amount designated “tithing” contributions. This is the amount that is budgeted and spent in the third year. All of the return on tithing yielded in the form of interest or return on investments is treated as “investment income” not tithing.

When the church spends “tithing” on temples, chapels, publications, etc. those monies are confined to the original amount collected as “tithing” only.

When the church spends “investment money” those include the interest, return, etc. collected on the tithing money during the three year cycle from when originally collected until the time it is spent. It also includes the returns on the returns as they accumulate over the years.

Therefore, when the church announces that a project (like the large reconstruction of downtown Salt Lake City) is not “tithing” but is “investment income” of the church, this is the distinction which is being made.

APRIL 2, 2010

Repent and Be Humble

As the Apostle John closes his Gospel, he adds this comment: “And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written” (John 21:25).

In D&C 7’s headnote we read that Section 7 is a “translated version of the record made on parchment by John and hidden up.”

In D&C 93 we read, “John saw and bore record of the fulness of my glory, and the fulness of John’s record is hereafter to be revealed. And he bore record, saying:…” (D&C 93:6–7). From verses 7 through 18 it is an excerpt from John’s more complete, and as yet unrevealed account.

[Bruce R. McConkie concluded that this was the testimony of John the Baptist, and not John the Beloved. I have accepted Elder McConkie’s position in books I have written, however, I believe the account in Section 93 is more likely John the Beloved’s record. Since the issue is only a 3 to me on the earlier scale I proposed, I have simply accepted Elder McConkie’s view in what I have written.]

John likely had a good deal more to add concerning the Savior, but deliberately withheld it. Similarly, we have the sealed portion of the Book of Mormon as a reminder that not everything has been revealed to us which prior generations had given to them.

We ought to have a bit more humility about our “Restoration” than we have. The fact is, we have never been given what the ancients were trusted to possess. We have never been equal to them. We certainly aren’t now. Until we take seriously the Book of Mormon (which will require us to both repent and become more humble than we’ve ever been), we aren’t qualified to receive more (See, e.g., 3 Ne. 26:7–12; D&C 84:54–58).

Of what then do we have to boast?

APRIL 2, 2010

Various Creation Accounts

There are different versions of the creation. The Moses, Abraham and Genesis accounts are similar in putting Adam alone at the point when the commandment was given to not partake of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The Temple account does not preserve this.

All the accounts are intended as initiation ceremonies. In the Abraham account, for example, there are directions given to the players who perform the ceremony. They are all “endowment” documents.

Each ceremony can be viewed as a separate revelation. The fact that there are differences means nothing. All of them are intended to highlight or emphasize different teachings. It is foolish to ask “which one is right” because they are all right.

The creation (or transplant of man onto this world) is not really the reason for the various ceremonial accounts of the event. They are intended to orient us to how we got here (by a deliberate, planned act of God), why we are here (to find our way back to God) and why conditions here are difficult (to gain knowledge of good and evil). The accounts are really about us. Each of us was born innocent in the beginning, gradually become accountable, feel ourselves outside the presence of God, and must work to return.

APRIL 2, 2010

Where Do Your Fast Offerings Go?

The ward I live in has been an exporter of fast offering donations for decades. I don't think there has been a time since its beginning when we haven't exported fast offering donations. Two weeks ago in a meeting with the Priest's Quorum, our bishop remarked that we are using nearly all the fast offering contributions inside our own ward to meet family needs of our own neighbors.

This economy has affected the church's “breadbasket” along the Wasatch Front. The church is able to project international efforts because of the tithing of the saints in Utah. When Utah's economy falters, the church is affected.

The last report the US Government released (that I saw) announced that tax collections were down 40%. If tax revenues are down by this much, tithing contributions must bear some proportion near to that.

The US has been blessed for the sake of the church. When we do not merit blessings, judgments follow. The economic prosperity of the US has not been because we are better than other people, but because it furthers the Lord's purposes. When you view our current circumstances in moral terms, then we should ask what we need to do to merit further blessings from the Lord.

There are no private sins. We have only the illusion of privacy. All eternity looks on at us, at times in complete wonder at our astonishing pride and vanity.

APRIL 2, 2010

Ideas and Thoughts

Ideas are things. Real things. They come into existence as we create them. They will become subject to the judgment of God, because our thoughts are perhaps the most real part of us (See Alma 12:14).

We should guard our thoughts as we guard the lives of our children. Our thoughts hold the key to everything else.

This is so important a matter that the Lord tied knowledge of priesthood itself to the thoughts we entertain in the privacy of our minds. Only when our thoughts are worthy are we able to bear the presence of God (D&C 121:45).

If you study the scriptures and then meditate upon them also. You will only develop power within as you do so.

APRIL 3, 2010

Las Vegas

We returned from Las Vegas. I have an assortment of observations:

They didn't have a law school there just a few years ago, and lawyers were scarce. They've been able to make up for the shortage I can tell from the billboards. Lawyers do traffic tickets for $50 and DUI's for $700. They get catchy phone numbers like 444-4444; and if you want a "half-priced" one he's 400-4000. Not sure what a half-priced lawyer amounts to.

Sex still sells, apparently. At least the advertisers think so. I wonder if Lot would live in Las Vegas were he alive today.

I walked through the casino to the hotel elevator carrying my scriptures, baggage and in company with my wife and four daughters. I assume we were as much a spectacle to the patrons as the patrons were to us.

While there must be a few folks for whom gambling offers some sort of glamor, I did not detect much of that. Mostly you could see boredom or desperation on the faces of the typical patron.

They don't pay the girls who deal on the blackjack tables enough to dress properly. Poor things only have a tiny remnant of a pair of levis on, not enough to cover their underwear. Their exposed garters and fishnet stockings betray a style dating back to the 1960's. They were practically unclad on top, as well. I assume these hallmarks of poverty betray an employer who is exploiting their labor without appropriate remuneration.

The baseball was fun, but Alta went 2-2. Still searching for the right combination in the batting lineup and trying to fill a gap at 3rd base still, too. They'll get there. Now we're back in Salt Lake for some more 'snowball.

General Conference was broadcast live on the TV, but I couldn't find either an AM or FM station carrying it on the radio. I wondered why that was.

The LDS Temple is pointed out on the top of the Stratosphere Hotel as a point of interest. I thought that was interesting.

I noticed an older couple wearing newly-wed attire. They both had enough miles on them to make them either eternal optimists about the state of matrimony or habitual about their marital affairs. I like to think them optimists.

APRIL 4, 2010

Creation Ceremonies

I was asked about the creation account being tied to ritual initiation ceremonies. All the ancient accounts of creation were given in connection with initiations or ceremonial rites. That is true of the Egyptians, Babylonians, Israelites, Babylonians, Hopis, etc. The ritualized explanation of the origin of human life is tied together with the meaning of life, and obligations about how life was to be lived, and what the afterlife will hold. The restored Temple rights are consistent with the most ancient of traditions.

Interestingly, the rites of the Masons do not have this basic orientation, and are therefore not part of the tradition from which the endowment ceremony springs.

APRIL 4, 2010

Section 132

I have written that it is my view that Section 132 is not a single revelation, but as many as five. I was asked about how I divide Section 132. Before I respond a few words of explanation:

First, the version we have was written in 1843 at the request of Hyrum. He (Hyrum) intended to take it to Emma and persuade her it was from God. Hyrum knew this revelation had been a continuing source of friction between Joseph and Emma and he offered to try and get Emma to accept its truthfulness. So Joseph agreed to dictate it. The scribe was summoned, and Hyrum asked if he should retrieve the Urum and Thummim. Joseph responded that he could recite it from memory, and then dictated it as it now appears in Section 132.

There were two copies made. The one Hyrum took to Emma was burned by Emma. The second came west and was ultimately made public in the 1850's and added to the scriptures.

The dating of the revelation is uncertain, but the headnote to Section 132 notes that “the principles involved in this revelation had been known by the Prophet since 1831” (Section 132, headnote). Given the uncertainty of dating, the typical approach by scholars has been to date it from when the first practice began. I think that is wrong. I would date it from the time Joseph translated Jacob, Chapter 2, in 1829. Joseph prayed during the translation of the Book of Mormon to receive the visitation of John the Baptist and the ordinance of baptism. I see no reason why the translation of Jacob ‘s comments on plural wives would not have provoked a similar inquiry and revelation.

We know the information was suppressed from at least 1831 to 1843. What we do not have is an earlier version from which to reconstruct the entire process; we only have the finished product in 1843. With that, I think the revelation divides into sections as follows:

First, the original revelation begins in the first verse and continues until verse 40. This is concerned with one subject and provides the doctrinal and historical basis for the practice of plural wives. However, the subject changes in verse 41 and comes in response to another inquiry regarding the subject of adultery.

The answer to the question on adultery is a separate revelation beginning in response to Joseph's inquiry in verse 41 and continuing through verse 50. That revelation confirms upon Joseph the sealing authority by the voice of God (a separate issue altogether) and pronounces Joseph's calling and election sure. This is the voice of the Lord to Joseph confirming his exaltation and it is unlikely to have happened at the same time as the original revelation in 1829 or 1831. [It is important that this conferral of authority to seal, and his calling and election are contemporaneous events. This is not well understood by the church today, but nevertheless true.]

Verses 51 through 56 are a revelation to Emma which appears to be separate as well. It makes no sense to have this revelation given to instruct, warn and counsel Emma until after she learns of the first revelation and has reacted to it. Once that has happened, a separate revelation to her about her reaction makes sense.

Because of Emma's refusal after her warning, the final section from verses 61 through the end is a new explanation of the law. It talks about how to proceed in light of her (or any woman's) rejection of the principle.

These are four of the potential five sections which appear to me. It is possible that verses 64–66 are also separate from verses 61–63, which would then make five total revelations which are grouped into this single section of the D&C.

Now, what is important about this revelation being in separate parts (to me at least) is that first, the subject was not fully understood by Joseph when first received. He encountered practical and doctrinal questions even after the first revelation came on the subject. That is commonly experienced by all who receive revelation from God. Additionally, it is important that the sealing authority was given to Joseph by the word of the Lord, in revelation to him, apart from the events in the Kirtland Temple. This is consistent with how that authority came to Helaman in chapter 10 of Helaman, as well. The voice of the Lord speaking about exaltation and conferring authority at the same moment is the Lord's way of doing things. It was no different for Joseph.

Now, least anyone be confused or begin asking questions about plural wives, I do not believe in the practice. It was discontinued and we do not practice it. I have addressed the polygamists' claims to the right to continue the practice in Beloved Enos and my position is as I stated there.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · APRIL 4, 2010 AT 12:50 PM

Looking for a little clarification. What do you mean when you say "I do not believe in the practice" (reference to plural wives)?

There are numerous ways that statement could be taken/read (i.e. you do not believe in the practice at all, you do not believe in the contemporary practice of it, you do not believe it's doctrinal, etc).

Is there a difference between not believing in the practice, and not believing in the doctrinally of the issue?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 4, 2010 AT 2:33 PM

I don't think it appropriate to now have more than one wife. I accept Section 132 as an authentic revelation.

Moderator Comment · APRIL 4, 2010

Comments, when posted, are posted as written. We do not vouch for their accuracy, their doctrinal soundness or anything else.

Some comments are personal and are not meant to be posted. We read each and every one. An honest attempt is made to address each one. Thank you for your patience.

Some comments disagree with the post. We will not debate the comments that are made, but hope they are of value to those of you who are reading this blog.

We appreciate you and your comments.

CHAPTER 6

My Glasses Aren't Rose Colored

APRIL 5, 2010

“What it Means and What it Does Not Mean”

I was asked about the meaning of receiving The Second Comforter. There is a chapter in the book (The Second Comforter: Conversing with the Lord Through the Veil) titled “What it Means and What it Does Not Mean” that summarizes the matter.

Life here is complex and sometimes difficult. You have both moral and legal obligations which every one of us owe to society, to employment, to friends and neighbors, the Church, the government, the civil and criminal law and taxing authorities. Some obligations are not “moral,” but nevertheless binding and controlling. Being taxed, for example, is not a moral matter, but it is a legal matter. Governments obligate their citizens to pay them and all citizens are required to do so. No matter what your standing before God may be, you are going to have to pay taxes. Christ made that clear when He paid taxes and responded to the question about taxes by confirming the obligation (See Matt. 22:15–22).

The promises of God are helpful in enduring to the end. But they have no value here apart from peace of mind. They are not “property” which this world will value highly. They are for the coming life.

APRIL 5, 2010

Encouragement and Example

All the prophets can do is offer encouragement to others. They can affirm that the path back to God exists and can be walked even in a day of sin like today. They cannot do the walking for anyone other than themselves. Each person is obligated to walk on the path for him or herself.

Examples of others offer encouragement, but can never replace the obligation devolving upon each individual.

It would be easier for a person to live in harmony with God in obscurity than with public notice. Sometimes, however, the Lord requires a person to take a public stand as part of the trial or obligation imposed upon them. Whether the person complies with that duty is a measure of the person's sincerity.

APRIL 5, 2010

Unique and Individual Experiences

Every life is a miracle. Every lifetime unique. How amazing is life and the wondrous experiences we are privileged to receive while here. We cannot really see what is inside another person because their experiences have been unique to them and cannot be shared.

We should resolve all doubts about someone's motivation or heart in favor of them. It is always best to be slow to judge and quick to forgive.

My father would say: “I never spoke a word in anger that I didn't later regret.” He was a wise man. I think that is good advice for all of us.

APRIL 6, 2010

David Christensen YouTube

My friend David Christensen has done yet another video on YouTube. He asked that I put it up on the blog. Below is a link to it.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6KWGzSSCgoo>

This is how David works to present a message he believes in to the world. His talent and passion for this is undeniable. The time is indeed far spent.

APRIL 6, 2010

April 6

It is April 6th. This is the day Latter-day Saints regard as the birth date of the Lord. His coming into the world in the springtime symbolized the new hope found in Him. Creation begins anew with the return of light, warming of the earth, flowering of trees and plant life. Springtime is when the sheep, cattle and other animals bring their young into the world. It is a time of hope in the cycles of nature. His coming at this time confirms His role as the Bringer of Hope.

He came to redeem the world that all may be saved by Him.

APRIL 6, 2010

President Monson

Why I admire President Monson.

Christ's denunciation of the Scribes and Pharisees included the caution that the outward observances of the law were less important than the "weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith" (Matt. 23:23).

James, the brother of Jesus and Presiding Bishop of the New Testament Church, whom I regard as the unidentified “Teacher of Righteousness” taught that “Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world” (James 1:27).

Thomas Monson’s lifelong ministry to the widows, elderly and fatherless is sincere, real and lasting. One of the widows to whom he paid a visit a few short months ago was my wife’s grandmother, the great-grandmother to my children. At the time, she was confined to an assisted-living home. Without any advance notice President Monson showed up on a stormy Sunday afternoon. Due to the weather conditions, the care center had decided to cancel their Sacrament Meeting. He came through the storm, put the meeting back into place, and conducted this Sabbath celebration for the confined, elderly widows and widowers.

He lives that “pure religion” which includes the “weightier matters” that, above all else, we ought not leave undone.

Virtues are worthy of recognition. I like to take a lead from the Egyptian judgment scale and to weigh a man’s heart against a feather to decide another man’s worthiness before God. For with what judgment we judge we shall be judged (Matt. 7:2).

APRIL 7, 2010

Presiding Patriarchs

I was asked the names of the various Presiding Patriarchs of the church.

First, Joseph Smith, Sr., the father of Joseph Smith. Served from 1833 to 1840. Second, Hyrum Smith, older brother of Joseph Smith. Served from 1841 to 1844.

Third, William Smith, brother to Joseph Smith. Served from May 1845 to October 1845.

There was an interval between 1845 and 1847 while the Church moved west when the office was not filled. John Smith was called in 1847 and served until 1854.

Fifth, John Smith, who served from 1855 until 1911. Sixth, Hyrum G. Smith, who served from 1912 until 1932. Seventh, Joseph F. Smith II who served from 1942 to 1946.

Eighth, Eldred G. Smith who began in 1947 and still serves, although as emeritus since 1979.

APRIL 7, 2010

D&C 46:13–14

I was asked whether D&C 46:13–14 meant that only some could see the Lord while others would have to rely on their testimony. I responded:

It could mean:

1. Some (and only some) will know Him, and others will be able to believe on their words (but will not know Him).
2. or,
3. Some, initially less than all, will know Him, and others will, initially, believe on their words. But if the others who believe on their words follow the same path as those who know Him, they will also grow to know Him as well.

The correct choice between these two is described in Nephi's account where he could not believe his father, Lehi. Then he prayed and the Lord "visited" him by softening his heart so he could believe his father's words. Then he developed faith to receive stronger impressions, and acted consistent with them. Then he was able to “hear” the Lord by continuing on that path. Finally he had angels minister to him and prepare him to receive an audience with the Lord. And, after remaining true and faithful to the path, he at last received an audience with the Lord.

Nephi’s spiritual development is described in detail in the early chapters of The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil.

D&C 93:1 says “every soul” not just a few. Not just a select group. But “every soul.” I believe it means all. Not just a few; while others are relegated to believing on their words.

D&C 46:14 is talking about where people begin. Not where they finish.

APRIL 7, 2010

“Schizophrenic?”

I was asked why there are sometimes “criticisms” of the church on my blog and in the books I have written. Someone would like to know whether or not the views I advance weren’t “schizophrenic” by both criticizing and defending the church, and what my true belief about the church was. I responded:

I have had many people with whom I have “ministered” as a Gospel Doctrine Teacher, Ward Mission Leader and High Councilor who have become disaffected with the church. I’ve worked to help them come back. What I write reflects this history with these struggling Latter-day Saints. There are many people who have left the church (or have given up on the church) who have read what I write and come back to activity again.

There are those who are in the process of realizing that the church has flaws who now want to quit. There are people who have begun to encounter problems who just don’t know how to process them. It doesn't do any good if I pretend there aren't problems. Many of these saints have a crisis underway because they have been pretending, and now they find they cannot cope with the tension any longer.

One of posts at the beginning of this blog describes what my attitude is. I recognize weaknesses, have no intention of avoiding them, and am not an apologist in the traditional sense. But I believe in the church, accept its authority, and think its role is necessary and even critical to the work of the Lord.

Acknowledging the flaws is admitting the obvious. But getting those who are discouraged, losing their faith, or have left the church to reconsider that decision is another thing. They cannot be reached spiritually without some acknowledgment of the problems in the church. They aren't going to be deceived by offering a clever polemical argument.

Once the varnish comes off the institution of the church, for many, faith dies. But that is not necessary. Nor is it inevitable. It is possible to see the frailties of men and still also see the hand of God.

I've had many conversations with what would be regarded as leading Mormon educators, writers, and authorities who have essentially lost their faith and continue to hold on to being a "Latter-day Saint" because of the culture or employment or family. I'm trying to help them and any others in a similar spot. I'm trying to say that the church may be flawed, but despite that, it is worthy, worthwhile, necessary and good. I have had some success.

I've had a number of men and women tell me that I've helped rescue them from their faithlessness. What I have written has helped them balance their attitudes. People who have had their names removed voluntarily, or who have been excommunicated, or who have drifted into inactivity have been persuaded by what I've written to see what they have lost by that disassociation from the Church.

It may be that someone who has "rose colored glasses" will find some of what I write difficult to take in, particularly if they haven't encountered any particular criticism about the church before. I regret when that happens. However, all of us are going to need to confront the growing array of arguments against the church and its leadership as time goes on. Some of the church's most effective critics are former members. Indeed, with the internet, the arguments against the church are multiplying, as are the number of critics. I try not to gloss over the flaws or ignore their existence or to pretend that there aren't legitimate questions being asked about what has or is happening within the institution of the church. I'm saying that we can and should have faith anyway. The church matters and its mission has always been possible to accomplish.

I also want those who sense we've retreated from the original scope of doctrine and practice to realize the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ remains on the earth. It is as accessible to anyone living today as it was while Joseph was here. The failure of others does not impose any limitation upon the individual who sincerely seeks, asks and follows. We are not dependent upon others or even the institution itself to receive that fullness. Although the ordinances offered by the church remain the foundation upon which the fullness must be built.

CHAPTER 7
D&C 132

APRIL 8, 2010

D&C 132, Part 2

There was a question about Section 132 received after this post. The previous post on D&C 132 did not address the underlying subject of the section. I only discussed the text divisions and timing of the document's creation. The question I received asks about the substance of the revelation, and in particular, the status of women in plural marriage.

I have a few observations which color my views of this subject. This will take a few posts, but below is my first set of observations:

When plural marriage was first introduced publicly in the 1850s, the brethren were rather candid about the history of monogamy. They explained that the societal and governmental institution of monogamy was intended to exploit women. By depriving women of husbands, it resulted in an excess number of women who could be prostituted. Men could then have one wife, for whom they bore the burden of support and shared parenting responsibilities, while other women could be used without any burden of support or shared parenting duties. The brethren also explained that one of the reasons Rome was originally opposed to Christianity was because it was a cult that threatened to spread the practice of plural marriage throughout the Empire. Their comments are in the Journal of Discourses and you can read these explanations there if you are interested.

So as the practice of plural marriage was introduced publicly, it was accompanied by an attack on monogamy; claiming that women were exploited and disadvantaged by the practice of monogamy. This inverts the argument against plural marriage. The claims against it were based in large measure upon the notion that it exploited women and made them subservient. So the argument turns on its ear the “exploits women” card.

When introduced, the practice of plural marriage ran counter to nearly two thousand years of cultural practice. It was decidedly counter to the Elizabethan mores of the age. It was shocking to the Latter-day Saints who learned of the practice. Not only was it foreign in concept, but the Saints had absolutely no basis for implementing it successfully. They had no history, no example, no trial-and-error wisdom. There were no previous examples that they could select behaviors from that would help solve obvious issues arising from the practice. So they began the whole trial-and-error sorting out.

Unfortunately, the practice was introduced in 1853 (publicly) and died in 1890 (publicly). It began secretly in 1831 and died secretly in 1904. Whether you take the public bracket of time or the secret bracket, that isn't enough time for the process to have resulted in handed-down wisdom gained by living that kind of lifestyle.

Those who are outside the Latter-day Saint community (fundamentalists, etc.), and have continued to practice of plural marriage do not really provide a basis for inter-generational wisdom. They live a “bunker-like mentality” — always under siege and never allowed the social and cultural opportunity to practice this form of marriage freely and openly. The results of these efforts are tainted by the hostility, rejection and prosecution by the population at large towards those who try to live this kind of marital relationship.

How the view of women changes under this practice is something that we are not in a position to evaluate accurately. We have a cultural bias, an historic bias and religious bias that colors our view. We do not have a reasonable framework from which to make a neutral evaluation of the subject. The only contemporary societies that have plural marriage in any significant numbers are so socially ill, so backward and violent that a liberal, democratic and open society cannot take any wisdom from them to judge this matter. We are left to look backward into biblical times for clues about the practice. Unfortunately, even there we do not get much guidance or many examples of happy outcomes. Hagar, a princess from Egypt, was at odds with Sarah and ultimately so incompatible that one had to leave. Jacob’s wives were competitive and jealous. The account we have seems to make Jacob responsible for exploiting these ill-feelings. David’s relationships were unsteady. Solomon was ultimately led into idolatry by his foreign, political marriages. The biblical record does not seem to give any hope of a happy outcome (or at least not much hope). So when trying to evaluate it, there is little happy news or basis for celebrating it as a triumph of matrimony.

Then there is the underlying exploitation of young women. These women are married and pregnant so early in life that they are essentially obligated to remain in the marriage. I think that is a reflection of the unhappiness that is anticipated by such unions. The younger bride syndrome seems to be a tacit admission that unless you put the women into this kind of difficult bind (choosing between their children or fleeing), then women won't remain in the marriage. This is an interesting admission seen in both the Muslim communities and in the Fundamentalist communities. It betrays a similar state of unease about women's desire to remain in such relationships.

All in all the practice does not seem to offer (in this life) much advantage to either husband or wife. Nor does it seem to produce happiness here. You can read the book In Sacred Loneliness as an account of our own history with the difficulties of the practice.

Now that doesn't address the "doctrinal" question asked. I'll post again on that issue. However, when you consider the revelation, this is the first point that should be on the table. It is a terrible sacrifice. No society appears to have had much success in implementing it. The "practical" verses the "ideal" is something that tells us important information.

Humanity has not been able to create a widespread social experiment using this form of marriage, notwithstanding its basis in doctrine. At least not one that has been well documented, with wisdom to guide the way. There are of course societies where the economic order consists of a widespread slave class supporting a socially dominant, wealthy class. In these societies, escape from hunger and enslavement requires a plural marriage arrangement. In these circumstances, plural marriage is greeted as a form of liberation. I do not consider those worthy examples. We don't want or expect to build Zion on the backs of a slave class.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · APRIL 8, 2010 AT 12:23 PM

When plural marriage was first introduced publicly in the 1850s, the brethren were rather candid about the history of monogamy. They explained that the societal and governmental institution of monogamy was intended to exploit women. By depriving women of husbands, it resulted in an excess number of women who could be prostituted.

I don't understand that. If there are about equal numbers of males and females how does monogamy result in an excess number of women?

Tim

Denver Snuffer · April 8, 2010 at 9:29 PM

From infant mortality to adulthood, males die at rates far higher than do females. This was even more pronounced a discrepancy during the first centuries as Christianity was gaining a foothold in Europe. By the time you reach marital age, the female population was significantly greater than the male population.

APRIL 8, 2010

D&C 132, Part 3

Further on Section 132:

Joseph taught that we can't expect to achieve the same glory as the ancients if we do not make a similar sacrifice as they did. It's all in Lecture 6 of The Lectures on Faith. I've quoted that stuff in several books and won't repeat it here. If you don't have a copy you should get one. And read it.

Anyway, it is quite important to note the necessity of sacrifice to produce the kind of faith which saves. Joseph's explanation required us to sacrifice all things to be able to lay hold on saving faith. Without the knowledge that we would give up everything, even our own lives if necessary, we cannot receive eternal life. We have to trade this life for the next. No trade, no exaltation.

So when a man or woman reaches the point where she/he can be tested, the Lord will supply a test to them to prove (to themselves) that they will sacrifice all things. [The Lord already knows, but we don't. And it is OUR faith which is required to be tested.]

For most women, they make this kind of sacrifice when they marry. They literally “give up their lives” and become a wife. Even to the point they surrender their prior name and become known by a new name and begin a new life. The sacrifice for them is completed in childbirth, where they risk their life and then shed their blood to bring a new person into the world. For women, therefore, this estate provides a ready-made opportunity for the development of this faith. For men that is much different. That is why we produce so few men worthy of preservation into the next life in an exalted state.

Joseph Smith succeeded in receiving his calling and election. His promise of eternal life appears within Section 132. That is no accident. If the revelation is a series of communications, beginning in either 1829 or 1831, and continue through nearly the time of the recording in 1843, all of which are on the same subject, then they are all interrelated.

Joseph's sealing authority is confirmed in verse 46 and his calling and election is confirmed in verse 49. This would have been after Joseph had received the beginning of Section 132 and had actually begun to live it. Meaning that Joseph was doing what he was commanded to do, and that in so doing he was sacrificing everything. Even his own life was being sacrificed. He was developing the faith necessary to know he would surrender everything to God by this principle. Later, when he would go to Carthage and die, it was not as difficult for him to do because he had earlier lived a principle which proved to him that he would obey God at all costs. Death under such circumstances was not a test, merely a confirmation of what Joseph already knew.

Plural marriage was so difficult for Joseph that it was THE means by which he advanced in faith to the point he knew he would surrender all things to God. It was the key to his exaltation. Not because plural wives are needed, but because of the difficult sacrifice this practice imposed upon him.

Now if that were true for Joseph, then we should not think the practice of plural marriage, with all its difficulty and sacrifice, something desirable to undertake. Nor should we be fooled into thinking that Joseph wanted or welcomed it. The revelation belies this notion.

Therefore I take it as a given that plural marriage was introduced as a test. Not as a reward or as a holiday for Joseph Smith and his close associates. It was a difficult, trying ordeal.

Now there's more to be said, so I'll add another post at some point on this as well.

APRIL 8, 2010

D&C 132, Part 4

More on Section 132:

This brings us to some details that need to be understood. The clarifications in verses 41–44 were a result of the “mechanics” of how the practice was implemented. The various efforts to “fulfill the law” while still keeping up Elizabethan appearances included performing a “sealing” for time and eternity to one man, while the woman was married for time to another man. This relieved the eternal husband/companion of any duty to have conjugal relations with, or provide financial support for the woman while here. It allowed her to live a “normal” married life with her husband, while still committed eternally to another. A sort of nod in the direction of the plural wife revelation, without any real commitment to actually practice it here. There were other forms of compromise attempted, as well.

The defining of what was and what was not “adultery” was necessary in light of the troubles on the ground, so to speak. Confusion began to multiply as these compromise efforts were attempted by people who really didn’t want to get this thing going in the way David and Solomon had done.

Also, verse 51 grew out of a specific incident in which Joseph and Emma were arguing. She protested his secret addition of more wives (beyond those she had approved) and was complaining to him about it. In response to the arguments, Joseph offered to have her marry William Marks (the Nauvoo Stake President) as well. This is what is referred to by the oblique reference: “that she stay herself and partake not of that which I commanded you to offer unto her.” This, again, was an event in the 1843 time frame. It could not possibly have been part of what was happening in either 1829 or 1831 when the first part of the revelation was received. Showing once again this was an amalgamation of several revelations, and not a single transcript.

Not everyone in Nauvoo knew what was going on. Nor was everyone who practiced this principle discrete enough to escape notice. Enter John C. Bennett, who had abandoned his wife and children and come to Nauvoo pretending to be something more than he was. He got added to the First Presidency and elected mayor of Nauvoo. He learned of the commandment, and then began to let his libido go in Nauvoo. He produced a system of seducing other men’s wives under the practice of “spiritual wifery” which he would later blame upon Joseph Smith. Indeed, John Bennett’s account of Joseph’s exploits seem more autobiographical of Mr. Bennett, with Joseph given credit for Bennett’s wrongdoings.

As I said before, this was not a culture into which this commandment fit neatly. It was awkward. They just didn't know how to do it, nor what would work or not work. Even so basic a matter as the definition of "adultery" became hard to sort out. The half-way measures Joseph tried to implement in order to avoid the outright practice were not working. They were producing such confusion that these verses were needed to sort the mess out.

Trying the souls of those who were involved, indeed! Proving whether you have faith to sacrifice everything for God, indeed! This was terrible, difficult stuff. Not the license for a libido that critics were trying and still try to make it seem. Even Bushman has mentioned how few offspring Joseph Smith produced as a result of the plural wife system. It seems that the only offspring Joseph ever fathered were through Emma. (Of course we have the tale of Eliza Snow's miscarriage, but that child did not live. So far as has been documented, all Joseph's living descendants came through Emma, despite DNA testing of other living descendants from putative children.)

Look, we should have compassion and empathy for these people. They didn't want it any more than a normal, mature and moral person living today would want this. They were draftees, not volunteers. It was quite hard for them and even harder on them.

Anyway, I still am not to the answer to the question, just laying the groundwork to understand the answer first. I'll write some more on this as I have time.

APRIL 9, 2010

D&C 132, Part 5

Section 132, continued.

Words have unique meanings when used in scripture. The Lord has given us great insight into word usages in D&C Section 19:4–12. He uses words as proper nouns which then change meanings.

Part of the question raised concerns the word “destroy” as used in Section 132. I have described the meaning of destroy or destruction in footnote 225 on page 161 of Nephi’s Isaiah. It does not mean annihilate. It means to divest of government or control. In the context of Section 132 to be “destroyed” does not mean to be killed, or obliterated, but rather it means to lose your order, your government or covenant. The form of government that will endure into eternity is the family. Without a family connection, you remain separate and single, without exaltation. Therefore to be “destroyed” is to be severed from the family unit, or marriage relationship which the section of the D&C is establishing.

It is also necessary to understand that the role of the woman in the establishment of an eternal family unit is critical. It is central. Some of what is involved in understanding the relationship between the man/woman and covenant making is just not appropriate to be set out in public. Therefore I won’t do it. To the extent it is appropriate, I have given a basis for someone who wants to understand in several things I have written. The closing chapters on sealing authority/power in Beloved Enos is part of what should be understood. The tenth parable in Ten Parables is also critical to understanding what and why an eternal relationship would be preserved. The chapter on Sacred Ordinances in Come, Let Us Adore Him gives some further information. I’d commend you to that information.

I also found this in Hugh Nibley's latest book, which helps with understanding, also. Particularly in light of the information contained in the tenth parable referred to above:

Sarah, like Isis, is the ageless mother and perennial bride; with the birth of Isaac she becomes young again — 'Is any thing too hard for the Lord?' (Gen. 18:14). The woman who stands behind Osiris on the throne is Isis, sustaining him in his office with uplifted hand; it is Isis, 'fused' with Hathor as the 'king-maker,' as Jan Assmann puts it. (One Eternal Round - The Collected Works of Hugh Nibley, p. 156)

"Neither is the man without the woman, nor the woman without the man, in the Lord," wrote Paul (1 Cor. 11:11). You cannot have an eternal marriage without both. In the relationship, the woman's role in creating a king is central, for it is the woman who will establish him on his throne. In turn, it is the man who will then establish her on her throne. Her act precedes his, and his act confirms and blesses the new government or family unit as his first act as king. For king without consort is doomed to end. Together they are infinite, because in them the seed continues. They may still be mortal as the events take place, but because they continue and produce seed, they are as infinite as the gods.

The role or importance of the woman in the eternal family unit is not diminished in any respect by the confusion and sorting out being done in the later verses of Section 132. The information there is attempting to restore order to the chaos that had developed through the half-hearted attempts to comply with the new order without actually engaging in a fully public, acknowledged marital relationship involving a man and multiple wives.

As to the reference to serial marriage of “virgins” in the later verses, this was a return to the original intent. When you marry a virgin, you are getting someone who does not already have a spouse. Using innovations, like sealing a second “wife” to a man when she was already married to another, was never the intent. These verses about marrying virgins returns to the foundation of a first marriage for the woman. She was to be involved with a direct, actual marriage, not to be in some half-hearted compromise relationship where the relationship was not truly and fully a marriage for her. She was to acquire a husband and mate. She would have all the rights and the husband would owe all the obligations, as if he were married to her alone. She was “his” and therefore he was obligated to her for support, maintenance and duties as a husband. There could be no sharing. There could be no half-way measures. This was to be his wife in very deed.

Now I’ve taken perhaps too long to answer the question, and it may in turn raise other questions, but I’ve tried to bring some clarity to this rather confused and messy circumstance. It was the confusion of the early practice that brought about the need for multiple updates and clarifications which all got amalgamated into the single Section 132. Part of the revelation comes from the attempts to work around the earliest portions of the revelation, received between 1829 and 1831. The clarifications don’t make as much sense when separated from the conduct that resulted in the clarifications.

There is a reason we don’t have much from the church about this section. Right now the whole thing has become an embarrassment. We (the LDS Church) have become the chief antagonists of the polygamists in the west. We want to clearly draw a line between “us” and “them.” The church learned its lesson by hard experience.

Now the lesson learned is going to be constantly reapplied to show all the world that we have abandoned the practice. We do that by constantly denouncing the polygamists. As part of that campaign we can't really go back and give Section 132 a wholesome treatment. That would seem to contradict what we now preach and practice. Such are the results of history.

APRIL 9, 2010

D&C 132, Conclusion

Section 132, concluded:

Which brings us to the question of why Section 132 would be given in the first place. I don't think it is enough to say "Joseph asked the question" as the full reason for it being revealed. Joseph could have received the revelation without the requirement to live it. We could have an understanding that this was a correct principle, but that we had no obligation to comply with it (just as we do now). However, we were at one time given it and, commanded to live it. So the question is "why?" Here's my take:

We are witnessing the end of the times of the Gentiles. There is a worldwide collapse of the Gentile populations. (Gentiles being the white, European populations.) Although we have scattered Israelite blood in us, the LDS Church was founded by those who are "identified with the Gentiles" (D&C 109:60). But their (our) time has run its course.

The God of this land (North America) is Jesus Christ. When people reject Him, they lose their claim on the land and are swept away (See 2 Ne. 1:7-10).

We have now, by the popular vote of the Gentiles who possess this land, chosen a leader who proclaimed on April 6th, 2009 (the Lord's birth date) that "we are no longer a Christian nation.

Birth rates among Gentiles have collapsed. The European social democracies require a large working class to support the retiring older class. The older retiring class did not have a birth rate that would supply the needed taxpayers, and therefore they are importing a younger working class throughout Europe. The younger working class is drawn from third- world people who have much higher birth rates. Those people are primarily Muslim. As a result there are many European nations whose demographic picture leads to the inevitable change from Gentile/Christian nations to Muslim nations within the next twenty to fifty years. The Danish peoples will be among the first. France has a majority of their school-age children now who are Muslim. All of them are threatened by a religion that rejects Jesus Christ as the Son of God and Redeemer of mankind. They are, in a word, anti-Christ.

In the US the birth rate is only a replacement rate. But social programs require growth. That population growth is the only way to amortize the governmental spending. Increased government spending requires in turn a surge in population to support by taxation the necessary payments. This is being accomplished by the deliberate failure to police the immigration of foreign populations. It is a fiscal plan, not a demographic, social, religious or political plan. The government will not be able to pay for itself if large working-class people aren't found and brought into the US. Fortunately, most of those who are coming to the US are already Christian, and only a small fraction are Muslim. However, the Gentiles who are identified with the white population are declining, and being displaced by those who are identified with Book of Mormon remnant populations (although perhaps not THE remnant destined to build Zion — that's a whole different subject).

The church's birth rate has also declined rapidly. At present it is only a small fraction above the larger US rate. There result is the same loss of Gentile momentum in the building of the church. The Gentile population of the church is collapsing just as it is throughout the world.

What the revelation in Section 132 offered to the Gentiles was an opportunity, while the Gentile's day was still in full bloom, to create a much larger population from which to build Zion. I've seen some estimates that, had we lived the principle of plural wives from when it was restored until today the resulting population of Latter-day Saints would have been in excess of 150 million. The Latter-day Saint population would essentially have political control of the United States. That didn't happen, and now the time of the Gentiles has passed. We can't make up for lost time now. Nor are we exhibiting any desire to do so, as our declining birthrates demonstrate. Indeed, large families have vanished as a subject for General Conference. The Brethren seem to have forgotten the message once preached to "not artificially limit the size of your families." That message was spoken in General Conference as recently as President Kimball's time. Their examples are also important and telling. (Taking only the most recently called of the Twelve: Elder Bednar has three children, President Uchtdorf two. President Eyring has six. Elder Anderson has four, Elder Christopherson has five children. Now we don't always know the reasons why people have the number or children they do, so I do not read too much into this. However, there was a time when the reason all did not have six or more children would get attention, and an explanation would be offered. Now we don't even notice and it is simply not an issue. We presume that larger families are optional and completely unrelated to living the Gospel of Jesus Christ.)

Well, as with all things in the Gospel, we are handed opportunities. What we do with them is up to us. However, these opportunities are gifts from the Lord. We are now a tiny fragment of what we might have been at this point in history. We are vulnerable as a people in a way that we could have avoided with living the principles in Section 132. The results are going to play out in conformity with the rather pessimistic view of the Gentile's failed stewardship foretold by Nephi, Mormon, Moroni and modern revelation.

There's always a back up plan. That plan will rely upon a "remnant" to take things over and return to what was once offered to the Gentiles. And to the extent that a few Gentiles will follow the covenant, they are invited along and included as covenant people. But by and large they will be left behind.

Now Section 132 was an opportunity, not a burden. We never got enthusiastically behind the opportunity and the earlier posts explain why. I think the reasons for the failure are perfectly understandable. I think it was reasonable. But it is a fact that we failed with the opportunity. Worldwide we have a little less than 4 million active Latter-day Saints and an estimated total population of approximately 14 million. Those results are not what might have been. The Gentile Saints are vulnerable in a way they would have avoided had they taken the opportunity and done more with it.

But of course, that is true in a much larger sense, as well. The promise of an "innumerable posterity" presumes that the one receiving the promise realizes that it is a great blessing, and not a curse or burden.

OK, those are my thoughts. It's taken a bit to lay out. And I probably should add that there are those who would disagree with much of what I have said. However, I've given enough thought and study to the matter to have reached these conclusions, and I offer them to you for whatever you want to make of them.

COMMENTS:

Kisi · APRIL 9, 2010 AT 8:18 PM

Thank you so much, Denver. What you have written and offered to us to understand is enormous. I'm in shock after having read the last post here with the realization that it brings about how we have failed. Everything you have said truly fits the scriptures and the picture. It makes me terribly sad, though. It's important for me to see this picture and let the realization sink in. I believe we need this realization in order to move forward doing with all seriousness what needs to be done in order to be numbered with the remnant that is going to pick up the ball we've dropped.

I think about how we as a people believe that we have succeeded and are those carrying forth the glorious success of the final Dispensation that won't fail. The Dispensation won't fail, but we as the Gentiles with the Gospel for the most part have.

Denver Snuffer · April 9, 2010 at 8:51 PM

I'll have to write something about the two different models of building Zion we see in the scriptures restored through Joseph Smith. We once had two different options. It rather looks like we've made the choice between them and are now left with only one. Part of the choice we've made has to do with Section 132 and our response to plural marriage relationships. Oh well, chin up! The covenant-keeping Gentiles are invited along for the ride still!

Taylor · APRIL 10, 2010 AT 1:29 AM

Thank you for the time spent with the section 132 posts. I think all who have read have learned a lot.

You said those populations now increasing in the United States more resemble the remnants of the book of mormon population but are not THE remnants destined to build Zion. Who are those destined to build it then?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 10, 2010 AT 7:05 AM

That's a whole different subject. I'll probably address it at some point. It would take longer than this stuff on Section 132 to make it really clear. So I have to figure out what to say and what to leave out.

Anonymous · APRIL 12, 2010 AT 4:41 PM

What the revelation in Section 132 offered to the Gentiles was an opportunity, while the Gentile's day was still in full bloom, to create a much larger population from which to build Zion. I've seen some estimates that, had we lived the principle of plural wives from when it was restored until today the resulting population of Latter-day Saints would have been in excess of 150 million. The Latter-day Saint population would essentially have political control of the United States.

I have heard this before but I don't understand it. How can 10 women with 1 husband produce any more children than 10 women with 10 husbands?

Tim

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 12, 2010 AT 9:41 PM

There have always been "excess" female members of the Church during childbearing years who lacked husbands. Men die in higher numbers from childbirth through adulthood. Go to any care center where the elderly are being assisted and you will find an imbalance there. It begins in childhood.

The number of female Church members who lack active, faithful LDS husbands is a continuing problem in the Church. So great a problem that the Church has tried to figure out why in Japan it is reversed. There the male population of active LDS participants are higher in the great exception to the rule.

This issue was so pronounced that a few years ago Sheri Dew was added to the Relief Society General Presidency in part to symbolize the fact that single, unmarried LDS women have a home in the Church and belong as members despite their marital status. Her presence was a great encouragement to many, many sisters.

To use your example, if you have 10 women and only 2 active LDS men from which to choose, then 8 will either not marry, or marry outside the Church. If they marry outside the Church, the odds of their children remaining active LDS diminishes considerably. Over generations the attrition rate becomes predominate. Further, you don't always have 10 men for 10 women due to the disparity in mortality rates. Of course, mortality rates become irrelevant if one active LDS male can have more than one spouse.

The declining LDS fertility rates are so significant at this point that we are barely above replacement numbers. The trend is toward reproducing (like the larger European populations) at a rate below replacement.

Over time the LDS community will take on a whole different look; with the dominate face of the Church's population being Hispanic. That is the result of population trends and fertility rates.

CHAPTER 8

Grow Where You Are Planted

APRIL 10, 2010

Outgrowing the Church

I was told by someone that they “had outgrown the church, didn’t get anything out of meetings, and therefore did not attend anymore.”

I responded: “As to your ‘growth,’ that may or may not be true. However, even if it is true, then the church needs you all the more for what you have to offer. Continuing service inside the church will always take a person to still greater peace and light.”

What I did not say is that whenever one assumes their own spiritual or intellectual superiority to others, they have lost light and become a fool. Spiritual development here distinguishes the best from the worst by so little that God regards us all as equal. What this world views as intellectual achievement is more often than not a hindrance to finding and following God.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · APRIL 11, 2010 AT 6:01 PM

Why would the service have to be “inside the church”? If greater peace and light are the goals, then isn’t it entirely possible that one person may find greater peace and light through service rendered and given “outside of the church,” and may indeed be inspired and directed to minister outside of the confines of an institution?

I’m not questioning your premise, as I think that’s a general rule of thumb that I’d agree with. But, it would appear that service to our fellowmen/fellowwomen is the goal, and I’d think that that service could be as useful outside as inside in certain cases.

Then again, if we’re serving merely to aggrandize ourselves into believing we’re worthy of “greater peace and light” (whether inside or outside of the church), then I think we’re missing the boat entirely.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 12, 2010 AT 8:28 AM

First, service inside the Church is part of a covenant made at baptism to bear one another’s burdens, mourn with those who mourn, etc (Mosiah 18:8–10). Second, because service rendered inside the Church directly affects those who are trying to become a part of Zion; a challenge much greater than faced by those unaware of the need to construct Zion. Third, because your own testimony is affected by those within the Church whom you serve and help.

Despite this, service anywhere is noble, good and worthwhile. And personal reward cannot be the end. It, like so many other things given by God, must only be a byproduct. Once it becomes the end it is vanity and will not work. Our hearts must actually change. We need to really love others. Not in a feigned or pretended way, but really to hold love for others. We tend to love those whom we serve and to care most for those we sacrifice the most to help.

APRIL 10, 2010

Creation Accounts

All ancient accounts of the creation of life here came through a presentation intended either as an initiation or an ordinance. The various accounts we have are also from such settings. Genesis is the ritual account given through Moses. The words “God said” should better be rendered “the Gods shall say” (meaning that this is telling the players what to do). Similarly, the Abraham account saying that one “like unto the Son” or “like unto God” is describing the player’s role. It is a dramatic presentation.

There is no need to read into any of the various texts something which isn’t there. Hence the earlier post dealing with the creation accounts and how Eve was left out of the original statement of the commandment regarding the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The account sets it out with the commandment coming before Eve’s creation in all but the current Endowment presentation. Our version has been changed from time to time to accomplish various efficiencies as we have adopted filming, and other innovations to make the Endowment fit within new formats and time constraints.

APRIL 10, 2010

Holy Ghost

The equivalents made in Moses 6:61 are very interesting. The definition of the Holy Ghost includes these various equivalent descriptions of the Holy Ghost:

The record of heaven.

The peaceable things of immortal glory.

the truth of all things.

That which quickeneth all things.

That which maketh alive all things.

That which knoweth all things.

That which hath all power according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice and judgment.

These seven equivalents are the Holy Ghost. It is this which “dwelleth in you” (D&C 130:22). Seven being the number of perfection. The Holy Ghost being the Third Member of the Godhead. And, of course, we hope to join them in exaltation.

Finally, Christ promised the Holy Ghost would “teach you all things” and “bring all things to our remembrance” (John 14:26).

Christ truly said: “The Kingdom of Heaven is within you” (Luke 17:21). That is, of course, so long as you have taken the step of “receiving the Holy Ghost.” You were admonished to do that by someone with authority at your baptism. The power of doing so (as President Packer pointed out in General Conference last Saturday) is entirely left to you.

APRIL 11, 2010

That Was Funny

I was driving my daughter home from baseball practice and the car in front of us began driving erratically. It slowed down. Then wandered from side to side. The driver was clearly distracted and we could see him looking down at the seat next to him and fiddling around with something.

My daughter said: “What’s he doing?”

I replied, “He spilled his Coke and is trying to put it out with a fire.”

She thought about it for a minute then laughed long and hard. Funny what can strike your kid’s sense of humor. I take it as a sign of intelligence when word play can amuse.

APRIL 11, 2010

Why Not the Cross?

I was asked about the cross as a religious symbol and why I thought it inappropriate. Here’s my response:

When Christ described what He accomplished for us in His Atonement, He referred exclusively to the suffering in Gethsemane (D&C 19:15–19). Therefore, in the Lord’s own explanation, He used the suffering of Gethsemane exclusively to let us know the price He paid.

I know that among others, James Talmage and Bruce R. McConkie, have said that the suffering in Gethsemane was renewed on the cross. I have a different view, and I explain that in Come, Let Us Adore Him. I will not repeat that here. I expect that since this is my personal view, there will be many who do not share it with me. However, it is my view that the cross was the means of death; and His death became possible by what He went through in Gethsemane. Had He not been weakened through the ordeal in Gethsemane, He could not have died on the cross. But when He arrived at the cross, all that was left to accomplish was His death, while fulfilling the inspired, prophetic foretelling of the event in conformity with the 22nd Psalm.

The original Saints who belonged to the Primitive Church (New Testament Church) regarded the great symbol of Christ as the fish. That symbol was used in the first centuries following Christ. It was supplanted by Constantine. Constantine adopted the cross as a symbol for the new, Roman state religion which changed the Primitive Church into the new, Historic Christianity. It would undergo a name change to the Catholic Church (meaning Universal Church), then the Roman Catholic Church as it was entrenched as the state religion of the Roman Empire. It has also been referred to as the Holy Roman Empire. All those names are suitably descriptive. The adoption of the cross as a religious symbol for this new Historic Christianity, supplanting the earlier fish symbol, is one of the reasons I think it not appropriate. It symbolizes the change of Primitive Christianity into a new religious form significantly different from what it was when it began.

The cross symbolizes the newer form of the faith, which adopted many of the earlier Roman state myths and simply gave Christian names and references to them. The celebration of Sol Invictus mid-winter became the celebration of Christmas. Spring fertility rites, including use of the egg and rabbit symbols of fertility were converted into a “Christian” holiday of Easter. Local deities no longer hailed from Olympus, but semi-deified “Saints” could be prayed to just as the earlier veneration of local deities. The full panoply of changes would require books to explain, but for me these changes are symbolized by the adoption of the cross as the great symbol of the new Historic Christian movement. Hence the reason I think it inappropriate as a symbol for a restoration of Primitive Christianity.

APRIL 12, 2010

Fast and Testimony

In our ward yesterday we heard testimonies from ward members who rarely speak. It was delightful. One of the best testimony meetings I can recall. One fellow who spoke was so moved by what he was telling us that he had to choke back tears. His elderly mother has Alzheimer’s disease and he could not be certain what was getting through to her. She responded to him touching her hand, rubbing her back, and whispering to her during his last visit. His comments focused on charity toward others, and the great example he pointed to was the group responsible for caring for the people at the facility where his mother was located.

They were primarily Hispanic. They labored with smiles on their faces and showed such genuine care for the people that he had to thank someone as part of his last visit. He spoke with a woman working there, and thanked her and the whole staff through her for the kindness, charity and love they show while providing care for the people they serve. The woman was grateful for his comments. His whole testimony was about charity and caring for others. It was quite moving, and a reminder again of how many opportunities there are to provide service to others.

Another fellow spoke about his baptism, long ago in the South. He was baptized in a “muddy stream” when he was young, and he can remember how cold it was on that day. It was the first time my children had heard him speak, although we have been in the same ward for nearly two decades. They all were surprised he had a southern accent. And they all said they now “really loved the guy” because of what he said and how he said it. Before they hardly noticed him because he was so very quiet.

What a wonderful thing a ward family is. There hasn't been a ward I've attended that hasn't been quirky, diverse, interesting and at times trying. It's a good thing we are divided by area and cannot choose where to attend. We have no choice but to associate with a diverse lot of people. I think that is healthy.

APRIL 12, 2010

Current State of Things

I was asked why I do not sound the alarm about the current state of society more often. My view is that fixing problems on a large scale is not helpful. The fix should occur at the individual level. We fix the whole of society with individual conversions, not by better legislation. I do have a view about the state of the world at present. It comes from Moroni, and other modern revelations. I might as well lay out that view, briefly:

Satan does not create. He cannot. He only destroys what others create.

Since life itself is sacred, and he cannot create life, he shows his “great power” by taking life. This is the reason he taught murder to Cain, because if life is among the greatest of gifts from God, Satan’s secret work of murder attacks the power of creation (See Moses 5:29–32).

If you want to know where Satan’s great work is prospering anytime in history, look for those groups who organize to kill others. Those who preach hate, lead to violence, lead to murder and ultimately mass killing. These are the ones who do not create, nor do they respect the great gift of creation given by God to mankind. These are they who are overcome by the devil, who love a lie, who make war with God and will ultimately succeed in completely rejecting what He has offered to them (See D&C 76:28–37).

“Destroyer” is one of Satan’s names (See D&C 61:19).

Murder of the innocent is one of the unpardonable sins (See D&C 132:19). It is so offensive because it undoes the great gift of life given by God. It is a direct challenge to God’s authority. He alone holds the keys of life and death. Killing directly invades God’s authority.

We live at a time when there are organized efforts to form groups for the sole purpose of killing others. This behavior is so directly analogous to the Gadianton conspiracy within the Book of Mormon that the lessons there should serve as notice to us. Moroni interrupted his translation of the Book of Ether to give us this warning:

Ether 8:20–26

²⁰And now I, Moroni, do not write the manner of their oaths and combinations, for it hath been made known unto me that they are had among all people, and they are had among the Lamanites.

²¹ And they have caused the destruction of this people of whom I am now speaking, and also the destruction of the people of Nephi.

²² And whatsoever nation shall uphold such secret combinations, to get power and gain, until they shall spread over the nation, behold, they shall be destroyed; for the Lord will not suffer that the blood of his saints, which shall be shed by them, shall always cry unto him from the ground for vengeance upon them and yet he avenge them not.

²³ Wherefore, O ye Gentiles, it is wisdom in God that these things should be shown unto you, that thereby ye may repent of your sins, and suffer not that these murderous combinations shall get above you, which are built up to get power and gain—and the work, yea, even the work of destruction come upon you, yea, even the sword of the justice of the Eternal God shall fall upon you, to your overthrow and destruction if ye shall suffer these things to be.

²⁴ Wherefore, the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you; or wo be unto it, because of the blood of them who have been slain; for they cry from the dust for vengeance upon it, and also upon those who built it up.

²⁵ For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries; and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies; even that same liar who beguiled our first parents, yea, even that same liar who hath caused man to commit murder from the beginning; who hath hardened the hearts of men that they have murdered the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out from the beginning.

²⁶ Wherefore, I, Moroni, am commanded to write these things that evil may be done away, and that the time may come that Satan may have no power upon the hearts of the children of men, but that they may be persuaded to do good continually, that they may come unto the fountain of all righteousness and be saved.

Having said the foregoing, let me add that I do not think knowing our awful circumstance does a thing to fix it. What fixes it is to have more people come to the Lord, develop love for their fellow man, and live the commandments given by Him. That is something done one person at a time. I despair when I think in larger numbers than the individual. I rejoice when I think of the single person. For anything is possible with each person, no matter what their circumstances.

APRIL 12, 2010

Follow Christ In All Things

I was asked:

Nephi invites us to follow Christ in all the ordinances starting with baptism. The endowment clearly requires us to follow Adam in seeking more light and truth, receiving ordinances and making covenants. Finally, when we arrive in the sealing room we seek to follow and obtain the blessings of Abraham Isaac and Jacob. Ultimately we follow Christ in all things, but I wondered if you could comment on this.

My response:

Nephi followed Christ. Adam followed Christ. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob followed Christ. We get examples from sacred writings (and ordinances) which incorporate reference to earlier disciples of Christ, but always in the context of showing the need to follow Christ.

There is no jealousy about using a man who followed Christ as an example to follow. One of the reasons the Melchizedek Priesthood is named after a man rather than retaining the original “Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God” was to prevent the frequent repetition of the Son of God name (See D&C 107:2–4). This was respectful of the Son of God, while using the man Melchizedek as the example for using the authority which comes from the Son of God.

However, the one we follow is Christ and we follow His Gospel. When we decide to follow only a disciple of His, even if it is a true disciple, we miss the mark and fall to a Telestial state and are no better than the liars and thieves (See D&C 76:98–104). So even when it is a man whose example we list or refer to, it is only to the extent that the man illustrates the correct manner to follow the Son of God.

The God of the Telestial Kingdom (in which we are presently situated) is the Holy Ghost. The God of the Terrestrial Kingdom (which the Millennium will reflect) is Jesus Christ. The God of the Celestial Kingdom is God the Father (See D&C Section 76). The Holy Ghost brings us to Christ. Christ brings us to the Father. The Father extends the promise of exaltation by making you a son or daughter of God.

The plan of redemption brings us from our current, fallen state back to a state of awareness of our condition, and then by cleansing us, elevates us in light and truth. The primary God with whom we deal here is the Holy Ghost. However, the association with Christ is promised by Him in Chapter 14 of John. Joseph Smith explained that when the promise given by Christ in that chapter of John is realized, then the Father and Son will visit with the person from time to time. He also clarified that the visit referred to is actual, not just something “in the heart” of a believer (D&C 130:3).

Abraham is the example used in the sealing ordinance because Abraham’s covenant with the Lord is the prototype of what the Lord promises all those who follow Him. Those promises include eternal increase (posterity), land (inheritance) and eternal life.

APRIL 13, 2010

Missionary in Kenya

There’s a family I home teach whose son is on a mission in Kenya. They ride a motorcycle to teach outlying areas. Three at a time on the bike through the rain and on muddy roads. They are in a city of 75,000 and not a road is paved in the entire city. Sort of like Sandy, Utah right now. Comparable size and dirt roads everywhere while they do their “stimulus” spending on roadways.

They baptized four new converts last week. My young elder (he’s mine because I still home teach him over the internet) did two of the baptisms. It was quite a milestone in his young life.

The pictures are quite interesting. Here’s this 6 foot white, smiling kid standing with a crowd of shorter, very dark faces all with the look of joy and kinship on their countenances. He’s sort of a spectacle to the people there. Not only his height, but his light skin and blonde hair. Kids ask if they can touch him (and he lets them).

What an adventure this young man is on. What fun it is to share it by reading his emails sent back home. It reminds me of just how small the world is after all. I guess Disney got that right...

CHAPTER 9

Humor Requires Underlying Truth

APRIL 13, 2010

THE Remnant

The subject of THE “remnant” is too great to undertake in a post here. I’ve attended meetings lasting two days in which the subject was the sole matter being discussed. I’ve had discussions, read a manuscript, exchanged emails and spent years on this subject with people who know more about the details than do I. Therefore my conclusion is that it exceeds the parameters of this venue.

Identification of the “remnant” was critical to Joseph Smith. Although we’ve discarded the issue, it was of central concern to the early Brethren. So much so that the “remnant” was what drove the movement westward near the “borders of the Lamanites” The first missionaries were sent to the “Lamanites” as part of the Restoration’s concern with the promised “remnant” of the Book of Mormon people (See D&C 32:2). The Saints were required to move west to be near these people as part of locating Zion (D&C 54:8).

The Book of Mormon is filled with promises addressed to the “remnant” of those people. Modern revelation promises they will blossom as a rose (D&C 49:24).

The first Temple built in the west after the exodus was in St. George to be near the suspected “remnant” to be reclaimed. The first company in that Temple’s first session included a Chief from the Hopi tribe. Brother Nibley was partial to the Hopi as the “remnant” or at least a part of the “remnant” and he wrote a good deal about them.

This is an important subject. Worthy of study. But it is too great a subject for treatment in a limited venue like this. To do it justice would require this forum to become devoted to that subject for many days. By the time it was finished, I doubt anyone would still be reading. So I’ll just reaffirm the subject is important, and there are many passages in the Book of Mormon dealing with the “remnant” of the Book of Mormon people. Promises extended to them have not yet been fulfilled. But all those promises will be fulfilled. As they are, the role of those people will change from what we see it today into something much more central to the Church.

APRIL 13, 2010

The Individual and Truth

There are two propositions I believe have the potential for defining our lives here in mortality.

First, the importance of the individual.

I really do believe in the importance, centrality and power of the individual. What happens everywhere in the world begins with interpersonal relationships and the individual. More can be done, and is done to change the course of history by the actions of individuals than anything else.

There’s that old saying that when God wants to change the world, He sends a baby. Whether that baby is Buddha, or Gandhi, or Abraham Lincoln, or Henry Ford, or Thomas Beckett, or Jesus, the world changes when babies enter mortality. All lives matter. No one matters more than another in my view. The accumulation of lives well lived is the stuff of history. How many unnamed artisans were required to build the Parthenon?

Our day is the great day of the individual. Now your thoughts can be sent by electronic means anywhere in the world. Your audience can include every living person who has a connection to the internet. I think there is a purpose there.

You matter. All of us do. Good ideas can now spread on eagle's wings, so to speak. A spark kindled today can light the whole world.

Second, the primacy of good.

I believe truth will triumph. To be here on the earth required an initial "screening," which was conducted before the people who are born here were permitted to come. All those who live here came from a shared God and Father of us all. Therefore, we have something in common.

Truth is recognizable. It must be fought to be suppressed. Although some will wage that fight and succeed in blighting their sense of the truth and light, the overwhelming majority will not. The "light of Christ" given to all mankind as a commonly shared inheritance persists here.

The result is that truth will win. In free exchanges of ideas, it will be truth that will ultimately triumph. I believe the truth will win even if it is only spoken as a whisper in a hurricane of opposition. It will win.

It is unnecessary for truth to come from authorized sources. It is irrelevant for it to be opposed by authorized sources. It will always triumph. Crush it, burn it, send it into the wilderness and crucify those who believe it - it will triumph.

APRIL 14, 2010

Record Keeping

Joseph touches on a principle in his letter on September 6, 1842 that is quite important. It relates to keeping record and the day of judgment.

After quoting Revelation 20:12, Joseph explains there are two kinds of records kept. One is on earth, recording what men have done here. The other is kept in heaven. The one agreeing with the other (D&C 128:7). He goes on to explain how these two records are related.

What is recorded on earth is recorded in heaven. What is not recorded in earth “shall not be recorded in heaven” (D&C 128:8).

This principle was extended by President Spencer W. Kimball in a talk he gave in October, 1975 while President of the Church. His comments included this:

*Get a notebook, my young folks, a journal that will last through all time, and maybe the angels may quote from it for eternity. Begin today and write in it your goings and comings, your deepest thoughts, your achievements, and your failures, your associations and your triumphs, your impressions and your testimonies. Remember, the Savior chastised those who failed to record important events. (Originally printed in October, 1975 New Era; reprinted in New Era, Feb 2003, at page 32)*

Why would angels quote from your personal journal? It would be based on the same principle given by Joseph Smith in Section 128. Recording here those sacred events which happen in your life is necessary for the same events to be recorded in heaven. The personal records of disciples of Christ have become scripture, but they began as a personal journal. Nephi’s record was his journal.

Alma's, Abraham's, Enoch's and many others were also. Section 128 is a letter. Most of the New Testament consists of letters. These were written to or for family members or friends.

Do not underestimate the significance of what you record on earth in your own records. If you record sacred events, written under the influence of the Holy Ghost, angels may not only quote from it (as Pres. Kimball suggested), but they may regard it as scripture itself.

APRIL 14, 2010

My Calculations

I was asked about the numbers in activity used in an earlier post. (Sorry no link, the moderator can't remember which one) That calculation was one I made based on the statistics we were given by the Mission President on our area.

By way of background, I did a two year stint as the Ward Mission Leader, followed by five years on the High Council over missionary work in my stake. During the last two years on the High Council we would meet quarterly with the mission presidency. During those meetings we would be updated on the numbers throughout the mission and the church. The numbers worked out to approximately 37% activity rate church-wide. HOWEVER, the definition of "active" included anyone who attended a single sacrament meeting during a quarter. This had the effect of inflating the number by all those who attended during Easter and Christmas (because they all became instantly "active" during two quarters of the year). They also were affected by the count of sacrament meeting attendees who came for missionary farewells and missionary homecomings.

I did a count of my own to try and come up with a "distortion" number to attempt to calculate who was really carrying the load as an average. I couldn't get a consistent result using my own ward to allow for Easter/Christmas and missionary farewell/homecoming additions. But it appeared to me the distortion was somewhere between as little as 5% and as much as 10%. I took a mid-point between the two and made my overall estimate of 4,000,000 out of the total church membership as those who are really serving regularly, attending regularly, and who are not merely "active" by virtue of quarterly appearances in a sacrament meeting. I hope that serves your purposes.

APRIL 14, 2010

A Parable

A parable—for which I borrow Hindu and Buddhist notions to make it possible to tell.

There was a certain man who feared not God nor regarded his fellow man; who was filled with ungoverned lust and anger. He married, fathered a child, and abused his son daily, for he was without compassion. In the course of his abuse, he injured his son frequently. When the child was a young boy, in a fit of anger, the man killed his son. He was arrested, convicted of the murder, and executed.

Time is known only to man, but not to God, for all things past, present and future are before Him at all times in one eternal "now." God, who is merciful and whose purpose is to improve His children, to bring about their immortality and lead them into eternal life, needed this man to understand within his heart how his acts affect others. For the man regarded not his fellow man and could not feel compassion for his wicked deeds. With God all things are possible, and therefore the man was sent back again to mortality for further instruction.

When he returned, the man was born as the son of a certain man who feared not God nor regarded his fellow man. His father was filled with ungoverned lust and anger. His father abused him daily and in the course of abuse he was frequently injured. One day the father killed him.

When men die they return to God, who gave them life, and so the child, who had once been a wicked man, returned again to God. The Lord asked him upon his return: "Do you now understand?" The man replied,

Yes. I have been both. I have been the victim and I have been the perpetrator. I have been the father and I have been the son. I have released my uncontrolled anger and I have been the victim of it. I remember abusing and I also remember being abused. I see now that when I was ungovernable and unkind it was only myself who I abused. What I have given has returned to me and I have caused my own suffering.

The Lord said, "It is well. Now let these experiences work in you, for without the opportunity to use them to live aright, you are not yet ready."

Having been the wicked father and the abused son, the man returned again to the same time and place to now be a neighbor of the wicked man and the abused son. How, then, ought the neighbor act so as to show he had truly learned?

What we do to another, we only do to ourselves. We will all find in the end that we are indeed our brother's keeper. We are our fathers, and we are our sons, and we ought to be One with each other.

APRIL 15, 2010

Mark Twain

Mark Twain had a greater influence on my childhood development than any other writer. Here are a few of his quotes:

“It ain’t what you don’t know that gets you in trouble. It’s what you know for sure that just ain’t so.”

“Loyalty to petrified opinion never broke a chain or freed a human soul.” “It’s no wonder that truth is stranger than fiction. Fiction has to make sense.”

Benjamin Franklin and Mark Twain gave Americans their sense of humor. Whether you’ve ever read anything written by them or not, they form the underlying basis for our American humor. Deep inside all their wit lies the truth.

APRIL 15, 2010

The Battle is the Lord’s

I had an interesting conversation yesterday. It provoked this comment.

When Julius ended the Republic by crossing the Rubicon with the 13th Legion from Gaul, he established a dictatorship that would change into the Empire thereafter. The Republic was dead. The Empire lived on.

Julius’ great nephew is regarded as the first fully recognized Emperor of the Roman Empire. He ruled until his death in 14 AD as dictator for life.

Rome dominated the world, subduing other peoples who were considered inferior to Romans. They believed it was Rome’s right to rule the world. Roman control was benefiting others. This was the Pax Romana, or peace of Rome. It came at the point of a spear. Such is the peace offered by the leaders of this world.

Among the lands under Roman control was the Judean province in which Jesus Christ was born. The place of His birth was directly affected by Augustus' taxing (Luke 2:1–6). He was a Jewish subject to the vassal king of the Herodian family. His life was lived between two Roman controlled provinces.

Jesus was asked if it was lawful to give tribute to Rome. He responded by asking for a coin, noting Caesar's image on it, and remarking "give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22:17–22).

Jesus never challenged Roman authority. He submitted to it. When the time comes for the establishment of Zion, it will not be necessary for us to deviate from Christ's example. Those who are in the promised latter-day Zion will be protected by "the terror of the Lord." The residents will be those who "will not take up arms against their neighbor" (D&C 45:66–71). There is no need to overthrow the world. It will overthrow itself. The Lord will not permit the wicked to destroy the righteous (1 Ne. 22:16). It is the wicked who destroy the wicked (Mormon 4:5).

We live in a world today in which Pax Americana has established controlled violence the world over. The fear of destruction holds forces at bay which would gladly destroy one another if permitted. The key to replacing the current world order with another one, as many insurgencies the world over recognize, is the destruction of Pax Americana by destroying American hegemony. A lot of people are working on that, both inside and outside the United States.

Latter-day Zion will not need to take up the sword to defend themselves. The Lord will be their shield and protection. Since the wicked are responsible for killing the wicked, you join them when you decide to take up arms. You also exclude yourself from those who are to come to Zion—for that group will be composed only of those who refuse to take up arms against their neighbor (D&C 45:68, above).

Read again how Zion was protected in the days of Enoch (Moses 7:13–17). It wasn't an army or arms which protected them. It was the Lord who dwelt among them.

Our challenge as a people is to live so the Lord can dwell among us. He will “take up His abode” with us as The Second Comforter, if we are prepared to receive Him. This is why I have written what I have written. Zion will be a byproduct of a prepared people. It never has been and never will be the result of a violent, armed, and politically motivated insurrection by people who want to isolate themselves from the world. Such people will only be a part of those who take up arms, and acting as part of the wicked, join in the destruction of the wicked, including themselves.

This does not mean that some righteous will not be required to die. The Lord's ability to protect us will require His hand move in “justice and mercy” to fulfill His promises. Those who die will die unto the Lord. Those who live will live unto the Lord. But the battle is the Lord's.

COMMENTS:

Steve · APRIL 16, 2010 AT 9:21 PM

The Lord said,

Nevertheless, thine enemy is in thine hands; and if thou rewardest him according to his works thou art justified; if he has sought thy life, and thy life is endangered by him, thine enemy is in thine hands and thou art justified. (D&C 98:31)

The Lord does not say you can never be sanctified if you protect your own or your families life by taking your enemies life. You are justified before the Lord and your enemy is in your hands if this is the case. Where does it say if you take your enemies life then you cannot come to Zion? It is true, everyone that will not take up arms against his neighbor will need to flee to Zion for safety, and there will be no need for arms in Zion. I want to know where it says that before you get to Zion, if you protect yourselves by taking another life, you are automatically excluded from Zion.

Denver you say “Since the wicked are responsible for killing the wicked, you join them when you decide to take up arms.” How can you say this given what the Lord says in 98:31? Are you saying the Lord will justify the wicked?

How can we square any of this when Moroni was allowed to put to death people that there only sin was not to take up arms in defense of their freedoms? People were put to death for not taking up arms, and the people that put them to death were not wicked people and I’m sure some even are in the celestial kingdom as we speak.

I read your blog regularly, Denver, but I do not totally agree with your sentiments on this topic.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 17, 2010 AT 7:47 AM

I am not trying to persuade anyone. I’m only stating what I understand and why.

As to your comment, I agree one would be “justified.” There is, of course, a difference between being “justified” and being “sanctified.” I do not seek merely to be justified in defending myself, but to offer sacrifice that I might be sanctified.

Steve · APRIL 17, 2010 AT 2:47 PM

“I am not trying to persuade anyone. I’m only stating what I understand and why.” Understood, but, you are an intelligent person, when you say “you join the wicked when you take up arms”, your “understanding” is totally different than what Christ is actually saying. Obviously Christ does not agree with you. Christ will not justify the wicked, yet he will justify someone who is living his laws who takes up arms to defend themselves. So it follows that anyone that takes up arms will not fall into the ranks of the wicked as you proclaim. Your understanding confuses me since it does not agree with what Christ appears to be saying.

I agree that there is a huge difference between justification and sanctification. But, according to Christ's own words, defending yourself does not appear to disqualify you from becoming sanctified or being a citizen of Zion as you say it does.

Defending yourself is not mutually exclusive to these things according to the scriptures. You cannot assume if it says one thing it also says the other.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 17, 2010 AT 4:31 PM

I have not asserted that "Christ agreed with me." But I would note that Christ never took up arms. His only resort to a physical demonstration was to make a small scourge with a rope to drive out money changers from the Temple. No one was hurt. His display was of righteous indignation, not of physical compulsion. Those who retreated did so from shame, not from risk of physical injury.

He suffered injury, but did not inflict it. He healed injuries and infirmities in others, but never imposed them. He took others' pains upon Himself, but did not cause it.

There is also the example of Alma and Amulek, where women and children were being burned to death and Amulek wanted to end it using the power of God. Alma counseled to the contrary, saying the actions of the wicked would result in them being held accountable for shedding innocent blood. He went on to explain his own and Amulek's death were unimportant, as well (See Alma 14:10–13).

When Joseph surrendered he expected to die. He said he would be killed if he fell into the hands of the mob again before he left Nauvoo. When his friends came to persuade him to return, he said if his life was of no worth to his friends it was of no worth to himself. Then as he departed Nauvoo he said he went as a lamb to the slaughter. He had a legion of warriors; and he asked them to surrender their arms. The small pepperbox handgun he had was given to him in jail, and was no match for 200 men armed with .50 caliber rifles. Discharging it was not intended to repel the mob, but was merely symbolic. When his brother fell dead, Joseph rushed to the window to end the killing by letting them have his blood. It worked, and it saved Bro. Taylor's and Bro. Richards' lives. He laid down his life, and when he could have summoned an army to his defense, he disarmed them instead.

I am content in my views. You needn't share them.

APRIL 16, 2010

Mosiah 18:8–10

I was asked why the language of Mosiah 18:8–10 related to membership in the church, and not to others outside the church. Here's my response.

These verses are talking about entering into a covenant and becoming “the fold of God” (Verse 8). This fold will be “called his people” (Id.). The fold, who have this covenant, and who are called His people, are to be “willing to bear one another's burdens, that they may be light” (Id.). The whole passage is relating to the interrelationship between those who are of the covenant, the fold, and who are God's people as a result of this covenant. These are the duties owed internally to the fold.

It continues to explain that these people should be “willing to mourn with those that mourn” (Verse 9). The word “those” should be read in the context of the covenant, the fold, the people and the obligation arising from within the group.

These verses are church/fold/covenant people related, and govern the obligations which those who come into that fold owe to each other. It arises out of the covenant of baptism (Verse 10).

The obligation owed within the church membership to one another on the one hand does not eliminate other obligations owed to your fellow man. Indeed, it is one of the chief obligations owed to all humanity to cry repentance and bring others into the fold. Christ also extended the obligation to care for others without regard to their status, including in His parable of the good Samaritan. So to say there is one duty owed within the church is not to say there are not other obligations owed to others outside the church.

APRIL 16, 2010

Forward or Backward

I got asked about loss of teachings or practices within the LDS community. My response is as follows.

It makes no difference whether it is an individual or a community, we are all on a single path that goes two ways—forward or backward. We are either gaining, or we are losing. We cannot stand still.

Whether a group or a person, we are either gaining (restoring) light and truth, or we are losing (apostatizing) from light and truth. This world is a world of change. Nothing remains the same. Everywhere you see either growth, or decay. These forces are at work everywhere. They are also at work within you.

You either search out new truth, find it, live it, and thereby become restored to truth, or you back away from it. If you are backing away, losing it, neglecting it, and discarding it, you are in the process of apostasy.

In a restoration process, there are moments along the way which are marked and notable. Having the inspiration of the Spirit, or feeling the remission of your sins, or receiving revelation, or having a visit of an angel are notable. The culmination of the restoration would be to return to God's presence. Should that happen, through The Second Comforter's ministry, then you have been restored in full.

In an apostasy process, you also have a few momentous events. Having a loss of sympathy for others, feeling progressively more critical of others, becoming neglectful of prayers, failing to associate with fellow saints, neglecting the sacrament are early along the path. Ultimately asking to have your membership terminated, engaging in drug abuse, patronizing the sex industry, are strong signs someone has departed from moving in one direction and has begun to move quickly into the other. (I'm not saying that these are related, nor that someone who leaves the church voluntarily is doomed to addiction, immorality or worse. There are many people of good faith who struggle with the church. That is a different subject.) It is clear, however, that when a person has become a murderer, seeking to kill the saints, as we have seen in history, such a person has finished the course of apostasy and is beyond feeling.

These are examples which try to quickly illustrate the point on a personal level. Quickly, at the institutional level, we have at one end a full restoration, a return to Zion, and the Lord dwelling among them. At the other we have a society whose wickedness and abuse of children is so far spread that fire comes down from heaven to destroy them. Complete restorations and complete apostasies are rare. What history is made up is the description of struggling along the path. We ebb and flow back and forth, without becoming fully ripe either way.

Christ promised at the end of time there would be a ripening. "Wheat" and "tares" will ripen. Then there will be a harvest (Matt. 13:37-42). However, the haphazard manner of the harvesting makes a full return of Zion before His coming seem unanticipated by the Lord's teachings (Matt. 24:39-40). Modern revelation gave us that opportunity. We clearly have not done so, and at present seem clearly not interested in doing so. That is a subject for another time, however. As Christ put it, we need to seek for our individual, complete restoration because the group will not.

There are two ways—forward or backward. It is not required that you finish the course in a day; but times are coming in which the environment will require of you a greater commitment as “wheat” on the one hand, or leave you to descend into becoming a “tare” on the other. So the direction you are on now is quite important. Either you are restoring truth or you are discarding it.

COMMENTS:

DJones · APRIL 18, 2010 AT 9:51 AM

Denver, in your post, “Forward or Backward”...you wrote the following:

“As Christ put it, we need to seek for our individual, complete restoration because the group will not.

My question surrounds this last sentence... “As Christ put it...” Would you mind saying more about this, and explaining a little more by what you mean?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 18, 2010 AT 1:48 PM

The words “As Christ put it...” had reference to the two quotes taken from Matthew. They were “side by side” takings of those who would be found righteous at His Second Coming. His two examples cited did not use any gathering of good into one group and the bad into another. These different types of people (wheat/tares or laboring together in a field) are homogenized by Christ into a mixed community from which are gathered the two separate types of people. The comment was specific to the two examples cited in the same paragraph.

DJones · APRIL 20, 2010 AT 6:19 AM

OK...got it...Thank you for the explanation...I see your point!

APRIL 17, 2010

A Confession

Confession of sins is supposed to be good for the soul. So I figure I'll make a confession of my attempted arson. I offer no defense for this crime, since I need none. The statute of limitations having run many years ago.

When my friend decided he no longer wanted to make payments on his new 1969 Chevy Nova, I offered to total the car for him so he could collect the insurance money. As we were speeding along getting ready for me to wreck it into a collection of roadside boulders, he chickened out. So we never destroyed it that evening. Within a few days, however, he returned to his despair over making payments. We discussed it for some time without any resolution to the problem.

Because of some movie (I think with Steve McQueen, but for the life of me I can't recall what it was about), we came up with a solution: We'd burn the car. Surely insurance would total it if burned.

So we parked it behind the Mountain Home Newspaper office, where we worked, and set the plan in motion. My friend soaked the front seat with kerosene, lit a cigarette, tucked the lit cigarette into a match-pack, set it on the soaked front seat, and we went inside. We were waiting for the cigarette to burn down to the matches, the matches to ignite, the ignition to set the kerosene afire, and the fire to destroy the car. We waited. And waited. And nothing seemed to be happening. We stayed in the front of the newspaper office, wanting to appear surprised when the news of a burning car was brought to us, but nothing happened.

I think it was an hour or more before we went to the rear of the building to check on how our felony was progressing, and noticed that in the upper glass block skylight there was flashing red lights, clearly showing flames licking upward from a burning Chevy Nova. We thought it worked! Now someone needed to notice it and call the police. But we couldn't be the ones who discovered it. So we retreated again to the front of the building and settled in to wait out the discovery.

When another hour or so had passed we again peeked into the back of the building and again saw that same flickering red light. We retreated again.

Another hour later and still no sirens, no commotion, nothing. We checked again and sure enough the red flickering was still underway. We wondered what it was about a Chevy Nova that would let it burn for hours once ignited. Then concluded that if no-one else was going to make the grim discovery, we could at least see the results of our handiwork directly instead of through glass block skylight reflections.

So we opened the back door and there sat the Chevy Nova completely undisturbed. Intact, fully operational and not even singed. Puzzled, we wondered at what we'd been seeing flickering these past hours. It turned out to be the outdoor sign of Jovial Jerry's bar, whose sign was on the sidewalk outside the bar with which the Mt. Home News shared a parking lot.

Well the Nova didn't burn. When we inspected our crime scene it turned out that kerosene will put out a lit cigarette without igniting. The cigarette was there, soaked with the seat, and the matches were unusable as well. The only damage was a cigarette burn to the front seat upholstery.

Well my friend had suffered so much from the hours of anticipation and was so relieved at the failure, that he determined to just keep the Nova. However, from that day till the day he sold it it always stank of kerosene.

There, confessing my sin does make me feel better. Maybe I'll cover some others in the future.

APRIL 17, 2010

LDS Books

I was asked to recommend some books. I am going to first discuss some of what I've read over the years.

The first year after joining the church I was eager to learn what the religion was about. I began reading whatever I could find to inform me about the new faith. I started with the following, which I obtained from a bookstore inside the home of a woman in the ward:

- A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by LeGrand Richards.
- The Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt Life of Heber C. Kimball Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith Jesus the Christ Documentary History of the Church by Joseph Smith (all volumes)

I was transferred by the Air Force to Texas, and continued to read there until my discharge from the military. While there I read the following:

- The Life of John Taylor
- Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints by BH Roberts (all volumes)
- Evidences and Reconciliations The Gospel Kingdom Mormon Doctrine The Promised Messiah The Articles of Faith The House of the Lord The Mortal Messiah (all volumes)

- Ensign, Conference Report and Journal of Discourses (not all volumes read)
- Doctrinal New Testament Commentary
- The History of Joseph Smith by His Mother Lucy Mack Smith
- Discourses of Brigham Young
- Brigham Young: American Moses Doctrines of Salvation (3 volumes) Answers to Gospel Questions (5 volumes) Gospel Doctrine by Joseph F. Smith
- Messages of the First Presidency (6 volumes)

By the time I arrived at BYU, I thought I was beginning to understand the faith, at least as it was taught and understood at the beginning. There was a debate between BH Roberts and the Chaplain of the United States Senate which I really liked. It was titled The Mormon Doctrine of Deity: The Roberts and Van Der Donckt Debate. Nibley's book The Timely and the Timeless came out and I still have my original copy. During law school I also discovered Hugh Nibley, and found an actual Deseret Book store. Back then Deseret Book sold doctrine. In fact, almost everything they sold or printed was doctrine or history. I bought and read until I couldn't find an early or contemporary work about church history or doctrine I hadn't read. I have acquired a library since joining the church that includes every significant LDS doctrinal book as it became available in print. I still try and keep up with all the current reading that I believe is worthwhile. But the new stuff is getting thinner and thinner in material, importance and doctrine. In fact, it is quite rare that a new book isn't disappointing to me; particularly when it comes from Deseret Book. The Joseph Smith Papers project is the exception; however it is coming out under the Church's new publication arm (a division of Deseret Book.) A good example of the foolishness to which Deseret Book has descended is that Odds Are You're Going to be Exalted book that came out a couple of years ago.

That having been said, I was asked by someone what I thought was absolutely essential reading. Here's my list:

- The scriptures (first, foremost and without peer)
- Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith
- Lectures on Faith
- Words of Joseph Smith
- Approaching Zion, by Hugh Nibley
- The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil

I think if you study those six books, you will understand the Gospel.

COMMENTS:

DKD · APRIL 17, 2010 AT 5:19 PM

As I thought about it, I also really like "The Comprehensive History of the Church" by BH Roberts. After reading Truman Madsen's biography of BH Roberts Defender of the Faith I felt almost obligated to read it..... given the sacrifice and effort of Brother Roberts in writing it... I would have felt guilty not reading it. It was wonderful reading.

Another work by BH Roberts that had a huge impact on me was The Way, The Truth, The Life. He has a couple of speculative chapters which created some "discussion" among the brethren.... I love it and found it very edifying.

I am so grateful to all those (including you Denver) who have a talent for writing and sharing with us that don't have that talent or skill. :)
thank you.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 18, 2010 AT 8:28 AM

I have it on fairly reliable authority that a new edition of The Words of Joseph Smith is being prepared. I would not purchase it as a used book, because it has become “rare” and therefore quite expensive. I bought it when it was first in print. Wait. It will be in print again soon I think. Also, you can find it as an electronic copy on the LDS Library discs which get sold through Deseret Book from time to time. That, also, is undergoing an update and I’m not sure if they are currently available. But they will be again as well.

APRIL 18, 2010

Egypt and Egyptian

The brass plates of Laban were also in Egyptian. Mosiah Chapter 1, verses 1–4 discuss the education of Mosiah’s sons. They were taught “in all the language of his fathers.” That phrase gets explained. But before clarifying what “all the language” included, the brass plates are mentioned in verse 2. These plates contained the commandments that the sons of Mosiah needed to understand and were not possible for father Lehi to remember. Therefore it was necessary for them to possess the brass plates to stimulate their memory of the commandments.

Continuing on with the explanation, and addressing specifically the brass plates, it is written:

it were not possible that our father, Lehi, could have remembered all these things, to have taught them to his children, except it were for the help of these plates; for he having been taught in the language of the Egyptians therefore he could read these engravings, and teach them to his children (Id. v. 4., emphasis added).

This somewhat changes the picture of Jerusalem at the time of Lehi’s departure. The record of the brass plates included what we would recognize as the Old Testament record, from Moses’ five books down to the time of Lehi’s exodus (See 1 Ne. 5:10–16). For the entire Old Testament account to have been written in Egyptian onto the brass plates means that Egyptian was a preferred language. It wasn't just an efficient language that Nephi selected for his own record, but instead a preference that was widespread among the Jews throughout Jerusalem at the time of Lehi's departure.

By the time Mormon took over abridging the record, the language had been further modified for efficiency and reduced effort in carving the record onto metal plates (See Mormon 9:32–34). It was a more efficient, though less exact, form of language than Hebrew.

The Egyptian influence upon ancient Jerusalem and our own Bible should be studied. The presence of Egyptian hieroglyphs in our scriptures (Book of Abraham Facsimiles 1–3) also puts us on notice that we need to look into Egyptian matters. Hugh Nibley has written a number of books on the matter, the most recent of which was released as One Eternal Round on the occasion of Nibley's 100 year from birth. Abraham in Egypt was an earlier work also on this subject. And there has been a three volume set on the Early Life of Abraham published through BYU (quite an expensive set to own). It is interesting how much Egyptian influence there has been in our faith. Remember that the Egyptians sought to preserve the faith which existed before the flood and was practiced from Adam to the time of Noah (Abraham 1:26). It may have become eroded and drifted, but it nevertheless preserved truths from the beginning. Abraham was sent to them to help restore the original faith which they originally tried earnestly to preserve.

Whether we like it or not, we have an interest in knowing more about ancient Egypt than any other Christian faith.

COMMENTS:

Mark Peterson · APRIL 18, 2010 AT 3:17 PM

In The Second Comforter you state that Laban was Nephi's cousin. How do we know that?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 18, 2010 AT 6:27 PM

Mark Peterson: The following verses let us know that there was a shared genealogy between Laban and Lehi's family:

1 Ne. 3:3, 12:

³For behold, Laban hath the record of the Jews and also a genealogy of my forefathers, and they are engraven upon plates of brass.

¹²And he desired of Laban the records which were engraven upon the plates of brass, which contained the genealogy of my father.

1 Ne. 5:14, 16:

¹⁴And it came to pass that my father, Lehi, also found upon the plates of brass a genealogy of his fathers; wherefore he knew that he was a descendant of Joseph; yea, even that Joseph who was the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt, and who was preserved by the hand of the Lord, that he might preserve his father, Jacob, and all his household from perishing with famine.

¹⁶And thus my father, Lehi, did discover the genealogy of his fathers. And Laban also was a descendant of Joseph, wherefore he and his fathers had kept the records.

The choices are:

1. Laban and Lehi are brothers, making Laban Nephi's uncle. I rule this out because there is no appeal made to Laban on the basis of being an uncle, no acknowledgment by Lehi that he was sending his sons to visit with his brother, or other mention. It would be likely to have appeared in the record had that been the association.

2. Laban and Lehi share ancestors, but are not brothers. I assume this must be the case as a result of ruling out brotherhood above. This makes Nephi a cousin of Laban's.

APRIL 18, 2010

Violence and the Violent

There has been an abundant outpouring of vitriol by those who disagree with my view about "the battle is the Lord's" (an earlier post). The comment moderator has asked me about them, because she's reluctant to put some of them up. They claim the view I hold is either Satanic or else I have been deceived by the Devil. They insist I have a duty to kill people rather than refrain from doing so when there is a threat of violence directed at me or my family. They claim Brigham Young and Joseph Smith both require me to begin killing enemies under appropriate circumstances, rather than submitting to being killed.

From time to time someone writes something which they later regret and they send another message asking for the comment to either not be put up or to be deleted if it had already been posted. I reminded her of that and suggested that she wait a few days and see if people decide to withdraw them before making any decision. Ultimately I leave it to her to decide.

I did want to add a comment about the use of violence. First, I trust the inspiration of a non-violent man, constrained against his will, when he determines the Lord requires him to act far more than I would trust the judgment of someone prone to violence when they suggest the need to kill, take violent action or attack. Throughout history all those who have made claims their violence was excused claimed they were "defending" themselves. There is a chapter on this subject in Eighteen Verses, which covers the topic a bit more than I am inclined to do again here.

I would comment about the Mountain Meadows Massacre and its sad legacy. The recent publication by the Assistant Church Historian as co-author of yet another new treatment of the unfortunate moment when Brigham Young's clamor for "defending" the Saints got out of hand. The book is called Massacre at Mountain Meadows. The book reiterated how mistaken and regrettable that moment was in LDS history. It is the great example pointed to by anti-Mormon sources as proof that Mormons are capable of all the depredations of Historic Christianity, Roman Catholicism and Puritanical excesses that killed those who offended them. The church has issued an official apology, and President Hinckley visited the site and dedicated a monument as an act of Latter-day Saint contrition and regret.

That single moment in church history is something which all our prayers cannot take back. We cannot restore those lives which were taken. We cannot explain we are really Christ's disciples to the descendants of that party of victims. They continue to hold resentments which have festered for generations and still call out condemnation for our act of violence and murder.

If we had suffered then, as we had in Missouri and Illinois we would have been better. If given the opportunity to suffer again for our faith, we would be better remembered by history if we learn the lesson of Mountain Meadows. We are ennobled by our sacrifices. We are detested for our revenge and violence. In General Conference a few sessions back, President Faust gave a talk titled The Healing Power of Forgiveness. Unfortunately, his great example came from the Amish, whose young daughters were killed by a murderer, whom they forgave. It was not taken from our own conduct. I would commend that talk as a more recent and more reasoned statement on violence and the violent than the comments of Brigham Young who Latter-day Saint historians now admit had some role in the Mountain Meadows Massacre. Not because he approved it, he did not. Indeed, he sent a message to let the entrapped party go. But his message arrived too late. The violent attack had already taken place. The violence having been rationalized, at least in part, by Brigham Young's own militant comments in the preceding years.

I am not trying to persuade anyone. Go ahead and resolve this issue for yourself. I am only setting out my own view. Take it for what you think it is worth. If you think it is "of the Devil" or "Satanic" then of course you ought to reject my view. But I have considered the quotes of Brigham Young before reaching my view, and find them in a context which even I believe he grew to regret

APRIL 19, 2010

A Student of the Lord

Our obligation is to conform our opinions to the Lord's instruction. That requires us to be careful about how we listen, how hard our hearts are, how much we want to let in, and how loyal we choose to be to traditions. It is rare for any man to be an eager student of the Lord's. The scriptures give us only isolated examples. Abraham was one of them. He WANTED to receive and obey commandments. (Abr. 1:2.)

Resistance to truth prevents us from obtaining it. The Lord will not force us to understand Him or His ways. Instead He invites us to come and learn from Him. Joseph Smith made this remarkable statement:

We consider that God has created man with a mind capable of instruction, and a faculty which may be enlarged in proportion to the heed and diligence given to the light communicated from heaven to the intellect; and that the nearer man approaches perfection, the clearer are his views, and the greater his enjoyments, till he has overcome the evils of his life and lost every desire for sin; and like the ancients, arrives at that point of faith where he is wrapped in the power and glory of his Maker and is caught up to dwell with Him. But we consider that this is a station to which no man ever arrived in a moment: he must have been instructed in the government and laws of that kingdom by proper degrees, until his mind is capable in some measure of comprehending the propriety, justice, equality, and consistency of the same. (TPJS p. 51)

Closing your mind to the Lord's agenda before He has had an opportunity to fully instruct you is damnation. Damnation merely means the end of progress. So when we fail to progress in our understanding, we voluntarily damn ourselves.

The Lord's system, however, involves gentleness, meekness and love unfeigned. It requires patience and pure knowledge. (D&C 121:40–42.) Before we can elevate anyone else's understanding we have to stand on higher ground. To lead a soul to salvation, as Joseph put it, required the following:

Thy mind, O man! if thou wilt lead a soul unto salvation, must stretch as high as the utmost heavens, and search into and contemplate the darkest abyss, and the broad expanse of eternity—thou must commune with God. (TPJS p. 137)

Given this requirement for a man to be able to lead another soul to salvation, it would seem that few are really qualified.

Choose your teachers carefully. Accept any truth you are offered and you will be offered more. Reject a truth given to you and you close down the opportunities given to you for learning.

Someone asked the question a bit ago: “Humility = light?” and I haven’t responded till now. The answer is humility allows someone to be taught. We are all ignorant, but not all are willing to let in new understanding. We must be taught about the things we do not yet know for us to be saved. Without humility we cannot be taught, and therefore we cannot gain light. Humility is so fundamental a requirement for gaining further light and truth that without it we cannot grow. The two are so intimately linked together they form a near equivalency.

APRIL 19, 2010

BYU Women’s Rugby

The BYU women’s rugby team forfeited the championship opportunity because of required competition play on Sunday. An article was written about the event, which can be found at:

<http://www.fanhouse.com/2010/04/18/to-pray-or-play-that-is-not-a-question/?ncid=webmaildl5>

I applaud anyone who puts principle ahead of self. Sacrifice is still required.

APRIL 19, 2010

Pax Americana

Prof has left a new comment on your post

“The battle is the Lord’s”:

I’m particularly interested in what you mean by this: “We live in a world today in which Pax Americana has established controlled violence the world over. The fear of destruction holds forces at bay which would gladly destroy one another if permitted. The key to replacing the current world order with another one, as many insurgencies the world over recognize, is the destruction of Pax Americana by destroying American hegemony. A lot of people are working on that, both inside and outside the United States.

Do you support “American hegemony” in order to maintain “Pax Americana”? And from what source did you get these terms?

Those are really several questions. I will try and answer briefly. This is a very cursory explanation to the inquiry.

With the fall of the Soviet Union, there followed the universal recognition that there only one surviving super-power. I think the truth was that even prior to the Soviet breakup there was only one real superpower, but the international propaganda machine and the eastern European subjugation by the Soviets essentially formed such a land barrier and controlled such a population base that they were accepted as a second super-power. The reality was somewhat different, but in this world perception is everything and so long as everyone believed there were “two” the world acted consistent with their being two.

Now the world acts consistent with there only being one. As a result of there being one, political pacts, economic alliances, trade, military alliances, treaties, social mores, entertainment, language, corporate interests and sea lanes are all governed by what the United States tolerates or accepts. Even China has so limited a military sphere of influence that they can “control” Tibet and the upper Korean Peninsula, but have no ability to project power over active American resistance. That does not mean they aren’t working on it. They are. But they can’t compete at present.

Whatever other strengths other nations may possess, they cannot compete with the total inventory of American power. Economically the entirety of Europe is not able to compete with American economic power. There are other members of the nuclear power states, but none with the delivery systems, proven capabilities and demonstrated will to use nuclear weapons in combat.

A full elaboration of the unique American combination of power is far too great a subject to cover here. Just one other example: Al Jazeera was launched as a counterpart to CNN, Fox News and the BBC. These networks dominate international news. An earthquake in Istanbul happens and residents there turn their TV's to CNN, Fox News or the BBC to find out what is happening. Al Jazeera is an attempt to get another cultural perspective different from an Anglo-American vantage point. To possess the dominate vantage point in the news is to possess the advantage.

Why are Turkey and Greece not in combat with one another despite their long lasting territorial disputes? They are members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) founded by the US at the end of WWII to attempt to avoid another land war in Europe. Why is the Korean Peninsula not back in combat? The fear is that it would draw the US and China into direct conflict and that would be a disaster for the whole world. So an uneasy peace endures. Why is Taiwan not overrun at present by China, when they claim sovereignty over it? It is because China has not yet reached a point of development where they feel safe to have a direct conflict with the US. Again, there could be many examples, but the world stage is set by American interests which dominate other considerations.

The resentments pile up and attempt to organize. Chavez has high hopes in Venezuela, just as Castro had high hopes in the 1950's in Cuba. But just like Castro, Chavez is having a difficult time keeping the lights on in his energy rich country.

The current American president candidly admitted “whether we like it or not, American is the world’s sole superpower.” He’s taking flack for that right now. But it was a correct statement. America is the dominant power, and its interests influence the world over. Foreign aid props up many countries which would not exist without it.

There are many people who would like to see American power end. You would have to have never seen the news to not hear that rhetoric coming from critics the world over. And inside the American political landscape there are those who want to see an end of American foreign entanglements. The most outspoken may be the Libertarian Party, whose candor about the need to withdraw from the world stage is part of their every campaign.

I have not evaluated the wisdom of the reality. I’ve only commented on its existence. How America got here is a product of history and decisions made in past generations. President Washington’s Farewell Address cautioned against “foreign entanglements” which would cost us lives and treasure. He was right about what he foresaw. President Eisenhower warned against the “military industrial complex” (a term he coined), and how it would eventually control such economic interests that it would skew our national policies and priorities. I think he was right as well.

The terms are taken from Roman history and applied to American history. We are re-living the Roman model, without borrowing wisdom from those who saw its decline and fall. Gibbon is still good history, and a model for modern historians as well. The parallels between these two empires are so striking that even the element used by the Lord in Daniel’s interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar’s dream are similar. The Roman being iron, and the American being iron and clay. The parallels are unmistakable to any student of history.

We repeat history. We are living with the past and cannot see ourselves outside the forms we have inherited from our past. Tradition controls even the way we read scripture. Therefore we are blind to what they tell us until it has been fulfilled, at which point we see in hindsight only what things we have forfeited. Zion is alien here, and therefore we have a difficult time envisioning it without putting it into Babylonian/Roman form. Zion, however, is without ambition, competition and aggression. It has fled.

APRIL 20, 2010

Seeking for and Obtaining Gifts—Part of the Expected Pattern

I received this comment and question:

As I have learned more about the scriptures, I have come to find many “anomalies” in the lives of the prophets are actually not anomalous but part of the expected pattern. Examples of things I once thought exceptions which I now believe are expected steps along “the way” include Moses’ struggle with the devil, the 2nd Comforter, the sealing power, Christ’s willingness to give Nephi anything he asks, John’s vision of all, Abraham’s astral journey and John’s entering into the temple in heaven.

The appearance of the Liahona in the Book of Mormon seems anomalous, a physical object of divine origin given to aid his servant in completing his journey. But is the Liahona in fact, an anomaly or can any righteous member expect physical tokens from heaven to aid them on their own journey before they arrive in the celestial kingdom?

I would agree that there is a pattern, it is universal, and the prophets are trying to give that pattern to us in the history they record, the examples they teach, the parables they offer and the commandments they reveal. There is one, universal system which everyone will receive as part of their journey back to God. In order to pass the angels who stand as sentinels along the path you must proceed in an orderly fashion through the veil. It will be one by one.

Yes, I agree there are physical tokens given as an aid to getting there. Take the gift of seership, as an example. We know there was an instrument given to Joseph to aid him at the first. He used it to gain an understanding even before the translation of the Book of Mormon plates commenced. He would tell his family stories about the ancient inhabitants, their customs, manner of dress, etc. His mother, Lucy Mack Smith records this in her history. This understanding came as a result of Joseph's possession and use of the Urim and Thummim, making him a "seer" in the sense of the term used in Mosiah (Mosiah 8:13–17).

Eventually Joseph developed the independent gift of seership, and no longer required the physical instrument to be used in order to exercise the gift. He became, like Enoch, able to "see" without use of the instrument (Moses 6:35–36).

We tend to think this a great rarity and grand exception. Yet we also find that everyone who enters into the same state of exaltation as God will be required to possess this same gift. (D&C 130:5–11.) If possession or development of this capacity is expected for all those who reside with God, then the gift is intended to be universal among the exalted. Therefore, we should not delay seeking this as one of the best gifts to desire (D&C 46:8; 1 Cor. 12:31).

Since whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto will rise with us, and you will have so much more the advantage if you have gained greater light and truth by your heed and diligence than others who have failed to show such diligence, there is no reason to delay. Just as Moses wished all men were prophets, I wish all men were seers.

APRIL 20, 2010

Truth = Truth

Truth is a knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to come (D&C 93:24). As a result, truth is really not subject to debate. We either know the truth or we are deceived. If we know it, we have an obligation to declare it. If we are deceived, we have an obligation to be humble enough to at least consider the truth before we reject it.

When we dispute in anger, we move away from truth.

For verily, verily I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another. (3 Ne. 11:29)

The truth is not being taught when men argue in anger with one another. When they do, the Spirit withdraws and learning ends.

Truth should appeal to the heart and mind. It should bring joy. “Verily, verily, I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy;” (D&C 11:13). I do not believe there is any past scriptural precedent for angry people bearing a threatening message about vengeance and revenge who then proceeded to build Zion. I doubt we will see such an unprecedented and unscriptural event occur in the future.

Words that describe Zion include:

Humble

Meek

Submissive

Contrite

One

No poor among them

Presence of God among them

Peaceful

Only people not at war

Singing songs of everlasting joy

Of one heart

It is an odd thing how those who learn about the possibility of Zion think that possessing that awareness entitles them to live there. Before anyone will be admitted to Zion they will necessarily have to bring it into their own lives. Gathering a crowd without considering first who has been chosen by the angels who possess the keys for this gathering, and those who have been sealed in their foreheads by those angels, is just another foolish and futile act (D&C_77:11).

Hugh Nibley wrote an article in Nibley on the Timely and the Timeless titled: "Zeal without Knowledge." That title was taken from Romans 10:2. In that article he wrote:

We think it more commendable to get up at 5:00 a.m. to write a bad book than to get up at nine o'clock to write a good one. That is pure zeal that tends to breed a race of insufferable, self-righteous prigs and barren minds.

Nibley could be so hard on us at times. But then again, he also hit the nail on the head.

For some particularly unsuited people to talk expectantly about Zion when they are utterly unprepared to understand the subject is beyond irony. For them to be stirred to anger about the subject because they disagree with another's view about Zion must provoke both bemusement and despair for the gods.

APRIL 20, 2010

Why The Second Comforter?

I was asked why my list of essential books included The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil, but omitted my other books. I responded:

If someone understands the message of The Second Comforter, they will be able to get for themselves everything else contained in all the other books. The Second Comforter is not about me, it is about the reader. You should apply that book to yourself, which will lead you inevitably back to the presence of the Lord. The Lord will then instruct you in all things needed to be prepared to be presented to the Father.

Beloved Enos is a description of the results of that audience. If you understand and apply The Second Comforter you will receive those results.

Come, Let Us Adore Him is my testimony of Christ. But my testimony is not as important as your own. It may help you to develop your own, but without your own testimony borrowing from another can never be the end of the journey.

I wouldn't write a book unless I believed it to be important and to contain truth coming from a higher source. Nevertheless, it is what you know, not what I as an author may know, that will save you. It is the salvation of others, not the attention of others, that concerns me. If I can help point them to the Lord, then I have some limited use. Beyond that, I have no purpose.

Since all that we hope to receive from the Lord flows from the discussion in The Second Comforter, it is that book which I believe to be most important.

COMMENTS:

DJones · APRIL 20, 2010 AT 6:21 PM

In your recent post about being a “student of the Lord”, you wrote:

Our obligation is to conform our opinions to the Lord’s instruction.

That requires us to be careful about how we listen, how hard our hearts are, how much we want to let in, and how loyal we choose to be to traditions.

In my 35 years of membership in the Church, I have noticed that a good many preach and teach doctrine based on the traditions of men, without consulting the scriptures to even validate what is being taught is even true. So, when someone like you or a Hugh Nibley or a Bruce Porter, or another who teach from scriptures comes along, a wall of resistance appears in the mindset of an audience...whether or not that audience is a Gospel Doctrine Class, Priesthood lesson, or even a casual discussion around a dinner table with family members... for me at least, frustration levels are high most of the time when my attempts to insert a higher level of Gospel truths into the discussion is thwarted. It seems like most members in my circle of (non) influence are content to remain in ignorance or to hold on to “traditions” that just are not true!!

I’ve read in your book, The Second Comforter, the confronting statement on p.14: “You have no right to impose upon unprepared souls higher information than they are able to bear.”

Your blog is confronting to many, and to others it is a source of welcomed words, thoughts and concepts that have been thought about but never expressed except in well chosen circles, and maybe even then, with a great deal of caution.

Any advice or counsel would be welcomed.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 20, 2010 AT 8:51 PM

There are some “justified” ways to teach. Christ used the little children to teach them directly what their parents were not able to take in, except indirectly. His message was abbreviated to the parents. Then His tongue was loosed as He taught their children. The parents were able to “eavesdrop” and hear what was lawful for Him to give the innocent children, but not permitted to be given directly to them. So He did a ‘workaround’ that was in keeping with the limitations which are imposed on the most sacred things. That is the first principle. You cannot reveal to the unworthy; but you can minister to those who are prepared and others can eavesdrop who may then become able to take it in.

The second principle is that you cannot force information upon someone. You can answer questions, when asked. But you cannot impose. If you notice, this blog is almost entirely composed of answers to questions others asked me. I respond. The questions are asked by those who are ready to hear an answer in almost every case. The forum, however, has a lot of others who are “eavesdropping” and may be benefited by the answer.

This pattern is taken from the Lord’s own example. I did not invent it. I am following it. It is a pattern which will work, if followed.

You cannot reveal something to the unprepared and have them receive it. Cannot happen. When they are ready, it will open to their view. Until then, you can speak a truth, but they will not comprehend it. Worse still, if you do a poor job you may cause someone to reject a truth which will condemn them. So the pace must be controlled by the questioner. Without a question (or constraint by the Lord), I remain silent. With a question to answer, however, I am free to respond.

Look at Christ’s ministry among both those at Jerusalem and in the Americas. You will find this pattern in both.

APRIL 21, 2010

Lectures on Faith No. 6

This is an excerpt from the Sixth Lecture in The Lectures on Faith. This was at one point a part of the Doctrine & Covenants. They were prepared for the School of the Prophets and approved by Joseph Smith. Their presence in the scriptures was the reason for the change in the title from Book of Commandments to Doctrine and Covenants. The “Doctrine” portion of the book was comprised of these lectures. They were subsequently removed from the D&C. Below is an excerpt which I think is needed to be understood by anyone who would like to comprehend the faith restored through Joseph Smith:

An actual knowledge to any person that the course of life which he pursues is according to the will of God, is essentially necessary to enable him to have that confidence in God, without which no person can obtain eternal life.

It was this that enabled the ancient saints to endure all their afflictions and persecutions, and to take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing (not believing merely) that they had a more “enduring substance. (Heb. 10:34)

Having the assurance that they were pursuing a course which was agreeable to the will of God, they were enabled to take, not only the spoiling of their goods and the wasting of their substance joyfully, but also to suffer death in its most horrid forms; knowing (not merely believing) that when this earthly house of their tabernacle was dissolved, they had a building of God, a house “not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. (2 Cor. 5:1)

Such was, and always will be, the situation of the saints of God, that unless they have an actual knowledge that the course that they are pursuing is according to the will of God, they will grow weary in their minds and faint; for such has been, and always will be, the opposition in the hearts of unbelievers and those that know not God, against the pure and unadulterated religion of heaven (the only thing which ensures eternal life), that they will persecute to the uttermost all that worship God according to his revelations, receive the truth in the love of it, and submit themselves to be guided and directed by his will, and drive them to such extremities that nothing short of an actual knowledge of their being the favorites of heaven, and of their having embraced that order of things which God has established for the redemption of man, will enable them to exercise that confidence in him necessary for them to overcome the world, and obtain that crown of glory which is laid up for them that fear God.

For a man to lay down his all, his character and reputation, his honor and applause, his good name among men, his houses, his lands, his brothers and sisters, his wife and children, and even his own life also, counting all things but filth and dross for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ, requires more than mere belief or supposition that he is doing the will of God, but actual knowledge; realizing that when these sufferings are ended he will enter into eternal rest, and be a partaker of the glory of God.

For unless a person does know that he is walking according to the will of God, it would be offering an insult to the dignity of the Creator were he to say that he would be a partaker of his glory when he should be done with the things of this life.

But when he has this knowledge, and most assuredly knows that he is doing the will of God, his confidence can be equally strong that he will be a partaker of the glory of God.

Let us here observe, that a religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things, never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation; for from the first existence of man, the faith necessary unto the enjoyment of life and salvation never could be obtained without the sacrifice of all earthly things; it was through this sacrifice, and this only, that God has ordained that men should enjoy eternal life; and it is through the medium of the sacrifice of all earthly things, that men do actually know that they are doing the things that are well pleasing in the sight of God.

When a man has offered in sacrifice all that he has for the truth's sake, not even withholding his life, and believing before God that he has been called to make this sacrifice, because he seeks to do his will, he does know most assuredly that God does and will accept his sacrifice and offering, and that he has not nor will not seek his face in vain.

Under these circumstances then, he can obtain the faith necessary for him to lay hold on eternal life.

It is in vain for persons to fancy to themselves that they are heirs with those, or can be heirs with them, who have offered their all in sacrifice, and by this means obtained faith in God and favor with him so as to obtain eternal life, unless they in like manner offer unto him the same sacrifice, and through that offering obtain the knowledge that they are accepted of him.

It was in offering sacrifices that Abel, the first martyr, obtained knowledge that he was accepted of God.

And from the days of righteous Abel to the present time, the knowledge that men have that they are accepted in the sight of God, is obtained by offering sacrifice.

And in the last days, before the Lord comes, he is to gather together his saints who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. (Ps. 50:3–5, “Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant unto me by sacrifice.”

Those then who make the sacrifice will have the testimony that their course is pleasing in the sight of God, and those who have this testimony will have faith to lay hold on eternal life, and will be enabled through faith to endure unto the end, and receive the crown that is laid up for them that love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But those who do not make the sacrifice cannot enjoy this faith, because men are dependent upon this sacrifice in order to obtain this faith; therefore, they cannot lay hold upon eternal life, because the revelations of God do not guarantee unto them the authority so to do; and without this guarantee faith could not exist.

All the saints of whom we have account in all the revelations of God which are extant, obtained the knowledge which they had of their acceptance in his sight, through the sacrifice which they offered unto him.

And through the knowledge thus obtained, their faith became sufficiently strong to lay hold upon the promise of eternal life, and to endure as seeing him who is invisible; and were enabled, through faith, to combat the powers of darkness, contend against the wiles of the adversary, overcome the world, and obtain the end of their faith, even the salvation of their souls.

But those who have not made this sacrifice to God, do not know that the course which they pursue is well pleasing in his sight; for whatever may be their belief or their opinion, it is a matter of doubt and uncertainty in their minds; and where doubt and uncertainty are, there faith is not, nor can it be.

For doubt and faith do not exist in the same person at the same time.

So that persons whose minds are under doubts and fears cannot have unshaken confidence; and where unshaken confidence is not, there faith is weak; and where faith is weak, the persons will not be able to contend against all the opposition, tribulations, and afflictions which they will have to encounter in order to be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ Jesus; and they will grow weary in their minds, and the adversary will have power over them and destroy them.

APRIL 21, 2010

FYI

I have been surprised by the level of excitement which some of my posts have caused. My views are an extension of the faith I hold. It is not possible to take one issue and isolate it from the whole of what I know to be true. Therefore, if you want to understand the view, you need to take the time to read what I have written, which explains fully what I know, and why I know it.

To understand it will be necessary for you to study the faith as restored through Joseph Smith. I have explained what I believe and why I believe it in six books now. Rather than attempting to argue me into another position, it might be helpful to first understand what I have written.

However, I realize some people will not do that and therefore I attempt to respond piecemeal here to questions asked. But there are really two dialogues going on here. One is between those who have read what I have written and know why I am responding as I do. The other is between those who have no background from which to understand my answers and who make presumptions about them.

I appreciate the convictions of others, including those who disagree with me. I am thankful to the people who raise questions about what I have written. The level of excited rhetoric is something I do not find personally offensive, but I worry that those who use it will later regret doing so. I put up a quote from my father a little bit ago about never speaking a word in anger that he did not later regret. I would extend that to words spoken in haste, or in overwrought judgmentalism. Oftentimes at a later point a person regrets saying them. So I was extending to the authors of the comments a few days to reflect on whether they wanted them to be put up before them appearing here, as a courtesy to those who wrote them.

I am a trial lawyer. Everything I do for a living is opposed by someone who is paid to oppose my positions, my arguments, my reasoning. Therefore I do not get upset when someone holds a contrary view and expresses it. I live with that daily. My concern lies with those who express forcefully and judgmentally things which they may, upon second thought, realize reflects more about them than they would like.

In any event, I do want to note that there are at least two different dialogues going on here at any given time.

CHAPTER 10

The Traditions of Men

APRIL 21, 2010

The Traditions of Men, Part 1

I received this question in a comment: “You often refer to incorrect traditions that you see members following. Can you give me a few specifics?”

This is a potentially sensitive question and I want to answer it with care. Before doing so, however, I want to clarify some initial matters: First, I sustain the church’s leaders and I do not challenge their right to preside, make decisions, direct the affairs of the church, control tithing and call leadership. I “fall in line” behind them and do not question their right to lead. Second, I have a testimony of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and of President Monson as the only one authorized to exercise all the keys within the church. Third, I do not think that observations about the church, even if they are critical of it, are proof that someone is misled, under Satan’s influence, or on the road to apostasy. In fact, there are many active Latter-day Saints who have concerns, but who are content to remain active, faithful and supportive members of the church. Concerns are not the same thing as rebellion or rejection. Fourth, I do not either expect or advocate any changes being made. When or if changes are made they will happen as a result of someone else's actions, more than likely someone who would be in a position of authority within the church. I am not such a person.

Also, I want to be clear that I may personally make a value judgment about what has changed and mourn the loss, but another person may look at the same events and say they are good, developmental and preferred to what was there before. So these are MY opinions, and not necessarily the view you should adopt as your own view. You will have to decide such things for yourself. That having been clarified, here are some of the things which have changed dramatically and are the product of accepted tradition now, but were entirely innovative when they happened.

The discarding of the Presiding Patriarch of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There is no scriptural authority for this change and there was nothing in the original order which suggested that a change would be made. Now the current state of things is equivocal. We actually have still a Presiding Patriarch who is still living. He is emeritus. Whether the church intends to terminate the office upon his death is unclear. If they do, that will be an innovation and (in my personal opinion) unfortunate.

The alteration of the Presiding High Priest's status from "President" to "Prophet." From the time of Joseph Smith until 1955 the term "Prophet" was used exclusively to refer to Joseph Smith. It was changed in 1955 to apply to the living President, David O. McKay. Before then no living man was ever referred to as "Prophet" within the church, other than Joseph Smith. When the word "Prophet" was used after Joseph's death, it was understood the term meant Joseph Smith.

The result of this change was to create a “cult of personality” around the church president in much the same way that the Catholic Church has created a “cult of personality” around Mother Mary. You need to understand that whole subject before you get too excited by my putting it that way. If you do not understand this technical description then you need to become acquainted with it to be able to comprehend what I am saying here. To briefly touch upon the subject, the Catholic view of the “cult of personality” around Mother Mary is positive. It does not get viewed by them as a defect or some terrible aberration. Pope John Paul II considered himself a part of that “cult” involving Mary.

In our context, what has happened as a result of this alteration is that the former significance of the church’s president was administrative, and priestly. He was a final arbitrator and judge, a presiding authority and a leader whose words were to be considered carefully. He was NOT considered infallible or to be invariably inspired. In fact, during the presidencies of the Prophet Joseph Smith, President Brigham Young and President John Taylor, they all spoke against any notion of infallibility of the church’s president. President Young was particularly cautionary about trusting church leaders instead of the Holy Spirit as your guide. President Young said too much trust of a church leader would bring the saints to hell.

President Woodruff was so criticized by members for the Manifesto that he defended himself by claiming that the Lord wouldn’t let him make a mistake on that order. He said that the Lord just wouldn’t let the church’s president lead the saints astray. That comment was what would later be used to buttress the notion popularly believed today that the “prophet is infallible.”

President Heber J. Grant was an unpopular church president. One of the problems with getting the saints to respond to the church president's counsel was solved when the president of the church became the living "Prophet." You can reject or question counsel from an administrative authority. But to question a "Prophet of God" was to invite the damnation of hell. So the change in nomenclature worked a mighty change in the perceptions of the Latter-day Saints. The "cult of personality" was an inevitable result. Everything the president did would be done as "God's Living Prophet." No matter what decisions were made, no matter their wisdom, goodness or undesirability, the result was the same: "They must be inspired. We may not have the human capacity to see it, but God's ways are higher than man's after all. To question is to lack in faith."

The change put the president into a league in which at a minimum criticism was disrespectful. Worse, if you were convinced that he made a mistake, it followed almost as an inevitability that you were absolutely forbidden from saying so because to do so revealed a "weakness in the faith." In fact, there are General Conference talks which speak about criticizing the church president (or "Living Prophet") claiming that the criticism was due to a weak faith, and it would lead to apostasy unless a person repented.

This cult of personality has grown as a result of internal structural changes, including correlation. The outcome is particularly dramatic with respect to the tolerance of women's inspiration. Whereas, in the early years a woman could be regarded as a "prophetess" (Eliza R. Snow, for example), today that recognition would be offensive to correlation, where all functions are combined under priesthood, and all priesthood is subject to the president alone as final authority.

The changes have been evolutionary, and over a single person's lifetime not all that dramatic. However the cumulative effect from the start to now is dramatic. Right now the church views any revelation or miraculous event originating with a woman as suspicious. It was so markedly contrary to this trend when a mission president's wife foretold the Chilean earthquake, and the Meridian Magazine covered the event without any notice that the message came through the wife, that I linked to that article on this blog. The article presumed the propriety of the inspiration. But the message came to the wife, not the mission president. That would be an un-correlated event today, and there is an existing infrastructure that would frown on that. Happily the event was not questioned, but instead celebrated.

The “cult of personality” has been extended to cover everything. You name it it is now covered. Take any complaint at all: The chapel paint is hideous! Well, there are those who will argue that the chapel's paint is chosen by the regular authorities of the church, who are chosen by the prophet, and your complaint about the paint color is really questioning the Prophet of God's authority. Therefore you are on the road to apostasy...

It doesn't matter the subject. The argument works by extension to everything. The Bishop cheated his business partner: You shouldn't question that because...yada, yada,...you're questioning the Prophet of God. Therefore you are on the road to apostasy.

Try: My child was molested by her primary teacher. Oddly enough it even works there, too. At least there are many people willing to apply that by extension to every ridiculous proposition advanced. So the cult of personality has now assumed a front and center position to curtail discussion, debate or consideration of even healthy alternatives to the way things are. EVERYTHING is inspired. EVERYTHING, by extension, is happening because a “Prophet of God” has made it so. Therefore unless you concede that “All is Well in Zion” you are questioning the “Prophet of God” and on the road to apostasy.

The stifling effect of this is pernicious. It is not a view shared at the top. In fact, the brethren preach against this notion, but to no avail. I have coined the term “Brethrenites” to describe the result of this cult of personality in my book Eighteen Verses. There’s a chapter in there that discusses this problem.

Crap, this is going to take longer than I thought. Well, here we go again. This will be “Part One” and I’ll continue this with something more.

APRIL 22, 2010

The Traditions of Men, Part 2, Continued

Originally, the view of personal revelation or any visionary experiences was quite different than what many believe today. In fact there are those who claim that ANY vision, visitation or revelation not received by the Prophet (meaning the president of the church alone) should be viewed as false. God speaks to the Prophet, and only to the Prophet, and we are to wait to hear what God wants us to know from the Prophet. This is an extension of the adoption of the term “Prophet” and the resulting cult of personality.

During Joseph Smith’s time, he welcomed the revelatory experiences of others. He neither discouraged them nor felt threatened by them. His enthusiasm for what others told him of their revelations, and the acceptance of others’ revelations is readily apparent in the first volume of the Joseph Smith Papers. Today the tradition is quite the contrary. Today, if anyone has a revelation they are advised to keep it to themselves. When others hear about them the cautionary attitude adopted is — ‘if it were something important then the Prophet of God would have told you about it.’

The effect of the adoption of the term “Prophet” for the living church president has been far ranging and dramatic. There has been a dramatic change in people’s expectation of personal revelation, as a result of this title shift. The result is, of course, if you do not expect revelation you are not going to receive it. The expected charismatic gifts of the Spirit during the early church is now replaced by the assumption that charismatic gifts are driven by office and position. Bishops get revelation for wards (and by extension no one else does or can). Stake presidents get revelation for stakes (and by extension no one else does or can). Mission presidents get revelation for missions (and by extension no one else can or does—except in the notable case of the recent earthquake in Chile, as I mentioned before). What has always been true is that presiding authorities alone are the final say on revelation or guidance for their calling. What is not true is that no-one else can, has or does get revelation. Revelation comes to those who are prepared. It comes in response to seeking, asking, knocking, and not automatically as a result of a new office or position. Now someone called to office may humble themselves, begin seeking, asking and knocking and then get revelation. But the revelation was always available, and the same information is available to all, “even the least of the Saints” as Joseph Smith put it. The proposition that there is a control over available revelation is one of the results of the post-1955 development of the cult of personality centered on the President as the Living Prophet of God.

Another change now firmly in place is the administration of temporal affairs within the church. For example, the Presiding Bishop’s office controlled the operations involving all the church’s construction projects until the David O. McKay presidency. As a result of some problems (beyond the scope of this), the First Presidency decided to take construction over as part of their duties. One of the members of the First Presidency got involved in some difficulties (again beyond the scope of this), and to placate the Quorum of the Twelve, the responsibilities were shared. The result was that the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve now have budgetary involvement with the church's building program. This is a massive undertaking. It involves worldwide construction of church facilities. It is a major duty devolving upon these men. However, it was one time an Aaronic Priesthood assignment, and the duty of the Presiding Bishop's office. Temporal concerns are associated with that order of Priesthood. On the other hand, the higher Priesthood is involved primarily with the spiritual concerns of the church. It's all in the D&C. But the shift of Aaronic/temporal concerns onto the shoulders of the Melchizedek Priesthood leaders has its effect. The extent of that effect has been reflected in comments made by those who serve in the Twelve or First Presidency. They hardly have time to do more than move from one meeting to another. One said he never had time to reflect or meditate.

The original Twelve Apostles of this dispensation were given a charge by Oliver Cowdrey that their ordination was not complete until they had received an audience with Christ. That audience was what would entitle them to be a witness of the resurrection. The charge was given to newly ordained Apostles from the time of the first called Twelve until 1911, when the charge was discontinued. It was discontinued because so few of them had ever received an audience with Christ. Since then the Apostles have been encouraged to bear a witness of Christ based upon their spiritual conviction that He lived, died and rose from the dead. The manner in which this is done is to suggest an actual witness of His resurrection. But the words are carefully chosen.

When he was put under oath by the Senate Confirmation Committee, President Joseph F. Smith was asked directly if he was a “prophet of God.” His response was, “my people sustain me as such.” The senator asking the question didn’t understand the answer, and asked again. After some back and forth, President Joseph F. Smith was asked directly if he had ever had a revelation; to which he responded that he had not. He added a bit later that he, like all other members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints had a testimony that Joseph Smith was a Prophet and Jesus Christ had appeared to him.

[Now as an aside, this testimony was in 1905. Later, in 1918 President Joseph F. Smith received the vision now published as Section 138 of the Doctrine and Covenants; the Vision of the Redemption of the Dead.]

The church holds the tradition that the First Presidency and Twelve are sustained as “Prophets, Seers and Revelators” and as a result of that sustaining vote they must necessarily have all seen Christ. This idea/tradition is so widespread that even when the brethren clarify what their testimony consists of most members of the church won’t listen to, or accept what they say. I’ve posted about President Packer’s talk on his own testimony a little while ago in another post. There are those who don’t believe him, and insist he is holding back because such things are just “too sacred to be revealed.” However, the calling of an Apostle, as set out in Section 107, is to bear witness of Jesus Christ. There isn’t anything “too sacred” about bearing testimony of Him that would prevent an Apostle from stating without equivocation they are a witness by having seen the Risen Lord. President Packer has been truthful, forthcoming and honest. I accept what he says at face value and I respect and sustain him all the more because of it. He is indeed an Apostle of Jesus Christ. And he is also an honest witness of Him. However, he has essentially explained what his testimony consists of honestly, truthfully and fully in General Conference. People continue to ignore his words and substitute the myth for the reality.

The terms “prophet, seer and revelator” come from scripture where the president of the church is to “be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet, having all the gifts of God” (D&C 107:92). The way this is read in the church today is that any person who holds the office of President of the High Priesthood is ipso facto a “seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet.” Meaning the office defines the gifts. What if that is not the intent of the scripture? What if the scripture means, instead, that a person who is these things is the only one to be called to the office? That is, unless the person “be” such a person possessing these gifts, he is not and cannot be the President? Such questions are not even possible to be asked today. They are, according to the current reading of that verse, evidence of weak faith and evidence someone is headed for apostasy. Therefore a discussion about this verse’s meaning and possible differences of meaning are excluded and no other view is possible to be discussed.

President David O. McKay did not get a testimony of the church until sometime after he had been called as an Apostle. President Gordon B. Hinckley, when asked about revelation, said “I don’t know that we need much revelation anymore.” President Packer has defined revelation as when the presiding authorities reach an agreement. President Nibley (a counselor in the First Presidency and Hugh Nibley’s grandfather) said if an angel were to appear to him he would jump out the window. There are other examples, but the point is that there are many statements which have been made by the highest authorities in the church which contradict the popular myth that the Lord has and does regularly appear to, meet with, and speak face to face with the presiding authorities. Despite this, there are people who presume the Lord is in the weekly meeting in the Temple, every Thursday, telling them how to run His church. In contrast, President Young said when he asks the Lord for guidance and then he receives nothing, he will make his best judgment and proceed. And the Lord is bound to sustain him in his decision, since he asked for guidance. That approach is healthy, and allowed President Young and others to move forward. However, it is one thing for men of good faith and decency, who are making honest and worthwhile efforts to manage the church to have our prayers, faith and confidence; and quite another to assume these men quote the Lord with their every breath. As a church this subject is just not discussed. As a result those who suspect that the brethren are making great efforts and are good men, but who may not have had an audience with the Lord are kept from asking the question. When a Gentile reporter has the impertinence to ask such a question, they are rebuked and told things like that are sacred.

A Prophet of God is not required to have seen Him. A prophet can and has been inspired to speak for the Lord by the inspiration of the Spirit. But when the scriptures use this phrase “and the word of the Lord came unto me, saying...” This formula assures the listener that the words which follow originate from the Lord and not a good and honest man’s best advice. All this has happened in the past and therefore you cannot discount a prophet’s calling because the word of the Lord comes by the Spirit, rather than from a personal visitation. Visitations are rare. However, the calling of a prophet in scripture was not institutional. The Lord was directly, personally and individually involved. Moses was told by the Lord, directly, as the Lord stood in a pillar-cloud at the door of the tabernacle: “Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream” (Numbers 12:5–6).

When the Church was led by a president (from the death of Joseph Smith until 1955) there was no cult of personality around the church president. He was the presiding High Priest over the High Priesthood. When the title shifted, things began to change. Today a discussion about this process is not possible because the subject matter is too charged.

The difference between good men doing good things in good faith, who are entitled to our support in their calling and efforts on the one hand, and a prophet of God whose words are questioned at the peril of eternal damnation on the other and is the overwhelming difference which now plagues the church. We cannot have a discussion that questions the wisdom of church policies, procedures or decisions. When even obvious mistakes are made, people who notice are not to speak of it, and if they do they are told that they are weak in the faith and on the road to apostasy. Criticism is essential to a healthy mental state. Without feedback and criticism you cannot raise a normal, healthy child. Try raising a child to whom you lavish only praise, and to whom you say, without regard to how bad, poorly or evil an act they commit: “You are inspired! You are right! It was good of you to have done that! God Himself inspired that act!” What you would raise up would be a monster. Without criticism and challenges to decisions made, no-one can ultimately become anything worthwhile.

We have a church in which those who love it the most, and whose perceptions may be the keenest, are required to take a host of questions, suggestions or criticisms and never give them voice.

The only negative feed-back must originate from either outside the church, or if inside they are cast out because they are weak in the faith and on the road to apostasy. This was the inevitable evolution from the cult of personality. It is still unfolding. It will progress in a funnel which narrows over time until, at last, when the work has been fully completed, we will have a Pope who is infallible. Not because he is always inspired, but instead because he holds the keys to bind on earth and in heaven, and as a result God is bound by whatever he does. History assures us this will be the case. UNLESS, of course, we open things up to a more healthy way of going about our Father's business.

Well, this is too long. I'm not done. But I'll add more later.

APRIL 22, 2010

The Traditions of Men, Part 3, Continued

This subject causes a great deal of anxiety for saints. The fact it causes anxiety is proof that the saints have become conditioned to a mythology which requires everything to be good, all to be well, our current path a direct line to Zion itself, and all questions concerning the current state of affairs to be wrong. More than "wrong," questions are evidence of weak faith and the road to apostasy.

From the questions which started as soon as this subject began, I see I need to reiterate what I said at the first. I have a testimony, I am active in the church, and I am not in a position to change things. I support the brethren, pay tithing, serve where called and do not challenge the right of the regularly constituted authorities to manage the affairs of the church. I rise when President Monson enters a room I am in, I sustain him with my vote, my prayers and my confidence. I admire him. I posted about him a few days back. I meant what I said. I do not envy him nor aspire to church leadership. I am not called and do not anticipate I would ever even be considered; in part because of things like this subject appearing on this blog and concerns raised in books I have written.

I love the church and I am content as a Latter-day Saint. I love my ward and serve gladly wherever I am called.

The fact that those clarifications need to be added again, although it should have been apparent from the beginning remarks, is again revealing how shaky the saints are today. We do not have a foundation that allows us to consider alternatives. We have a single “on/off” switch for all subjects and for our testimonies. That is NOT as it should be. We should be able to confront dilemmas, difficulties, troubling news and failures by leaders while we suspend judgment and tolerate dissonance. We want instant messages, instead of having the patience to see the Hand of the Lord work over decades to bring good things from bad.

An open, candid and critical look at ourselves is not possible with people who are so insecure that they feel threatened. The progression of these insecurities will be disastrous unless at some point it is reversed. When those who raise questions are excluded, told they are weak in the faith and are on the road to apostasy, eventually everyone who is thoughtful is chased away from the church. Instead of celebrating their critical thinking and working to understand issues better, we chase some of the best minds out of the church. I wish all our critics were active members. I wish all our discussions were open enough to allow the marketplace of ideas inside the church to air everything. As I have said before, I believe the truth will prevail. You can knock it down, burn it, pave it over, kill it and threaten it, but it will prevail. A whisper of truth will overcome a hurricane of opposition. It endures. It will triumph.

I've only touched on a few matters here. I'm not going to go further at this point. However, the greater mischief we face at present is the de-emphasis of doctrine. We are raising a new breed of Latter-day Saint today whose familiarity with doctrine is negligible. They understand only a fraction of what has been restored, and for many of the doctrines, their understanding is incomplete, or so skewed that they are incorrect. Doctrine has become less important. We feed upon "inspirational stories" that salve the emotions, but do not edify the soul or bring the personal changes necessary to return to God's presence. More and more of the saints grow up inside this new environment and have never even gained a fundamental command of the doctrines which Joseph Smith restored. Gospel Doctrine classes rehash the same material every four years, which is quite challenging to those who have a memory which goes back decades. The format adopted for teaching involves group discussions, and the teacher becomes a "discussion leader." Little is learned. The group is made to share fellowship, and feel better for having attended, without any forward momentum in understanding the doctrines of salvation and exaltation.

When, over time, the leadership is replaced at all levels by those who are raised in the current milieu, the church will have completed a transformation back into a Protestant, powerless body of good people who want to do right and feel good about themselves. But the power of godliness will have fled them.

President Packer again sounded the alarm in General Conference. It was a brilliant talk. I use the term "brilliant" to describe the light within it. He said we had done a "good job of correlating" the priesthood "authority" but we had failed to disburse any "power" in the priesthood. I think it was a wonderful talk. What I would like to see discussed is whether there is a cause-and-effect between the correlation process on the one hand, and the admitted failure of priesthood power on the other hand. That discussion, however, cannot happen in the current environment. To ask the question about the underlying wisdom of the correlation process would be to directly challenge the “inspiration” of the prophet Harold B. Lee, who created this process. Therefore, any questions about correlation demonstrates that the one asking questions is weak in the faith and on the road to apostasy. So the discussion cannot occur. That is until we become a little more secure in our faith and are willing to de-mythologize the cult of personality and recognize that questions are the first step to getting answers.

I love the church, and my fellow saints. I mourn many of the changes. However, I also celebrate the fact that the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, with all its gifts, privileges, opportunities and power remains still on the earth. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints administers the fundamental ordinances of that Gospel. How far you take it is up to you.

There was a talk in General Conference given by a Seventy named Poleman, in which he distinguished between the church and the gospel. The talk is still available on-line in its original form. However, he was required to re-record the talk to conform to the correlation department’s challenge to any statement which distinguished between the church and the gospel. Right now testimonies within the church recite the mantra “I know the church is true.” The correlation process has made the church into god. People’s testimonies of the “church” have supplanted their testimonies of Christ. Read any Ensign issue of any Conference held within ten years after the triumph of the correlation process, and consider how many of the talks focus upon the church and the church’s processes and goodness, in contrast to how many of the talks focus upon Jesus Christ and His doctrines. Christ's role has been diminished by the emphasis upon the correlated church.

These are trends and traditions. They are at their incipient stages. We are a 180 year old church. Barely out of the cradle, so to speak. But trends endure. Add another 200 years of progression of these trends and you will vindicate the fellow who said: "When Mormons have been Mormons as long as Catholics have been Catholics, the Mormons will be more Catholic than the Catholics." If you want to see the future of the church in its present course, attend Mass this Saturday evening (held on Saturday so as to keep your Sunday open for basketball playoffs and MLB play now starting).

APRIL 22, 2010

Kim Smith Concert

Subject: Kim Smith Concert

April 30th 7 pm 2001 S State Street North Building Main floor
(Salt Lake Council) Auditorium

COMMENTS:

Taylor · APRIL 22, 2010 AT 10:33 PM

Who is Kim Smith?

Brian Bowler · APRIL 22, 2010 AT 10:35 PM

I attended the Book of Mormon Evidence Conference before General Conference, and Kim Smith and her son was there. I was really touched by her music, her stories of the Smith family, and the Spirit of Emma and Joseph. I felt for the Smith Family, and know that Joseph and Emma still work and yearn to bring their family together.

It taught me that the Gospel truly is about families.

Brian Bowler

Clinton, UT

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 23, 2010 AT 6:36 AM

She is a direct lineal descendant of Joseph and Emma Smith. Her son looks uncannily like Joseph Smith. They perform original music based upon their insights and experiences. The concert is free.

APRIL 23, 2010

Ultimate Source

I really appreciate my status as a lay member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I'm no-one who any of you should think important. I'm just like you. I offer my opinions and they are yours to consider as you try and sort out the challenges of this life. The ultimate source for light, truth and salvation is the Lord. Not me. Not even an institution. Not some other man. You should be dependent upon the Lord for your knowledge and Him alone. The Spirit brings you words from Him.

As you listen to any man speak, measure what he has to say against the standard found in the scriptures and against the whisperings of the Spirit to you. Any man who tries to come between you and the Lord is seeking to make themselves an idol and they will lead you astray. There is no-one who can stand between you and the Lord. He alone is the keeper of the gate, and He does not now and never has employed a servant there (2 Ne. 9:41).

You should obtain your own independent knowledge of everything another man tells you. If you don't then you are surrendering what should never be surrendered: your own agency and responsibility.

APRIL 23, 2010

“...for it shall be sweet unto them.”

I received another inquiry (in the form of a comment on this post) about the subject of self-defense, citing various scriptures from the Book of Mormon as proof I have a flawed view. This is the comment:

I have thought it would be so nice and easy to just let them kill me and go to the spirit world scot free as it were! Clapsed in the arms of Jesus again! No blood on MY hands...

But then I read in the Book of Mormon, the commandment of Jesus:

“And again, the Lord has said that: “Ye shall defend your families even unto bloodshed.”

Alma 43:47

Very clear. So I do not think I am obedient to Him if I refuse to take up arms. How do you reconcile this, Denver?

There is a further warning from this marvelous Book for our day that is apropos: Alma 48:24: “they could not suffer to lay down their lives, that their wives and their children should be massacred by...barbarous cruelty”

You see, I cannot ignore the high probability that I will need to defend my wife and children from “massacre by barbarous cruelty” in the Last Days.

I plead with you NOT to suffer to just lay down your life and watch as you see them massacred.”

I debated over whether to let the subject die or to respond. I decided I'd give the following reply:

The Book of Mormon history of an escalating arms race between the smaller Nephite people, against the greater Lamanite people, teaches us many things. First, technology can level the playing field. The Nephite technological adaptations kept them safe from Lamanite aggression. Second, an arms race continues after each encounter. The Nephites began using armor. The Lamanites adopted the use of armor. Later wars included this technical advance on both sides of the battlefield. The result was still more innovation by the Nephites, with controlled fortifications, limited points of entry, and kill-zones with cross fire from towers aimed at the aggressive Lamanites. All of this reads like the modern Military-Industrial Complex (to use Pres. Eisenhower's term). It ended badly, however.

Ultimately, it was not the force of arms that brought about peace. It was conversion of the Lamanites, and the Divine power in judgment to destroy the wicked. Conversion allowed some Lamanites to survive the destruction. But the hand of the Lord was what ended the widespread wickedness, killing and disorder.

The conversion of the Lamanites was greatly accelerated when the group converted by Ammon determined to lay down their arms, even at the cost of their lives. Over a thousand of them were killed before the killing stopped. When it stopped, however, more were converted than had been killed.

When the Lord visited them and they experienced a two century long hiatus from warfare, their Zion did not have arms, killing or war. When they divided again, they set in motion a return to the earlier cycles, ultimately ending in the complete destruction of the Nephites. They left a record. Their advice cannot be divided from their history. Their history was filled with violence. It ended in the genocide of the "good guys." The end of the record is referred to by Mormon all throughout his abridgment of the records. We should not miss the end of his story as we read the unfolding story.

Death is not the end. John the Baptist was arrested and beheaded. He suffered no loss. He returned to minister to Joseph and Oliver and bestowed upon us a lost priesthood. Peter and James were martyrs. They suffered no loss either. Stephen was stoned to death, and had the heavens open to him and a visit with the Father before his death. He died forgiving those who stoned him, as he was at that moment filled with grace and charity toward others. Stephen suffered no loss. Joseph Smith was killed by a mob. He suffered no loss. He moved to his inheritance. Isaiah was put inside a hollow log and sawed in two. He suffered no loss.

Killing is not as easy as the theoretically-macho may think. It changes a person. My father landed on Omaha Beach on the morning of June 6, 1944. On the morning of June 7, 1944, he was the only one of his company who was able to continue fighting. He was there at the liberation of Paris. He fought in the Battle of the Bulge. He killed men. It affected him. He could hardly speak about it. What few comments he made were separated by years in between. A sentence here, a comment there. Even when asked directly, he wouldn't offer more than a paragraph. It wasn't a memory he could either forget or bring himself to discuss openly. It is a great and terrible thing to kill another.

Using popular culture to illustrate the point, there is a younger partner of Clint Eastwood's character in Unforgiven. He talked about how much he wanted to kill someone. After he had finally killed a man, he said to Eastwood's character, "I'm not like you." Meaning that he couldn't reconcile himself to having taken a man's life. That is only a movie and Hollywood and perhaps overwrought. But it nevertheless touches upon something absolutely true—killing is irrevocable. There is no repair for having taken another's life. Those who do carry that to the grave.

You can toss about quotes from anyone you please. But when you cause another's life to end you have done something irrevocable. You have crossed a line which, even with all your prayers and regrets, you cannot reclaim.

Given the choice between killing and being killed, I think a perfectly rational person can decide they would rather be killed than kill. And I think the Lord could respect a decision of that kind, as well. Death can be sweet for those who are prepared (D&C 42:46).

APRIL 24, 2010

Who Will Save You?

I was asked if some mortals, like Jesus Christ, are inerrant, perfect and without sin. Actually, the question was phrased differently. The question asked if I thought the church president could make mistakes. [I suppose my rephrase gives my view.] But to clarify:

I do not think any person should trust ANY other person to save them. Don't trust another man, for all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God. Don't trust me. Don't rely upon those who are gifted, those who lead you, or any man.

I am more afraid that this people have so much confidence in their leaders that they will not inquire for themselves of God whether they are led by him. I am fearful they settle down in a state of blind self-security, trusting their eternal destiny in the hands of their leaders with a reckless confidence that in itself would thwart the purposes of God in their salvation, and weaken that influence they could give to their leaders, did they know for themselves, by the revelations of Jesus, that they are led in the right way. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 135)

If a man is a leader and he has the Spirit of God upon him, and speaks by the Spirit of God words of eternal life, then I follow the Spirit of God, not the man. I trust no one. And I look to find the Spirit of God, wherever it speaks, without regard to who possess it.

APRIL 24, 2010

Faithful to the Gospel of Jesus Christ

I've been asked why I remain faithful if I think things are off track. (That's an abbreviated way of stating a long question.)

I believe in the Book of Mormon. Therefore I expect that the Latter-days will be filled with trouble, difficulties, and the church will be struggling with perplexities. If we didn't have problems we wouldn't fit the pattern Nephi, Mormon and Moroni warned about. So when I see problems I do not get anxious, I accept what is and deal with it.

I don't blame anyone. We didn't get here by some single person's failings. We have proceeded carefully, and with the best of intentions. But we still have challenges. That is part of being here in the Telestial Kingdom.

Doing a little good, conferring a little hope, and bringing a little light into the world each day is as much as a person can hope for. I can do that. I am grateful for the limited sphere inside of which I serve. I fight on that small bit of ground and leave the bigger picture for those who are responsible for the bigger picture.

I have a great deal of sympathy for those who are required to lead in this troubled world. I doubt I could have done any better, and fear I may have done a lot worse. So I temper any shortcomings I see with the recognition that things aren't as easy as we sometimes think they are. I'm grateful for what I have been given and am content with life.

APRIL 25, 2010

What Can They Share?

I was asked:

For those among us who have had a personal visit with the Lord...what can they share with us that have not? Can they share what our Lord looked like? His eye color? hair? height? how was he dressed? Is he among us now? How did he sound? Is this too sacred to be discussed openly?

From the beginning, mankind was told not to make idols and displace their reverence for God by a physical image or talisman. It has been enshrined in the Ten Commandments (Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them. (Ex. 20:4–5).

The commandment extends to the “likeness of anything that is in heaven” and would include the Lord.

The images I have seen of Him are for the most part inaccurate. The reason we don't have accurate pictures is in all likelihood related to the fact that those who come to see Him would understand the importance of avoiding idols and would question the wisdom of recreating an image of Him that might be used by others to displace their attention and worship.

What is appropriate is to affirm that He is real, that He lives, that He has been resurrected from the dead, and that He came, sacrificed and rose because of His role as the Savior and Redeemer of mankind. I've written as much as I've been asked to write about Him by way of testimony in the Appendix to Eighteen Verses, in Come, Let Us Adore Him, and a brief physical description in Nephi's Isaiah. However, the brief physical description is not enough from which to reconstruct an image. It merely refers to some of His physical attributes and then tie them to the scriptural accounts to show why the narrative in the New Testament would read as it does.

The most important understanding of Christ is tied to what He suffered in Gethsemane. D&C_19:16–20 and my testimony about Gethsemane are both useful in understanding what He went through and what role our own actions will play in obtaining the benefits of His Atonement.

COMMENTS:

db schroeder · APRIL 25, 2010 AT 5:12 PM

Denver,

Clarify one thing..

It is true that in mortality he wasn't as beautiful as He is now, correct?

In mortality he was much more common looking.

We read this in Isaiah I believe.

db's

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 26, 2010 AT 5:24 PM

The Isaiah statement ("there was no beauty in him that we should desire him") I have rendered: "He was not bonafide" or "He had no credentials to command respect" as a better translation of the underlying meaning. He was not a recognized authority figure. That was the meaning Isaiah was communicating, not something about His physical appearance.

APRIL 25, 2010

What Does it Mean to Possess Your Soul?

I was asked this question:

"In one scripture the Lord connects patience to possessing your soul. What does it mean to possess your soul? And it's connection to patience? This is a very new connection for me."

My answer:

That's a great question. The verse is D&C 101:38, reads: "And seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life." To possess your soul is to have body and spirit inseparably connected, in a resurrected and immortal state. D&C 88:14-16 explains:

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body are the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul.

To possess your soul, therefore, is to have the resurrection.

In the context of 101:38, it is also saying that while in that resurrected state you will "inherit eternal life." This means to receive exaltation. So the concept that these words are covering is the concept of exaltation and receiving, in the resurrection, a Celestial inheritance.

Patience is tied directly to this. Indeed, patience is required for this. No person arrives in this state without offering sacrifice sufficient to develop the faith to lay hold on eternal life. That is explained in the post a day or so ago about the Sixth Lecture on Faith. This kind of sacrifice is very rarely done in a single act, but over a number of years by faithful obedience to the Lord's plan for your own life. It is developed by learning the Lord's will for your life and then following that will.

The whole concept begins by framing the issue around, "seeking the face of the Lord always." That is, possessing your soul, eternal life, and exaltation are all tied to the quest to return to God's presence here in mortality. It is tied to the path of seeking The Second Comforter. As you know, I've written about that process and it takes more room than this blog can accommodate. But this verse it speaking about that process.

It's a beautiful verse. It is another affirmation that The Second Comforter is intended to be a regular minister to mankind. Not some distant, unattainable visit, limited to a select few because of its difficulty.

CHAPTER 11

Awake and Arise

APRIL 26, 2010

Awake and Arise

From time to time I am constrained to say something that is beyond what I feel comfortable saying in a public venue. This is one of those times.

The content of this may not be for everyone. In fact, I think there can be a lot of mischief done by reading this if you are unprepared. Nevertheless, I'm constrained to cover this by Him who knows much better than I do—I readily recognize I am a fool. When something like this happens, I bury my own feelings and do what I'm told.

I pointed out a bit ago that Joseph Smith received the sealing authority in a revelation to him sometime between 1829 and 1843, the exact date is not known. The way in which he received this authority was by a direct revelation to him from heaven. The “voice of the Lord” came to Joseph making the declaration. At the same time Joseph's calling and election were made sure. Here are the verses from Section 132:

⁴⁵ For I have conferred upon you the keys and power of the priesthood, wherein I restore all things, and make known unto you all things in due time.

⁴⁶ And verily, verily, I say unto you, that whatsoever you seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven; and whatsoever you bind on earth, in my name and by my word, saith the Lord, it shall be eternally bound in the heavens; and whosoever sins you remit on earth shall be remitted eternally in the heavens; and whosoever sins you retain on earth shall be retained in heaven.

⁴⁷ And again, verily I say, whomsoever you bless I will bless, and whomsoever you curse I will curse, saith the Lord; for I, the Lord, am thy God.

⁴⁸ And again, verily I say unto you, my servant Joseph, that whatsoever you give on earth, and to whomsoever you give any one on earth, by my word and according to my law, it shall be visited with blessings and not cursings, and with my power, saith the Lord, and shall be without condemnation on earth and in heaven.

⁴⁹ For I am the Lord thy God, and will be with thee even unto the end of the world, and through all eternity; for verily I seal upon you your exaltation, and prepare a throne for you in the kingdom of my Father, with Abraham your father.

⁵⁰ Behold, I have seen your sacrifices, and will forgive all your sins; I have seen your sacrifices in obedience to that which I have told you. Go, therefore, and I make a way for your escape, as I accepted the offering of Abraham of his son Isaac.

No one noticed this when I put it up, and no one has asked any questions about this. Therefore it is apparent that none of you have been prepared to receive what this is talking about. I am going to try to help you to see things by asking questions. I will not be answering them. I just offer them to you to ponder:

Did you notice this is referring to “power” and not authority?

Do you see any connection between this “power” and President Packer’s talk in General Conference about the church’s inability to disseminate “power” among the saints in the same way the church has been able to disseminate authority?

Does sealing authority and calling and election necessarily go together?

Can a man hold sealing authority if his calling and election have not been made sure? How does this authority come to a man?

Must it come from the word of the Lord, declaring it from heaven, or can it come by some other kind of laying on of hands from another man?

Since Joseph received it from the declaration of God from heaven, and Nephi received it the very same way (see Helaman 10:6–11), is this the only way to receive it?

If it comes from heaven alone, can any institution ever control this “power” generation after generation by handing it down from man to man?

Why did Joseph receive this power by the declaration of God from heaven, perhaps as early as 1829, outside the Temple and apart from the vision in Section 110?

Since Elijah’s words in Section 110:13–16 do not mention the “power to seal” did Joseph really get the sealing “power” from the vision in the Kirtland Temple?

Does Elijah only confirm the process of restoring keys has completed, but sealing “power” came from somewhere else?

Is it possible that the institutional church has one understanding, but the truth and the scriptures teach another understanding?

If that is possible, then why have you not been studying things out for yourself to decide what the truth is concerning where this kind of “power” comes from?

Is this related to the “sealing” which is done, not by the church, but by the angels as revealed in D&C 77:11?

Should you get a testimony of Christ, rather than recite merely that you “know the church is true?” Can the church be true, and yet your soul not saved?

Do the ordinances of salvation, including sealing you up to eternal life, require you to have “power” given to you from heaven?

With respect to the words in D&C 121:36: “That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.”

Do these words relate to this same subject?

Do these words confirm that if priesthood “power” has been lost that the remaining priesthood “authority” cannot bind or seal?

Do the words “that they may be conferred upon us, it is true” (in 121:37) confirm the very real distinction between “authority” and “power”?

Is President Packer trying to alert us to something very important missing in the current state of the church?

The questions are not intended to suggest any answer. They are food for thought. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is so important a subject that you ought to be thinking deeply about it. Joseph Smith said:

[T]he things of God are of deep import; and time, and experience, and careful and ponderous and solemn thoughts can only find them out. Thy mind, O man! if thou wilt lead a soul unto salvation, must stretch as high as the utmost heavens, and search into and contemplate the darkest abyss, and the broad expanse of eternity-thou must commune with God. How much more dignified and noble are the thoughts of God, than the vain imaginations of the human heart! None but fools will trifle with the souls of men.

(DHC vol. 3, page 295)

We should not be dealing with the Gospel at a superficial level. We should be ashamed of how we have been treating it. Again, Joseph said:

How vain and trifling have been our spirits, our conferences, our councils, our meetings, our private as well as public conversations—too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending for the dignified characters of the called and chosen of God, according to the purposes of His will, from before the foundation of the world! We are called to hold the keys of the mysteries of those things that have been kept hid from the foundation of the world until now.
(Id.)

A religion that allows you to foolishly waste the days of your probation will not save you. That religion is NOT the faith that Abraham followed or that Jesus Christ taught. If you are attending “vain and trifling” meetings that are “low, mean, vulgar and condescending” then you must do something about your own education in the faith to obtain exaltation.

The path trod by the ancients is exactly the same path every saved soul must walk. Read this (blog post - “Lectures of Faith No. 6” - April 21, 2010) again.

I testify that you can know for a certainty the answer to these questions. Anyone can. Even the least of the Saints.

I wish all mankind might be saved. Neglect and indifference seem to be such prevailing impediments to the salvation of the souls of men that Satan must rejoice, look up at heaven with a great chain in his hands, and declare that he has bound all mankind! How little the world has changed since the time of Enoch.

Awake. Arise.

Your soul is in jeopardy.

COMMENTS:

DKD · APRIL 26, 2010 AT 3:46 PM

Nevertheless, I'm constrained to cover this by Him who knows much better than I do – I readily recognize I am a fool. When something like this happens, I bury my own feelings and do what I'm told.

Have you been asked by the Lord to give this message?

Please pardon my question if it is inappropriate.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 26, 2010 AT 5:32 PM

Since the power of priesthood is based upon the power of heaven, and the power of heaven cannot be controlled or handled apart from the principles of righteousness, I think Section 121 ties the two together. I believe all real authority comes only and exclusively from God. Men are nothing without that (Him).

When the Lord suggests something to me, He gets my attention. I've long since quit resisting. I put a comment up on that some time ago. Something like "I've never won an argument with the Lord" as I recall.

APRIL 26, 2010

Get Busy!

Another statement from Joseph Smith worth considering as part of deciding how seriously you would like to be a disciple of Christ's:

All men know that they must die. And it is important that we should understand the reasons and causes of our exposure to the vicissitudes of life and of death, and the designs and purposes of God in our coming into the world, our sufferings here, and our departure hence. What is the object of our coming into existence, then dying and falling away, to be here no more? It is but reasonable to suppose that God would reveal something in reference to the matter, and it is a subject we ought to study more than any other. We ought to study it day and night, for the world is ignorant in reference to their true condition and relation. If we have any claim on our Heavenly Father for anything, it is for knowledge on this important subject. Could we read and comprehend all that has been written from the days of Adam, on the relation of man to God and angels in a future state, we should know very little about it. Reading the experience of others, or the revelation given to them, can never give us a comprehensive view of our condition and true relation to God. Knowledge of these things can only be obtained by experience through the ordinances of God set forth for that purpose. Could you gaze into heaven five minutes, you would know more than you would by reading all that ever was written on the subject. (DHC vol. 6, page 50)

The definition of “ordinances of God” are not all contained in a formal church setting. Read again the experiences of others in scripture and you will find that a great deal takes place between the Lord and those who follow Him. When He appears He also ministers. There is also the description of the “sealing” which will qualify those living in our day to become a member of the Church of the Firstborn, which involves an ordinance performed by “angels to whom is given power” and to whom this ministry belongs (D&C 77:11).

Search the scriptures. They testify of all things. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints administers the ordinances of salvation and prepares you to receive further light and knowledge directly from the Lord. If you have received what the Lord offers through the church, but have failed to take the final admonition to receive further light and knowledge by conversing directly with Him, then your salvation has not been perfected. You still have work left before you.

Get busy.

APRIL 27, 2010

God is no Respector of Persons

I am surprised by how people regard me as something special. I have been blessed by the Lord to be able to write some books and put some information on this blog. However, if you were raised LDS and put forth some nominal effort to living your religion, you have lived a better life than I have. I wasn't raised LDS and had no understanding of the Gospel, or the underlying reasons for the commandments. Therefore, I never obeyed even a fraction of the commandments that you have grown up following.

I am absolutely convinced that any one of you is a better candidate than I was to receive an audience with the Lord. The wonder of this process is not that someone has done it, but that so few have. Given that I am probably the least qualified, the point should not be lost on you. If it has happened to me, then it absolutely can and should happen to you.

God is no respector of persons. All are alike to Him. Qualifications are based upon the behavior and faith of the person, not on their status or past mistakes.

You probably think your errors are more serious an impediment to God accepting you than He ever has. He doesn't want to judge you, He wants to heal you. He wants to give you what you lack, teach you to be better and to bless you. He doesn't want to belittle, demean or punish you. Ask Him to forgive and He forgives. Even very serious sins. He does not want you burdened with them. He wants you to leave them behind.

His willingness to leave those errors in the past and remember them no more is greater than you can imagine. It is a guiding principle for the Atonement. Asking for forgiveness is almost all that is required to be forgiven.

What alienates us from Him is not our sins. He will forgive them. What we lack is the confidence to ask in faith, nothing doubting, for His help. He can and will help when you do so.

The sins that offend Him are not the errors, weaknesses and foolishness of the past. He is offended when we are forgiven by Him, and then return to the same sin. That shows a lack of gratitude for His forgiveness. Even then, however, there are addictions, compulsions and weaknesses that we sometimes struggle with for years, even decades. When the sin is due to some difficulty based on biology, physiology or an inherent weakness that we fight for years to overcome, then His patience with us is far greater than our own. He will help in the fight. He will walk along side you as you fight. He does not expect you to run faster than you have strength. When, at last, because of age or infirmity, a troubling weakness is at last overcome, He will readily accept your repentance and let you move forward clean, whole and forgiven. That is His ministry—to forgive and make whole.

I know all my mistakes. They are greater than most of yours. I am in awe of His mercy and forgiveness. I am not at all impressed by my worthiness. It is nothing. It consists of borrowed finery from Him who has let me use His great worthiness to cover my own failings. To the extent that I have any merit, it comes from Him. I remain astonished that He would condescend for someone like me.

It is a wonder some think I have an advantage. I assure you that the promised blessings are available to ALL. If that were not true then someone as weak, simple and flawed as I am would never have had the hope that I now have in Christ.

APRIL 27, 2010

Opposing Wickedness Through Violence

There is a continuing unease about the subject of opposing wickedness through violence. So I thought I would add this additional explanation:

I do not foresee that a gun will be effective against radioactivity; nor against weaponized anthrax. I read the plagues that are coming and the descriptions in D&C 29:15–21 and I do not foresee a handgun doing me any good under those circumstances. I see wicked being killed, but no role for me and a sidearm to join in the fray.

I do not foresee any need for Zion to be protected by armed machine-gun nests around a perimeter when a pillar of smoke by day and fire by night hangs over them (D&C 45:65–71). In the description, it does not say they go up with songs of joy, interrupted by occasional gunfire and all hell breaking loose. It says they proceed quite peacefully, singing songs of everlasting joy (verse 71).

When sickness and scourge are poured out, there will be widespread death and destruction. But there is no need for me to join in the killing. In fact, all those who take up the sword are included within the ranks of the wicked scheduled to die (D&C 45:30–33).

I think the “power” we need in the Priesthood of God will be necessary to protect us from plagues. To stay the disease which will be poured out. To keep at bay the effects of the illnesses caused by the wickedness and evil of men who, killing one another and leaving the unburied dead to rot, will spread cholera, diphtheria and other illness.

I do not foresee the need to take up arms. The violence of nature will be responsible for killing many. In fact, the depopulation of the earth will be as a result of the following, as I understand it:

- War
- Pestilence incident to war
- Famine (incident to war and pestilence)
- Drought (incident to wickedness)
- Hail (to destroy what few crops remain)
- Earthquakes and Tempests (targeting those who remain alive but who are wicked and threaten Zion)

Nowhere on my list is there an entry for a Zion-based sniper unit. (I’m just trying to let a little humor into this, not mocking this idea. It is a serious idea to be sure, deserving serious thought and pondering.)

What we are going to face is global genocide. A handgun won’t do much good against the things that are prophesied. There may be isolated opportunities to shoot a bad guy. But there may also be the same isolated bad guy who, in his fear and cowardice, may be vulnerable to conversion to the Gospel if we don’t shoot him. What is coming will intimidate mankind so fearfully that men’s hearts will fail them. I think preaching to them while they are in such a stupor rather than shooting them may work. And if not, well then I haven’t taken my brother’s life.

APRIL 28, 2010

Holy Ghost vs. The Holy Spirit

I was asked this question:

Can you comment on the Holy Ghost vs. The Holy Spirit and who Jesus is and who the Father is, etc... Also, is it possible that Jesus is the same Spirit as the Holy Ghost? Moses 5:9

This is fraught with debatable language in the scriptures. There are those who will absolutely disagree with what I have to say. I can explain how I have sorted it out to my understanding, but you should recognize that there are others who would take a different view of the scriptures and of the definition of these roles of the Godhead.

First the clarification:

The Holy Ghost is a personage. It is an individual. It is a Spirit that will dwell inside you (D&C 130:22).

The Holy Spirit is the power of God which fills the immensity of space (D&C 88:12–13).

Now the problem:

Sometimes the Holy Spirit is called the “Light of Christ” rather than the Holy Spirit (D&C 88:7–11).

Sometimes the Holy Ghost is called the Holy Spirit (Luke 11:13).

Whether you are reading something about the Holy Spirit or Holy Ghost is something that must be determined by the context, not the language used.

The relationship between the Holy Spirit or Light of Christ and every living thing, whether a planet, plant, animal, human or ecosystem is direct, immediate and continual. They are all borrowing power from the Holy Spirit to live, move breath, remain organized, and do according to their own wills (Mosiah 2:21–25).

This is the means by which the Holy Ghost, which resides inside of you, receives intelligence from Christ.

The Holy Ghost is the “record of heaven” which lives inside you and that you have lost contact with because of the veil. It is a personage of spirit who resides inside you, and you must “receive” it after baptism by finally listening to that inner “truth of all things” or “record of the Father and the Son” (Moses 6:61, 66).

The Holy Ghost bears record of the Son. When the Son speaks to you through the Holy Ghost you hear the words in the first-person. Hence the Holy Ghost speaking that it “is the Son” in Moses 5:9.

I’m keeping this short because the more I explain the more questions will arise. So clarity on this topic is almost invariably related to brevity.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 10:06 AM

Out of 1 Nephi 11, Here’s a phrase I don’t understand fully: I was caught away in the Spirit of the Lord. Why did Nephi use the word “in” instead of “by”?

And then:

I spake unto him as a man speaketh; for I beheld that he was in the form of a man; yet nevertheless, I knew that it was the Spirit of the Lord; and he spake unto me as a man speaketh with another.

Who is this talking with Nephi? It seems like he is saying he looked like the form of a man, yet he knew it was something different (a God instead? or was it the “Spirit” of the Lord, and not his form, like a sci-fi hologram projection from outer space?).

Does this shed light on the topic in this post any about the Holy Ghost?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 10:22 AM

Being “caught away in the Spirit” is referring to the experience of being moved to another location but going only as a spirit. The event can seem so physical that you are not sure if you have been physically or only spiritually caught away. But you are moved to another location for what you are then shown.

The personage Nephi saw was Christ, but before His incarnation, when He appeared as a spirit-being. His body was composed of spirit, but looked as the body of a man. This was the same manner in which He appeared to the Brother of Jared when he saw the hand come from behind the veil to touch the stones. The description as a “form of a man” is describing the fact that Jesus Christ was a person, yet God, and appears to the senses as a man in form.

There are those who have speculated this personage was the Holy Ghost. That is incorrect. It was Jesus Christ.

The Zang Family · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 10:41 AM

Thanks. How is your body preserved when your spirit is gone? Does the Holy Spirit as described above keep it alive, or is it painful when you return to it? Is it always of necessity a near-death experience? Or is it a more mature and faith-developed understanding/appreciation of dreaming?

Anonymous · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 1:56 PM

So does that apply to Mary being “caught away in the spirit”? (Same wording.) Her physical body was left behind?

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 4:10 PM

The expression in that context is talking about another matter. She was also said to be “overshadowed” by the Holy Ghost, etc. These are various expressions to communicate that the Child she conceived came from God, and not by normal processes involving an earthly father.

There is also the example of Philip, who was physically moved by the Holy Spirit to another location. This expression involved the direction to move and minister elsewhere, as a result of which he left the eunuch and went elsewhere. There is also the example of Adam's baptism, in which his baptism was done by the "Holy Ghost" carrying him away to the water, putting him under the water, and bringing him back from the water. In that instance Adam's movement was physical, involved submersion into the water beside which the incident took place, and was inspired by the Holy Spirit and direction given him by the Lord.

There are other examples, but the phrase is descriptive of the inspired movement to a new scene or location in which a revelation or event takes place while the person is "in the spirit." These things seem so physical as to make it impossible to say they are spirit-only events. Paul said repeatedly he did not know if he was in or out of his body when caught up to the third heaven. This was because all feeling, senses, smell, touch, sight, etc. are as if in the body.

Read Joseph Smith's first vision in the PofGP again, and you will note that "when he came to, he found himself lying on his back." Meaning that he was having an experience with the Father and Son, which took place while "caught away" in the Spirit.

APRIL 28, 2010

A "friend" of God

Here's a concept to ponder...

In the beginning, our relationship with God is rather primitive. We start out fearing Him and following His "commandments" in the hope of appeasing Him or avoiding punishment.

We later get some insight that allows us to see Him as a more loving God. As a result of that insight and growth, we begin to view the commandments as warnings and blessings that will benefit us if we heed them.

Developmentally there is a point somewhere far distant along this path where we become a "friend" of God. Abraham achieved this. When he did, the relationship was quite different than what it was in the beginning.

When the Lord requested Isaac be sacrificed, it wasn't a "commandment." The language in the KJV Bible is too coarse to really communicate the idea underlying what happened. It wasn't a "commandment" to Abraham. It was more of a polite suggestion. It was an expression of the Lord's preference. The suggestion was quite gentle. Abraham responded to this polite suggestion from the Lord by proceeding without question. He was willing to sacrifice his long awaited heir.

Now if you can get your hands around this idea, then you can begin to see the difference between where our relationship with God starts and where it should eventually end. At the beginning, our relationship with God is quite primitive. At the end it is a trusted, loving friend in whom absolute confidence resides in the one who has become His friend.

There is such a profound difference between one end of the spectrum and the other that it hinders our understanding of the examples we see in scripture. We distort things considerably when we view His relationships with others in the scriptures in the same context we relate to Him.

When a person has become a "friend" of God, they are introduced to another level of language and experience with Him. When they become a member of His family, they have yet another kind of relationship. The openness and love that exists, and the accompanying trust that goes with it, is something quite distinct from the coarse beginnings of the path.

The faiths which view our relationship to God as "slave to master" are only in the beginning of the process. From that end things which seem to be alright (and may even be alright) are different from what is found further along the progression.

Your end is to become part of the household of God, a member of the Church of the Firstborn, and a family member of God the Father. When that happens, the relationship is considerably more polite and respectful than it is when you are first experiencing awareness of God's existence and His commandments to bring us light and truth.

COMMENTS:

JR Morgan · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 6:24 PM

Friends bear and share each others burdens. Friendship for me is sacred. I strive to be a friend to all but there are a few whom which I feel the relationship truly reciprocal and those relationships are a pure joy and light to me. These are those that I have walked miles of this life's journey with, who know my heart, my joys and my sorrows. They are those that believe in me and honor who are not afraid to challenge me. They are whom I would gladly give all to support and sacrifice so they may be happy. I look forward to the sublime association to my Savior.

Mercyngrace · APRIL 28, 2010 AT 8:32 PM

Isn't this the natural progression of every loving parent-child relationship?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 20, 2010 AT 8:05 AM

Friends embrace.

APRIL 29, 2010

Abraham and Sarah

I have been thinking a lot lately about Abraham and Sarah and their relationship. Their story is one of the greatest in history.

Little details in the story are touching. The “ten years” that Sarah waited (Gen. 16:3) before urging Abraham to father a child with Hagar is based upon a custom at the time. Abraham’s willingness to follow the custom was because the Lord promised him children, Sarah could not conceive and Sarah urged him to do so. In fact, of the three, Sarah’s urging was what seems to persuade Abraham. Her urging is tempered by making it seem she is looking out for her own interests: “it may be that I (Sarah) may obtain children by her” (Gen. 16:2). This softens the request, makes it a blessing for Sarah, and casts it in terms which do not belittle or dismiss Sarah. Then, as the account reads: “Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai (Gen. 16:2).

Abraham was willing to wait on the Lord’s promises of children. He was willing to forego the customs that allowed a man to take another wife. It was Sarah’s gentle persuasion that convinced Abraham to take Hagar. Sarah was loved by Abraham with his whole heart. It was this great marriage relationship that allowed the Lord to preserve them as the parents of “all righteous.” A new Adam for the Lord’s covenant people. And, of course, there cannot be an Adam without an Eve. Sarah becomes the “Mother of All Righteous.”

This is more critical than most people recognize. It was because of this important relationship that the tenth parable in Ten Parables begins with the marriage relationship. Without this, there was no reason to save the man.

Marriage is separate from its two parties. It has a life of its own. The husband and the wife may be parties to the marriage, but the marriage itself is a separate and living thing. It is distinct from the two partners in the relationship, and greater than either of them. It lives. It is real.

The only people whose right to eternal life has been secured, to my knowledge, came as a result of the marriage relationship and its worthiness to be preserved into eternity. Neither is the man without the woman nor the woman without the man in the Lord. Therefore, if you are interested in eternal life, the very first place to begin is inside your marriage.

APRIL 29, 2010

Repentance and Redemption

I was asked this question:

In D&C 138:57–59 it states: “the faithful elders from this dispensation, when they depart this life continue their labors by preaching to those who are in darkness and under bondage of sin, etc.”

The scripture then says that the dead who repent will be redeemed, through obedience to the ordinances of the house of the lord. I thought temple ordinances, including baptisms for the dead, were only necessary for those who are heirs to at least some degree in the Celestial Kingdom (See Doctrines of Salvation, II, p. 191).

If this is so, then why does the scripture go on to say “[a]nd after they have paid the penalty of their transgressions, and are washed clean, shall receive a reward according to their works, for they are heirs of salvation.”

If they repent and are redeemed through the ordinances of the temple then why are they paying the penalty for their transgressions? I understood D&C 19:15–18 to mean if you repent then because of the atonement you do not suffer because Christ suffered for us. As I read this scripture it can only mean one of two things. First, some people who end up in the Celestial Kingdom must suffer for their own sins. Second it could mean that these people are not going to the Celestial Kingdom (“for they shall receive a reward according to their works”). So am I wrong that an “heir of salvation” (not “exaltation”) can end up in the C, T or T Kingdom, as all are kingdoms of glory and the heirs of each of these kingdoms are saved with a “resurrection of endless life and happiness”? (Mosiah 16:11). And if so then why did they need the ordinances of the temple?

My response:

To enter into the Celestial Kingdom requires the ordinances of the Temple. As explained in D&C 131:1-4:

¹ In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;

² And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];

³ And if he does not, he cannot obtain it.

⁴ He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase.

This statement defines the “highest” as the only one involving the covenant of marriage. The other Celestial Kingdom residents would require all Temple ordinances, from washings, anointings through endowment to be able to enter and pass by the sentinels who stand guard there. Only the highest requires the new and everlasting covenant of marriage.

As to who will “suffer for their own sins” and yet enter into the Celestial Kingdom, there are at least two categories: First, those who have received their calling and election, but who return to sin, but not an unpardonable sin. Those are required to “pay the price” for this misconduct (D&C 132:26). Second, those who are “sealed up” through the faithfulness of their parents, who claim them as children of promise as a matter of right because of the sealing upon the parents. Such children will need to either qualify in their own right, or if inheritors of the promise through the merit of their parents’ sealing they will have to suffer to become clean in order to inherit what is sealed upon them by this right.

It is a good question. It shows the order in heaven and the way in which things are governed by laws established before the foundation of the world (D&C 130:20–21).

APRIL 30, 2010

Communication From the Lord

I was asked how a witness of the Spirit is felt. Here are a variety of ways in which we receive communications from the Lord:

There was a talk I still recall where Elder LeGrand Richards used the expression “goose flesh.” He was referring to the feeling he got upon hearing something he knew to be true as soon as it was spoken. He got “goose flesh” as he listened. That is not a bad way to describe how some people feel the witness from the Spirit. This form can also be replicated by stirring music, art or other performances. So if this is how one feels the Spirit, they must distinguish between an emotional outpouring and a manifestation from the Lord.

I believe that everyone’s capacity to hear the Spirit bear testimony to them is more or less equal, as all have given to them the “light of Christ” (D&C 84:46; 88:7; Moroni 7:19).

How someone recognizes the witness to them is person-specific at the start. Whether it is Elder Richards’ “goose flesh” or a burst of unmistakable insight coming from beyond, or a warmth in the heart as D&C 9:8 describes, is based upon individual sensitivities. How you feel this may differ from how I do.

When it has progressed from these initial stirrings to the “voice” which you hear within you, that assumes a more uniform experience. The “voice” is clearly not your own, and introduces ideas or concepts that are clearly not your own. You can have a dialogue with this “voice” in which your ideas are juxtaposed with those coming to you. It is not audible, but you hear it inside. It is clearly not your own voice, but that of another.

When you have proven yourself faithful and true to all required of you by the “voice” that comes into your mind and heart, then it becomes possible for angels to visit with you. Angels all come from this earth and have their mortality here (D&C 130:5). If they appear as disembodied (not-resurrected) spirits, they may appear only as beings dressed in white. They will not make physical contact with you. Satan may attempt to appear as such a being, but since he invariably tries to deceive, if you attempt to make physical contact he will reciprocate as part of his deception. As a disembodied spirit, however, you can detect his lack of physical presence when such contact is attempted. A true messenger who lacks a body will not attempt physical contact, but will deliver his message to you. If a visitor is either resurrected or translated, they may appear without glory, in which case their physical appearance will be as any other person. The only difference you will likely note is that their countenance is pure and radiates a purity that other mortals rarely manifest. If resurrected and appearing in glory, they bear unmistakable signs of Celestial Glory.

The closest image I have seen to the glory shown by a resurrected, glorified, celestial personage is the upper pattern, in gold, imprinted onto the Dome of the Rock Mosque. When I saw it for the first time a few months ago, I was startled by the pattern and its radiant glory. It is the closest earthly pattern I have seen to depicting a Celestial Glory. I do not know who fashioned the pattern, but they were depicting something that I recognized to be inspired by what lies beyond the veil and patterned after Celestial Glory itself.

Beings appearing in Celestial Glory do not show themselves, or in other words, cannot be seen, except by those only who are prepared to behold them. Others who may be present when they appear will feel a presence that often frightens them, as in the case of Daniel's companions in Daniel Chapter 10.

The final stage in development requires one to "see" the things that are being communicated. This happens when the "answer" to the inquiry is opened to view, but only inside the mind. You can actually "behold" something as if it were before you, without actually being there. Such a process is physically demanding, despite the fact it is so intangible a matter as to defy description. Seeing things by this process is not limited to time, place or location. A person exercising this gift, for example, may be able to behold Abraham as he receives the box containing the records from his father, who held the box in no particular regard because he could not open it.

When the person has developed the ability to "see," the answers to inquiries come almost entirely through the exercise of this gift. Although all these forms of messages and communication from the Lord and His messengers are still available to a seer when conditions or the circumstances warrant it.

There are seers among us. In fact, we "sustain," institutionally, fifteen men to be such every General Conference. The development of the gift, however, comes not by consequence of office alone but by the diligence of the individual. All are on equal footing before the Lord.

Therefore, although it may be conferred upon you or them, the realization of these blessings depends upon their/your faithfulness. Elder Scott, for example, uses terms in some of his talks which intimate seership. The Vision of the Redemption of the Dead (D&C 138) has language I recognize as a seer's. So does D&C 76.

COMMENTS:

DKD · APRIL 30, 2010 AT 1:28 PM

Denver,

The Dome of the Rock.... are you talking about the gold "tiles" converging at the peak of the Dome?

The tile work on the octagon base and elsewhere is spectacular as well.

<http://www.islamicity.com//Culture/MOSQUES/Jerusalem/DRock.htm>

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 30, 2010 AT 3:35 PM

On the Dome of the Rock: No, I'm talking about the interior finish, with the pattern shown there. The appearance of the pattern is very much like the “cloven tongues of fire” which one sees in Celestial Glory. I apologize that I don’t have a link to give where you can see that artwork. But it is interior, not the exterior.

Denver Snuffer · APRIL 30, 2010 AT 9:43 PM

I’ve looked at almost all the links above. Yes, that is the artwork, but the quality of the pictures is so bad that it just doesn’t do it justice. The clarity is bad and the symmetry of the art pattern is distorted. A good quality picture will give you so much better a view of this amazing piece of interior art work. Delicate, gold leaf, inset with the pattern that makes it look like flames. It is stunning if you have a good quality picture. These are not particularly good quality, but it is indeed the pattern I was referring to.

Denver Snuffer · John Pontius sent me a copy of his latest book The Triumph of Zion, which I am planning to read after I finish reading two other books I currently have underway. When John and I met last year I thought he was a noble soul and a good man.

Denver Snuffer · May 3, 2010 at 6:10 PM

Check the book The Blessings of Abraham: Becoming a Zion People, written by Douglas Clark, page 102 for a reference to the “ark” which came down from Adam containing sacred records. That’s a source. But in this post I was referring to seeing the object by virtue of the gift of seership. Nevertheless, there is a cite where you can read a bit about it.

APRIL 30, 2010

Sacred Things

I was asked this question:

What do you say to people who state: ‘I doubt people who’ve had an audience with Christ would be out writing books and blogs about it. We are counseled not to talk about sacred things. (Followed by several GA quotes.)

I would say that they should accept counsel from whomever they trust and follow it. I might add that if they read The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil they will get an answer to the question. But, if they are hostile and offended and ask the question out of fear, I would not add the clarification.

It is not necessary for everyone to be stirred up by argument or persuasion to listen to something they do not want to hear. What is coming will stir up everyone who has not been already touched by the Spirit. Patience. We're headed somewhere. The Lord remains in charge and has a plan to cause every knee to bow and every tongue to confess the truth of who He is, what He has done, and what He has been doing. We shouldn't rush people forward.

There is more mischief in introducing people to truth before they are ready to comprehend and welcome it than there is in remaining silent. It is uncharitable to tell someone a great truth which they are unprepared to accept.

MAY 2010

MAY 1, 2010

Eternal Life and the Covenant Marriage

“Eternal life” requires a couple who can have increase, or bear children. The requirement is that through the continuation of the marriage covenant men and women become exalted. And without that, they remain separate and single, saved, but not exalted. D&C 132 explains:

¹⁵ Therefore, if a man marry him a wife in the world, and he marry her not by me nor by my word, and he covenant with her so long as he is in the world and she with him, their covenant and marriage are not of force when they are dead, and when they are out of the world; therefore, they are not bound by any law when they are out of the world.

¹⁶ Therefore, when they are out of the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are appointed angels in heaven, which angels are ministering servants, to minister for those who are worthy of a far more, and an exceeding, and an eternal weight of glory.

¹⁷ For these angels did not abide my law; therefore, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity; and from henceforth are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever.

¹⁸ And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife, and make a covenant with her for time and for all eternity, if that covenant is not by me or by my word, which is my law, and is not sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, through him whom I have anointed and appointed unto this power, then it is not valid neither of force when they are out of the world, because they are not joined by me, saith the Lord, neither by my word; when they are out of the world it cannot be received there, because the angels and the gods are appointed there, by whom they cannot pass; they cannot, therefore, inherit my glory; for my house is a house of order, saith the Lord God.

The Celestial Kingdom has three heavens or degrees within it. To attain the highest, which is the only one in which the marriage covenant exists and continues, a person must have entered into a marriage and been sealed by the holy spirit of promise. As D&C 131 explains:

*In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees;
And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage];*

³ And if he does not, he cannot obtain it.

⁴ He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase.

Exaltation is tied to the marriage covenant and without an eternal marriage there cannot be exaltation.

However, (I point out hesitantly) that all these verses are phrased in the masculine. In most cases the masculine does not matter because the commandment applies to both the man and woman. That is, when mankind is referred to collectively, it is referred to in the masculine. For example, the first couple are sometimes referred to collectively as “Adam” when what is meant is Adam and Eve. Therefore, what I’m going to say is not a universal truism and cannot be applied without regard to context. Here, however, it can be applied. Because in this instance, the male’s right to exaltation is utterly dependent upon his successful completion of this requirement as part of this probation.

Women, on the other hand, who would be otherwise worthy (and that involves a great number beyond those who are parties to sealed and worthy marriage), are among those who D&C 137 describes:

⁷...All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God;

⁸ Also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom;

⁹ For I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts.

Women have, throughout history, borne their obligation of motherhood and submission to husbands with considerable success.

It is rare, however, when men have been able to retain priesthood. Apostasy is a male failing, not a female failing. Nor are the women of the Church responsible for the lack of “power” within the priesthood discussed by Elder Packer in last General Conference. This is a male failing. Therefore, when the first two quotes are read above, the significance of the masculine phrasing ought not be overlooked. The whole subject is tied to a man’s completion of a task required of him in mortality.

Women who are good mothers, worthy wives and who keep the faith will suffer no loss because of a failing husband. HOWEVER, women are required to minister in love and righteousness even to a difficult husband, as did Abigail. Marriage to a “churlish” man did not stop her from showing her own nobility. Therefore, it is not enough for a woman to determine her husband is not likely to survive the judgment, give up on him, and await the next life to learn to serve in love and patience. She has an obligation to begin that service here and now. Indeed, the worse the man, the greater the opportunity to show Christ-like devotion. There is no man whose behavior is more offensive than those for whom Christ suffered. To be like Him, and to live where He lives requires a similar capacity to forgive, love, bless, serve and elevate.

This isn’t easy. Wasn’t meant to be. Do you really think any of us are worthy to be called “gods” without first descending below all things so as to be qualified to rise above all things? Christ is not merely our Savior, He is our example. We must “follow Him” if we want to be where He is.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MAY 2, 2010 AT 9:56 PM

When it comes to conditions upon a husband’s ‘hearkening to the Lord’ as a condition of following him, I think the caution: “With what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged” is in order. The absolute and unconditional support of a wife for her husband, and in a husband for his wife, is the only way in which they can find Celestial peace. Her flaws, if they exist, ought not to be noticed. His flaws, which undoubtedly will exist (because of the difficulty of presiding anytime, anywhere over anyone continually in righteousness and meekness), also ought not to be noticed.

We are talking about godhood. We are not talking about nice people. We are talking about perfection itself. Christ is the pattern. He didn't magnify His disciples' weaknesses; He strengthened them. He forgave them. He showed by His example what they should become. He asks, in turn, that we “follow Him.”

Anonymous · JUNE 8, 2010 AT 1:01 AM

Denver,

You said that “women are required to minister in love and righteousness even to a difficult husband.” I would change the word ‘required’ to ‘asked’ meaning if she didn't, it would not be a sin, for even women are allowed self-defense from abus. Though in leaving & marrying someone else, she may not reach Exaltation either, maybe just Terrestrial K., for she didn't have True Love for her difficult husband.

But may I ask you a question?

I know you are so busy but I would really appreciate your opinion on this; How far does your belief go ‘that a wife should minister in love to her difficult husband’?

What if he abuses her in some form & doesn't repent, or commits adultery by continued affairs or porn, or even forces her through a divorce unjustifiably & goes off & marries another woman, & even gets leaders to let him be sealed to her (seemingly) in the temple.

Until what point, if any, would you say a woman is ‘required’ as you say, to continue to love & stay faithful to & minister, when she can, to her wicked husband who might be even living with another woman?

Would you think such a woman should wait her life out alone &/ or seriously abused & still keep her covenants to him, til he repents & returns to her, in this life, but most likely not til the next?

How far does your belief go?

Thank you.

Denver Snuffer · June 8, 2010 at 7:17 AM

Once there is a divorce, she is free to remarry according to both the Old and New Testaments. If there is a breach of the covenant she made in her remarriage, the accountability for that lies with the husband, according to Christ. She is not accountable.

I would always and in everything say that the “rule” is the principle to follow until you receive further instruction from the Lord. As soon as the Lord instructs otherwise, as He often does, then the “rule” is no longer applicable and the Lord’s instruction is what ought to be followed.

In this post I’m speaking about the “rule” to be followed. But each woman is entitled to receive instruction from the Lord, and becomes accountable for following Him once it is received.

This is one of the reasons why we are not in a position to judge others. As soon as we use the “rules” to judge others, we risk finding ourselves at odds with the Lord’s instruction to another. This is always a mistake.

MAY 1, 2010

Two Ships Pass in the Night

Dialogue between two ships passing in the night. [Intended as humor, because so far as I know ships do not speak with one another]:

USS Saint: “I know the Church is true.” HMS Midevil: “Beg pardon, how’s that?” USS Saint: “I know the Church is true.” HMS Midevil: “Which? .. or is it all?”

USS Saint: “The Latter-day Saints, of course.”

HMS: “By that do you mean to suggest that the Printing Services Division of the Materials Management Department is somehow ‘true’ as you say?”

USS: “Um, well, yes I suppose.”

HMS: “In what sense. ‘True’ meaning that it exists? or ‘True’ in some other meaning of the word?”

USS: “I mean led by a Prophet of God, therefore imbued with the will of God Almighty in all respects.”

HMS: “So not that it is ‘True’ in a metaphysical sense of existence on a higher plane, or bearing some corporeality, but somehow inerrant. Is that what you are saying? And, if so, does that preclude printing errors? Because if it means avoidance of printing errors well, then they ought to take a larger role in the publishing industry than simply providing grist for the Materials Management Department.”

USS: “Since a prophet is only a prophet when acting as such, I would not attribute inerrancy to the truthfulness of the Printing Services Division of the Materials Management Department; but I would rather say that what they do is Inspired. I do suspect, however, there may be occasional printing errors.”

HMS: “Inspired in the sense of the word meaning that it’s output is somehow delightful and uplifting? Or in the sense of ‘perfection itself’? But, then again, you’ve conceded the possibility of printing errors, so ‘perfection itself’ seems not to be included then. So I presume that you mean when you read the output of the printing of this Division of that Department it somehow inspires you to be a better ship, then? Perhaps somewhat of a worShip?”

USS: “I can see that you are not prepared to grasp the truth of my testimony as yet. So let me just warn you that you’re going to hell.”

HMS: “Atlantic City, rather.” USS: “What?”

HMS: “I’m sailing to Atlantic City. Though it might be called ‘hell’ with some validity I suppose.”

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MAY 2, 2010 AT 9:24 AM

By the way, there really is a Printing Services Division of the Materials Management Department for the Church. I looked them up in the Salt Lake phone book.

MAY 1, 2010

Purpose of Teaching

I must clarify something very important for readers:

Giving answers to people apart from teaching how to get answers is wrong. Wrong because just giving an answer alone creates dependence upon the one answering. That is not the way in which I have tried to proceed. Instead, I have tried to teach how to obtain your own answers.

The whole purpose of teaching is NOT to create dependence. It is to make you independent from me, establish your own capacity to relate to and get answers from God.

I’ve tried to give answers and illustrations inside the greater context of teaching “how.” The answer is nothing. It is the “how” that matters.

Some readers on this blog have not read The Second Comforter and presume incorrectly that it is a book about me. It is not. It is a book about the reader. It is an explanation of how the reader can grow into the greater relationship which Christ promised to them. All the illustrations from my personal experience, with the exception of nine words only, are taken from my mistakes, errors, or setbacks. The personal accounts of mistakes then are followed by chapters which explain how you can do it right. That is a teacher's role: to make the listener understand how they can do something.

It has become apparent that there are questions coming in from people who want answers completely separated from learning "how" to get an understanding of the basic process by which they can do it themselves. That was never my intention, never asked of me, and not something that I want to start.

Your development is your responsibility. I am trying to teach from my own experience how to grow. Some of you have demonstrated a remarkable capacity to grow, and have been directly benefited from my efforts. I view those people as such a triumph that I will always hold them dear. I look forward to eternal joy with these people. There are clearly others who have never realized what it means to be taught or how a true teacher is to proceed. I can help. But I cannot properly go beyond helping. I cannot be your guru, your answer-man, or your leader. Nor have I been called to preside. I teach. You must decide if you want to learn "how" to engage the Gospel of Jesus Christ and its associated blessings. You must avoid at all hazards becoming dependent upon me, or any man, as your guide. I am only here to help you in your own growth and development, and I am not here to tell you secrets, or amaze you with recitations of my personal experiences. That would be wrong for two reasons: First, it would do you no good, nor equip you with what you need. Second, it would be both prideful and arrogant, setting myself up as a light instead of pointing you to the True Light.

Questions that change the focus and which prevent me from teaching as a disciple of Jesus Christ cannot be answered. Therefore, if I cannot change the "question" into something I can use to teach, I will not answer the question.

MAY 2, 2010

The Same is Required of All

I was asked this question:

I am at a point where I do not know how to get past the fear to move on to faith. In my being I know that if I can get past this I can do all God asks of me, and I want to. Do you have any suggestions as to how I can accomplish to get over the hump? If you have any it would be greatly appreciated. I have always wanted to see my Savior from the time I was very small, but I know that I need faith to do it. Please help, if you can.

Everyone faces the identical challenge. It seems different only because of our individual strengths and weaknesses. The challenge is adapted to our own personality, capacity and life's history. Therefore, when you are asked to overcome something, it will fit in the framework of your life.

All are asked to make a sacrifice that shows they will not withhold anything from the Lord. It will come to each person based on what they value and would regret to their core surrendering. Whatever that is, you will be asked by the Lord to give it to Him. You must decide to do that when asked.

All are asked to do something that they view as wrong, evil or inappropriate and will seem to be inconsistent with the Lord's mercy, righteousness and perfection. The request will unmistakably come from Him. You cannot evade the request because you doubt He is asking. You will clearly know it is Him who asks, and that to all your understanding it will be wrong to do. You must do it anyway.

All are asked to take a step in faith beyond where they are at the time. Trust in Him, and only Him, as you take that step. You will be certain that if it were something you were undertaking on your own, it could not be accomplished. But because you are doing as He has asked, you know you will have the strength or support to do as He bids.

All are asked to come to Him without guilt or shame, knowing you have done everything you understand Him to have asked of you. Without this knowledge, you will not be able to endure what He asks.

All are able to develop the faith to lay hold on eternal life only because they have been led by Him through this process. When they have the faith sufficient to lay hold on these things, the Lord will declare to them by His own voice, that they have been begotten of Him and have a place with Him in eternity.

This is universally the process. The specific form each of these will take will vary from person to person because of individual traits.

COMMENTS:

ML1321 · MAY 2, 2010 AT 11:13 AM

You said:

“All are asked to do something that they view as wrong, evil or inappropriate and will seem to be inconsistent with the Lord’s mercy, righteousness and perfection.”

After having read the tenth parable in your book, this statement doesn’t seem consistent with the sanctifying process you describe having gone through. Your 18-year lesson on charity and compassion, though apparently the greatest lesson to be learned (the final lesson, the great test), was not fraught with a lingering sense of “wrong, evil or inappropriate” -ness. The opposite seems true, in fact. Would you please explain how the principles taught in your post were manifest in your experiences?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 2, 2010 AT 1:24 PM

ML1321: First, “The Missing Virtue” is not intended to explain all there is to the Gospel and the challenges we are called upon to face here. For that you would have to read and have before you everything I have written in one overall view.

That having been said, even in that parable there is a juxtaposition between perceptions of good and evil. The person about whom the parable is written believed in something which those who shared his Church membership did not believe, did not accept, and thought was entirely wrong. He was rejected as a “witless liberal” and a “fool” as well as a “gullible simpleton.” The truth will eventually bring you into conflict with those around you. Good is called evil and evil called good, and only the person who is in the right way can decide the matter. As they do they will be told they are deceived, wrong, evil.

You mustn't think, however, that all the principles of truth and all the requirements for exaltation are contained in that single account. It was about something “missing” because other challenges and understandings had been first acquired. Nevertheless, even in acquiring the final missing virtue there was active opposition in which good, religious people sharing a Church with the character worked actively to stop the progression. And he had to determine what was “good” and what was “evil” in a contradiction to the values of his Church peers.

All of us must do that. Issues will change, but the reality will not.

Anonymous · MAY 3, 2010 AT 11:06 PM

I left out one vital point in my lengthy posts above. (Sorry, I was trying not to make it too long) But someone mentioned Abraham, so I think we must clarify that if you are the Prophet, all bets are off, & you could receive something new & out of your realm of right & wrong, like Joseph Smith being told to live Plural Marriage or Abraham being told to sacrifice his son Isaac.

That is the one exception—The Prophet—the only person on earth who can speak for God & receive new revelation contrary to previous commandments. Otherwise everyone else on earth, from Apostles down to us, must make sure that their inspiration & thinking is totally in harmony with the Prophets.

This is the only way we can know that we aren't being deceived by a false Spirit or vision or dream, or someone's opinions & teachings or even the philosophies of men that most are accepting today as truth. God has promised us this fact over & over through his Prophets. That we can know for sure if what we feel to do is right because the Prophets will have talked about it enough to know it's right.

And remember, it's absolutely critical to never ever break your covenants for any reason, especially your marriage covenants. Elder Packer said they will keep us safe. Break them & we will not be safe he said. But do we know what we have covenanted? Especially to our spouse? How about 'True Love', as Elder Holland teaches.

Even what I am saying here you must search out & pray to know if what I say is true, you can't just believe me or anyone, except the Prophet. So we must search out what he & all the other Presidents say on certain subjects.

In order to not be deceived we must 1- Have the Holy Spirit as our guide (but even most of the wicked think they do).

So 2- is very critical too, we must compare our inspiration to what the President's of the Church teach, especially our living Prophet & make sure it matches.

Unless we have both 1 & 2 we will surely be deceived very easy & not even know it & still feel righteous.

Very few people ever do step 2, because it takes alot more work than just receiving promptings & praying or fasting about something. Thus countless people are led to do evil, while thinking they are doing right.

Remember, the Adversary is usually the 1st on the scene to answer your prayers & try to inspire you to do something that is much easier & pleasing to you, than what the Spirit would tell you to do.

Sorry this is so long. I hope it helps. I just see so many members, nice people, all around me being deceived by the worst of evils & yet they don't even realize it. So I feel I must say something when I can.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 4, 2010 AT 6:22 AM

With respect to Anonymous' last comment: The "Prophet" cannot receive revelation for every person in the Church, or world. His role is "macro" not "micro." Salvation is "micro" not "macro." That is to say, almost ALL revelation you're going to encounter in this life will come to YOU, be specific to YOU and will guide YOU. The "Prophet" will know absolutely nothing about the Lord's direction to and revelations to YOU. If you wait to have the "Prophet" tell you what to do, you're going to get general admonitions to pay tithing, keep commandments, avoid tattoos, not get more than one earring, not watch pornography, keep the Word of Wisdom, sustain the Church leadership, keep a current Temple recommend, do your Home and Visiting Teaching, attend your meetings, perform faithfully in your callings, etc. ALL of which are very good in their own right and should be done. But whether you make a sacrifice required of you by God, adapted to you alone, and calculated to produce the faith necessary for eternal life, well that is unlikely to ever be a matter of general concern to the Church. Generations will come and go without making the required sacrifice if waiting for some leader to tell you how and what to do. God alone will do that.

MAY 2, 2010

Clarification

I have not written any explanation for the Second Anointing or Calling and Election process. I do not think it is important or meaningful to ever write anything about it. What is important is to understand "how" someone would make changes in their lives to then be taught things directly from the Lord. He has a continuing ministry. You should be interested in having Him as your minister.

The books I have written do not ever touch upon Calling and Election, nor discuss the Second Anointing. But they will tell you what is required to go and learn from the Lord about these things directly. If you want answers about that, then follow the same path as the ancients did, as Joseph Smith did, and as Abraham did. I'm only interested in helping you understand the path.

Beyond that, the details of such things are simply irrelevant to someone who is not invited to participate. It is pure voyeurism without any purpose. Rather like putting jewelry on pigs, which Christ recommended against. Not that the inquiry comes from a "pig" but the answer would be subject to public scrutiny by everyone on the web.

The fact you are aware there is more to the Gospel is important. The fact that you become entitled to receive things pertaining to a higher law by living that higher law is also important. What you should focus on is the living, not the curiosity about things which you are not yet prepared to receive. Prepare to receive them. Everything else will be answered to your entire satisfaction once you are.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family · MAY 2, 2010 AT 9:00 PM

That is helpful because there are LDS writers who seem to capitalize on the dearth of info about the path and make it seem as if you need to know the details, or need to have your calling and election before receiving the second comforter, and i am just now realizing that I've been dupped by those sentiments. So are you in fact saying that the Savior will minister to you as the Second Comforter before you have your second anointing? I don't mean to get you to write what you said you wouldn't, just hopeful to find out what I can exercise my faith towards.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 2, 2010 AT 9:41 PM

To the extent I have ever commented to anyone about this I use the scriptures. There isn't any need to claim personal experience as a basis to explain. It's all there, if you will study the scriptures.

On this particular question we have the example of Joseph Smith. He had a visitation by Christ in the First Vision when only 14 (or as old as 17 in some accounts). His calling and election came some time later as set out in Section 132. The ministry of Christ with Joseph included several personal visitations, events in Kirtland Temple, the vision in Section 76, and all of them preceded his calling and election in Section 132.

When Joseph spoke about the Second Comforter, he tied the two together. I put Joseph's quote on page 5 of The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil. Joseph's quote tied the two together as a cause-and-effect. He was correct in the sense that Christ's continuing ministry involves the exaltation of those to whom He ministers. Bruce R. McConkie's comment in The Millennial Messiah was that "the millennium is the great day of the Second Comforter" was right on point. That is, Christ's ministry is always to bring people to the Father. Elder McConkie also declared in that book (which I quote in The Second Comforter) that it should be "known here and now, that if you will separate yourself from the world and live a Millennial life, you can have Millennial blessings here and now." (That's a paraphrase because I don't have the book in front of me right now. But it's very close.) That is true doctrine.

Most people who spend time writing about second anointings and calling and election don't know what they're talking about. The best treatment of that subject is something which ought to come from the Lord directly. Or an angel assigned by Him to minister to the person who has prepared.

The challenge is preparation. I'm all about that. That is what I write to explain and what I encourage all to do.

MAY 3, 2010

Blessed are the Peacemakers

Christ's disciples were ever willing to use both priesthood and the sword to vanquish their opponents. Christ taught them restraint. There is this incident in the Luke Chapter 9:

⁵¹ And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem, ⁵² And sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for him.

⁵³ And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.

⁵⁴ And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?

⁵⁵ But he turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.

⁵⁶ For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

There is this incident in Gethsemane, a portion taken from John Chapter 18:

¹⁰ Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

¹¹ Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

¹² Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him,

The balance of the account is found in Luke Chapter 22:

⁵⁰ And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

⁵¹ And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him.

⁵² Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

⁵³ When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.

⁵⁴ Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

Christ taught and lived this: “Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God” (Matt. 5:9).

There are too many willing to cry for revenge or justice in the world. Eventually the spirit of revenge and justice will be set free, and the earth will be filled with violence. As it was in the days of Noah—those days will return again (Gen. 6:11–13; Moses 8:28–30). Those who want to see justified and unjustified killing will have their fill.

In the days before the flood the earth was filled with violence. There was also a corresponding return of Zion. It would not be as it was in the days of Noah if Zion were not to return. For that, the pattern is set out in Moses Chapter 7:

¹³ And so great was the faith of Enoch that he led the people of God, and their enemies came to battle against them; and he spake the word of the Lord, and the earth trembled, and the mountains fled, even according to his command; and the rivers of water were turned out of their course; and the roar of the lions was heard out of the wilderness; and all nations feared greatly, so powerful was the word of Enoch, and so great was the power of the language which God had given him.

¹⁴ There also came up a land out of the depth of the sea, and so great was the fear of the enemies of the people of God, that they fled and stood afar off and went upon the land which came up out of the depth of the sea.

¹⁵ And the giants of the land, also, stood afar off; and there went forth a curse upon all people that fought against God;

¹⁶ And from that time forth there were wars and bloodshed among them; but the Lord came and dwelt with his people, and they dwelt in righteousness.

¹⁷ The fear of the Lord was upon all nations, so great was the glory of the Lord, which was upon his people. And the Lord blessed the land, and they were blessed upon the mountains, and upon the high places, and did flourish.

¹⁸ And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.

¹⁹ And Enoch continued his preaching in righteousness unto the people of God. And it came to pass in his days, that he built a city that was called the City of Holiness, even Zion.

²⁰ And it came to pass that Enoch talked with the Lord; and he said unto the Lord: Surely Zion shall dwell in safety forever. But the Lord said unto Enoch: Zion have I blessed, but the residue of the people have I cursed.

Why was the fear of the Lord upon people who did not gather to Zion? It was because their own guilt prevented them from drawing near. It will be the same in the last days as it was then. Moroni explains it in Mormon Chapter 9:

² Behold, will ye believe in the day of your visitation—behold, when the Lord shall come, yea, even that great day when the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, yea, in that great day when ye shall be brought to stand before the Lamb of God—then will ye say that there is no God?

³ Then will ye longer deny the Christ, or can ye behold the Lamb of God? Do ye suppose that ye shall dwell with him under a consciousness of your guilt? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy Being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his laws?

⁴ Behold, I say unto you that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell.

⁵ For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you.

⁶ O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus, that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair, and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day.

How much guilt we bring with us to that final day depends entirely upon the intent of our hearts, the actions of our hands, and the words we speak (Alma 12:14). Becoming a peacemaker and meriting the call as a child of God is measured by our acts, but includes as Alma warns us, our thoughts and words as well.

COMMENTS:

Kisi · MAY 11, 2010 AT 2:22 PM

A friend of mine read all the posts and comments on violence and the use of weapons, and then he wrote this back to me:

I'm reminded of a story about a unity minister who was withdrawing money out of an ATM late one night. As she turned around some thug stuck a gun in her face and said, "Give me the money." She handed it to him and said, "You really must be desperate to do this. I have a little more in my purse." She reached in and gave him another $20 and said, "I'm really sorry I don't have more to give you." The robber looked at her and she said, "I love you." He turned and ran.

Ten years later the minister was in her office at church and there was a knock on the door. She opened in and the person standing there looked vaguely familiar. He said, “You probably don’t remember me but I robbed you 10 years ago. You told me you loved me and that is the first time anyone has ever said that to me. I haven’t been able to sleep or get that out of my head for 10 years and I had to come talk to you. Here is the money I took and I’m sorry.” She invited him in, they talked, became good friends and he joined her church.

In the writings of St. John he says God is Love. If God is Love then as his children our essential nature is Love. Perfect Love casts out all fear. He who says he loves God but hates his brother is a liar.

The Sermon on the Mount is the essence of what Jesus taught and embodied. Love your enemies sounds as ridiculous now as it did then. Yet, if we really did what he told us to do the world would have truly been transformed.

When I go to some of these political gatherings I hear people whine about Brother Barrack saying we’re not a Christian nation and yet my observation is they worship their guns far more than the Lord of Love. I think we are a Christian Nation and that is unfortunate. When Christians took Jerusalem in 1099 AD they butchered every man, woman, child, Muslim, Jew and Orthodox Christian in the city. The inquisition killed thousands of innocent people. Christians justified slavery through their religion and engaged in systematic extermination of the native population of this continent. Hopefully someday we will become a Christ-like Nation that Lives the Law of Love. Only then will we truly become the shining light on the hill.

I think there is a place for defending yourself but If we really did what Jesus taught the world would be transformed and then it might not be as necessary.”

I like my friend’s comments.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 11, 2010 AT 4:48 PM

and I loved your friend’s comments...

MAY 3, 2010

Is it Your Hope to be a Part of Zion?

I was asked if I thought it was wrong to own a gun or kill in self-defense. My response.

I don't think there is anything wrong with owning firearms, hunting, or self-defense. But I do think we are too quick to presume we are authorized to take life. Therefore, I am reluctant to encourage that kind of thinking. I encourage a non-violent, non-confrontational way to solve a problem first, and violent action as a last resort. When violence or self-defense is used as the final option, then it is rarely needed. When it is viewed as justified and approved, it gets employed with the kind of recklessness that will condemn a person.

The Mountain Meadows Massacre is a hallmark event wherein aggressive "self defense" resulted in murder. No one in the local church leadership involved thought of it as murder at the time. In hindsight, everyone, even the church's Assistant-Historian, admits it was murder and that the blame went far beyond John D. Lee. It is far better to suffer than to react too quickly and to take life.

This is a separate subject from the creation of Zion. Currently, as a people, we don't possess enough basic understanding of doctrine to begin to organize Zion. Our current models would be warmed over Babylon with new names associated with it. Rather like the Historic Christian movement adopted "Christmas" to celebrate "Sol Invictus." Or the fertility rites of Spring renamed "Easter."

Our "Zion" would be a commercial enterprise, with private ownership and capitalist competition to form an economic basis from which to build a strictly regimented and highly controlled people. Something so foreign to what Zion was meant to be that I rather think it would draw tornadoes in a proportion greater than trailer parks currently do in Mississippi.

Zion will be cooperative, not competitive. They will be “one” in every sense of the word. No one will need to say “know ye the Lord” because everyone will know Him, from the greatest to the least. He will be able to dwell among them because He will have already been known by them.

Collectivist efforts are never going to work. FIRST, we must become individually the kind of people whom the Lord can visit. Then, after that, the gathering together of like-minded people will be a gathering of equals. It will not be an hierarchical gathering of “leadership” and drones. There won’t be a single drone in Zion. Everyone will be equal and no one will mind mowing the grass or taking out the garbage.

I envision this scene from Zion:

A man walks down the street early in the morning and notices that the bakery is unmanned. Its door is open, because there is no need for locks in Zion. So, on an impulse, he enters, looks about for the instructions left by someone, and begins to prepare bread. As the morning goes on, a few others join him. They make bread. Others come and take the bread to their homes. At the end of the day, the man goes home. This was his first time working in the bakery. He did it because he saw it needed to be done.

He returns to the bakery, because he enjoyed it. Day by day he works in the bakery for months, perhaps years. One day on his way, he notices that the grass needs to be cut and the mower has been carefully left beside a tree along the parkway. So he starts to cut the grass. He finds he likes it, and this is now what he does this day. And the next. And within a month he has cut all the grass needing cutting in his immediate neighborhood and starts over again where he began. He enjoys it.

Eventually he is asked by someone to help to move clothing and journals from one home to another. A couple whose children have all moved out no longer have need of the larger home they occupy, and are moving across town. So he puts the mower carefully beside a tree and begins to help move. Homes are occupied based upon need, and these people no longer have need of the larger space they once occupied.

Across town he notices that there is a new neighborhood being built. He decides, after finishing the move for the couple, that he will assist at the site. He returns there for over a year as he provides help with stocking and distributing materials, framing, installing shingles, painting and clean-up.

He has no job. He is never without work. He asks for no pay, because some labor to feed others. He has no need for housing, because what is available is shared.

Before I go on, I feel the need to interrupt:

How on earth is something like this going to work?

What about zoning laws and business licenses?

What about getting a building permit before commencing construction?

What quality control and food-handler's permits exist which will guarantee the bread the man makes won't make people sick?

This is chaos. Disorder. Anarchy. In short, how the hell will something like this WORK?!!??

Well, the answer is, of course, it won't. Can't. Not with the folks we have at present. We'll sit around arguing about the rules for establishing Zion and simply never get around to being Zion. Zion IS. It can't be organized, because it requires no organization. It can't be controlled because there is no need for control. It can't be governed because it is entirely voluntary and self-governing.

So for us, we imagine Zion to have a completely restrictive set of covenants on housing which will keep out those garish, bright colored stucco houses we see on the “west-side” in oh so many crowded cities. Right? We can’t have that. And we need a code to mandate a common language. We can’t put up with a polyglot society where we can’t make out what someone is saying, now can we? And we ought to make sure zoning keeps the commercial stuff on one side and not scattered throughout the neighborhoods. Crap like that attracts crime. And crime should require immediate expulsion, right? Can’t tolerate crime in Zion. We’ll need law enforcement to make that work, and a fence so the criminals don’t creep back in after dark.

And street lights, so we can see what people are up to after dark when they’re lurking about. And taxes to pay for the public improvements. And a cap on taxes. We can’t let taxation become punitive....wait—we’re right back in Babylon....

But you say you want to start Zion? OK. Go help your neighbor. This is where our hearts will need to be before the foundation will ever be laid. Studying so you can justify using violence if the need arises will not get you any closer to Zion. Nor will developing a street plan for Zion ahead of a heart plan for changing mankind. Men’s hearts have failed them (D&C 45:26).

COMMENTS:

DKD · MAY 3, 2010 AT 3:19 PM

Denver,

have you started John Pontius’s book The Triumph of Zion yet?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 3, 2010 AT 6:11 PM

I’ve still got to finish another book before beginning the new book by Pontius. So, no, I haven’t read it yet.

MAY 4, 2010

I Am A Fool

Joseph Smith once said about himself that if “he hadn’t lived it, he wouldn’t believe it.” What insight that provides.

I believe in the complete equality of all of us. God did not love Joseph Smith more than He loved Sidney Rigdon. Joseph remained true to the end, and Sidney fell away. That had nothing to do with God’s love for them. It had to do with their love of God and willingness to sacrifice to have the faith to trust in God.

I do not blame anyone who questions my right to give answers. I renounce any authority over anyone. Even those over whom I have a position as father are treated with respect and urging, not by demanding they see or do things to please me.

If, however, I have the power to answer a question by the power of Spirit, and the answer seems to you to be filled with light and truth, then it is the Spirit you should thank—not me. Such an ability will flee the moment I leave the path, seek to control others or become prideful. You can mark it down as true: No man who has his own self as his concern will be able to declare the truth in purity and with the approval of the Spirit.

I have said before and I repeat it again—I am a fool. You mustn’t trust me. If the Spirit does not ratify what I have to say, then I’m not worth the time to even consider.

This blog is an attempt to explain what I believe to be true. It is for those who are trying to find truth for themselves. Hopefully you will become acquainted with enough to begin to trust that God does exist, and that He will answer questions, and that He is no respecter of persons. Hopefully you will venture into asking and getting answers from Him directly. Then, when you have begun that process, I hope to encourage you to follow through and receive from Him what He alone can provide to us. For salvation lies in “knowing the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent” (John 17:3). It does not lie in following other men. Rather it is to be found as a result of you drawing near to Him. This will in turn cause Him to draw near to you.

He lives!

He answers prayer!

He cares about and loves you as much as He has loved any person who has ever lived on this earth.

MAY 4, 2010

The Process is Everything—The Answer is Nothing

Process is everything. Answers are nothing.

If you learn the process, you can develop godlike traits. That is, the very tools that are required for us to develop as disciples of Jesus Christ are, in fact, the tools used by God Himself.

Faith in God is necessary for us to develop. God extends His kingdom by His faith. Therefore, as we develop faith we are developing a characteristic that is godlike in its form and function. He knows we are unable to have faith in ourselves right now. Therefore, it is required for us to have faith in Him. Indeed at this stage of development it is necessary for us to concentrate all faith in Him because this whole creation belongs to Him. We are not self-existent yet. Our organization and continuation is dependent upon Him (See Mosiah 2:20–25).

Christ is our great example, and in this He showed the way as well. While here, mortal, and before finishing the course, He declared: “I can of my own self do nothing” (John 5:30). When resurrected, however, He declared “all power is given unto me in earth and in heaven” (Matt. 28:18).

The rules of Celestial glory are the rules of the Temple. Obedience, sacrifice, Gospel, chastity and consecration are all the hallmarks of citizenship there. This is why peace, order, kindness and love prevail in that society. There is nothing to harm, threaten or break up families.

Why would an answer to a deep doctrinal question help someone who is not prepared to live in conformity with the Celestial standards? And contrariwise, if they live Celestial standards, how can you keep them from understanding the doctrine? (John 7:17).

Process is everything. A mere answer will not fill the empty soul. Those who have read my books should understand this. This blog is for them. Those who do not have a doctrinal basis to understand what is going on here will not be satisfied by this blog. It is not meant as a substitute for understanding what I've written. It is only a supplement to it.

That does not mean that you must read what I've written to understand the Gospel. There are many ways to obtain that understanding, the primary one being to study the scriptures. In my opinion the quality of what we teach now is so diluted, so basic and simplistic. It leaves by the wayside so much of what the Prophet Joseph Smith taught that you either have to read early church materials or else read what I've gathered (based primarily on the scriptures and secondarily on what Joseph Smith taught). If you have been a Latter-day Saint for longer than about 4 years, today's curriculum, in my view, is not adequate to inform you about the obligations devolving upon you as a disciple of Christ.

I labor to teach process. I want you independent of me and every other teacher, able to get answers for yourself directly from heaven itself. I want to avoid today what Joseph cautioned us against in Nauvoo:

[I]f the people departed from the Lord, they must fall—that they were depending on the Prophet, hence were darkened in their minds, in consequence of neglecting the duties devolving on themselves. (TPJS p. 237)

Joseph did NOT want you dependent upon him for answers. He wanted to teach you correct principles and let you govern yourself.

Any man who tries to put himself between you and heaven, claiming that he alone should be the source of your religious beliefs and education, is practicing priestcraft and will in the end lead both himself and you to damnation.

MAY 5, 2010

Belief Becomes Knowledge

The post I put up with an excerpt from Lecture 6 a bit ago was deliberately chosen as a foundation for what was put up a few days ago. That Lecture included the fact that you “know” not merely “believe” that what you are doing is in conformity with God’s will. A person obtains “actual knowledge” that they are acting in conformity with God’s will.

Kisi asked a question regarding the idea of being asked to do something you regard as “wrong” or perhaps even “evil,” and how can a person avoid deception with such an idea. The answer lies within the doctrine taught in Lecture 6. You simply cannot proceed without knowing. You cannot know without following the correct course. You must make an acceptable sacrifice to obtain the knowledge. Without making that sacrifice you cannot obtain that knowledge. However, once you have possession of the actual knowledge, then it is not a matter of conjecture, or speculation, or desire, or “hope” as the world uses that term. Rather it is an act in utter righteousness, in strict conformity with the will of God, whose will is known to the person because they have proceeded correctly in obtaining this knowledge.

To gain that knowledge a person keeps the commandments, pays their tithes, does everything they are asked to do to follow the will of God as understood by them. Such a person will be “firm in their minds” and not weak minded or given to flights of fancy (Moroni 7:30). They will have been qualified by the things which they have done in following God to possess this kind of knowledge.

The idea that a person would do something which they regard as “wrong” or to be “evil” is typified in the experience of Abraham (Gen. 22:2) and Nephi (1 Ne. 4:10). This is what the Lecture is talking about when it says:

a religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things, never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation; for from the first existence of man, the faith necessary unto the enjoyment of life and salvation never could be obtained without the sacrifice of all earthly things; it was through this sacrifice, and this only, that God has ordained that men should enjoy eternal life; and it is through the medium of the sacrifice of all earthly things, that men do actually know that they are doing the things that are well pleasing in the sight of God.

Now I do not expect anyone to be asked to sacrifice their only child. Nor to be told to kill someone and take their possession. What I expect is that in the context of the life someone has lived or is living, they will be asked to do or not do something which is so specific to them that they alone will understand why it is a sacrifice to them. If asked of another, it may be completely insignificant. But when asked of them, it will be exactly what the person will struggle to lay upon the Lord's altar. Hence the term "sacrifice" with its partial meaning of parting with something involving great value to them. However, it is not possible to rule anything in or out—the Lord alone will know you and what is required for you to obtain this faith.

The terms for obtaining this kind of faith are the same for every man or woman who has ever lived. Without making the sacrifice it is not possible to obtain the faith.

MAY 5, 2010

Conference on Chiasmus

The Conference on Chiasmus originally scheduled for May 15th has been continued to September. There will be a further announcement on date, time and location once things have been finally arranged.

MAY 6, 2010

Qualifying for the Blessings Under Adverse Circumstances

I was asked about someone who is an active, faithful man married to a non-member wife. The issue is their chances to receive all the blessings associated with an eternal family, despite the spouse's lack of faith.

From the question it is apparent that the person has first, has accepted and believes in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Second, is living everything they can at present. Third, would gladly take the spouse to the temple if the spouse were willing to go and enter into the covenants there.

This, once again, is a Section 137 issue in which the person qualifies for everything which they would have gladly received, had the circumstances permitted it:

⁶ And marveled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in that kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set his hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins.

⁷ Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me, saying: All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God;

⁸ Also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom;

⁹ For I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts.

By continuing to be loyal to, supportive of, and loving toward the non-believing spouse the husband is living an example which will, in the Day of Judgment, be credited him for righteousness. This is particularly true when the husband remains loyal and faithful to her when she does not share his faith. It reflects credit on his character to do so. I cannot help but believe the Lord is pleased with such a man.

Finally, who knows but what the spouse will, at the end, convert and all the blessings be sealed upon them while still here anyway. Life is not over yet. There is something compelling and convincing to even a skeptic of the Gospel when they see someone actually live it.

MAY 6, 2010

Go About Doing Good

You should not look directly into the sun. Whenever you do, your eyes are unable to adjust to the intensity of the light. It is possible to even do damage to your eyes by looking directly at the sun.

Everything in mortality is a type or symbol of eternal things. All things bear testimony of Christ and His great plan (Moses 6:63). The sun bears testimony of the Son of God. It is a great symbol of Him.

Our approach to gaining a relationship with the Son should be like that of our enjoyment of the sun—indirect. That is, entering into His presence is a by-product. It is as a result of the way you live. It is not the “goal.”

To approach Him, you must live as He did. You must “keep His commandments.” You must love others. You must live the way He lived. When you are walking in the same path He walked, you will find that He is walking there still. He will come alongside you, as you are “in the way” and will open to your understanding all things which He would have you know (Luke 24:13–32). I’ve written about this in the talk in the Appendix to Eighteen Verses and will not repeat it here. But I would remind you that the account of those two disciples is a type of how He appears to those to whom He will minister. He will see you as you are in the right way, and then join with you.

Go about doing good. You will find Him as you do. Do not think you will be able to find Him without setting about to do the things which He bid you to do. There is a law irrevocably decreed which governs these things.

The Nephites were keeping the appointed times with the Lord in His year-end festivals. In that process, He came to them. Set about doing what He bids you to do and He will likewise come to you. (This is described in The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil). Keep His ways. He will be able to walk with you as you walk with Him.

One clarification that I think needs to be understood by those who have not read what I have written. I have never revealed anything sacred that has been revealed to me. I have taught the path. It is not necessary nor desirable to reveal personal matters, and I have not. It is important to teach the right way. Read what I've written and you will find that nothing improper or even difficult is taught there. It is taken from the scriptures. The scriptures are sufficient to teach you the way to eternal life. I only teach what I find in them.

CHAPTER 12

Philosophies of Men

MAY 6, 2010

Philosophies of Men

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is a great whole. It requires an overall harmony between all its parts to be understood. Without that overall harmony it is jarring and discordant.

The problem with apostasy is that it forfeits truths which are necessary in order to comprehend the majesty of Christ's teachings. Those truths which get retained are not kept in balance with the rest. Simple virtues are kept while overall righteousness is forfeited.

No one can argue with the virtue of tolerance. But it is constrained and governed inside a larger context that prevents permissiveness and sloth.

No one can argue with the virtue of obedience. Indeed, obedience is itself one of the bedrock requirements of the Gospel. But divorced from the other virtues inside of which it is regulated, obedience can become a terrible weapon used to separate people from God's Holy Spirit and drive them into submission to "Popes and Priests." (Any man believed to be incapable of leading you into error is a "Pope.")

No one can argue against the virtue of patience. But when it is urged to prevent necessary action to develop a god-like people, then it has become a tool for deception and error and not a virtue at all.

Take any virtue and remove it from its overall context within the great Gospel whole and you see how apostasy can warp a people. They retain the conviction that they are still God's chosen disciples, because the virtues they practice are in fact, godly. However, they have become distorted, bloated and swollen. They are without harmony, capable of great evil or neglect, all the while celebrating their fidelity to the "truth" as they understand it.

You MUST understand doctrine. You MUST study the scriptures. But more important than anything else, you MUST seek to gain further light and knowledge by conversing with the Lord directly. Harmony of the whole is dependent upon His direct guidance and blessings. You simply cannot move forward a piece here and a bit there, while neglecting the whole composite picture of the Gospel. He will open it to your view. He will show you how one part is related to another, and that to another still, so that it all moves forward together. It is not to all be comprehended at once. It is to be gained a little bit of the whole here, a further harmony of things there, until the whole moves forward together. Always moving in balance, in harmony and as a complete magisterial revelation of God's will.

Latter-day Saints are not immune from this problem of disharmony. Indeed, it is the great challenge which we have faced since the time of the First Vision. Joseph's recalibrating of his own life was constant. He wanted to reward Martin Harris for his support, petitioned for permission to let him take the 116 pages of manuscript, and when he was told "no" he persisted. When he finally got the Lord's reluctant permission it was not for Martin Harris' benefit, but for Joseph's. Joseph was to learn a hard lesson about disregarding good advice from a superior Guide (D&C 3:1–8). This comprehension of the harmony of the whole is what provoked Joseph to teach:

the nearer man approaches perfection, the clearer are his views, and the greater his enjoyments, till he has overcome the evils of his life and lost every desire for sin; and like the ancients, arrives at that point of faith where he is wrapped in the power and glory of his Maker, and is caught up to dwell with Him. (DHC 2:8)

Choose your teachers carefully. None of them will neglect to emphasize a virtue. However, without the whole of the Gospel in harmony in their own lives, they cannot bring it into harmony for you. Finding that harmony is the great challenge in this lone and dreary world, filled as it is, with the philosophies of men mingled with scripture.

MAY 7, 2010

This is Why I Didn't Like it

I was asked by someone who liked the book Odds Are You're Going To Be Exalted, why I disliked it. My response is as follows:

I suppose first because it is filled with false doctrine and sentimental rubbish. It is unanchored in anything other than pure sentiment, contradicts the scriptures, and attributes motives to Heavenly Parents which are held by the author. It is worse than useless, it is misleading.

The numerosity argument takes groups who could not possibly be the audience for his book and makes them the statistical weight from which he reaches his conclusion. He takes folks who lived during the Nephite centuries of peace, the City of Enoch, and those who will live during the Millennium (whose numbers he speculates to be in the billions), then adds to those numbers all who die before the age of 8 (also a speculative but big number), then, after claiming the speculative total of all these will be far, far greater than those who merely slog along in mortality like us, he concludes that the odds are you're going to be exalted. Here's the logical fallacy of that whopper: First, the Nephites in ancient history didn't read the book.

They're NOT in his audience. Neither was the City of Enoch's hosts; nor are the Millennial folk; nor are any of those who die before age 8. Meaning that the argument, IF it had validity, is an argument that THEY are going to be exalted. Not YOU. That is, the speculative total of those hosts are the ones who will benefit from their lives' condition. But none of them are readers of the book. So if the argument fits, then the title should have been: "Odds Are They're Going To Be Exalted."

Second, the argument for the numbers is wholly speculative. We don't have a census for any of the prior Nephite, Enoch, City of Melchizedek, etc. populations. So without an actual number, we can't even make the argument. His conjecture for the Millennium is based upon Elder Bruce R McConkie's speculation about the numerosity of that group. Repeating what Elder McConkie admits is his conjecture does not reduce it to fact. We simply can't say what the final numbers will be for these other groups.

Third, he conflates the promise of "salvation" with "exaltation." So far as I know there are no children under age 8 who have been sealed in marriage—a condition required for exaltation. Without an eternal marriage they are separate, single and angels; NOT exalted (D&C 132:16–17). It is a quantum leap unsupported by scripture to conflate the promise of salvation for those who die before age 8, or who were not sealed in marriage from any of the other populations about which he speculates, with the promise of exaltation.

Fourth, he gives one bit of caution in his Introduction which the average reader will not catch. That caution is: “What follows is my perception of God’s nature...” p. xiv. That caution should be in BOLD and capitalized. In other words, the whole book is based upon his sentiments about God. These unanchored sentiments are NOT and never will be doctrine. They are just some guy’s effeminate effort to avoid the rigors of confronting the narrowness, straitness and fewness of the Gospel’s takers.

Going then to his sentiments about God, he writes: “The thought that God would promote something that would ensure that the vast majority of His children would never again be able to dwell in His presence is incomprehensible. And the assumption that our mother in heaven would idly sit back and allow such a guaranteed flop to eternally strip her of any interaction with her spirit offspring is equally unfathomable. Such could not—and did not—happen!”

There’s not a stitch of support for this awesome conclusion. How does he know that? How does he presume to speak about a “mother in heaven” about whom nothing has been revealed? How does he know that she is not the champion of the plan? How does he know that she isn’t absolutely persuaded that obedience to the laws of perfection are the only protection of her children who do obey? How does he not recognize that to dwell with someone living a higher law, when the person refuses to obey that higher law, is more miserable than being cast out? (Morm. 9:4). How does he fail to recognize that throughout nature from the hosts of animals born, relatively few ever reach adulthood and reproduce? Again, this natural process is a symbol of God’s own great plan, is it not?

(Moses 6:63). If so, why, if God cares with sentimentality about all His creations (i.e., that they fill the measure of their creation and have joy in their posterity), then why not let all them reproduce as adults? After all it takes about 10,000 sea turtles before you get a successful reproducing adult. Pretty much the case with frogs, sea life generally, and wildebeests—well, their young are essentially the roving McDonald’s menu for all the African meat-eaters.

When he doesn’t like a parable told by CHRIST, he attributes it to Matthew and dismisses it as Matthew’s conjecture about numbers (See footnote 2 on the top of page 133 of Odds Are You’re Going To Be Exalted).

He absolutely contradicts Christ when he claims, without any support other than his own sentiment, “God does not require perfection of us in order for us to gain exaltation” (page 13). But Christ commanded: “Therefore I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect” (3 Ne. 12:48).

He is a PhD in Theology. That education has done violence to his ability to see what the scriptures teach. Instead of using that education properly (i.e. to understand the fallacies of man’s reasoning as they apply their philosophy), he has instead become persuaded by it and decided to measure truth by this damaging set of errors.

He thinks that if “most” people are lost then the plan is a failure. The measure of the Gospel’s success does not lie in numerosity. It lies in the fact that if the whole of creation produces but one successful couple, then it will have all been worth it. Even then, if only one couple were exalted, then you still have an infinite number to follow, because they are by definition infinite and eternal as long as they produce seed.

I have marked up my copy for the first couple of chapters, then just relented and read it without a running commentary in the margins. But the book was an insult to my understanding of the truth. It attempts to urge the Calvinist notion of “irresistible grace” in new clothes. It attempts to give life to “grace” as Martin Luther championed the concept in LDS garb. It is a litany of Evangelical/Protestant philosophy mingled with scripture. And most astonishing of all, this cacophony of error is published by the good people at Deseret Book, as if its creeds were not included among those denounced by the Savior in His first visit with Joseph in the Grove.

I keep running in my mind: “Perhaps you do not believe in this great being Alonzo Gaskill proposes, who is surrounded by myriads of beings who have been saved, not for any act of theirs, but by His good pleasure?”

And the response thunders back: “I do not! I cannot comprehend such a being!”

I cannot recall where that dialogue, which is now simply part of my consciousness, came from. But it seems somehow sacred to me, coming from some source I trusted. Something which goes back long before 1990. But, alas, when I try to pin it down it eludes me.

I could go on, but I think it would degenerate into incautious words which will offend the average reader. Given my upbringing in Idaho, I will soon be making scatological references to bovine feces, reverting back to the lexicon of my pre-conversion youth. So I will meekly stop and settle back into the day’s work.

I hope that answers the question.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MAY 8, 2010 AT 10:09 AM

I think the criticism of my “tone” was well taken. And I agree that you wouldn’t like to spend one minute with a God who was critical or biting in His assessments of another’s foolishness. But you have to admit, at least I did not call him “Satan” as Christ did Peter (Matt. 16:23).

Anonymous · MAY 10, 2010 AT 2:22 PM

Denver,

Now that you have reproved this man with with sharpness, will you be showing him an increase of love, lest he esteem you to be his enemy?

Tim Oaks in Tennessee

Denver Snuffer · MAY 10, 2010 AT 5:27 PM

Tim:

I haven't "reproved him." Haven't even mentioned his name as I recall. I've commented on the thoughts in a book. So far as I know he neither knows me, has met me, nor has read anything I've ever written, let alone this blog. I was asked for my opinion about a book. I gave it. There wasn't a single personal thing involved from my perspective. So, lacking any direct contact with him and never having addressed a single comment to him, I do not feel any responsibility to show forth an increase of love to him.

Hope that clarifies my view.

MAY 7, 2010

Constantine and Correlation

I was asked in several ways how I reconcile some modern trends in the Church. One question was phrased this way:

Harkening back to Elder Poelman's talk on the differences between the Church and the Gospel. It's often stated (overstated?) that the church is the Kingdom of God in various meetings and most members conflate the Church with the Gospel (i.e. they are synonymous terms these days). Could you discuss the original differences (as intended in the scriptures) between "church" and "gospel"? Is church, as we currently know it (big meetinghouses, 3 hour blocks, weekly attendance, etc.), the same thing as "church" in the times of the Old and New Testaments?

Here's how I reconcile it all: I don't. What I do is reflect upon history. Here are a few of my ruminations:

Christianity became diverse quite early on. Almost immediately after the closing of the New Testament, the diversity began to metastasize.

There were those who viewed Christ as a normal man, who had been "adopted" by the Father at the time of His baptism. These were called "Adoptionists."

There were those who believed that Christ was just a normal man, but that He had a divine spirit inhabit Him temporarily from the time of His baptism until the time of His crucifixion, at which time the divine spirit left. It was incomprehensible to them that God would suffer and die. Therefore, they developed a theory in which He did not.

There were those who believed that Christ was a transcendent spirit, and never corporeal as other men were. They believed that He manifested Himself as if he were a mortal, but never truly was mortal. They did not believe it possible for God to become incarnate.

There were those who believed that Christ taught a secret Gospel to His insiders, and that the public teachings were misleading. It was the private "gnosis" that would save you.

There were those who believed that Christ was a separate and distinct being from God the Father, and that the result was that there were two gods and not one.

There were those who argued that if they were separate then it violated the idea of "monotheism" and therefore, God the Father, Christ and the Holy Ghost had to be one, single person. However incomprehensible that may be, there was only one being, manifesting itself in three forms.

There were those who believed priesthood authority was immutable, and once conferred it could not be lost no matter what the conduct of the person ordained. That is, authority was not dependent at all upon righteous behavior, and even a thoroughly wicked man, once ordained, held priesthood authority no matter what he did.

There were those who believed that priesthood authority was entirely dependent upon faithful living, and that a failure to live according to God's will terminated the authority of that man. This movement was named after a North African priest named Arius who remained devoted during the persecutions and was blinded and crippled by those who were seeking to destroy the Christian faith.

Well, by 324 AD the whole thing had become riddled with controversies and sects. Therefore, when King Constantine, who had battled his way into sole ownership of the Roman Emperor's seat, determined to adopt a state religion (he chose Christianity as that state religion) he presumed he was taking a harmonious, consistent faith. Upon learning that there were strong internal Christian disputes, some of which led to violence between professors of the various beliefs, he decided that he needed to put down the disputations.

In a fit of practicality, King Constantine convened the great council at Nicea, and summoned all the Bishops of Christianity to a single gathering. At the gathering he demanded they come to an agreement on what the Christian faith believed. He could not tolerate disputes leading to violence in the newly adopted Roman state religion.

This council at Nicea was the first attempt at correlation. The result had little to do with the truth. It had to do with peace for the Roman state. Constantine himself did not believe in the doctrine.

He believed in the effectiveness of the faith as a basis for political power, domestic security and ease of ruling a diverse population scattered about on three continents. When the results were achieved, he then exiled the handful of dissenters and 'voila, Historic Christianity began. That Historic Christianity remained correlated and of a singular view until the split between Constantinople and Rome at about 1000 AD. It became further uncorrelated in the 1500's with Martin Luther.

Once you start letting doctrinal disputes develop you wind up with a split empire, and internal loss of government. The original effort was imposed at the tip of a sword. When there were dissenters, they were exiled, or eventually made "heretic." When the final step was taken, and the intellectual buttress supplied by Bishop Ambrose's arguments, it at last became possible for "heresy" or "heretics" to be snubbed out by murder. The persecuted became the persecutors. They were justified by the change, having a correlated promise that the faith ratified the reasons that allowed you to persecute, torture and kill those who strayed from the "one true, Catholic faith." After all, if you could reclaim them merely by torture of the body, how much better than allowing them to lapse into eternal torment by being consigned to hell. An endless "Hell" also being an invention of the Historic Christian faith. So it was really good to do that burning, racking, thumb- dislocating, flaying, stuff after all. All in a day's work to convert the wayward soul back to Christ.

Elder Lee, while still a member of the Twelve, began the correlation process in the LDS Church. It was his crowning achievement when he became President. Now everything is in harmony.

That harmony has come at the price of developing the internal idea of "apostasy" based upon the doctrine we believe in. A test which was altogether alien to Joseph Smith. Joseph said, when a brother Brown was being threatened with excommunication for his error in doctrine:

I did not like the old man being called up for erring in doctrine. It looks too much like the Methodist, and not like the Latter-day Saints. Methodists have creeds which a man must believe or be asked out of their church. I want the liberty of thinking and believing as I please. It feels so good not to be trammelled. It does not prove that a man is not a good man because he errs in doctrine.

The price we have paid to date for correlation is a fraction of what will ultimately be paid, if history informs us of anything. It is now possible to be a “Mormon heretic” for believing doctrine which someone else has determined should be discarded—a thing which was unimaginable at the time of Joseph Smith, even as a result of an actual error in doctrine. For Joseph, the way to reclaim some errant Saint was, well, confined to the means permitted by revelation: “only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned; By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile” (D&C 121:41–42). Today that has been expanded to excommunication for doctrinal errors. When such a thing takes place, years go by before such a person is re-welcomed into the church, and then only after receiving permission from the First Presidency. So the correlation of doctrine has slipped already into a coercive use of authority within the church. Instead of persuading using better doctrine to correct an error, we punish and silence them through a method that was alien to the original pattern.

History is an interesting thing to study. Particularly at the beginnings of any religious movement. It always progresses from movement to institution. Once it becomes an institution, as King Constantine realized, the institution itself must protect itself against disorder. That protection comes, as history shows, at the price of contradicting the original premise upon which the movement began.

The ironies of this are always astonishing. But somehow those who live through it never realize the irony while it is happening. Only later, as it has taken its full bloom in torture, killing, flaying, racking and destroying the lives of people does the original, root moments in which the errors began to creep in get recognized. Those making the errors in the first place are celebrated for centuries as “Saints” and “Popes.”

The history of religion, generally, is a transition between the movement stage, where there is always a charismatic or gifted core from which it springs, to the institution stage. Unfortunately for the institution, gifted folks aren't usually good businessmen. (Joseph Smith, for example, had a pending petition for bankruptcy when he was killed.) Once the movement gets underway, it gets co-opted by businessmen, managers and captains of industry. Folks like Emperor Constantine, who if nothing else was a consummate manager.

Managers crave order. They dislike the chaos of the Spirit, which is always unstable, unpredictable, and uncorrelateable (John 3:8). As a result, they change a movement into an institution. Institutions require order. The nature of an institution requires managers, bankers, businessmen and generals. They consider their “product” to be religion, and they manage and sell their product as if they were General Motors, or the Roman Empire. The kind of freedom that gave birth to the movement must be disciplined, marshaled and controlled.

Our faith is in a complete internal opposition at the moment. To become a Mormon, if you aren't born one, you must go through a conversion process which is grounded in the bedrock of revelation. You must pray and ask God if the Book of Mormon is true, and then you are to get an answer from God. We expect you to have a revelatory experience to join. But, once you have joined, then the scope of your revelatory experience is strictly limited. You must NOT question any leader, nor ever expect God to tell you something about any subject over which you do not preside, nor to ever realize through the inspiration of the Spirit that there are foolish, vain and wrong notions circulating about. You must NOT notice that Deseret Book has become a repository of false and foolish books parading sentimentality as if it were salvific. You should never consider God's revelations to you as something to be honored apart from what the institution says, does, does not do, or does poorly. Indeed, the voice of God will come to you solely and exclusively through the institution. If you need to know something, then the institution will tell you. Unless you hear your orders from it, then stay as you are.

We are at a cross-roads. At the moment the movement is ending. The institution is at its pinnacle of complete triumph. When the process concludes, it will not welcome converts who will challenge the basic assumptions that they, having received revelation to come on-board in the first place, must now quash the Spirit which raises so many questions about how things are proceeding. Then to be Mormon will mean to be correlated. Correlated body and soul. An institutional man. No longer distinct, unique, or creative. Disciplined, orderly, subservient, and under control. Then the institution will become a remarkably appealing tool for not only the captains of industry, but also the heads of state. It will become an almost irresistible tool to be employed as part of governing the world. And so history repeats itself.

Well, these direful lessons are ones which can be either relived or avoided. But to avoid them people who are inside the process must step outside their own times and context and to view everything within a larger picture. I don't think bankers, businessmen and lawyers do that often. Indeed, the well educated who lack inspiration are not qualified. Only the meek. Only the humble. As Nephi described us: "they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men" (2 Ne. 28:14). That was the group to whom I dedicated my book The Second Comforter.

Then I pull myself back into the present reality, and let it all wash over me like a wave. I take a deep breath and I realize how grateful I am for any bit of goodness I can find anywhere. And in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints I can find a lot of good. And I count my blessings and rise determined to remain a true, faithful, active Latter-day Saint throughout my life; and to die as an active and contributing fellow member. But reconciling everything, well, I'm told that's not my calling to do anyway. And I'm grateful to sustain other men to grapple with the management of this historic trend, fraught as it is with the damnation or exaltation of the souls of men. Particularly when they claim to speak in the Lord's name. For them there is only an "on/off" button. They can't have it any other way. Either they speak truthfully in the name of the Lord and with His authorization, or they use His name in vain. I certainly wouldn't want to be put into that spot. So I gratefully sustain those who rush to fill the offices when asked to do so. As one who is simply unfit to serve in such a call, I thank God for my disqualification.

COMMENTS:

Mark Peterson · MAY 7, 2010 AT 5:42 PM

Thank goodness the rank and file aren't as frustrated with the institution as you are or don't obsess over its flaws as you do. They simply are grateful to be a part of it.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 7, 2010 AT 6:10 PM

It's not that I obsess. I ponder. I notice. I find it quite interesting. Actual unfolding history under the very noses of a whole people who are completely without notice. Isaiah had some things to say about it all. I find it easy to identify with his message. It is such a spectacle that I love being here to witness it unfold.

MAY 8, 2010

Correlating the Chaos

Despite what I wrote yesterday about the process of correlation, there is of course another argument in favor of the process. That argument would be based on the exact same history of the transition from Primitive Christianity into Historic Christianity. That is, by the Fourth Century those claiming to be part of the original faith had become so divided that they were actually killing one another over doctrinal disputes. They had a riot in Antioch wherein competing congregations went to battle over possession of the synagogue where they met. An actual street fight, people getting killed and all.

So, rising from rancor of doctrinal dispute into a singular set of beliefs which could later become "orthodox" and all else be branded "heterodox" or, with time, "heretical" was essential just as Constantine knew it would be. Without there being a singular set of beliefs the faith which would eventually sweep the European Continent and beyond could not have brought any unity at all. So it was a good thing, right?

That is the argument for. It is quite compelling, actually. I do not underestimate its strength. However, it simply does not persuade me. Admittedly the violence was foolish and wrong. But the violent sects were never Christ's anyway. They never got what He was teaching. Let them run their violent course and, in time, they will never attract a large audience anyway.

Additionally, the definition of "orthodoxy" was not based upon truth or revelation, it was based only upon what was practical. Constantine never concerned himself with the truth. The legacy of that error lives on. The descendants of that original council in Nicea all condemn us as "Non- Christian" because we reject their creeds, beginning with the Nicene Creed, which defined God.

Inside the Restoration there was an order which allowed tolerance (as Joseph originally envisioned it) of divergent views of doctrine. A consensus wasn't necessary. Only knowing that we were united as a people was necessary. How we viewed different subjects or doctrines was to be left to each individual. The way such people became "one" is something I've already explained in this post (blog post "Becoming One" - February 27, 2010).

We've had healthy and meaningful doctrinal disagreements inside the Church without any ill effects. President Brigham Young believed that God knew everything, was not progressing in knowledge, and that if he were progressing in knowledge it would make God's plans vulnerable to overthrow by something which He did not understand. Elder Orson Pratt thought God was progressing in every respect, including gaining knowledge. He thought the principle of "eternal progression" was the greatest joy and happiness and God enjoys the benefits of that great joy. For him it was a principle of joy. These two never agreed.

Widtsoe was in disagreement with Joseph Fielding Smith. Publication of Man, His Origin and Destiny was nearly a seditious act by Joseph Fielding Smith and incurred the rancor of President McKay. President McKay shut the thing down at that point and wouldn't let either one publish further by adopting a rule that no-one who is a General Authority is permitted to publish without permission of the First Presidency.

We survived. We tolerated. There wasn't a group of violent Widtsoeites attacking the Smithites to overtake the Pioneer Ward building. We were civil. I do not think it did anything more than raise the blood pressure of the High Priests' Groups. Something I believe preferable to the somnambulism of that assortment we see today. Doctrinal differences sort themselves out by persuasion, pure knowledge and love. Eventually, when the problem or confusion becomes acute and we need an answer, then we can all unite and go to the Lord in prayer, seeking mercy from Him for the dispute we cannot ourselves solve. Then, through revelation, we can come to a consensus as we hear from Him. We don't use that model very often.

Right now the Correlation Department is actively polling to give updated information to the Brethren about what policies, programs and procedures are effective. I have a lengthy questionnaire at my home to fill out right now. I don't know if I'm going to do it. I've commented on that process and Elder Holland's reference to it before (blog post "Slippery" – February 22, 2010). I think it is more dangerous to use the polling and focus group approach to manage the diversity of opinions than it is to tolerate them.

What loss is it to us if the church simply refuses to take a position on the Gay Rights Ordinance; while some Saints believe it to be appropriate and others believe it to be the sinful prelude to Sodom and judgments of God. These opinions can be discussed, debated and people can make up their own minds. Joseph's position of tolerance worked, when we tried it. When we had keen and publicly expressed disagreements on doctrine between the First Presidency and members of the Twelve it did not harm us at all. It made us more interesting.

Now that we have chosen to establish "orthodoxy" we are risking the freedom to be individually accountable for our beliefs before God. We have also lost doctrinal adventurism. This is because of our critics.

You see one of the harms of tolerating divergent opinions about doctrine is the clamor of the critics. They take a quote here and juxtapose it with another quote there, and say that Mormonism is a bundle of confusion. We targeted that in the Correlation process and have attempted to entirely stamp out the divergent or disagreeing doctrinal statements or positions. We want "oneness" in a different way than Paul suggested it in the post I referenced above. In doing so, we have conceded the point to our critics, and now make unity of doctrine a greater virtue than freedom to progress and develop our own understanding by degrees.

Sometimes what you understand at one point is not what you understand at another. Hugh Nibley, for example, said nothing he wrote ten years earlier would be binding upon him because he continued to discover and learn. We would be benefited from a similar approach all the way from the top to the bottom. New converts will, by degrees, leave their earlier faith traditions behind them. Or they won't. Instead they will bring with them an understanding from those traditions which have a resonance with the Book of Mormon or something in the Doctrine and Covenants which had escaped all our notice before. And we will all be "added upon" by tolerating their view, even embracing their view. Freedom always pays dividends which control cannot.

Well, I'm not trying to solve the issue. I'm only trying to raise the issue. It is important.

MAY 8, 2010

Peoplehood

One of the very substantial differences in the way we are currently evolving is almost unnoticed. I've tried to capture the difference in what I've written by using the terms "movement" in contrast to "institution." Those terms help to explain the notion, but it is really something more than that. I'm going to use a different way to explain it in this post, and see if I can get a little closer to the real underlying process which is now underway.

The original development under Joseph Smith was something quite distinct from all existing faiths. It was not just a new religion. It was a wholesale resurrection of an ancient concept of "Peoplehood." It was radical. Its purpose was to change diverse assortments of people, from every culture and faith, with every kind of ethnic and racial composition, into a new kind of People. They were to be united under the banner of a New and Everlasting Covenant, resurrecting the ancient Hebraic notion of nationhood and Peoplehood. No matter what their former culture was, they were adopted inside a new family, a covenant family. Status was defined not by virtue of what you believed or confessed, but instead by what covenants you have assumed.

What returned through Joseph Smith was not a religion, nor an institution, nor merely a faith. It was instead the radical notion that an ancient covenant family was being regathered into a separate People. This return to ancient roots brought with it, as the hallmark of its source of power, the idea of renewed covenants that brought each individual into direct contract with God. It did not matter what they believed. It only mattered that they accepted and took upon them the covenant.

Once inside the new People, there was a new culture where ancient ties returned to bind the hearts together. There was a dietary regimen where the People were reminded at every meal that they were distinct and apart from the world. There was the gift of sacred clothing, in which they were reminded of their separateness by the things put upon their skin. There were financial sacrifice of tithes, gathered from the People to help the People. The fortunes of all were intertwined with each other by the gathering of tithes and offerings into the Bishop's storehouse to help the poor and needy among the People. It was NOT a religion. It was a People. It was to become The People. And The People were required to extend to all others the same equal opportunity to become also part of the covenant.

This is different from a religion. It was cultural, personal, and as distinct as a Jew views himself to be from a Christian. To a Jew, religion is a part of the equation. They share blood with other Jews, and therefore even if a Jew is not attending weekly synagogue meetings, they retain their status as one of the Jews.

Religion on the other hand is merely a brand name for a sentiment. One can be a Presbyterian or a Lutheran and still belong to the same Elks Lodge. There is nothing really distinct between the two, other than where they meet for an hour or two on Sundays. Apart from that, they identify culturally as "Protestants" and brothers. There is no great distinction, and the theological differences which separate them are so trivial that a doctrinal disagreement between them is unlikely.

Mormonism has taken a direct course-change where the original elements of separate Peoplehood are now viewed as an impediment to wider acceptance. The distinctions are being minimized in order to undo the conflicts that marred the relationship between Mormonism and the larger American society. The lessons learned from those conflicts have led to the idea that we must become more actively engaged in public relations. Our commitment to the public relations process has informed us that we have to become less distinct to get along with others. We need to drop our misunderstood and offensive claims to distinctions that claim superiority, and urge instead the things that we share with the Presbyterians and Lutherans. The ultimate end of that process is to make it just as meaningless and controversial a thing for a Mormon to belong to and fellowship with the Elks Lodge as it is for the Presbyterian and Lutheran. This is one of the great goals of the Correlation process and the public relations effort of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The outreach at present is merely an attempt to get people to accept the church as another form of Historic Christianity, claiming equality among peers, without any desire to confront or cause conflict. The notion of Peoplehood is being suppressed. Any claims of superiority of the faith are suppressed.

Enthusiastic scholarship is working alongside the larger public relations effort. The work of Robinson at BYU, for example, in his reconciliatory book, (co-authored with a member of the Evangelical-based Denver Theological Seminary faculty) "How Wide the Divide," made an attempt to discuss Evangelical Protestant notions alongside Mormon notions and to minimize any differences. The underlying presumption is that we are both merely religions. As fellow religions we share an attempt to come to God through teachings we believe in and scriptural texts we share.

Reconciliation between what Joseph Smith restored and other religions should never have been a goal. Joseph's restoration was not a church. It was not a religion. It was not a bundle of beliefs. By trying to reach a common footing among other mainstream Christian faiths we have to first abandon the very different footing upon which Joseph established the Restoration.

The original Restoration could never be like any of "them." They were churches. Joseph restored Peoplehood. To go from what Joseph restored to a common footing requires us to first abandon the concept that we are neither a new form of Christianity, nor a return to Jewish antecedents. We are something quite different from either. We are an Hebraic resurrection of God's People, clothed with a covenant, and engaged in a direct relationship with God that makes us distinct from all other people.

When we view ourselves as a Christian faith, we deconstruct the very foundation upon which we began. We aren't that. We can never be part of Historic Christianity. And yet that has been our front-and-center effort through the focus on public relations and the scientific study of what words we should use to advance our acceptance in the world.

Read the earliest of Mormon materials and you will be shocked by how differently they viewed themselves from how we now view ourselves. They were building a separate People. They invited all to come and partake of the covenant, renounce their prior errors, and return to living as one of God's New and Everlasting Covenant holders.

To rid ourselves of that tradition, we need to assume the elements of a typical religion. Rather than defining ourselves as a separate People, we turn to defining a set of beliefs. Establishing an orthodoxy and then insisting upon uniformity of belief to belong to the orthodox religion is the way of the Catholics and Protestants. They are bound together NOT by their peoplehood but instead by their confessions of faith. So as you de-emphasize our Peoplehood, you must then begin to emphasize and control an orthodox statement or confession of faith.

These dynamics are worth very careful thought. There is an actual consensus among church leaders that this is the right way to proceed. A discussion about it among Latter-day Saints has not even begun at the rank and file level. The transition takes place over decades, and unless someone first creates a vocabulary for the problem, we don't even have the capacity to discuss or notice what is happening and why.

This post has gone on too long. Not really a blog post subject. It's a book-length subject. I make fleeting comments about something that would take pages to develop. But I doubt I'll write the needed book. Instead I will try to bring the idea into the consciousness of you good people and let it percolate about. Surely some of you can do something about it.

COMMENTS:

Tom · MAY 9, 2010 AT 12:41 AM

Can you clarify something for me? You've touched on this elsewhere – way back when – when you noted that one of your acquaintances (?) had said that they whole world should be allowed to partake of the ordinances the Church offers, and then be allowed to practice/honor those ordinances as they please, inside/outside the confines of a church in whatever way they see fit/inspired to do.

If so, then it appears to be a similar chord you're striking on this write up when you say, "it did not matter what they believed. It only mattered that they accepted and took upon them the covenant."

Is that a fair understanding?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 9, 2010 AT 7:58 AM

Tom: Yes, I think the concept that joining in with us in covenant, accepting the ordinances, and learning that they have part in the great latter-day resurrection of the People of Israel should be what makes a Latter-day Saint. From that point it is merely a matter of education. And by education I mean persuasion, example, pure knowledge, the power of the spirit and inviting and enticing them to a higher plane. Not control. Not compulsion in any degree. Not strict rules and mandatory catechisms. Merely showing the light and inviting to move toward it should be the gentle spirit of the Restoration. It will produce independently converted, self-empowered, capable people who do not look to another to tell them what to do. The bar which will be raised will be wholly within the souls of members.

Anonymous · MAY 10, 2010 AT 10:39 AM

Brandon:

Well, in that respect, maybe the FLDS finally got something right! They don't compromise anything at all.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 10, 2010 AT 9:39 PM

With respect to the FLDS and their resistance to compromise: Except, of course, with respect to their obligation to comply with the law, as the Articles of Faith obligate them to do. As well as honoring and respecting a woman's right to be educated, make an informed choice and wait to marry until after she is of age. Such compulsion of child-brides as we saw at the YFZ ranch was criminal and resulted in the conviction of Jeffs, who is now in prison.

MAY 9, 2010

Micah Chapter 3

O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment?

Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones; Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him.

Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God.

But truly I am full of power by the spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us.

Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

MAY 9, 2010

Mother's Day

Happy Mother's Day.

The single greatest institution is also the most successful one in all the earth's history. Mothers have kept civilization together from the beginning.

Fathers have been far less valiant in history than have mothers. Fathers have forsaken their responsibilities to bear priesthood and perpetuate the Gospel with such regularity that the history of mankind is predominately a history of apostasy. Mothers however, have continued to bear, raise, nurture and love their children.

God bless those who are our mothers or the mothers of our children. Today we should honor them in thought and deed. (I'm doing all the cooking today. And all the dishes, too. I think I'll use TGI Fridays to get them done...)

MAY 10, 2010

"Of Strong Faith and a Firm Mind"

Consider this:

[N]either have angels ceased to minister unto the children of men. For behold, they are subject unto him, to minister according to the word of his command, showing themselves unto them of strong faith and a firm mind in every form of godliness. And the office of their ministry is to call men unto repentance, and to fulfil and to do the work of the covenants of the Father, which he hath made unto the children of men, to prepare the way among the children of men, by declaring the word of Christ unto the chosen vessels of the Lord, that they may bear testimony of him. (Moroni 7:29–31)

Note that angels show themselves to those “of strong faith and a firm mind.” Also, that the visit will require them to whom such visits come to “bear testimony of [Christ]” as a result of those visitations.

From Joseph Smith:

A fanciful and flowery and heated imagination beware of; because the things of God are of deep import; and time, and experience, and careful and ponderous and solemn thoughts can only find them out. Thy mind, O man! if thou wilt lead a soul unto salvation, must stretch as high as the utmost heavens, and search into and contemplate the darkest abyss, and the broad expanse of eternity—thou must commune with God. (TPJS p. 137)

Note that the “imagination” is not useful in gaining communion with God. Fanciful, flowery and heated imaginative thoughts will detract, not contribute, to knowing Him. The only way is to possess the same mental state as Moroni refers to—careful, sober, solemn, deep thoughts are required. The mind must reach into heaven as well as the darkest abyss. The opposition of things in this creation and the balance of those opposites will cause you to encounter the worst as you strive to enjoy the best. All is kept in balance throughout the process.

A person can't imagine they have salvation. They must “know” they possess it. The heavens should declare it to them. When the heavens bestow this knowledge upon a person, it is an anchor to their soul and they will never fall. But until then, a person needn't suppose they possess something which God has not declared by His own voice to be theirs.

True teachers will labor to help you understand how real, deliberate, attainable, and necessary this process is to engage in. They will not ask you to follow them. They will teach you how to follow God, and obtain from God knowledge of salvation. False teachers will distract you. They will tell you all is right, that there is enough good being done in your life to merit God's favor, and that it is not necessary for you to do more than belong to a privileged group.

You cannot possess the knowledge which will save you until you have learned for yourself that God lives, and that He has promised to you eternal life.

MAY 10, 2010

Why Wait?

The question was asked as to whether receiving The Second Comforter is necessary before you die, or if the afterlife supplies an adequate substitute. This requires the evaluation of two separate concepts.

First, The Second Comforter means a visit or personal appearance to someone by Christ. However, the appearance is not as important as the ministry of the Lord. He "comforts" those to whom He appears. He will "not leave you comfortless, he will come to you" (John 14:18). Christ and His Father will "make their abode with you" (John 14:23). Meaning that the Son will bring you to the Father, and the Father will receive you as His son. This appearance is not merely "in the heart," but is an actual appearance or visit (D&C 130:3).

However, the purpose of the ministry, the reason for the "abode" with you, the "comfort" that is promised by the Lord, involves the promise of eternal life. The promise of eternal life has been made an equivalency by the Lord in a revelation given in modern times. That is, the end or result of the ministry of Christ as The Second Comforter is to have the promise of eternal life. In a modern revelation the word of the Lord was given to a group of Latter-day Saints in which the promise of their exaltation was extended to them, and the Lord made this the equivalent to “another Comforter.” Here is what was said:

Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John. This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; Which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ his Son—(D&C 88:3–5)

Therefore, as a singular appearance, should the Lord appear to you, you have received The Second Comforter. However, His ministry is to bring you to the point at which you can receive the promise of eternal life, membership in the Church of the Firstborn, and the promise of the Celestial Kingdom as your eternal inheritance. In the fullest sense, therefore, the final promise of exaltation in the Celestial Kingdom can also be called The Second Comforter, since that is the result of His taking up His abode with you.

The second concept is really a question: Would it be preferable to have the promise of eternal life now than to die uncertain as to your eternal state? If so, then why would you waste your life now in hopes that some other opportunity may exist at some other stage?

If the answer to these questions are “yes” then the original question is simply unimportant. Why wait? The opportunity given to you now should not be forfeited, nor should the work be delayed. Don't dismiss the Lord's offered assistance for what you can achieve in mortality for the possibility of something in the after-life.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family · MAY 10, 2010 AT 3:51 PM

Can you comment on the definition and usage of such terms as salvation, redemption, eternal life, exaltation, and exaltations in the context of the Second Comforter? Thanks.

mckay · MAY 10, 2010 AT 8:32 PM

The verses in Section 88 that you quote have been very puzzling to us. The revelation does indeed make equivalencies, equivalencies between "another Comforter" AND "the Holy Spirit of Promise".

There appears to be a contradiction in what we have been taught on this subject. Most of "The Brethren" state the Holy Spirit of Promise is the Holy Ghost in one of his roles. You appear to be saying that it is the Lord himself, or possibly 'the Promise' itself given by the Lord in 'another', not the initial Second Comforter visit.

Is there any way to harmonize the two definitions or should I just toss out my copy of Doctrines of Salvation?

the Platt brothers

Denver Snuffer

I think the definition is provided in this equivalency. I find the scriptures have more answers in them than most people recognize. They are the standard against which all teaching ought to be measured. Only when they fail to give an answer should we be looking elsewhere.

As to dying without the experience, I would not be too hasty about concluding that was the case. Stephen had the experience in the last few moments of his life. Alvin (Joseph's older brother) as well seemed to have. The conditions in The Second Comforter include the obligation to keep what is sacred to yourself, and if someone is unable to do that they would need to wait until they are ready to part this life. Which then leads me to another complaint I have about those who think they know what I have written before ever reading it. There are nine words in The Second Comforter about my experience. Nothing other than confirming I have seen Him is there. I've never failed to keep a trust or confidence with the Lord. I've been constrained to teach, and have done so despite my deepest apprehensions about all the misunderstanding which will follow. It is a burden, not a blessing, to be in this position. I do not blame anyone for disbelieving what I say. I doubt I would trust someone who is teaching as I do. But I do so because of a burden imposed upon me, and faith in the Lord whose I am.

That was an aside. Sorry about that. Here's the two points: First, you do not know what your departed relatives did or did not receive. Second, the judgment is based not merely on what you did, but what you intended or would have done had the opportunities been afforded to you. Such a standard makes it impossible for us to know. This post is suggesting that there is no reason to hesitate or refuse to make the attempt.

There will be another post in a few days (maybe tomorrow—that's up to my wife) which talks about the patience to trust timing to the Lord.

MAY 10, 2010

Charge to Twelve

This is really a “comment” in response to a question belonging to the earlier post on Elder Packer's Testimony. However, it was too long to put in there as a reply comment, so will be put up here as a blog entry. It is an interruption. Sorry. There is a fellow asking for it, and I delayed for so long that I feel I owe him a response. I am really writing this to him.

Taken from Mormon Hierarchy: Extensions of Power. (A good book by Quinn. He's written some bad ones, but this is not one of them. I think he was stinging from criticism and in this book proved he was still a good historian.)

In 1835 Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery emphasized to the newly organized Quorum of the Twelve Apostles that their calling was charismatic, evangelical and also institutional. Of the three, the charismatic definition of the apostleship was the earliest, going back to 1829.

Cowdery told the new apostles: 'It is necessary that you receive a testimony from heaven for yourselves; so that you can bear testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon, and that you have seen the face of God.' Then he continued: 'That is more than the testimony of an angel...Never cease striving until you have seen God, face to face.' Cowdery acknowledged that most of the new apostles had depended on visions of others for their faith and suggested that some might even be skeptical of visions. Thus it was not necessary to see Jesus to be chosen as an apostle. However, once ordained each man had a lifelong obligation to seek this charismatic experience: a vision of deity. Some apostles from 1835 onward reported having had such visions before their ordination. Apostles in the nineteenth century referred publicly to their visionary witness.

...some LDS apostles, including Orson Pratt and Heber J. Grant, felt inadequate because they had not had such encounters.

In the twentieth century, charismatic apostleship changed in several ways. First, the 'charge' at ordination no longer obligated apostles to seek visions. Second, the Presidency and apostles began down-playing the importance of these experiences. Third, apostles began speaking of a non-visionary 'special witness of Christ' by the Holy Ghost in terms which allowed listeners to conclude that the apostles referred to an actual appearance of deity. Fourth, apostles were reluctant to discuss their visionary experiences publicly. Fifth, evidence indicates that a decreasing number of apostles experienced visions before or after ordination.

The change in the apostolic ‘charge’ apparently began with the appointment of Reed Smoot as an apostle in 1900. General church authorities had long regarded him as ‘reliable in business, but [he] has little or no faith.’ President Lorenzo Snow blessed him to receive ‘the light of the Holy Ghost’ so that he could bear testimony of Jesus Christ and Joseph Smith. That was an extraordinary departure from the apostolic charge as given since 1835.

...Twentieth-century apostles began applying this ‘as if’ approach to their spoken testimonies. Usually this involved wording their ‘special witness’ of Christ in a way that encouraged listeners to assume the leader has had a more dramatic encounter with the divine than actually claimed.

The full discussion ranges from pages 1 through 6 and would require too much typing to do it here. But the above, taken only from pages 1–2, gives you some more particulars than my brief reference before. The whole discussion is documented with references from the Church’s archives where the writer reviewed the transcripts of the actual ordinations, etc. They are all set out in the footnotes, which are omitted from the quote I have excerpted above.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MAY 10, 2010 AT 6:17 PM

I should add that this book by Quinn was the second of two books in the Mormon Hierarchy series. The first titled Mormon Hierarchy: Origins of Power was NOT a good book in my view. In fact, I thought there were either lapses of good judgment or deliberate mis-characterizations made in the first volume and I would not recommend it unless the reader is independently acquainted with the history and able to read critically. The second volume was published during the time when he was being roundly criticized and it reflects a significant improvement in his judgment and writing of history. I can recommend it to any reader. It is well documented, relies upon materials in the Church's archives, and shows a fair interpretation of the material so far as I have been able to tell. There has not been any significant contradiction of the sources he cites by anyone else having access to the archive materials.

Ben · MAY 11, 2010 AT 10:33 PM

I'm not sure I'd put my trust in Quinn as a source for anything. You probably don't agree with the FARMS review of this book, but one thing I did find interesting in the review was the mention of Elder McConkie's discussion of Oliver Cowdery's charge in his book The Promised Messiah.

Elder McConkie discusses the charge to apostles that they must also view the face of God as the ancients did. He not only finds this binding upon the apostles of our day (it was written in 1978, after his ordination), but considers that charge binding on all the elders of the church.

I'm not sure that a greater reluctance on behalf of the Quorum of the Twelve to speak openly of their personal experiences necessarily means that none are having them anymore. I find it more likely that the general membership of the church is not prepared to receive such testimonies. We seal the heavens with our unbelief and casual attitude about spiritual things.

I really don't like Quinn's accusation that the current Apostles adopt an "as if" approach to their testimonies to hint at things they know they haven't experienced. That is a charge of intentional deception that I do not believe. Are GAs, Apostles and Prophets infallible, no, but I don't believe they would intentionally mislead and attempt to deceive the membership of the Church as Quinn seems to indicate.

I just finished listening to the past General Conference again, and those fallible, institutional leaders giving correlated talks somehow still manage to have the spirit of the Lord with them as they preach the simple gospel.

Are they perfect, are we perfect? No of course not.

Sometimes I wonder, though, if the discussions here sometimes make it seem as if the problems are really bigger than they really are and make some lose confidence that the Lord is still behind the general work (not every single particular) of his Church.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 5:39 AM

I will add some quotes from the recent book on President David O. McKay and, of course, Elder Packer's General Conference talk I've referred to previously. Also the testimony of President Smith before the Senate. You needn't rely on Quinn alone. There are other sources. But that will be later, I don't have time this morning.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 6:52 PM

The entry of March 28th on President Packer's Testimony explains what his testimony consists of. I do not think he was understating or overstating anything. I believe he was being absolutely candid and truthful. You can read anything miraculous into it you want, but he did not put it there. It was honest, plain and simple, and as he put it, 'much the same as you would hear in any fast and testimony in the Church.' I'm not going to repeat it here. You can look it up on this blog if you want.

From David O. McKay and The Rise of Modern Mormonism, p. 6: "He had misgivings that stemmed from unresolved doubts about the work he was being called to perform." (Speaking of his call to the Twelve.) Then, quoting Hugh Nibley on page 7 and referring to a talk to missionaries, including Nibley:

His whole talk was about how skeptical he had always been about the gospel. He said he had never believed it for most of his life and was very skeptical. And, of course, he was made an apostle, and he was an apostle at that time. He did believe it, we assumed. He showed a side of skepticism, at least different from all the others. I don't think the others had ever been as skeptical as he was ... When he was made an Apostle, a lot of people were shocked. 'David O. McKay, an Apostle?' Because he had been quite open and honest in expressing his doubts about things.

I'll continue with another block.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 7:02 PM

From President Joseph F. Smith's testimony before the Senate of the US:

Sen. Dubois: Have you received any revelation from God..?

Mr. Smith: Since when?

Sen. Dubois: Since you became president of the Church.

Mr. Smith: No sir; none whatever.

There is a dialogue about the meaning of revelation in which President Smith suggests it can be broad enough to include, when a person is living right, an "influence of his Spirit, his mind, and his will. That would be a revelation to that individual." After this dialogue the testimony included this follow-up:

Sen. Dubois: Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became president of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?

Mr. Smith: I can not say that I have.

Then a bit later President Smith adds this comment:

If I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had the impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but that are not in the sense of revelations.

The transcripts have been published in the recent book, The Mormon Church on Trial: Transcripts of the Reed Smoot Hearings.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 7:06 PM

Now, I am only answering a question here and providing information I've been asked to provide. The raw information should not be, in a stand-alone sense, used to reach any conclusion other than the fact that these men's personal experiences are not the endless stream of regular visits every Thursday in the Temple with Christ which some people have asserted. This does not mean they aren't Apostles. They are. They hold an office titled Apostle, with the associated duties and responsibilities. However, their testimonies should be taken at face value and nothing should be read into them.

The idea that an witness of Jesus Christ should never affirm He lives, and was resurrected from the dead, and that they have seen Him is, in my humble opinion, utter foolishness. I do not think the Lord makes Himself known to then have the fact kept secret. I disbelieve that notion completely. And the idea that such a witness ought to be coy, evasive, or unable to affirm directly that He lives, for the witness has seen Him is, in my view, utterly incredible.

I accept the testimony of the Twelve and First Presidency. I read absolutely nothing into them which they do not put into their testimonies. And I accept them as true.

Denver Snuffer · may 12, 2010 at 7:13 PM

Finally, Ben, yes I read the review and several others as well. I read it critically, meaning that I noticed what highly selective criticisms were made and how entirely evasive those selective criticisms in fact were. They were deliberately put in a way to make them seem to be more sound than they were, and left almost all of the text quoted by Quinn without any response. But if read uncritically (as FARMS often intends their readers to do), then you have the impression that they've actually answered Quinn's materials. They haven't. They haven't even started to undertake that. They found a few trifles, and roundly condemned them. Then left the overwhelming balance of the book completely un-addressed. In many ways, FARMS' reviews reveals a great deal more about them than the books they review. But you must read them critically, thinking as you go along, and with your own reasoning kept as you do.

dan · MAY 12, 2010 AT 9:39 PM

I don't agree with this Denver. I posted a visit Hugh B. Brown had from the Savior under your blog entry Elder Packer's Testimony. I don't recall him ever stating anything of the like publicly. He may have, but if he did, I haven't heard it. He shared the visit with N. Eldon Tanner and he said something after Elder Brown passed away. I think many of the brethren have had the visit, if not multiple ones. Either way, what happens to any of them has no bearing on me personally. My experiences depend on me and me alone. Anyone else's experiences should never be a sufficient substitute for our own.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 9:46 PM

It is not at all necessary to agree with me. I am only explaining my view, not advocating to persuade.

MAY 4, 2010

What Lack I Yet?

I was asked this question:

“Do you know with surety IN ADVANCE of doing some incredibly hard sacrifice that it is the Lord asking it of you, or do you come to know that it is His will AS you do it?”

My response:

You will know with absolute certainty that the request came from the Lord. The request will be difficult, or a sacrifice.

HOWEVER, whether the person recognizes at the moment or only in hindsight that it was required for them to develop the faith necessary for redemption is not universal. Some know at the time, some only know in hindsight. What is absolutely universal is that when the test has been passed, the faith exists. When it does, it will be enough for redemption and the promise of eternal life.

Joseph knew he had the promise of eternal life (as recorded in D&C 132:49) before he went to Carthage to die. He knew he was going to die. Death was not his great challenge, but the physical ratification of the faith which already existed in him. The earlier trials had been enough to prove him and put that power within him. His death was an extension of existing faith and knowledge.

The order of things is established and can be known. The details of how it unfolds in individual lives will be specific to the individual. Whether the person realizes the final great test is underway or not will depend on the person. I did not. I only came to realize in hindsight what was underway.

One of the parables in Ten Parables shows how the heavens can interact with man, but man be unaware of the full agenda conducted. I have referred to that tenth parable several times. By the way, that parable is NOT a description of the test required to obtain the faith for redemption. It is just a parable about how heaven works to provide missing virtue or grace to a life that is lacking something, but still worthy of preservation.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 12, 2010 AT 11:47 AM

Regarding sacrifice...will you speak to what the scripture means when it says...."and if ye bear it well...." I have heard so many lessons that equate that with bearing trials and sacrifice cheerfully with a smile with no hint of discouragement, depression, downheartedness, etc. Doesn't it mean more that despite all of the negative things you may feel you come out on the other side with faith in tact...even if it was possible to feel discouraged, sad and disheartened while going through your ordeal?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 9:28 PM

With regard to sacrifice and "bear it well" my experience tells me that it absolutely does not mean cheerfully and with a smile. It only means in faith. The difficulty, the distress, the pain and the suffering which were necessary for me were not at all cheerful. I do not discuss my personal experiences, only doctrine. But the true doctrine behind that scripture has nothing to do with an absence of distress, discouragement, disheartening setbacks or pain. Without purging everything, including your pride, my belief is you will not be ready. Stripped, broken, beaten and surrendering; you will be able to understand the Lord because you have tasted somewhat of that same “cup” from which He drank.

We are all different. We have entirely different make-up, strengths, capacities and needs. But within the context of your own life you will be improved by the things which He alone knows you must suffer to become refined and lose your vanity.

MAY 11, 2010

Be Careful What You Ask For

It was weird, really. This guy went to visit with God in His House, but when he got there he couldn't see Him. I mean he couldn't “see” Him. God was there. They both were there. But God, as it turned out, the guy was unable to detect His presence.

He went to the optometrist and got his vision checked. Everything worked. So he was left to wonder why it was he couldn't see God.

Some study later he concluded that although God was made of matter (Luke 24:39), He must be more refined or pure, and therefore not detectable by normal eyesight (D&C 131:7). Only “purer” eyes could see him. So he used Visine, returned to see Him, and still no luck.

Well, he decided to take up the matter in prayer and offered this supplication to the Almighty: “I'm beginning to doubt your love for me. Tell you what, you show yourself to me and I'll know you love me. But if you stay outside my field of vision then I know you're avoiding me and therefore don't love me.” God loves everyone, see. And so the request was framed in a way to force God to make Himself visible. The man thought himself clever.

Well, God decided to take the fellow up on the request, as He always does. First the man's house burned down, then his business failed, then he got cancer. As he was in the hospital his family abandoned him, and his friends all thought he was cursed by God, and stayed away. So he waited out the final days of his mortality alone, in pain, and without possessions.

As a charity case the hospital treated him with some neglect, giving him many hours to suffer alone in his bed. Suffering brought about meditation and prayer.

It was during the last few hours of his life, as he lay fevered and in pain, that his burdens overwhelmed him and he sought in desperate humility for relief from God. His prayer was:

“Oh Lord, I know I have done less than I should have with the things I have been given. I long to part this life clean of my failings. Can you forgive me, a wretched sinner, for my many failings?” He expected little. Hoping only to save his conscious by this prayer.

The Lord, who had been in the room for days, suddenly came into view. Startled by this appearance, the man asked: “Is it you, Lord?”

“Yes” came the reply.

“Can you forgive me?”

“Oh, I've done that long ago. Yes, you are certainly forgiven. I'm here for you to see I love you. You asked for that in your prayer a year ago and I've been working so that your eyes could become more refined. Now, at last they are.”

Now the man could see what great love the Lord truly had for him. For in the extremity of his dying hour, he had a companion to comfort him.

He died in joy. The nurse thought it was the morphine.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 11, 2010 AT 11:00 PM

But why be careful? I would say, "be prepared for what you ask for". Careful gives thought that perhaps he would have refused what he received had he known the trial. Ask anyone who has been through a horrific trial but came to know their Heavenly Father through it. Not one I know would give it up. I wouldn't.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 12, 2010 AT 5:38 AM

Well put. Reminds me of the Willie Handcart veteran's remark about getting to know God in their extremity.

from the desk of Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 2

Copyright © 2022 Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

All rights reserved.

ISBN: 978-1-956909-01-2

from the desk of Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 2

MAY 12, 2010—AUGUST 1, 2010

Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

A Note to the Reader:

This multi-volume series covers blog entries beginning in 2010. Scripture references in the text refer to the LDS versions of scripture found in the King James Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine & Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. Beginning about March 2018 the scripture cites change to the Restoration Edition of the scriptures. Cites of the Restoration Edition scriptures are typically denoted with OC, NC and T&C references e.g., (NC Matt. 8:10), or alternately (1 Ne. 1:22 RE) setting them apart from the former LDS scripture version references. For those interested, a scripture reference conversion tool that allows navigation between the various scripture references and versions can be accessed at: <https://scriptures.info/Scriptures/ReferenceTranslator>

CHAPTER 1
Isaiah 53

MAY 12, 2010

Isaiah 53:1

Isaiah 53:1 begins with the questions:

Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

These two questions remain as timely today as they were when asked 750 years before Christ's birth. As to the first question:

The report is Isaiah's testimony of the coming Messiah.

It is plural, although delivered by a lone prophet, because God Himself authorized the message to be delivered. Therefore it is not "my" but rather "our" report.

The question concerns the audience's "belief" in the report, because it contradicts the ideas held by them. It will tell them something remarkably different from what they thought to be true.

As to the second question:

"The arm of the Lord" is a symbol of His strength or might.

To have the strength of the Lord revealed to someone is to have them come into knowledge of Him and His ways.

His ways are not what men presume they are. They are directed to much higher, much holier ends. The strength of the Lord as it will unfold in the chapter which follows is based upon the suffering He undertook for us.

The chapter that follows this opening verse is framed in the past tense. This is called the “prophetic perfect” tense. To the prophet, the events have been seen. To him, they are in the past. Therefore, future events are framed as if they already occurred. Prophets to whom things are shown will often frame their message in the past tense, even though they speak of things in the future. You find it throughout prophecy.

MAY 12, 2010

Isaiah 53:2

Isaiah 53:2 states this about the Messiah:

“For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.”

The first “he” is a reference to the Messiah. The second “him” is either the Father in Heaven or Israel.

The Messiah will be a “tender plant” or a “root” that arises “out of a dry ground” because the barren, unproductive, rancorous people among whom He will be sent will not be producing redeemed souls when He comes. They will be racked with religious falsehoods; ambitious and controlling men who have obtained their leadership through political maneuvering, influence peddling and purchase.

The acquisition of religious status was so normal a thing in that day that the Apostles would later be asked by Simon if he could purchase the priesthood from them (Acts 8:13–24). And yet the Messiah will find the way back to opening the heavens, receiving power from on high, and then go about preaching and leading other souls to redemption as well. For Him the barren, dry ground will be no impediment to salvation.

The Messiah will “have no form nor comeliness,” and have “no beauty.” Not because of His physical appearance, however. It will be due to the lack of position, absence of credentials, failure to hold a leadership position, and outsider status which makes Him undesirable. Those who recognize in His message the voice of the Lord will be required to overlook His obscurity and status. I’ve described this more fully in two chapters in Come, Let Us Adore Him.

This image contradicts the presumptions of the people who hear Isaiah’s report. They imagine themselves as followers of the true faith. They presume they would hearken to the voice of God no matter when it came. But they look for it in barren ground. Therefore, when the Messiah should come, they will be unable to find anything desirable, beautiful or comely about Him. Rather they will shout “crucify Him!” because He will have merited the charge of blasphemy.

For those who heard Isaiah’s report, this would seem altogether wrong. It is incomprehensible for the chosen people to fail to recognize the Lord’s own Son. And yet they will kill Isaiah, as well. So when the message of the prophet Isaiah came to pass, the generation in which it was fulfilled was entirely oblivious to how his prophecy was unfolding before their eyes.

This is the Lord’s doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

MAY 13, 2010

Isaiah 53:3

Isaiah 53:3 states:

“He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.”

The Messiah would be both “despised” and “rejected” by the very people who claimed to follow Him. The astonishing report of Isaiah was unbelievable. It makes no sense that the people who looked forward to deliverance would reject their Deliverer. Why expect them to “despise” and “reject” the very one they rely upon for their hope? It is little wonder that Isaiah’s report would not be believed.

Isaiah’s Messiah would be “a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.” He would mingle with the commonest of people, bearing with their infirmities, ministering to them. All the while, He will be a thorn to those who despised His ministry. Those in good society would “hide their faces from Him,” and refuse to associate with Him. He had nothing to offer them. For them to acknowledge Him would require them to condescend. Better for them to hide their faces.

He warned them that if they were ashamed of Him, He would in turn be ashamed of them (Mark 8:38). He also counseled them to be careful about their standard of judgment, because it would be applied to them (Matt. 7:2).

Despite the coming Messiah’s teachings, and Isaiah’s testimony of Him, the chosen people nevertheless “despise” Him, and “esteem Him not.” It would simply be too difficult a task to confront Him in the flesh and find it possible to recognize Him for what He was.

We presume we could have recognized Him. However, the test He set up was one that He cautioned was coming. Our unflattering views of Christ's contemporaries may, in turn, leave us without excuse should He choose as He does so often, to send us a message from an obscure or un-credentialed source.

I wonder how many of us would recognize the truth, if it came only with the power of veracity behind it. Forgetting all the messenger is lacking, could we be starving ourselves from truth by again rejecting the open hand the Lord extends us? Whether by His own voice or by the voice of a servant, it will always be the same (D&C 1:38).

COMMENTS:

jds · MAY 13, 2010 AT 1:48 PM

Denver,

From various posts written, I am seeing what I believe to be important basic doctrine that you have posted:

1. The Savior should be our personal minister, not the institution of the church.
2. To receive Christ as our personal minister, we should actively follow the light of Christ which invites us to be kind and good in all that we do and say.
3. As we become of strong faith and a firm mind and give heed to the specific promptings of the Holy Ghost and faithfully do all things we are invited to do, our light will grow and we will continue to receive more light.
4. Sources of greater light that are available to those of strong faith and a firm mind include the Holy Ghost, Angels, Celestial Beings, and the gift of Seership.
5. The Church through its presiding officers are endowed with the keys of the priesthood and control the rights to the saving ordinances of the Gospel of Jesus Christ here on earth.

6. We should consider all counsel provided by the church, magnify any office given to us within the church and strive to follow all general counsel (i.e. family and personal prayers, scripture study, service, family home evening, regular temple attendance, and so forth).
7. We are not to look to the church for our primary source of light; rather, as Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and other prophets have taught, we are to faithfully heed and obey invitations of the Holy Ghost and to ultimately receive the Savior as our personal minister.
8. A part of the path of receiving Christ as our personal minister includes an Abrahamic test that we know of assuredly comes from God and it will include doing something that for us personally will run counter to what we believe to be right. Passing the test will lead to greater faith and blessings.
9. We should spend our study time with literature that teaches pure doctrine—which alone has the power to lift us unto exaltation. We should cease to support or create literature that does not teach pure doctrine.
10. As individuals and as a church, we cannot fulfill our destiny by covering up sins and mistakes, but must become fully transparent (confession) if we hope to continue to progress.
11. The church is not adequately emphasizing pure doctrine as readily as it once did.
12. The church no longer follows the charge of Joseph Smith for apostles and prophets to receive the Second Comforter.
13. Historically correlation has always led to a dilution of pure doctrine and to apostasy. We face a similar risk.
14. Isaiah 53 teaches a pattern that occurs in Israel whenever Israel becomes barren through political or financial considerations.
15. God raises up and sends forth messenger(s) who are empowered with no credentials other than “pure truth” to call Israel to repentance, as needed.

JDS · MAY 13, 2010 AT 1:53 PM

I would amend one of the previous summary statements to say that correlation leads to a dilution of pure doctrine, to stagnation in the ability to gather Israel, and to a spiritual weakness that leads to greater apostasy.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 19, 2010 AT 9:46 PM

JDS: That was a brilliant summary.

JDS · MAY 20, 2010 AT 8:36 PM

Thank you Denver, I cannot adequately express my appreciation. Reading The Second Comforter and these blogs have helped ground me with a greater sense toward the reality and the eventuality of the process. Have you ever read, "The Three Lights," by Marion G. Romney. I found and read that talk in a stack of Old Ensigns when I was a missionary back in the 70s. You are the first person I know of to write about this topic since that time. It has helped me connect the dots to much that has happened in my life since then. Thanks again.

MAY 13, 2010

Isaiah 53:4

Isaiah 53:4 states:

"Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted."

This Messiah of whom Isaiah testifies will bear "grief" and "sorrow," but these will belong to us. They will be ours. In His suffering will be found our own shortcomings and failures. He will assume them for us.

As He suffers, we will think it is His own deserved punishment. We will think it is God's doing. God will smite Him. God will afflict Him. After all, He was not truly God's Son.

We miss the point of Isaiah's message when we confine it to the Lord alone. His messengers will also come "as a thief in the night" to warn again before His coming. They, too, may fit the same pattern. If so, then we should be careful when we think another person's grief and sorrows are inflicted upon them by a God who has smitten them. Such an assessment may, like those who lived and rejected the Messiah, put you on the wrong side of the confrontation.

The Lord's doings are ever the same. The pattern simply does not change.

MAY 13, 2010

Isaiah 53:5

Isaiah 53:5 states:

“But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.”

Those wounds He suffered were not His, they were ours. Those iniquities which were laid upon Him were never His to bear. He volunteered to take them. We were relieved of them, and He took them. He purchased our peace by what He suffered to reconcile us to God. His infirmity was to heal us.

Our rejection of Him was the means by which He became fully acceptable to His Father. He bore our abuse to make His compassion perfect.

What we lacked we put on full display in our anger at Him.

What we held in our hearts we poured out upon Him, shouting to kill Him! Crucify Him! Away with Him! He took it to allow our rejection to become His bridge back to the Father for us all.

When the outcast makes intercession for those who despised Him, there can be no crime which He cannot forgive. Having suffered the guilt of all, He holds the keys of death and hell. He suffered both. It was perfectly unjust for Him to have suffered anything. Yet He suffered it all.

How can the gates of hell be opened? It requires someone upon whom death and hell could have no claim to go there. When justice itself requires Him to be released, then death and hell are conquered. This is what He would do. He would suffer the wrath of the guilty and vile, fully assume their punishment and abuse, and bear their penalty of death itself. When the fury relented, and the wrath ended, He could reclaim life. His captivity ended the captivity for all. Having then returned to life, because it was just for Him to do so, He acquired the keys of death and hell. Now He can open those gates for any and all because it was unjust for Him to have been put through either. He can now advocate for others by virtue of what He suffered and the injustice of that suffering (D&C 45:3–5).

MAY 14, 2010

Isaiah 53:6

Isaiah 53:6:

“All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.”

The Savior referred to those who would follow Him as His “sheep” (John 10:27). However, Isaiah’s use of “sheep” here is not about those who would follow Him, but rather those who would scatter, find other shepherds, or lose their way altogether. Isaiah’s “sheep” are disorderly and have gone “astray.”

The bookends of these two messages—Isaiah’s sheep, who are astray, and Christ’s, who “hear His voice”—are two sides of the same coin. Until “ALL” of us have been, or to some degree, have gone “astray,” we are unprepared to “hear His voice” and be gathered by Him.

We have turned away from the True Shepherd and gone into our “own way.” That errant “way” is appealing to the ego, the mind, the imagination, or the traditions we need to control us because they are safe, tested or handed to us by those whom we trust. Whatever the reason for choosing our own way, it is nevertheless ours. We must leave it, respond to the True Shepherd’s “voice” and gather again to Him.

It is His “voice” whenever He sends a true messenger, empowered with a message from Him. It is not His “voice” when the messenger has not been sent or empowered with a message from Him.

The “iniquity of us all” in finding ourselves in these strange paths has been laid upon Him. He has found His way back from every error man can make. He has solved every dilemma, confronted every error, overcome every false and tempting doctrine the devil has thrown at you. He can solve your imponderable problems. He knows the answers. He has overcome the iniquities of every false, evil or prideful teaching ever given to any man or woman.

He can lead you back to the light, because He has remained true to the light throughout. Therefore look to Him.

CHAPTER 2

The Scriptures Have Answers

MAY 14, 2010

Patience

Christ was prepared eighteen years prior to the time His ministry would begin. He stood by ready, and “waited upon the Lord for the time of his ministry to come” (JST Matt. 3:24–26).

Prepared and waiting.

Patience.

Even the Lord, who was “more intelligent than them all,” waited (Abr. 3:19).

The Lord’s counsel to all is that they must not “run faster than they have strength” (Mosiah 4:27; also D&C 10:4).

There is no rush to receiving an audience with the Lord. When it happens it is always in His own time, His own way, and according to His own will (D&C 88:68).

We must ask. Then we wait upon Him. If He waited, what makes you think you are entitled to rush ahead without paying a similar price to develop the necessary patience in waiting on the Lord.

Abraham was promised children, but waited decades to receive the promise. Anna and Simeon were promised they would behold the Lord's Messiah, but were both well stricken in age before He came (Luke 2:25–38).

Patience.

Recognize the Lord alone will determine the timing. Our responsibility is to trust in Him and await His will. We can ask, seek and knock. He cannot respond unless we ask, seek and knock. But having done so, then we trust in Him to decide when He will make Himself known to us.

MAY 15, 2010

Isaiah 53:7

Isaiah 53:7 states:

“He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.”

These three references to Him refraining from “opening his mouth” and being “dumb” (meaning silent) are referring to more than His failure to respond to Herod's inquiries (Luke 23:8–9). This is a reference to Christ's “Word,” which if employed, could have moved mountains, held armies at defiance, and summoned “twelve legions of angels” to His defense (Matt. 26:52–53). Pilate was told that he may have been the Roman Procurator, but he had no power over Christ which Christ did not permit (John 19:7–11).

Christ remained silent, choosing to exercise meekness in the face of the threat aimed at Him. (“Meekness” as explained in Beloved Enos, which is really a great power.) It was in this sense that Isaiah found His silence to be prophetically remarkable.

One of the great signs of the Messiah. He would be the One whose words could have exercised power to defy armies, but who refrained from speaking those words. He would, instead, voluntarily submit to the abuse and scorn of those who hated Him.

As to our Lord being shorn, Isaiah also foretells His beard being plucked by those who would smite, abuse and strike Him (Isa. 50:6). Surely our Lord was indeed “shorn” as a “sheep” before His sacrifice.

COMMENTS:

Kisi · MAY 15, 2010 AT 10:26 PM

I have never heard this before (the interpretation, I mean). Of course I've read the Isaiah passage, but never knew what it meant. Did they actually pluck out his entire beard?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 16, 2010 AT 10:14 PM

Yes. It was intended by His persecutors as a symbol of degrading or humiliating Him.

MAY 15, 2010

Isaiah 53:8

Isaiah 53:8 states:

“He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken.”

The idea of our Messiah emerging from “prison and from judgment” was a bit shocking to his listeners. There is little wonder at Isaiah’s original question about who would believe the report. Should not the Messiah emerge from a palace? From a university (center of learning)? From a recognized hierarchy? From a notable family? From respectable circles? We would think so, wouldn’t we?

Because of the presumptions, we do not look for Him as a prisoner, or one against whom judgment has been rendered. Nor do we expect His messengers to come, as they have so often in scriptures, from obscure places, bearing obscure names and having no credentials.

When Isaiah adds that the Messiah will be “cut off from the land of the living” he made a startling point. The Messiah will die! The Redeemer will not avoid death and the grave. He will lose His life. What follows adds to the wonder of it all: “For the transgression of my people” will the Messiah be cut off into death.

Now the focus has changed. Isaiah’s message shifts from the suffering of the Messiah into the transgression of Israel. It is Israel’s responsibility that their Messiah must suffer so. They will need a Messiah who will undertake this suffering, for they will not abandon their transgressions and will need a sacrifice made for them. They will need to confront love so great that it will die to redeem them. The proof of the Messiah’s devotion to them will be shown by His humiliation, suffering and death. This is His proof. This is His credential. This is the record which will show for all mankind what great lengths God will go to reclaim His beloved people. They transgress, He atones. They sin and wander off as lost sheep, He pays to re-gather them with His blood.

His suffering may surprise them, but their surprise should be astonishment at the great love He holds for them.

MAY 16, 2010

Isaiah 53:9–10

Isaiah 53:9 says:

“And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.”

He died among two thieves, as a common criminal, along the road leading into Jerusalem. He would have been regarded as a criminal, worthy of the death He suffered, by any passer-by. His grave came as it would to any “wicked” and convicted criminal.

It was a rich man, member of the Sanhedrin, who begged for the body and buried it in a new tomb. His death was common, terrible, and worthy of the lowest member of society, but His burial would be in an honorable tomb worthy of the rich. His honorable burial was testament to the fact He had done no violence, nor had there been any deceit come from Him. Those wishing for a sign to confirm His honor will find it in the juxtaposition of the death He suffered and the burial He was given. Isaiah 53:10 says:

Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

God will be “pleased” at the Messiah’s suffering. His grief will be joyful to the courts of heaven. As odd as the comment may seem, it was nevertheless the case. We have a witness who was there, and saw the rejoicing for Christ’s suffering. Enoch reported:

And it came to pass that Enoch looked; and from Noah, he beheld all the families of the earth; and he cried unto the Lord, saying: When shall the day of the Lord come? When shall the blood of the Righteous be shed, that all they that mourn may be sanctified and have eternal life? And the Lord said: It shall be in the meridian of time, in the days of wickedness and vengeance. And behold, Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man, even in the flesh; and his soul rejoiced, saying: The Righteous is lifted up, and the Lamb is slain from the foundation of the world; and through faith I am in the bosom of the Father, and behold, Zion is with me. (Moses 7:45–47)

Christ's death and suffering caused Enoch to "rejoice" at what He had accomplished. It was joyful. It was triumphant. It was the victory that would make it possible for Zion and Enoch to be redeemed. Therefore it did please God to bruise Christ, to put Him to grief. And the pleasure of God was in the fruits of that suffering. It was necessary to garner the victory over the fall of mankind. It was holy. It was cause for great joy.

His "seed" include all mankind. For in His triumph all who die have part. Victory over death means resurrection will come as the shared inheritance of all those who are descendants of Adam and Eve. As in Adam all die, even so in Christ are all made alive again.

MAY 16, 2010

Isaiah 53:11

Isaiah 53:11 states:

"He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities."

The One who shall see the travail is the Father. The Father will be "satisfied" that the suffering of the Son, the payment made for mankind's debt of errors, has been sufficient to then inform the Son about salvation. Without descending below, the Son would have been unable to comprehend what mankind needs to overcome. Therefore Christ's suffering needed to be complete.

Upon receiving the full "wrath" of sin, Christ was then able to know how to overcome all that mankind must overcome to return to the presence of the Father. It is “by His knowledge” that Christ is able to “justify many.” He possesses the knowledge, has the experience and suffered “for all” so that they might be instructed by Him (D&C 19:16–17). He knows. He comprehends. By the things He suffered, He gained all that is needed to redeem, comfort and succor any man or woman in their extremity (Heb. 2:18).

This great burden was, however, merely His preparation; and not His completion (D&C 19:19). He now uses His “knowledge” to “succor” and tutor each soul who will permit Him to minister to them (Alma 7:11–12). The most complete description of what He suffered and what He gained is set out in my testimony in Come, Let Us Adore Him.

Christ has gained “knowledge” which will save each of us, no matter what we are called to pass through, if we will come to Him, heed what He tells us, and follow His encouraging counsel. There is no depth we descend to which He does not already comprehend, having been there before us (D&C 122:7–8).

To overcome all sin ourselves, we must accept His guidance and counsel. His comfort alone will rid us of our guilt. He knows how to shed the pains of sin, because He has first shed them, and therefore knows what must be done. Only in this way can we relieve ourselves of the suffering which is felt when an unclean person is exposed to God’s presence (Mormon 9:4–5). He can lead you to cleansing, because He has been made completely filthy and covered with the wrath of God (D&C 19:15–18).

His “preparations” are complete. He can “succor” you back to God’s presence. But you must choose to allow Him to use this hard won “knowledge to justify you” before the Father. He has borne your infirmities before you bear them. He knows how to heal from them. There is nothing which you are called to pass through that He does not already comprehend. It is this great “knowledge” which renders Him the greatest, “most intelligent of them all” (Abraham 3:19). He now has no perplexity from sin.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 16, 2010 AT 8:40 PM

This was beautiful. Denver, as I was pondering about one of your Isaiah posts this morning after waking up, I marveled at all of the scriptures references that accompany your expounding on the verses. So, dumb question perhaps, but are all of those scripture references just in your head, or are you doing cross referencing. I sincerely want to make my scripture study more effective. Just want to gain more insight to the “how to” study the scriptures more effectively....and why did you only teach at Education Week for a couple of years? Would love to have you teach there again.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 16, 2010 AT 9:56 PM

In my head. I've read the scriptures for so long, and listened to them on cd while I drive about, that I find my mind reverts to their language when I have idle time to think. I've also put about 15,000 cross references into my scriptures which are not included in the current editions or Topical Guide. I've added a few additions to the Topical Guide in my set, too.

I forget the name of the fellow who was in charge of Education Week at the time, but he lived in my stake way back when. (I lived in Pleasant Grove then.) Anyway, I got signed up to teach through his efforts, and he's since retired and I never attempted to return. I was busy. Still am. I have no ambition to return.

DKD · MAY 16, 2010 AT 9:56 PM

Denver, I noticed in our Sunday School class today that in Joshua 1 Moses was called “my servant” several times by the Lord.... do you suppose there is any parallels with that ‘servant’ and ‘my righteous servant’ in verse 11?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 17, 2010 AT 6:21 AM

Yes, I do. Isaiah may be speaking of the Messiah, but all of those who serve the Lord are His “servants” and entrusted with the work of redemption. Even though the Messiah’s ministry was singular, that service is only effective in saving His sheep when the Lord sends other “shepherds” to continue crying repentance. Without an authoritative and entrusted servant serving at all times, there is no redemption actually taking place.

To the extent a servant has been sent, they will also share in some extent with the “suffering servant” description found in Isaiah’s prophecy here. As they treated the Master Servant, so they also treat in a lesser degree the other servants whom He sends.

MAY 17, 2010

Isaiah 53:12

Isaiah 53:12 states:

Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

Isaiah’s report ends with the Messiah’s triumph. Hard won as it was to be, it will qualify Him to receive a “portion with the great.” Although the Messiah may be greater than them all, He is only to receive “a portion.” For the suffering He endures will be to redeem others and bring them back with Himself. There is to be no hoarding. There is to be no selfishness. Though He may earn it all, He will take only “a portion” and leave a “division” with others who may share in His joy. He abased Himself, and taught all others to do the same (Matt. 23:10–12).

This is nothing akin to the faithful son complaining about the Prodigal (Luke 15:29–30). Christ will not only willingly share with His lesser brothers and sisters, but He will go further and “make intercession for the transgressors.” He is neither jealous of their sharing in His triumph, nor resentful to “divide the spoil” of His great victory.

Here is a Messiah indeed! Here is a Redeemer indeed! “Truly, this Man was the Son of God!” (Matt. 27:54). Despise Him and His servants, He will still condescend to succor you so far as you permit Him to do. Turn your face from Him and His servants, He will still plead for you to listen.

Forsake and abandon Him and His servants, they will still forgive and make intercession for your errors.

Those who follow Him will be misunderstood, reviled, persecuted. It is in the nature of things for this world. He anticipated that, and gave instructions to you when you encounter it (Matt. 5:10–13). The entire prophecy in Isaiah 53 is a description not only of the Messiah, but also of the Messiah’s children. They will not be welcome here, for the ruler of this world has nothing for either Him or His children (John 14:30).

Surely Isaiah knew His Lord.

COMMENTS:

lc · MAY 17, 2010 AT 7:22 PM

Denver, since you are writing to those of us who sometimes “know not where to find it” (the truth) and since we are all seekers of truth, I’m soliciting your help in making sense of some things from Gerald Lund’s Book, Hearing the Voice of the Lord.

In light of all of the last week’s discussions about the Savior not being recognized or followed/believed because He didn’t fit the “mold” the following are a couple of the more specific quotes I need to sort out from his book – particularly question #2:

1) pg. 201 “When something that is supposedly for the whole Church comes to us through any other source (First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve), we can know that it is contrary to the order of God. Unless we have a specific stewardship that is, a priesthood or doctrinally based responsibility, over someone else, we do not receive revelation that seeks to direct them or correct them.”

2) pg. 204 Joseph Fielding Smith, “Let me add that when a revelation comes for the guidance of this people, you may be sure that it will not be presented in some mysterious manner contrary to the order of the Church. It will go forth in such form that the people will understand that it comes from those who are in authority....it will not spring up in some distant part of the Church and be in the hands of some obscure individual.”

Also, would you mind giving me/us your opinion of Gerald Lund’s book, Hearing the Voice of the Lord.

Denver Snuffer · May 17, 2010 at 9:24 PM

I haven’t read anything written by Gerald Lund. I think my wife has copies of some of his writings, but I haven’t read any of them; so I simply cannot comment on what he has written.

To the specific questions you ask, I’d say that it is the Spirit of Truth, Holy Ghost, or the Lord who is the only source I’d trust. Not a man; no matter what office he may hold. I believe the obligation is to seek for a spiritual confirmation no matter who is speaking.

The Lord was “outside the hierarchy” and didn’t fit the mold you propose. Abinadi was outside the hierarchy, and didn’t fit the mold you propose. John the Baptist was outside the hierarchy and didn’t fit the mold you propose. Saul was so feared and hated by the hierarchy that they needed a revelation to even meet with him, because he was outside the hierarchy and didn’t fit the mold. Samuel the Lamanite was outside the hierarchy and didn’t fit the mold you propose. (You need to read Come, Let Us Adore Him for the full explanation of the doctrine as I understand it.)

I recognize these teachings you ask about. I have heard them. I do not expect anyone to direct the church and its affairs apart from the President and other presiding authorities. I do not expect anyone to direct the affairs of my stake apart from my Stake President and his counselors. I do not expect anyone to direct my ward apart from my Bishop and his counselors. I do not think the Lord's house is to be directed by someone other than recognized and sustained authorities.

But I do not think the Lord's hands are tied when He has directed everyone to bear testimony of Him, everyone to learn of Him and everyone to gain further light and knowledge by inquiring from Him. There simply is no faucet which controls the light and truth which the Lord is able to pour out upon those who seek after Him.

Read D&C 93:1 again and show me where the hierarchy or President or any man stands between the faithful Saint and her Lord. It isn't there.

This is how I understand the subject. I've proceeded with this understanding, with the conviction that I alone am responsible for learning what is necessary for my salvation and exaltation. No one else can be imposed upon to accomplish that for me.

MAY 17, 2010

Promise vs. Appearance

I was asked:

I've wondered about this for a long time. In the blog post about 'Why wait?' there is a phrase that says 'This appearance is not merely "in the heart," but is an actual appearance or visit.' The 'in the heart' is my question. Once in a while this concept doesn't contradict but at the moment it seems to. In D&C 88 it says: 'Wherefore, I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise.' So how can it be a false sectarian notion about God the Father and Jesus dwelling in a man's heart (D&C130:3) and yet a few sections later in the D&C when referring to The Second Comforter it says contrary. [Also Eph. 3:17 says: 'That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love.}] I at one point saw how this worked—but can't seem to at the moment. How do those two seemingly contradictory things work?

My response:

To have the promise “abide in your heart” is to keep inside your heart the knowledge there is a promise given by God, who cannot lie about such matters, that you have the promise of eternal life. This is referring to the promise, and keeping it dear to you, or in your heart. This, of course, is not the same thing as the appearance of the Son in the form of another Comforter, as promised by Christ in John, Chapter 14, verse 18, where Christ declares: “I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.” It is the promise that the Lord will come or appear or take up His abode with you which Joseph declared to be literal. He is saying those who believe or teach this to be merely a feeling “in the heart” are teaching an “old sectarian notion” because they deny its literal possibility (D&C 130:3).

The culmination of the Lord's ministry is the promise of eternal life, as I explained in an earlier post. But the actuality of that ministry as an appearance to a person is not merely “in the heart.” When His ministry does culminate in the promise, then the promise should “abide in the heart” of the person to whom the promise has been given. They ought never let it pass from within their hearts that they have obtained a promise from the Lord assuring them of life eternal.

These are two different subjects. But the question is quite a good one. Thanks for asking it.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 17, 2010 AT 7:19 PM

Is it sin to share the promise if it has been received? Is there forgiveness and can one remain in the path if he has ignorantly let it pass from within their heart by his lips to another? How do you handle someone who wants to talk openly about this?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 17, 2010 AT 9:10 PM

I've explained in The Second Comforter that someone who is unable to keep a confidence is unlikely to be entrusted with information by the Lord. I've never talked about any personal experience, beyond affirming that I have a witness of the Lord. Every other comment, teaching and statement I have made is taken from scripture or from the teachings of Joseph Smith or another trusted authority in this dispensation. There simply is no need to do more than explain doctrine based upon scripture. Why would someone's personal experience be important to reveal? If the doctrine is capable of being explained in existing scripture, then the scriptures ought to be taught.

MAY 18, 2010

Most Answers are in the Scriptures

I've been reflecting upon a conversation I had with a self-described "tax protester" who has not paid income taxes and is now facing legal issues as a result. After a couple of days of reflection I had this considered response to this dilemma:

I use a particular method in determining what issues I need Divine direction to resolve and what issues I need no direction from the Lord to resolve. If there is an answer in the scriptures, contained in the teachings of Christ, then I simply do not ask the question. Instead I assume Christ's teachings are intended to govern my conduct and I comply. On the tax issue, for example, Christ did not resist paying taxes (Matt. 17:24–27). Nor did Christ teach anything other than to pay taxes (Matt. 22:15–22) Therefore, it would not occur to me to even ask the Lord about whether or not to pay taxes.

When it comes to asking the Lord about something on which His teachings are already clear, a person risks receiving permission to do what will ultimately instruct them by sad example that they ought to have followed His earlier teachings. The best example of this is when Joseph requested he be allowed to let Martin Harris take the 116 pages and was told “no.” He persisted, and despite having been told “no,” he asked again and was then told “yes.” The “yes” was not because God had changed His mind, but because Joseph simply refused to learn by anything other than sad experience to respect God’s counsel (D&C 3; D&C 10:1–30).

Therefore, when there is already an instruction on point from the Lord, and we ignore it, the answer we receive may be for our benefit. We may need to learn by sad experience what we might have learned instead by precept and wisdom from the Lord.

It is this kind of experience men repeat by failing to follow God’s counsel. Then, when they might have avoided the sting which follows, they choose instead to suffer. Oftentimes they will blame the Lord for the hardships they brought upon themselves, when, if they had hearkened to the Lord’s counsel in the first place, they would never have had to suffer.

This is why it is so important to study the scriptures. If the answer is in there (and almost everything is in there) and we do not choose to find it, but to inquire for a new revelation instead, we oftentimes doom ourselves to a sad experience. His counsel should be heeded. When we don’t heed, and ask instead for new or different guidance, we may be given permission to do what

He has already told us to avoid. This is one of the great lessons from the lost 116 pages.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family · MAY 18, 2010 AT 2:10 PM

Hi Denver, in one of your books you said we never outgrow the programs of the Church. I think that may be true for some Church aspects, but I also have a different viewpoint: what about programs that are designed to help us outgrow them? And when we “graduate” if you will, and learn the lesson intended by the ordinance, that doesn’t mean we should stop going or practicing it. I’m just trying to fine tune your statement and also consider something else you said about the 10 lepers. Couldn’t you say the 1 leper “outgrew” his need to see his bishop for every little thing because he found the person bishops are the symbols of, the true Bishop? I realize you have to be careful not to rationalize and truly have to find the Savior before realizing this maturity level, but what do you think? Could your statement do with some revising?

Denver Snuffer · MAY 18, 2010 AT 4:26 PM

I see your point and wouldn’t necessarily disagree. But even if I don’t like Sunday School, for example (and I don’t by the way), I still want Sunday School to be available for my children, and for investigators I bring to Church, and for my grandchildren, etc. So even though I don’t use it, I still haven’t outgrown it.

Also, just because I may not get something out of a meeting or program, that doesn’t mean I won’t support the program. Nor does it mean I won’t get something out of it for a friend, neighbor, investigator, child, grandchild, etc. as mentioned above.

I’ve come to see some things in an entirely new light. But even then, I don’t completely discard the things seen in a different light. They just take on a different relevance.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 18, 2010 AT 4:32 PM

I should probably add (because I think it goes without saying, but I realize sometimes others need me to say it before they know I think this), I want to pay tithes. The Church allows me to do that. I want to partake of the sacrament. The Church allows me to do that. I want to attend the Temple. The Church allows me to do that. So in many ways, I won't ever outgrow it.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 18, 2010 AT 4:34 PM

And, oh yeah, I never gave any judgment about the tax protester. I explained why I could never join in protesting taxes. It was my reflection. It had nothing at all to do with judging the fellow who decided he would protest. I'm not in a position to begin to do that, and therefore made no comment about that subject.

MAY 18, 2010

Debate is Not Necessary

I am not trying to make my mind up about Mormonism or The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I have long ago sorted out my views. They are not going to change.

Although my views are explained in this blog, I do not debate them. You are welcome to have contrary views, to disagree and to think I am altogether incorrect. But you shouldn't waste the effort to try and persuade me to change my own view.

My testimony of Christ is informed both by what I have studied and what I have witnessed. It has taken decades of devotion in study and living to obtain a stable, firm view of the Lord and His role in my life. No one should expect to acquire an unchanging view of the Lord without paying a significant price in their time and effort. I can try to help, give advice and make suggestions. I can explain my views. But, in the end, every person must determine for themselves what Christ means and how they intend to relate to Him.

I believe the truth exists independent of your view or my view. Just because someone believes a false notion does not make it so. Eventually we will all come into agreement by the things which we experience. For most of the world, that will be some time after they are dead.

Debate is not necessary. And I am just a lay member of the Church, without any reason for you to consider what I have to say. Therefore, you ought to measure my views against the scriptures and the Spirit, and let the truth be the single standard for deciding to accept something.

I quoted a few ideas from Mark Twain in a post a while back. You ought to re-read them if you don't remember them. They were chosen with some care. They summarize ideas which I believe to be important.

MAY 19, 2010

Presiding Authority

When Joseph Smith died, the crisis in succession produced arguments from various contenders who claimed it their right to lead the Church. Although no one argued that Section 107:22–24 controlled the decision, ultimately the decision was that the Twelve Apostles held keys to lead the Church. A few years later the verses in Section 107 just cited became the rationale for why the Twelve would lead.

This decision was further clarified by adoption of the rule that the senior (one who held office longest) Apostle would be the presiding authority and by virtue of that seniority would be the President. Initially he was President of the Twelve. Then when Brigham Young reformed the First Presidency after a few years, he became President of the Church. Then in 1955 he became the living “prophet” as well.

Since the system has now reached a stable, orderly manner of choosing and recognizing whose right it is to preside over the church, what happens if another, more senior Apostle happens along? Whose right is it to preside if you are required to choose between direction that comes from the presiding authority of the church or direction that comes from John (who tarry in the flesh), (D&C 7:1-4), or Peter, James and John? (D&C 27:12). Everyone presumes the messages from those who preside over the church on the earth and those who “tarry in the flesh” will be congruent, and that there is no conflict between the messages. But query what choice should be made if there is at least some inconsistency? Upon whom does the seniority rest?

A simpler question is what choice should be made between the Lord and those who preside in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I think all would agree that all church authorities are inferior to the Lord. However, we also presume that there will be no conflict between the two. What if there is at least some inconsistency?

It is an interesting question to ponder. Not that I have anything to add to your reflection on the matter. Sometimes it is just interesting to consider a question. Like I’ve said elsewhere, answers are less important than a good question to ponder from time to time. In the pondering, new and important ideas can occur to you.

COMMENTS:

Kisi · MAY 20, 2010 AT 3:38 PM

Great post! Along these lines, notice these scriptures:

D&C 49:8 “Wherefore, I will that all men shall repent, for all are under sin, except those which I have reserved unto myself, holy men that ye know not of.” This can’t be referring to John the Beloved nor the three Nephites nor Enoch and his people, because we know of them. So, the Lord has “holy men” whom we know not of that He has “reserved”.

Next, we know from the scriptures that He has always given the righteous a chance to be led out before a people were destroyed. The entire Book of Mormon is an example of this — three examples of this, actually: Lehi’s group, the Mulekites, and the Jaredites. We seem to automatically assume that just because the Nephites were destroyed, that no one was led away first. Moroni 7:1–4 shows that this is not true. Mormon says in those verses that he was permitted to speak to a group who, if I understand correctly, had all received the Second Comforter — as they had “entered into the rest of the Lord” in this life. This seems to suggest that he was talking to people who had already been led away before the destruction of the Nephites.

Now read D&C 86:8–11

⁸Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers —

⁹For ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God —

¹⁰Therefore your life and the priesthood have remained, and must needs remain through you and your lineage until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

¹¹Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this priesthood, a savior unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it. Amen.

So, we have people living on the earth who have never lost the priesthood, and who will be a light to the Gentiles, and ultimately a savior to Israel. If they already have the priesthood from God Himself, and it has been passed down to them through the lineage of their fathers, who can say what authority they have?

What if they, or one, or some of them are sent forth to call us to repentance?

Denver Snuffer · May 20, 2010 at 5:57 PM

There's a lengthy discussion about this in Beloved Enos. The Lord is not powerless, nor incapable of providing salvation to people today, no matter what goes on among us. I'm putting up a new post probably tomorrow on related questions.

Line upon line.

Precept upon precept.

Helps if you've studied what I've already put into books. There's a systematic reconstruction of what Joseph restored in them. (Kisi I'm saying that to people who haven't read what I've written and not to you.)

MAY 19, 2010

WWJD

Stopped shaving a few weeks ago, except for the neck. Now I've got a bit of face hair, which feels like spiders are crawling all over my face. I took a poll, figuring I'd get a vote to return to the orthodox visage. To my surprise all the kids said "keep it." Even my wife says to leave it for a while. So I'm going to keep the spiders for a while.

I've done this before, back when I made the annual trip to Sturgis. I know that eventually there isn't any feeling to a beard. In fact, when you shave it off then you can feel the air movement on your face and that's quite weird for a few days. But I haven't been to Sturgis for about 5 years or more, and so I hadn't grown a beard for that long.

As an aside, when you go to Sturgis you ought to look the part. The "brethren" there expect some effort to blend in. Consequently, I have managed a fairly true 'scooter-trash' look when I make the effort.

As long as I have the chin-hair I need to dust off the Harley, get it inspected and licensed, and start riding again this summer.

It is, of course, the answer to the question: “WWJD?” (What would Jesus drive?) It’s environmentally friendly, leaves a small carbon footprint, quick, high-mileage,fun as hell, and pretty badass, too. All the ingredients needed for transcendental transportation.

Steppenwolf sang the theme song to it all:

Get your motor runnin’
Head out on the highway;
look’in for adventure and whatever comes our way...

I like smoke and lightning
Heavy metal thunder
Racin’ with the wind

And the feelin’ that I’m under...

It’s a biker thing. Can’t be explained. Can be shared, though.
You start with face hair;...then let it take you to its logical extreme.

Hmmmm...no wonder missionaries are clean-shaven.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · MAY 19, 2010 AT 9:43 PM

My wife put that YouTube link in. I liked it. She’s gifted that way...

That takes me back to when I was in High School. I was in a garage band that used to play that tune. I can still remember the drum bit. Was just playing it on the office desk while I listened.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 20, 2010 AT 5:34 AM

BTW: The term “heavy metal” comes from the lyrics I quoted above. Steppenwolf coined the term in this song, and it became applied to an entire genre of music thereafter. So in Trivial Pursuit you now have an answer to the question: “Who coined the term ‘heavy metal’?”

Denver Snuffer · MAY 20, 2010 AT 5:39 AM

Oh, yeah; “am I serious?” Well, I own a Harley. I’ve been to Sturgis seven years. “Born to be Wild” is an adopted theme song for bikers. Even got used in the soundtrack for “Easy Rider.”

I suppose it’s the question “WWJD” that you’re actually asking then. Lemme think... Since He went out of His way to be common, to fit in among the least, to be welcomed among the taxpayers, the harlots and the sinners, I suppose I am serious. In our day that means He would fit in among the tattooed, the pierced, the promiscuous, the drug-addicted and the outcast. So why wouldn’t He drive a Harley? I am certain He wouldn’t be driving a Toyota Avalon, if that’s what you’re asking.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 20, 2010 AT 5:41 AM

Make that “tax collectors” instead of “taxpayers.” He made friends of the former and He was the latter.

Anonymous · MAY 20, 2010 AT 6:33 AM

Damn!! Snuffer don’t you know anything?? A white shirt with “CONSERVATIVE” neck tie, missionary hair cut and clean shaven is the only way Jesus would dress!! As to WWJD, well we all know the only thing Jesus would ever drive is a proper American-made SUV! The bigger the better!

:) Great post I loved it! :)

Tim

db schroeder · MAY 20, 2010 AT 8:02 AM

In the 2nd Comforter, I remember the Harley part/Sturgis w your son. My question is:

What about some Priesthood holders that own Vespas? Does that make us Sadduces? *%#@!

Denver Snuffer · MAY 20, 2010 AT 5:52 PM

Priesthood holders that own Vespas have no power...

MAY 20, 2010

Books for Sale – used

A friend of mine brought to my attention that there are “used” copies of my books available on the web for sometimes hundreds of dollars. I was surprised. Let me give some warning to people so no-one takes advantage of you.

First, there is absolutely no reason to pay anything more than what the Amazon.com book charges are to anyone anywhere. The books are all still in print and you do not need to resort to buying them used. Buy them new from Amazon and you’ll get a newly printed copy at the lowest price, other than shipping which they add on to the cost.

Second, if you live in Utah, you can buy copies at the same reasonable prices from either Benchmark Books on about 3300 South Main Street, or from a place called Confetti Books in Spanish Fork (whose address I do not have at the moment). Neither of these stores mark the books up, and they don’t charge you shipping. But you have to drive there to buy them.

Third, I am not trying to make money from book sales. I work as an attorney for a living and writing is not a commercial endeavor. Whatever royalties I earn are donated to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. So you buying a book I’ve written does nothing financial for me.

CHAPTER 3

Speaking Plainly

MAY 20, 2010

The Sealing Power

I've explained the sealing authority in the last three chapters of Beloved Enos. An example of the Lord and His servant Enoch conversing, and the Lord requiring the sealing authority to be used is found in Moses 7:6–7, which read as follows:

And again the Lord said unto me: Look; and I looked towards the north, and I beheld the people of Canaan, which dwelt in tents. And the Lord said unto me: Prophecy; and I prophesied, saying: Behold the people of Canaan, which are numerous, shall go forth in battle array against the people of Shum, and shall slay them that they shall utterly be destroyed; and the people of Canaan shall divide themselves in the land, and the land shall be barren and unfruitful, and none other people shall dwell there but the people of Canaan;

Enoch was shown the events, but the Lord required the voice of Enoch to speak and “prophecy” what was to happen. The voice of one holding this authority is the same as the Lord’s own voice (D&C 1:38). The “Word” needed to be employed, because it is by the “Word” that all things are established.

The “Word” comes through Christ, who has in Him all power and authority. It was and is through Him that others are called upon from heaven, given authority, and commissioned to speak and make the Word of God live again on the earth.

Therefore, in the beginning the Word was, for he was the Word, even the messenger of salvation— The light and the Redeemer of the world; the Spirit of truth, who came into the world, because the world was made by him, and in him was the life of men and the light of men. (D&C 93:8–9)

It was by employing the “Word” that the creation of this earth rolled into order at the direction of the “noble and great” souls who were the “Gods” or the “Elohim” in the beginning. As Abraham recorded:

And they (the Gods) said: Let there be light; and there was light. And they (the Gods) comprehended the light, for it was bright; and they divided the light, or caused it to be divided, from the darkness. And the Gods called the light Day, and the darkness they called Night. And it came to pass that from the evening until morning they called night; and from the morning until the evening they called day; and this was the first, or the beginning, of that which they called day and night. And the Gods also said...(Abr. 4:3–6)

It is through the Word, or sealing authority, spoken by one sent from God, that salvation and exaltation are made available to mankind. It was intended that this authority to speak in His name might belong to every man in this dispensation: “But that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; That faith also might increase in the earth; That mine everlasting covenant might be established;” (D&C 1:20–22). This was not to be a time when there would be a famine in hearing the Word of the Lord (cf. Amos 8:11). Rather it was to be a time of great abundance, when every man would know the Lord (Heb. 8:11; D&C 84:98). This was to be the day when all would see visions and dream dreams, beholding the Lord (JS-H 1:41; Joel 2:28).

For some, this is a day of great plenty. For others it remains a time of famine. The Lord spoke truly that in our day two shall be together, and the one taken but the other left (Luke 17:34–36; Matt. 24:40–41; JS-M 1:44–45). And why are they not taken?

Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson— That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man. (D&C 121:35–37)

Whenever men possess the “word” from God, they necessarily speak it in plainness. When men do not, history tells us they will assert the right to control, dominate and exercise authority over others to prevent the “word” from being spoken by anyone. This is the consistent pattern found among the Jews at the time of Christ; among the Catholics when they obtain political dominance; and it is the pattern that we must not repeat in our own dispensation. For we all share responsibility for how this turns out. Nephi's view of how we would perform was quite pessimistic (2 Ne. 28:20–29). However, the group outcome needn't ever be the individual's outcome, even in Nephi's prophetic "word" about our day (2 Ne. 28:14).

COMMENTS:

mj · MAY 20, 2010 AT 8:53 PM

Doesn't the sealing power or the authority to speak God's words for Him have to be conferred by ordinance? Can't men who have this power on earth regardless of their church office, confer it or give the rights to it to another (like an apostolic ordination)? Do we actually need an ordination to receive the sealing power or ability to speak and record for the Lord here on earth? Or maybe it's conferred on many and we don't know it? And can there be more than one priesthood group operating in the last days? Why?

Answer to above comment: I think the elements hear and obey the word of God as spoken thru His servant. That's why it is so important to get on a level where the Lord can speak thru us... actually using us to do His work here on earth... which is what the priesthood is for.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 21, 2010 AT 6:12 AM

A strange thing in the land, indeed. A wild man is among us...

All scriptural examples show the sealing power comes from beyond the veil. There is one exception, but even there Elijah was in the process of being caught up and, therefore, was also beyond the veil when he conferred it upon Elisha.

The church claims it can be conferred and passed about by mortal to mortal.

Anonymous · MAY 22, 2010 AT 9:09 AM

I was wondering if sealing power can be given without any ordination from man who has it or an angel or the Lord (i.e. can it be conferred without a man receiving laying on of hands). angels can also ordain, or you can be ordained on the other side of the veil. But can one who actually has the sealing power upon him, confer it to someone else if the spirit directs? Like the 2A, but I guess you can be given the “office” of K&P, but it’s still up to the man to fulfill his office or appointment.

Indeed, those in the KNOW are usually cast out as a strange thing in the land! Many times by your own loved ones.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 22, 2010 AT 9:41 AM

So far as the scriptures explain the process, it comes from the voice of God or an angel sent by Him. D&C 77:11 also ties it to angels who hold the keys to this ministry.

We are practicing in the Temple to receive the real thing. We are not receiving the real thing there. We are told that directly as part of the ceremony. We are cautioned that if we are true and faithful to the covenants we enter into, the time will come when we will be called up, chosen and anointed, whereas now we are only anointed to BECOME such. The realization of these blessings is dependent upon our faithfulness, not upon our holding a recommend and getting our names enrolled in preparatory, practice ordinances. The ordinances are a revelation about the real process. They are symbols. They point the way. But we have to follow the way and receive the blessings, promises, etc. from heaven. The Holy Spirit of Promise, as explained in Section 132 is involved. I’ve explained this in The Second Comforter.

DKD · MAY 22, 2010 AT 10:06 AM

When you say “sealing power” are you talking about “sealers” that do ordinance work in the temple? or are you talking about the fullness of the priesthood....with the ability/power to control even the elements? (Like Nephi son of Helaman.)

Denver Snuffer · MAY 25, 2010 AT 8:56 PM

I've explained the subject of sealing in the last three chapters of Beloved Enos. I'm speaking of that authority which seals on earth and in heaven, which comes from heaven.

MAY 21, 2010

Be of Good Cheer

In Luke 22:54–62 there is this account of the night when Christ was taken captive:

Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not. And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilaeen. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew. And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

President Kimball cautioned about “judging” Peter’s motives and even suggested that no cowardice was involved when he denied Christ three times. (See Peter, My Brother.) <http://emp.byui.edu/marrottr/GenlAuthorities/PeterMyBrother.pdf>

I'm not interested in judging Peter. But I am quite interested in this incident, the Lord's actions, and the implications for us.

The hall in which this took place was large enough to have separate groups and conversations in it. But it was still intimate enough that Peter's raised voice in the third denial could be heard across the hall where Jesus was being held. Matthew added that Peter not only denied Christ, but also cursed as he did so (Matt. 26:74; see also Mark 14:71). When, therefore, the Lord heard this loud outburst accompanying Peter's final cursing denial in that raised voice, "the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter."

It was that "look upon Peter" that provoked Peter's response. Peter did not remember the Lord's earlier comments until His "look upon" him. Then promptly "Peter went out, and wept bitterly."

Now consider this—Here you have Christ's chief apostle and leader whose entire demeanor changes from gruff, loud cursing and denial of the Lord into bitter weeping, because the Lord "looked upon" him.

If you can get this picture firmly in your mind, then you may understand this scripture:

Then will ye longer deny the Christ, or can ye behold the Lamb of God? Do ye suppose that ye shall dwell with him under a consciousness of your guilt? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy Being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his laws? Behold, I say unto you that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell. For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you. (Mormon 9:3–5)

Peter literally experienced the bitterness of hell in that disappointed glance from the Lord. It came from recognizing of how great a disappointment he was to the Lord. It was produced by a mere glance from Christ. He who loved all of us the most was the One whom Peter in return cursed and denied. When he saw himself through the Lord's disappointment, it made Peter bitter, filled with remorse, and caused him to retreat to weep alone.

We do not want to disappoint the Lord. None of us want to see that same look from the Lord that He showed Peter. We have opportunities to do what He asks us every day. All of us do. Little things, moment to moment, particularly if you look for them. They matter. Every thought, every word, every deed. They matter. Let them reflect credit upon your faith in Him.

I'm not saying be dour, long-faced or stoic. Quite the contrary. "Be of good cheer" was His oft repeated expression, even using it as a greeting on many occasions (See Matt. 14:27; Mark 6:50; John 16:33; Acts 23:11; 3 Ne. 1:13; D&C 68:6, among others). Cheerfully go about doing good, and trust in Him. He will guide you. He was happy. He was cheerful. So are those who know Him best (See, e.g., JS-H 1:28).

There isn't a single thing you do for His sake which He will forget or fail to credit to you. Nor is there a single mistake which He will remember and hold against you, if you repent (D&C 58:42).

You should let your thoughts be such that you will be confident in His presence (D&C 121:45). Be of good cheer.

MAY 21, 2010

Prophet, Seer, Revelator

I was asked this question:

If the first presidency and the twelve really operate much like the lay members do, how then do you reconcile the MEANING of the words: Prophet; Seer; and Revelator. Aren't these gifts unusual and set apart for the highest positions of the church? Wouldn't one necessarily receive visions and dreams to qualify as a Prophet, Seer, or Revelator? How else would one SEE into the past, or the future, let alone clearly understanding the present? How do you reconcile the current revelatory state of the leadership with the meaning of the words, prophet, seer, and revelator?

Inside the Church the current interpretation is that the "office" has associated with it a "title" set out in scripture. The "office" of the President of the High Priesthood (D&C 107:65–66), who is the President of the Church, also bears the "title" of "prophet, seer and revelator" (D&C 107:91–92). The current interpretation of these verses is that the possessor of the office is entitled to the title of "prophet, seer and revelator" by virtue of office alone. Therefore, nothing more is needed in current church usage other than possession of the office, which alone gives the possessor of the office the title accorded to the office. So, no, our current terminology does not require something other than office.

It is possible to read the words of the verses differently, of course. First, the words we have adopted as they appear in scripture are not actually "prophet, seer and revelator" but are instead: "a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet."

Those are different words and include in the phrase “a translator” in addition to “seer, revelator and a prophet.” We have dropped the word “translator” from the title we now use.

Second, it is possible that the following words may be viewed to mean something different than the way we currently read them, “to be like unto Moses—Behold, here is wisdom; yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet,” (D&C 107:91–92). They could be read to mean that before you fill the office of President of the High Priesthood you must first locate “a seer” who is also, by definition, “a revelator” and “a translator” who is undoubtedly therefore “a prophet” and, having found such a person, you are to sustain him into the office. The office doesn’t make the man, but the Lord makes a man into such an instrument, and having done so then the church is to put him into the office. There are of course those who have these gifts. Many of them have no church office involving priesthood, because they are female. They may possess gifts, but they are disqualified for office. Then there are men who possess such gifts, but they may be living in South America, serving in a small branch, and completely unnoticed by the leadership, and therefore, never called.

The problem with the second point is that it invites near chaos. You would have dozens, hundreds or perhaps thousands of people who would step forward and make the claim that they are entitled to the office. Ambitious men who are either deceived or, worse still, cunning and dishonest, would seek to gain the office to further their ambitions. Such a parade of the deluded or the dishonest would be foisted upon the Saints every time the President died.

Therefore, no matter how much merit you may think the second interpretation holds, it would be far more problematic to implement than the current interpretation and method.

The advantage of the current system is that the man who fills the vacancy is distinguished by how long he has held the church's office of Apostle. Generally that means an elderly man, often suffering from the decline of advanced years and poor health. That means you are likely to have a man whose ambitions and exuberance are tempered by the maturity of age and the wisdom that comes from long life's experience. It gives stability to the decision, as well as the person chosen.

If the second approach were to be adopted, then the choice would need to be made by the serving President before he left office (died), by making the choice of his successor as part of his official service. This is the method that the Lord revealed to Joseph Smith (D&C 43:3–4). Joseph attempted this, but the one he chose to succeed him died with him (his brother Hyrum). So the office was left vacant and we had to sort it out.

There is another method that we haven't tried, so far as I know. That would be to use "lots" to choose from every male in the church. This method was used to fill Judas' vacancy in the original Twelve in Jerusalem (Acts 1:21–26). The description there is ambiguous, but was intended to be random, unpredictable and not just a vote. It was a recognized way to choose someone (See, e.g., 1 Ne. 3:11). It has been used to sort through the entire nation of Israel when all twelve tribes were assembled. Someone had stolen an idol, resulting in the withdrawal of the Lord's Spirit from them in battle. The result was defeat for Israel and the death of many men. They needed to find the one who committed the offense. So they had to choose from the entire gathering of all twelve tribes. Beginning at the tribe level, they sorted through to find the right tribe (Judah). Then proceeded to sort through the tribe to locate the larger family involved (Zarhites). Then went through the family to find the individual involved (Achan). The whole thing is in the scriptures (Joshua 7:13–23).

Such a system was uncontrolled by man, done by lot, completely random, but produced the right person. Left to God, it obtained God's answer. Did with the sons of Lehi, and with the vacancy in the Twelve in the Book of Acts, too. There is no reason why such a system wouldn't generate the Lord's choice today.

If the President died without a successor having been designated, then random choosing using a lot system would put the choice in the Lord's hands. But I suppose we don't have the stomach to try it, particularly when we already have a system that seems to work for us.

Your question raises the issue of "authority" or office on the one hand, and "power" or gifts of the Spirit on the other hand. You should read President Packer's talk in last General Conference for a recent statement by a respected church leader on that subject. I think I've commented on that talk enough already. As I re-read it this week I was again stirred by President Packer's sagacity. I believe he is being candid, honest and giving the Saints the absolute best advice and counsel he can at this time.

Interesting subject. Something worth contemplating. Perhaps there will come a time when we are able to implement the system in D&C 43. Or when we put the Lord's hand to work by using lots to choose a President. Though I do not expect to see any change made during my life.

COMMENTS:

Kisi · MAY 22, 2010 AT 7:19 AM

Wow, it would be amazing to see the Church use “casting lots”. That is so out of the box of our paradigm today (as are many other true things). One thing that is refreshing in this post and in being able to discuss this subject is that it is basically never acknowledged in “normal circles” in the Church that the way we choose our Presidents is policy and not doctrine.

It seems to me that there is another interpretation of D&C 107:91–92 than what has been presented here. “the duty of the President ... to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet, having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.” It sounds like this could mean that God “bestows” these gifts upon the President, the head of the church. (This interpretation doesn’t seem like much of a stretch since that is what the words actually say :) Historically, we have many examples of kings and rulers having revelation and dreams for their people, which seems to be something God gives to people about their stewardships. “The mantle of the bishop” can be an example of this. It seems to be almost without exception that men called to be bishops experience something new and different which they refer to as the “mantle of the bishop” and which they have until the minute they are released. Is it not possible that there is a “mantle of the President of the High Priesthood” which brings with it the gifts mentioned in verse 92? (I’m not saying that righteousness or the lack of it would not have an effect. But even unrighteous kings have historically received messages from God.)

Denver Snuffer · MAY 22, 2010 AT 8:09 AM

Yes, this is the view of the church. The office gives entitlement, therefore just filling it produces the desired effect.

Also, you’re right also about the tradition that God works even through unqualified kings and high priests. Such was the case in John’s view even when it came to Caiaphas. See John 11:47–51.

Anonymous · MAY 22, 2010 AT 9:17 AM

How can we govern the temple ordinances without being valid (with spiritual gifts) K&P's? Without obeying all the laws of the gospel (as found in our standard works) as we promise in the ritual? If we don't have the connection with heaven that is necessary, how can our priesthood sealings be effective in the next life? Even Emma had to accept and agree with plural marriage before getting endowed and being sealed to Joseph in 1842. Though she seemed to quickly go against it there after.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 22, 2010 AT 9:36 AM

If I understand the question, this is something I addressed in The Second Comforter. The Temple ordinances are not the real thing. They are preparatory only. They tell you they are merely practice. If you are true and faithful, the time will come when you will be called up, chosen and anointed kings and queens, priests and priestesses, whereas now you are only ordained to BECOME such. The realization of these blessings are dependent upon your faithfulness.

Nothing done in the ordinances are controlling into the next life unless and until sealed upon a person by the Holy Spirit of Promise, just as Section 132 explains. Heaven is going to control admission. How heaven decides who is chosen is something I've tried to illustrate in Ten Parables.

Doug · MAY 23, 2010 AT 10:41 AM

QUOTE: "The Temple ordinances are not the real thing. They are preparatory only. They tell you they are merely practice."

Just connecting the dots here... then this would necessarily mean that the "new name" that we receive in the temple is just a warm-up too...? I never quite got how we were supposed to feel a sense of personal connection when we were given a name solely based on the day we showed up to do our individual endowment. This helps explain that. Thanks.

—Doug

Denver Snuffer · MAY 23, 2010 AT 2:16 PM

The new name is only a key word used during the ceremony. It is a symbol and it means something. And it is a test to see if you will keep a covenant to never reveal it. If you are true and faithful, can be trusted with ceremonial confidence, then you qualify to learn and know other things which are also to be kept from the world and not disclosed to those who are unprepared to hear them.

The temple is quite an accurate ceremonial depiction of the real process by which God initiates a person into salvation and exaltation. But it IS NOT the actual initiation. Nor is the new name more than a ceremonial necessity to be used here to complete the ceremony.

Do you have other names? Yes, we all do. You had them before this world was framed. And you will be acquiring yet other names as you pass through here. God reserves the right to bestow the greatest name upon you, as Psalms 2:7 suggests; and as the tenth parable describes in Ten Parables.

MAY 22, 2010

Infallibility's One-way Street

[This is about foundational, indispensable, bed-rock doctrines involved in salvation. It is not about trifling changes which can come and go at any time. I'm talking about the big stuff, in the big picture, which will make-or-break salvation itself.]

Here's the destructive course that inevitably follows from the notion that the President of the church cannot lead us astray when foundational changes are made to the doctrine—we can only subtract from our body of principles. We never can add back what we have subtracted.

To illustrate the one-way street problem you need only look at the changes to the endowment. The endowment is considered indispensable for exaltation and therefore part of the required, correct, bed-rock doctrines. In 1990 it was changed to drop a character, eliminate dialogue, alter the manner of covenant-making and delete things considered distasteful. I will not discuss details, although others have and you can find them if you look. That isn't important to understanding the problem. It is only necessary to know some things were deleted.

Suppose that in 2015 there was a consensus that the deletions were wrong and should be returned. If you were to attempt to return them into the endowment, you would immediately raise these questions:

- Do all church members who received their endowment between 1990 and 2015 have to do them over again?
- Do all the vicarious ordinances performed on behalf of the dead between 1990 and 2015 have to be redone?
- If not, then why would a change be made, since it isn't necessary to redo the work already done?

Now suppose that you reach a satisfactory resolution to these questions, and as a result you change back and redo ordinances — immediately critics and others then raise these questions:

- Why did they change them if it was wrong to do so?
- How could they have been “inspired” if they made a mistake?
- Does this mean that the President wasn't a prophet; or, worse, a false prophet when he made this mistake?
- How can we ever trust the President again?

So, even if there were a consensus, a change that returns what was subtracted would be such a set-back to the institution that it could never be seriously entertained. It could not happen without shaking the very foundation of the premise (inerrancy of the President) upon which correlation relies to control the church.

It would take a very different group of people, having a much higher tolerance for changes, and a greater capacity to tolerate human failings, before it would be possible to add back what has once been deliberately subtracted. Such a radically different kind of Saint is unlikely to be produced without some rather dramatic changes to the population. Of course, dramatic changes are what the Lord has always told us will come as a part of preparing the earth for His return. (He calls it “calamity” in D&C 1:17.)

Now I’ve used the endowment to illustrate the point, but the same principle works across the board with any bedrock policy, ordinance or teaching which has been deliberately discarded or adopted in place of something else by the church. Once it has been set into place by the correlation process, it is put into concrete and cannot be moved without demolition. Therefore, if we have made any mistake, discarded anything we should have retained, or neglected or opposed any teaching which the Lord wanted us to keep, He will use demolition to prepare us to receive it back again. We can only subtract. Fortunately for us, a caring God can (and will) add upon us still. ‘Gotta break some concrete first, of course. But He cares enough to do that. (Psalms 94:14.) He’s determined that we are to be added upon. (Abraham 3:26.) Even when we prefer subtraction to addition.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 22, 2010 AT 12:44 PM

Was indispensable doctrine removed from the endowment in 1990?

Can you give us other examples of indispensable doctrine that is currently lost?

Surely, this topic is important enough that it deserves elaboration.
Thanks.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 22, 2010 AT 3:00 PM

It is not for me to say.

I'm only raising an issue and illustrating a point by using an example. It is up to each person to learn for themselves, by conversing with the Lord through the veil directly and learning for themselves what He would have them know and do. And I've written a book that provides that guidance.

The process is more important than the answer, as I have already explained. It is through the process that you learn what you need directly from God. And when you learn from God you have salvation.

MAY 22, 2010

Obeying God, Not Fearing Man

As the voice of the Lord conferred the sealing power upon Nephi in Chapter 10 of Helaman, this statement was made:

And now, because thou hast done this with such unwearyingness, behold, I will bless thee forever; and I will make thee mighty in word and in deed, in faith and in works; yea, even that all things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will. (Hel. 10:5)

This is not a commandment, but a statement. It is a description of what kind of person Nephi was. The Lord knew that even endowed with that power he “shall not ask that which is contrary to [the Lord’s own] will.”

How did the Lord know this about Nephi? Because of what Nephi had done with such unwearyingness: “for I have beheld how thou hast with unwearyingness declared the word, which I have given unto thee, unto this people. And thou hast not feared them, and hast not sought thine own life, but hast sought my will, and to keep my commandments.”

Nephi's prior assignments from the Lord had been done consistently, without letting criticism or threats deter him. He said what the Lord asked him to say, without fear of those who opposed, threatened, or belittled him. He had been "proven" and found worthy (Abr. 3:25). Therefore, even though he may have been misunderstood or resented by his peers, he was approved and trusted by the Lord.

How much better is it to be trusted by the Lord than to be popular with mankind! (Proverbs 29:25). What a remarkable relationship this man Nephi must have had. It makes one think that such a thing can only happen when a person is willing to follow in those exact steps (D&C 121:20–21).

Obedying God and not fearing man is so rare a thing that when we do encounter it, we're likely to either misunderstand such a person or be offended by him.

MAY 23, 2010

Schism

Right now there is such a diversity of views among the political groups in the United States that there is potential for a national breakup. States are talking about seceding from the Union. Texas, which was an independent nation before it joined the United States, has always retained the right to secede. Other states have discussed departing, and the reasons are diverse. Taxation and profligate Federal spending motivate some. Liberal issues motivate others, like Vermont, to want to leave in order to avoid conservative backlash. Conservative issues motivate others, who believe the Federal agenda is just too reckless.

The problem of national politics is its "one-size-fits-all" approach to governing. There is no room for diverse local populations to make independent decisions about their course of political development. Originally the nation was intended to be loosely governed from the national level, where such minimal governance as was necessary would be provided. National defense and interstate commerce were to be controlled to prevent invasion and internal warfare between the states. But the states were to govern their populations as independently sovereign states whose authority sprang from their people.

When you move power to the national level alone, you then create a distant and oftentimes disconnected government which will take so much upon themselves in taxation and regulation that they alienate local populations throughout the country. Taxes which would never be assessed at the local level are levied to impose policy decisions and programs which are not wanted by the local populations. That continues until, as we see now, there is resistance from both sides of the political spectrum and talk about how oppressive the national government has become.

There's a lesson there about how humanity will react when they are forced to accept a one-size approach to a divergent local circumstance. When there is only one approach tolerated, and others suppressed and controlled, then people will eventually rebel. They will simply walk away from the benefits of national programs in order to pursue their own course freely.

It is always better to leave room for divergent approaches to divergent problems. That was what the separate states were originally intended to accomplish. A problem could be experimented with at the state level. Kentucky could try one approach, Florida another, and Maine yet another. If Kentucky's worked better, and Florida's was a disaster, and Maine's somewhat of a success but nothing like Kentucky's; then the populations of the various states could learn from what worked and what didn't. They could debate based upon the outcome of various experiments they conducted in their sovereign territories. Every one of them would benefit from the conduct of the other. Now, with only a national approach to social issues, tax issues, educational issues, and health issues, failure is not acceptable. When there is failure, the failed program is given more money, more personnel and more rhetoric to justify it. It becomes a matter of political-correct thinking and speaking; because if you don't believe in supporting some failed program then you are uncharitable, or racist, or bigoted, or ignorant, or worse.

Experimentation is not permitted and therefore failure is national in scope and expensive to endure.

It is always best to "control" as little as possible and to interfere with development of separate ideas as little as necessary. This is true of government, and it is true of rearing children [after you have instructed them in the foundational truths], as well. It is also true of churches, civic organizations and any cooperative human endeavor. Cooperation through persuasion, meekness, kindness, pure knowledge and love unfeigned works, whenever it is tried (D&C 121:39–42).

MAY 23, 2010

Housekeeping

I'm going to do a bit of housecleaning. Here's responses to questions I've been asked "off blog" so to speak:

I don't recall the Know Your Religion instructor. He taught in a chapel on Creek Road in Sandy. I went back to my journal and his name is not recorded there.

Covenant making requires cutting. All covenants are made with cutting or blood involved. God's covenant with Abraham, for example, involved a ceremony in which the animals which were cleaved apart were symbols of death as part of the oath for the covenant (Gen. 15:8–18). The ceremony essentially referred to God proclaiming that the sacrifices or cutting should be done to Him, if He breaks the covenant He entered into with Abraham. Paul referred to this as God swearing by Himself, since He could swear by none greater (Heb. 6:13). Eliminating the gestures of cutting was significant in the sense that the necessity of sacrificing all things, (blog post "Lectures of Faith No. 6" - April 21, 2010) including life, is necessary to lay hold upon eternal life. Therefore although the principle remains the same for all, those who are not acquainted with that principle will never develop the faith necessary for salvation. The ceremony used to include direct reference to it, but removing it from the ceremony does not remove it from the Gospel.

The opinion poll taken was of active LDS families in Canada and the US and involved approximately 3,400 families. Hugh Nibley was on the committee, but he withdrew after attending only one meeting.

I do not expect plural marriage to be revived in the church.

Not every question should be answered by me. Go ask the Lord. They are legitimate and He will answer.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 23, 2010 AT 4:38 PM

So if you believe the church will not go back to the law of Abraham, and I doubt we will ever go back to the order of Enoch... does this mean the church will never repent and will go on the say it is, or possibly worse until the Lord comes? Will there be anyone on earth with a fulness? These are 2 everlasting covenants we have treaded upon and broken, and procrastinate the day of our repentance.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 23, 2010 AT 5:28 PM

I think it is more complex now than ever before. The “fulness” is here. But it is related to, but unregulated by, the church. D&C 77:11 tells you the church never was the way in which the sealing was going to occur. I expect those who are church members to be the ones who will be included. As for establishing Zion, that is not even an ambition of the church at present. We aren't looking to find the remnant, who are to build the New Jerusalem. We are putting ourselves, who are identified with the Gentiles, as the center, instead of the remnant who have the primary responsibility.

Sorting it all out is something which would take a volume to make clear. It is in the Book of Mormon and D&C. It is in Joseph's teachings. You can follow the subject through the revelations and you will see the picture.

Yes, there will be those with a fullness on the earth.

Yes, there are some here now with it.

God will not forsake any, in any generation, who seek for Him. But they must come to Him in the manner in which He has revealed. Study the scriptures. They are able to make you wise unto salvation. It is your study; your obligation. It is not anyone else who must do this.

I've tried to make a coherent description available in the books I have written. They aren't something which you should read without careful, solemn, and ponderous thought. They are filled with the scriptures and explanations which connect the revelations together in a simplified whole.

Nephi did the best single job of writing the process in his books. I've shown that in what I've written. Believe in the scriptures; particularly the Book of Mormon. The fullness is set out there. If you can't see it, then read what I've written and it will show it to you using the scriptures.

MAY 24, 2010

Be Firm and Steadfast!

I've said several times in several ways that we have an obligation to support the church's leaders and the programs of the church. I believe that with all my heart. The Lord is going to hold us all accountable. No one is going to be relieved from their respective responsibilities.

Pay tithes, attend your meetings. Keep a current temple recommend and use it. Serve when asked to do so. You will have a great influence on others for the good when you provide service. Not merely by what you say, but by the example you provide.

There is a great deal of unrest in the church. Oftentimes the result is inactivity. I believe that is a mistake. If all those who continued to care about the Gospel persisted in attending meetings and serving, it would do more to help the church than drifting into inactivity. Those who are sensitive to the troubles which beset the church need to be there, faithfully serving. If only those who are blinded to the troubles remain active, then the organization becomes narrower and narrower, less and less aware of its situation, and prone to continue in a course that will discard yet more of what matters most.

I wish I could inspire thousands of inactive Saints to return to activity. I know I have helped hundreds to return. Those who are most troubled are the ones who the church can use right now. Those who keenly sense that all is not well with Zion are the ones who need to be filling the pews. Until they fill the pews they won't be filling the leadership positions. And until they fill the leadership positions, there won't be any changes made to the course we are on at present.

If you love Zion and want her redemption, then serve her cause. Faithfully serve her cause. Don't sever yourself from her.

There is no question the Lord will hold accountable those who are in leadership positions for every word, every thought, and every deed (Alma 12:14). They aren't spared. This is why we should pray for them, uphold them, and do what we can to relieve them of the terrible burdens and consequences of being accountable for their callings (D&C 107:22).

When you withdraw from the church you cut yourself off from necessary ordinances, including the sacrament. You imperil your capacity to keep the Sabbath day holy. You limit your capacity to serve others. Even a bad lesson makes you consider what the teacher and manual is ignoring, misstating or mangling. You needn't be argumentative or unpleasant. But by being there you have a time to reflect upon the subject being addressed by the class and to contemplate what that subject means to you. Use it meditatively and gratefully. It is a gift. If you see more clearly than others, then thank the Lord for that and stop being impatient with your fellow Saint.

You are a gift to the church. Your talents and your abilities belong to and were intended to be a part of the church. Serve there. Patiently and kindly. You needn't start an argument in every class to make a difference. Quietly going about serving and occasionally providing a carefully chosen insight is important and will garner you far more blessings than withdrawing and letting your light grow dim.

We're all in this together. This is our dispensation. You are responsible for helping it be preserved and passed along to the rising generation. Do not grow weary in this fight. We share a common enemy, and it is not the leadership of the church. It is the one who stirs people up to anger (2 Ne. 28:20).

I'd like to open people's eyes only so as to permit them to save their own souls and those of others. I would never want anyone to walk away from the church as a result of seeing its weaknesses. Be wise, but harmless (Matt. 10:16). Be patient with anyone's shortcomings, no matter whether they serve in the nursery or in the presidency of an organization.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 24, 2010 AT 11:11 AM

Just to put some of your comment in perspective, I need to say this: when you attend and continue to be constructive and faithful—and you are effectively shunned—well, it's hard to remain. Those people you mention, who are steadfast, strong but who recognize the perils that are increasing in the church are generally NOT called to any positions of authority. Those who say, "All is well in Zion" are called increasingly.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 24, 2010 AT 4:51 PM

No, no, no, no, no. That's not right. IF enough of those who have voted with their feet returned, and they filled the pews, it WOULD change. You add another 30% to 50% back in and they will outnumber the 30% who are there pretending to be content. You get the majority of those who are active in the church there, attending and speaking up and you will change the church in a fundamental way. I'm saying this is the cure to what ails the church itself. Then you'd have to call a different breed of leader to cope with the pews filled with people who know Zion is in disarray and that there are pretensions and foolishness going on. Imagine a Gospel Doctrine class with such a group in it! Imagine F&T! Glorious.

Anonymous · MAY 24, 2010 AT 8:12 PM

DS: I'm hearing you preach publicly... would like to hear you speak plainly. If you have spent enough time with HIM, you will know that our org stopped listening intently to the Lord back when we decided to can His marriage system HE restored, the new and everlasting covenant of marriage in full.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 24, 2010 AT 9:05 PM

I've already addressed this in Beloved Enos. Not going to repeat it here.

Ben · MAY 24, 2010 AT 9:35 PM

If the reference to Beloved Enos was in response to my question, thanks for the pointer. I've just put the order in.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 25, 2010 AT 6:12 AM

No, Ben, it was in response to those who want to continue to have plural marriage. I've spent some time explaining why they are in error in Beloved Enos, and am not going to take the subject up again here.

I was planning on addressing your question in another post. But it will come up in a few days, because my wife already has some stuff coming up first planned.

Anonymous · MAY 25, 2010 AT 7:01 AM

I'm so tired of men pining away for polygamy to return, pretending they want to live a higher law cuz they're so awesome. Oh, I know, their wives want help with the dishes, too... everyone's on board. I know, it's all about caving in to the world... it's just no fair I have to live in 2010... I just want to be more righteous than I already am... I don't want to be lumped with the rejectors in the next life, I'll do it right now!!! whine whine whine....

Denver Snuffer · MAY 25, 2010 AT 7:38 AM

Amen, Sister!

Denver Snuffer · MAY 25, 2010 AT 1:00 PM

Anonymous: Amen, Sister!

No. This was not posted by sister snuffer. This was posted by DS himself. If and when I post a comment it will say . . .

Posted by the CM (or goddess)

Anonymous · MAY 25, 2010 AT 10:56 PM

You did enter it... in part. According to our previous prophets. Of course it needs to be actually sealed by the Godhead for that sealing to be effective in and after the resurrection. Our sealings are a promise that one day based upon our faithfulness, we are both sealed up to eternal life with each other. You also covenanted to live all the laws of the restored gospel and to build up Zion on the earth. You call a celestial order lived by the Gods, and restored to this very church early on... a dead horse? Also, you probably should study all of the revelations given to John Taylor and Wilford Woodruff during the 1880's, and search for the BYU professor's research on the 220+ plural marriages that were authorized by the Presidency and Apostles after the 1890 manifesto/press release (not even called a revelation and doesn't even mention the Lord in it and just says to not do PM's within the USA). Much of our factual history has been swept under the rug. Seek and ye will find. I started my research and quest for truth to find out why we lived the celestial law of marriage in full then, and why we don't now. I have been shown why... and this very blog of Denver's is more proof. We are not the celestial people that we think we are. We have not the love of the truth to even understand it or receive anything new, let alone pray to one day live what has already been restored. And I do mean all of the celestial orders and principles we were taught during the 1800's and in our scriptures that we do not care to return to. I am not advocating living it right now. I am just helping others realize the truth, and the blessings that would come... that are predicated based upon our love and obedience to the celestial laws that our Gods live.

Another poster above is also right... finding one good wife is hard enough in today's world... let alone a few. Even harder would be to find a worthy man who 7 or so women would want to be part of His kingdom. Yes, these things are reserved for a pure and holy people... wish we were such.

After the tribulation and redemption of Zion, thanks to angels coming to set us back in full celestial order, at least those who will...

these things will be had again. I will always defend the truth, even if I stand alone in it... even if the hard hearts in today's modern church don't care to understand or love the truth of these celestial laws we seek to forget or are embarrassed by. I preach the truth as I obtain it from our prophets who communed with the heavens. It is up to our church membership and leadership to seek it, love it, then go back to live the things already given us, things we have neglected or discarded. Or we can wait for the cleansing effect of tribulation and the fury of the Lord to turn us around, which more than likely will be necessary.

I'm just here to help others dig in and learn historical facts and the history of God's dealings with the priesthood for 6,000 yrs. You'd think we'd get it after so long... :)

Denver Snuffer · MAY 26, 2010 AT 6:06 AM

I've read all of it. Met with plural marriage advocates. Written about the subject (if you'd read what I'd written already you would know this). I am completely confident that the obligation to live plural marriage and the keys to do so are not available to volunteers or interlopers today. No one is authorized to undertake a practice, engage in conduct or strike out on their own, for now. The Lord's House is a house of order.

MAY 24, 2010

Blood Crying for Vengeance

I was asked about blood crying for vengeance from the ground. The question was how this reconciled with charity or forgiveness.

Blood "crying from the ground" is not the same thing as a person crying out for vengeance. Keep the context in mind: It is the blood which was shed upon the earth which cries out for vengeance or fairness or retribution. Something unfair has occurred, and the cry of the blood "upon the ground" is a reminder of the injustice of it all.

The ground is a reference to the earth, which has a spirit, intelligence, and is able to communicate if a person were capable of listening. It is a female spirit, and she regards herself as “the mother of men.” This earth is offended when the men who are upon her kill one another or engage in any form of wickedness upon her surface. Below is her lament as she beheld the disorder and murder caused by that generation upon whom the flood was unleashed:

And it came to pass that Enoch looked upon the earth; and he heard a voice from the bowels thereof, saying: Wo, wo is me, the mother of men; I am pained, I am weary, because of the wickedness of my children. When shall I rest, and be cleansed from the filthiness which is gone forth out of me? When will my Creator sanctify me, that I may rest, and righteousness for a season abide upon my face? (Moses 7:48)

Even if the person whose blood was shed departed this earth forgiving those who made offense against him, yet would “the ground” cry out for vengeance because the earth has become filthy by reason of the killing which took place upon her. She, as the “mother of men,” regards the killing of men upon her as an abomination. She cries out. She is offended. She wants righteousness to appear on her, as has happened before. She longs that it be brought about again. When, instead of Zion, she has the murder of men upon her face, it is so great a lamentation by her spirit that “the ground cries out for vengeance” because of the atrocity.

MAY 25, 2010

Just a Reminder—posted by the comment moderator (goddess)

The content of this blog presumes you are already familiar with Denver Snuffer’s books. Careful explanations given in the books lay the foundation for what is contained here. If you read this blog without having first read his books, then you assume responsibility for your own misunderstanding and misinterpretation of the writer's intent. Please do not presume to judge Mr. Snuffer's intentions from a single blog post if you have not first read his books. His ideas and beliefs are not fully laid out in a four paragraph post on a blog.

MAY 25, 2010

Men's Hearts Will Fail Them

Luke records Christ's first public sermon that occurred after His baptism, temptation, wedding and commencement of the public ministry. He read from Isaiah about the commission He had received from God to preach (Luke 4:17-19). After reading the verses, He proclaimed that He was the fulfillment of those verses (Luke 4:20-21).

He expounded on the verses adding that not only were they fulfilled, but He pressed on to explain how He would fulfill them in comments that were unrecorded. However, those who heard could not help but be persuaded at His gracious words (Luke 4:22).

He moved from these verses in Isaiah to add His own prophecy about what they would eventually do to Him. You will tell me: "Physician, heal thyself," He added (Luke 4:23). He will be asked by them to do miracles among them as He will do in Capernaum, but they will not be given such a witness. He explains that not all of a prophet's works will be put to display before all people. That some will see Him, but only have the testimony of others to learn of His works (Luke 4:24-27).

They were indignant at His comments. It filled them with wrath. They thought they should be given the same signs, the same proof, of His claim to Messiahship as He would put before others (Luke 4:28–29). However, He explained to them that He would be without honor among those closest to Him. (Luke 4:24.)

The attempt of the congregation to kill Him failed. He departed and went among more believing people, who heard Him speak with power from heaven (Luke 4:30–32).

What an interesting commencement of His public ministry. Telling the truth among those unprepared to welcome Him did them no good, persuaded no-one of the truth, and resulted in His forced departure.

What can be said of those who would cast out of their congregation He who was greater than them all? They thought they were making a bold statement about their fidelity to their religious traditions, and holding fast to the truth. Instead, they were cutting themselves off from the lifeline sent to save them.

Irony is not a strong enough word to describe this singular scene. It would be repeated throughout Christ's ministry among the hierarchy and leadership of His day, ultimately culminating in His death at their hands. These were the only people who would kill their God (2 Ne. 10:3). They were devout. They were misinformed. They were very religious, but entirely mistaken.

What happened on that first day of teaching was a microcosm of His entire ministry. It is often the case that those who regard themselves as the “most religious” and “most correct” are capable of missing the truth sent to them by the Lord. They prefer the Lord package the truth in one way, coupled with a written guarantee that the package will never fail them, while the Lord is always sending it in another, and requiring them to receive it when only their hearts can guide them into recognizing it. It is little wonder, then, that our day is when “men’s hearts will fail them” because they fear, and trust not the things sent to them (Luke 21:26).

MAY 25, 2010

Broken Souls

I’m hoping to solve Ben’s perplexity (raised in a recent comment), and give all those who come here something to reflect on at the same time.

There are those who are kept from active church attendance because they have read something about history or doctrine which has alarmed and/or discouraged them. There are those who, because of their circumstances, are embarrassed to come to church. There are those who are poor and ashamed, or they are living with the heavy burden of sin and choose to stay away from our meetings. Perhaps they suffer from depression or anxiety, have addictions and feel unclean and unworthy.

I have home taught or spent time with people with all of these issues, concerns and experiences, and more. They stay away because they do not feel welcome among us. Many feel judged, some feel like they just can’t abide hypocrisy, some are hurting and the church makes their hurt worse.

From the time I joined the church until today, I look for these people. I volunteer to go and visit with them in every ward I have attended, in every stake where I have served, and across the Mission when missionaries have asked me to come help teach. I was honored just a few days ago to meet with a man and his wife who are inactive, but who have a towering understanding of the church, gospel, its history, the scriptures and doctrine. They have figured out a great deal more than either their bishop or stake president. As a result, I think the local church authorities are somewhat intimidated by their understanding, and the leaders cannot answer their questions. It was, for me, a joyful visit and I hope to return again and talk with this wonderful Latter-day Saint couple soon.

I have met with people whose son committed suicide while attending a church-owned university because he was so lonely and isolated that his last desperate act was intended to end his life and rebuke those who had dismissed his pain. I loved these people who spoke with me about their son's life and death. They possessed a sensitivity to the feelings of others which can only be purchased at the price of enduring great personal pain.

I have close friends who struggle with addictions. Some of these people struggle with things so haunting, so terrible a force in their lives that rising each day to face the coming fight takes greater courage than I can even imagine. They are acting in faith at every waking breath, as they fight against a foe I do not comprehend and could not face.

I have helped women whose husbands are esteemed as church leaders, but the husbands' private actions are hellish and abusive. Women who have nowhere to turn, because their husband is the leader with jurisdiction over them. No one will believe them because their "righteous" husband says they have mental or emotional illnesses. These women somehow manage to continue to serve their children and remain steadfast despite the hell they find themselves in.

It is not possible to set out all the different ways wherein the men and women I have met struggle. It is a great privilege to know these people. People whose insight into life and difficulties is far greater than I can begin to comprehend. People whose strength is not even recognized, because others are too busy dismissing, belittling or judging them as “a thing of naught” (2 Ne. 28:16).

I have marveled at how very much these broken souls, these discouraged people, these victims of our judgments who we have discarded or neglected are the very ones with whom I feel the Lord’s presence and love as I have the honor of meeting and talking with them about the Gospel. These are the ones He loves the most. These are the ones with whom He associated during His ministry. He associates there, still.

We have driven many of them away from activity in the church because of how we behave. In turn, the Spirit does not dwell with many of the “righteous” and proud active Latter-day Saints because hearts have not been broken nor spirits made contrite. We are made to think God favors us because we have worldly successes. We prosper. It is the successful, the financially well-to-do, the educated, the bank president, the lawyer and doctor whom we hold up as the model of a true Saint. Read the resumes of those who are called to lead the stakes and missions of the church in each week’s Church News. We draw from a very narrow social gene-pool to find those who serve. They come from among those who have the financial resources in place to spare the time it takes to serve. In the process we get a ‘Gospel of Success’ mentality, right out of one segment of the Evangelical movement.

I am NOT saying that nothing good can come from the Stanford Business School. I am NOT saying bankers are damned (though they are in truth damnable). I am not talking about them. I am talking instead about those broken souls whom I know the Lord loves, but who are not among us because of our own pride and haughty attitudes.

If we were to flood the wards of Zion with those whose hearts are broken, who mourn because of issues that weigh heavy upon them, and who feel that there is nothing in the church for them, but who look to Christ to lift them from their torment, we would be enriched by their homecoming. In much the same way as the Prodigal was worthy of a feast, but the resentful but faithful son who stayed behind was not, so also are the riches of eternity reserved for the poor, downtrodden and broken hearted.

We are the poorer because of their absence. Our wards are not informed by hearing of their dilemmas and struggles. We are not what we could be if we were to make such people welcome—throwing our arms open to greet them. We do not hear their struggle to keep a testimony after learning about some serious failing of a past leader. We are not informed, as we should be, in our meetings and discussions.

This is a lamentation, and not an explanation. This is not the fullness of the subject, but merely a hint of what I know displeases the Lord about us. It is not my responsibility to define fully the Lord's displeasure with us at the moment. I can, however, assure you He is not pleased. Some of what we think ourselves best for doing is not what He would want us to take pride in. Our Lord's heart is broken still. His ways are higher than ours because He values the least more than do we.

I cannot say more. But I am left amazed at the hardness of the hearts of this generation who claim they are the Lord's. Many, many will be told by Him to depart from His presence at the time of Judgment because they never knew Him. They speak today in His name, yet they know Him not. It would be better for them to not speak at all, than to toss about His name as the author of foolish, vain, proud and evil notions while claiming He agrees with such things.

MAY 25, 2010

Why the Occasional Reminder (and she will probably do it again)

I can see my wife put up another reminder (blog post - “Just a reminder” —posted by the comment moderator (goddess) - May 25, 2010) about the stuff I’ve written previously. I can tell you why she did that.

Some folks presume that a brief post contains all of an idea that I have spent many pages setting out a full explanation for elsewhere. They comment, challenge, criticize or contradict in a reply comment as if the whole of what I have to say about some topic is contained in the briefest of posts. It is apparent that if the person had read what I’ve written elsewhere they wouldn’t be making the comment they make here.

An example is the plural marriage notion. I’ve spent pages and given both history and scripture to explain what my explanation is for the position I take in the book, Beloved Enos. There are persons who are obsessed with the whole plural marriage subject, and very well may be practicing plural marriage. My comments and views probably threaten them, because I do not believe it appropriate to practice plural marriage now that it has been banned by both the law of Utah, law of the United States, confirmed by the United States to be prohibited, and abandoned by the church as a practice.

The keys which allowed the practice are addressed at length in Beloved Enos, and it would be too long a discussion to take the subject up here. I anticipated that there would be those who practice plural marriage who would read what I have to say, and so I addressed their concerns in that book. So when they want to have a discussion about the topic, this isn't the forum for that. I've written my understanding before and it becomes apparent that the person(s) replying do not understand my position because they haven't read it.

I think my wife as Moderator gets somewhat exasperated with these comments, because they are something which she necessarily has to read before putting up and seem so contrary to the intent of doing this blog. I get vicariously frustrated as well as we discuss it.

I worry that some very good folks, with great comments, are thinking that their comments are not welcomed. That isn't true, of course. What is true is that it is unfair and inaccurate to reach a conclusion about what I think or understand based upon the briefest of comments made on this blog. The comments would need to be read in light of lengthy explanations provided elsewhere and fit into the context of what I've already explained, before it is fair to react as if you understand my position. Some of you have taken the trouble to read what I've written and do understand a comment made here. Some clearly have not. Everyone is welcome to put a comment up in response to a post, but I'm not going to respond to all of them when the explanation is already provided elsewhere.

I hope that clarifies again the reasons behind the periodic reminders put up here.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · MAY 26, 2010 AT 12:05 PM

Denver,

Please explain what you mean by “Keys to Practice Plural Marriage”, I don’t understand.

Do you mean the keys to practice “celestial marriage”? (which I would define as being plural marriage with the promise of an eternal sealing between partners and sanctioned by the Lord).

Seems to me like “plural marriage” is simply a lifestyle choice that consenting adults decide to live. Are you saying that you believe that by making that choice the adults are inherently living incorrectly or are they living incorrectly only because the action is currently disallowed by the laws of this land? If you agree with that then would you say that if plural marriage were to become de-criminalized that you would see no problem in choosing to live that lifestyle?

I know this question is almost perfectly what you said in the post you are not interested in discussing but I think getting your viewpoint on it might actually work to slow down the number of comments that others send you, not increase the number.

By the way, I am not a practicing polygamist and I am a current active member of the church.

T.N.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 26, 2010 AT 7:26 PM

Keys to seal multiple wives with the Lord’s approval. They aren’t in use today.

Should they decriminalize bigamy (which is probably inevitable at some point) and people decide to have multiple spouses, that would still not be the same thing as a celestial marriage, no matter who and how they arranged their relationship.

CHAPTER 4

A Message of Warning

MAY 26, 2010

A Message of Warning

The Jews thought themselves favored of God. They trusted that the land they occupied had been promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. They were the descendants of these patriarchs. The land had been promised to them. They had the priesthood, the temple, God's promise and a true religion. They knew nothing could molest their peace.

The Lord commissioned Zechariah to deliver this warning to them:

Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Execute true judgment, and shew mercy and compassions every man to his brother: And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart. But they refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hosts hath sent in his spirit by the former prophets: therefore came a great wrath from the Lord of hosts. Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the Lord of hosts: But I scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not. Thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned: for they laid the pleasant land desolate. (Zech. 7:9-14)

We can look at the Jews to whom this prophecy was delivered and see with clarity how they failed. We can see through their false presumptions, foolish beliefs and evil ways. We know how to correctly weigh them in the balance.

Imagine, however, if you lived among those people and shared their false presumptions. Imagine that you believed, as they did, that they were chosen, promised that nothing would molest them. Imagine you possessed a temple of God, true priesthood, and descended from prophets. How would you react when a prophet came among you crying that you were wicked, oppressed the poor, the fatherless and the stranger? Wouldn't you think Zechariah was wrong while all of you were right? How can a message from a single person hold an entire nation of people accountable for how they respond?

I suspect it wouldn't be any easier for us to see our plight as it was for the Jews to see theirs. I suspect our own harsh assessment of the failure of the Jews will be the very standard against which we will be measured in how we react to truth when it is declared among us. I doubt we can distinguish between truth and error any better than they did. But we pride ourselves on condemning them, and justifying ourselves.

The irony in all this is so thick you can hardly move.

How grateful I am to live at a time when there are messages received again from the Lord which can lead us to salvation, despite earth and hell, false messengers and fools, pretenders and charlatans. Yet will the Lord keep His promise that before He does anything, He will commission a message of warning. (Amos 3:7.)

MAY 27, 2010

The Arm of Flesh

When the church commissions an opinion poll and then, as a result of that poll, concludes that some program or position is popular, or would be accepted by the Saints without complaint—and then adopt that position in a public statement—has a “revelation” been received? I do not think so. I think an opinion has been obtained, and a policy or statement has been adopted. Therefore, I do not think there is one thing wrong with disagreeing with the policy or statement.

When the church endorses something or some position, I do not think it is right to simply “fall in line” behind the statement without also thinking the same issue through and reaching my own conclusion. The first question I ask myself is what the statement is, and does it imply a revelation from the Lord.

I can think of two examples. One was a public announcement that was heralded in the press. The other was the subject of a letter from the First Presidency read in sacrament meetings.

The public announcement was regarding the housing and employment of homosexuals in Salt Lake City, using the force of government sanction to prevent an employer or owner of property from refusing to grant equal access or rights to homosexuals. I’ve previously commented here in a critical way about that announcement. This is an example of how I view things.

Since the church's position on the matter had absolutely nothing to do with revelation, and the church did not make any attempt to claim the position came through revelation, I do not believe it is immune from question or criticism. Indeed, the defense of the policy to the press involved a public relations/opinion poll driven justification. It was expected to "resonate on the basis of fairness" with all those in the middle, and only offend those at the two ends of the spectrum. This is opinion gathering to inform a position, then announcing the position because of the results of opinion gathering. It is what a politician or a marketing firm would do. It is not at all akin to a revelation, and should not command my respect. I am under no obligation to alter my view based on what the church's opinion gathering has concluded. If that were the case, then the church's ability to control everyone's thinking would be based only upon prevailing opinion at the moment. This is the "tossed about by every wind" concern which Paul addressed in one of his letters (Eph. 4:14.) Shifting opinion is not revelation. I am free to point it out, disagree with it, and explain my contrary view.

Another example is the letter from the First Presidency asking speakers in sacrament meetings to no longer ask those in attendance to open their scriptures. No explanation was provided in the letter. It was just an instruction to the Saints to no longer let sacrament meeting speakers tell those in the meeting to open their scriptures and read along. Perhaps it was as a result of someone being irritated by the noise of rustling scriptures. Perhaps it was someone with a hearing aid, whose aid frequency was tuned to pick up the rustling so well that it drowned out the rest of the speaker's voice. Perhaps it was because the meeting got delayed and disrupted by the folks struggling to find their scriptures, and open them up to the relevant page. I can't say for certain. But I did raise my eyebrows when the letter was read in advance to the High Council.

My candid reaction to that letter was that it diminished the office of those who signed the letter by the petty micro-managing of opening the scriptures during a sacrament gathering. I wondered in amazement that someone in the Church Office Building got the First Presidency to sign such a letter. I wondered at how, with all that threatens us today, opening scriptures in order to read along in sacrament meetings managed to become so important that the First Presidency would write and send a letter worldwide to be read in the stakes and wards. It was perplexity on stilts.

Beyond that my approach has been twofold: First, I have NEVER asked anyone to open their scriptures in a sacrament meeting since then. However, I have said in talks during sacrament that "I cannot ask you to open your scriptures and read along" in order to call attention to the policy. I have also said, when teaching outside of sacrament meetings, that I was free to ask them to read along in their scriptures "because we are not in a sacrament meeting." I do this to call attention to the policy. I think to call attention to it is to cause people to wonder at the pettiness and inconsequential nature of a letter from the First Presidency addressing the opening of scriptures in sacrament meeting.

These are just two examples. There are many. As I have said before, I pay very close attention to the church, what is said and done, and how relevant or irrelevant some position, letter, emphasis or program is in an absolute sense. I try to take it all in and reach my own conclusions. Looking at it all, I am quite concerned. Faithful, tithing paying and active, nevertheless quite concerned.

I believe if enough people were similarly concerned that eventually the “opinion polling” might obtain reasonable results. That is, the top would hear about reasonable concerns and learn of reasonable opinions, and then promulgate policies and send out statements accordingly. That, however, will require a great effort to call attention to the things that matter most, and clarity in pointing out the things that do not matter at all. We fret over trifles while things are burning down all around us. I wonder how long it will take for the polling to inform the Saints of the fire burning around them.

COMMENTS:

DKD · MAY 27, 2010 AT 11:29 AM

I was in a bishopric meeting when the letter from the FP (about scriptures) was read. Our thoughts/opinions at the time were that the intent was to help improve the spirit of our meeting.... and not distract from the spirit.

DKD · MAY 27, 2010 AT 2:00 PM

Perhaps we should re-read the letter?

DKD · MAY 27, 2010 AT 2:09 PM

“In order to maintain an atmosphere of reverent worship in our sacrament and stake conference meetings, when speakers use scriptures as part of their talks they should not ask the congregation to open their own books to the scriptural reference. Also, members should not use visual aids and their sacrament meeting or stake conference talks. Such teaching methods are more effective in classroom settings and leadership meetings.

“We believe these adjustments will enhance the spirit of our worship services.”

Denver Snuffer · MAY 27, 2010 AT 3:33 PM

Thanks, DKD. I have the same reaction. It strikes me that opening the word of God up could not possibly detract from the Spirit of Truth. Though, perhaps, it may detract from the “spirit of our worship services” which I do agree may be disrupted by the intervention of the scriptures being opened.

It continues to amaze me that the letter was sent.

DKD · MAY 27, 2010 AT 3:43 PM

Denver.... I too was a little puzzled at the letter when the bishop read it.... there were a few raised eyebrows in our meeting too. :)

MAY 27, 2010

O That I Had Repented

National debt is nearly the entire annual gross domestic product.

The banking crisis in Europe is threatening to spread, and the US has committed billions to help prop up the imbalanced European socialist-democracies.

The money supply is shrinking at a rate comparable only to the years leading into the Great Depression. I am reminded of the Nephites when they were denounced with these words:

O ye wicked and ye perverse generation; ye hardened and ye stiffnecked people, how long will ye suppose that the Lord will suffer you? Yea, how long will ye suffer yourselves to be led by foolish and blind guides? Yea, how long will ye choose darkness rather than light? Yea, behold, the anger of the Lord is already kindled against you; behold, he hath cursed the land because of your iniquity. And behold, the time cometh that he curseth your riches, that they become slippery, that ye cannot hold them; and in the days of your poverty ye cannot retain them. (Hel. 13:29–31)

As our own riches become “slippery” so that we cannot hold onto them, I think we get a taste of what the Nephites were allowed to experience because they could not distinguish between those who taught the truth and those who merely led them about while blind.

The prophecy continued with these additional words of wise, and still relevant counsel:

And in the days of your poverty ye shall cry unto the Lord; and in vain shall ye cry, for your desolation is already come upon you, and your destruction is made sure; and then shall ye weep and howl in that day, saith the Lord of Hosts. And then shall ye lament, and say: O that I had repented, and had not killed the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out. Yea, in that day ye shall say: O that we had remembered the Lord our God in the day that he gave us our riches, and then they would not have become slippery that we should lose them; for behold, our riches are gone from us. Behold, we lay a tool here and on the morrow it is gone; and behold, our swords are taken from us in the day we have sought them for battle. Yea, we have hid up our treasures and they have slipped away from us, because of the curse of the land. O that we had repented in the day that the word of the Lord came unto us; for behold the land is cursed, and all things are become slippery, and we cannot hold them. Behold, we are surrounded by demons, yea, we are encircled about by the angels of him who hath sought to destroy our souls. Behold, our iniquities are great. O Lord, canst thou not turn away thine anger from us? And this shall be your language in those days. But behold, your days of probation are past; ye have procrastinated the day of your salvation until it is everlastingly too late, and your destruction is made sure; yea, for ye have sought all the days of your lives for that which ye could not obtain; and ye have sought for happiness in doing iniquity, which thing is contrary to the nature of that righteousness which is in our great and Eternal Head. O ye people of the land, that ye would hear my words! (Hel. 13:32–39)

As always, the Book of Mormon remains the keystone of our religion. A person can get closer to God by abiding its precepts than through any other book.

I don't think Joseph Smith wrote it. I think he translated it. I think it contains wisdom from an earlier, failed civilization that once inhabited this land. I think their lessons should not be forgotten by us. Because when we fail to learn them by precept, then we get to learn them by experience. And some of their experiences were quite difficult.

MAY 28, 2010

Catch, Hold or Cling

There are two different words used by Nephi regarding contact with the “iron rod” or word of God. Joseph Smith translated the two words as “cling” or “clinging” for one, and “hold” or “holding” as the other.

The different word use raises the question of meaning. If they meant identical things, then the same word would have been translated. Therefore, there must be a reason for the different words.

Below are examples of the different words in the context of the record:

1 Ne. 8:24, 30:

²⁴ And it came to pass that I beheld others pressing forward, and they came forth and caught hold of the end of the rod of iron; and they did press forward through the mist of darkness, clinging to the rod of iron, even until they did come forth and partake of the fruit of the tree.

. . .

³⁰ But, to be short in writing, behold, he saw other multitudes pressing forward; and they came and caught hold of the end of the rod of iron; and they did press their way forward, continually holding fast to the rod of iron, until they came forth and fell down and partook of the fruit of the tree.

Some catch hold, then cling. Some hold, then hold fast.

So the question becomes why the different description. Both of these different approaches result in the persons reaching the destination, then partaking of the fruit. But they are situated differently as they move along the process. Some are “clinging” and some are “holding” as they move toward their destination.

To “cling” implies something frantic, something charged with emotion, and something more desperate than to “hold.” “Holding” seems calm, thoughtfully committed and more methodical than does “clinging.” From this, I conclude that there are at least two kinds of people who will make their way to partake of the fruit of the tree of life in this world.

For one group, the process is unnerving, fearful and emotionally wrenching. They cling on despite earth and hell. They fight to retain their grip, and they make heroic efforts in the opposition they face. They cling because they cannot relent, cannot relax, and know they face peril as they live their lives daily. For them their hopes are kept despite all their fears. They cling because they desire more than the opposition can deter them.

For another group, the process is less emotional, but nonetheless filled with determination. They are not as charged with fear, but face what comes to them calmly and with the assurance that the Lord's word is in their hands and will be a refuge that will bring them to eternal life.

I think there is another, more likely possibility, as well. There is not two groups, but only one. From time to time everyone faces moments of difficulty. The only way to stay with the rod is to cling. Then the seasons change, the storm relents, and calm returns. During those times when life improves, the person can continue to hold and move forward, but they have purchased the season of calm by the things they have endured in faith. Now they know it is only necessary to hold on, and all things will come to them.

I do not know of a life that gets lived without challenge, difficulty and seasons of despair. I believe all of us will at times be required to cling, and at others have the ability to hold the course. Whether it is the one season or the other, however, at the end of the journey you will lay hold on eternal life. Press on.

MAY 28, 2010

I Am the Lord That Smiteth

The people among whom Ezekiel lived were filled with sin; public and private. The prophet was inspired to deliver a serious warning to them inasmuch as they could not learn by being taught correct precepts, but only by harsh judgment. His warning included this statement:

The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains. Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations. And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense thee according to thy ways and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smiteth. (Eze. 7:7–9)

I had a few thoughts about why and how such “judgments” could be easily be poured out upon us, as well.

From drug abuse to carnality, we are less civil and more dangerous as a population each year. If you would like to see the Lord “pour out [His] fury upon [us]” you only need to shut off the electrical power in Detroit or Los Angeles at night. We are filled with the savagery that will bring about our own punishment. When the electrical grid fails in larger metropolitan areas of the United States, it will be Americans killing Americans, without any need for an invasion by an enemy. God will not need to send a plague upon us. We become our own plague because of our wickedness.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, when the New Orleans Police Department was unable to keep order, and the National Guard had not arrived yet, there were days filled with violence, rape and murder. It did not take anything more than a brief lack of police authority before the population was plagued with criminal misconduct, violence and killing.

What more fitting a way to “judge thee according to thy ways?” What more apt a manner for “recompensing thee for all thine abominations?” It is our own choice to become our own undoing. Amazing, really.

Are our sins any less than that generation to whom Ezekiel spoke? Americans have killed 40 million unborn (innocent) children. Hitler, the great genocidal monster of the last century, only killed 6 million in his perversity. We have selected the most innocent, and ended 40 million of their lives. As Christ put it: Truly we deserve a millstone hung around our necks and to be drowned in the depth of the sea for this wanton shedding of innocent blood (Matt. 18:6).

This great perversity is what we call a “right to choose,” thereby clothing an atrocity in the words of virtue. We call evil good and good evil, and never take time to notice we fulfill prophecy as we do so (2 Ne. 15:20, using Isaiah 5:20 to describe us and our time). Freedom of choice, right to choose, tolerance, diversity, open and free are all words implying virtue. They justify suppression of truth, sexual misconduct, killing innocent unborn and curtailing freedom of thought and expression. We are hardly able to recognize good from evil, because everything destructive or debasing, advocated by those addicted to a perversity, is called by them good. And any who oppose these abuses are called evil, intolerant, oppressive, haters and ignorant.

It should not surprise any of us if the Lord should shortly pour out His judgments upon us. All it would take is a prolonged failure of the power grid and we would unleash on ourselves our own direful judgments.

MAY 29, 2010

Personal Revelation

On the 13th of November, 1835, Joseph was instructing, and made the following comment (which has been often repeated:

“[I]f God gives you a manifestation, keep it to yourselves” (JS Papers; Journals Vol. 1, p. 98).

This statement has been quoted as a basis to support the position that any person’s revelation should NEVER be shared with another person; other than of course a revelation given to the church president. The statement needs to be understood, however, in light of later statements recorded by Joseph in the same volume of the JS Papers.

On page 170 Joseph recorded that “angels ministered unto them, as well as myself.” A little further down on the same page: “My scribe...saw in a vision the armies of heaven protecting the Saints in their return to Zion.” Still on the same page:

The vision of heaven was opened to these also, some of them saw the face of the Savior; and others were ministered unto by holy angels, and the spirit of prophesy and revelation was poured out in mighty power.

On page 171 Joseph recorded that those who were present “spent the time in rehearsing to each other the glorious scenes that transpired on the preceding evening, while attending to the ordinance of the holy anointing.”

On page 174 Joseph recorded that his brother, William, “saw the heavens opened and the Lord’s host protecting the Lord’s anointed.”

On page 182 Joseph recorded that Zebedee Coltrin “saw a vision of the Lord’s House—and others were filled with the spirit and spake in tongues and prophesied.” Later on that same page, in footnote 361, this is included: “Oliver Cowdery also recorded that ‘many saw visions, many prophesied, and many spake in tongues.’” citing to Oliver’s Diary for 6 Feb. 1836.

It is apparent that Joseph’s comment did not result in these early Saints not speaking of the manifestations they received. Nor did Joseph exhibit any disapproval or concern about hearing of others speaking of their spiritual manifestations. His comment, therefore, needs to be understood in the context of the overall manner in which spiritual experiences were experienced and shared among the early church, even within a couple of months of the statement used to justify criticism of any person saying anything about any manifestation they received.

Oddly, I do not think anyone should share anything with anyone else unless the Lord, who gives manifestations, directs. When He does, then I think objections are made at the peril of disrespecting the Lord’s command (See e.g., Alma 8:25; 3 Ne. 23:9—where the Lord required some of what Samuel had said to be added to their scriptures which the Nephites had neglected to record).

COMMENTS:

Russ · MAY 29, 2010 AT 3:29 PM

Knowing how busy you must be, I try to limit my questions (and am appreciative of the ones you answer). That said, I have a question for you.

You have mentioned having a scale of how important things are and that sometimes you move things from one place to another on that scale. Some things are essential to our exaltation while others are not. Could you give us an idea of the things you feel are of the utmost importance as far as our exaltation is concerned? Obviously we should know most of these things, but I’d like to hear your thoughts on this matter.

db schroeder · MAY 29, 2010 AT 3:32 PM

This comment has been removed by a blog administrator.

Denver Snuffer · May 29, 2010 at 4:30 PM

DK: Thanks for pointing out the typo. It's been corrected.

Russ:

1. Faith
2. Repentance
3. Baptism
4. Gift of the Holy Ghost
5. Second Comforter which then leads to:
6. Fullness of Gospel

ldsanarchy · MAY 30, 2010 AT 12:29 AM

“Oddly, I do not think anyone should share anything with anyone else unless the Lord, who gives manifestations, directs.”

My understanding and experience is just the opposite. Whatever the Lord tells us can be freely shared with anyone (Matt. 10:8), unless He commands us otherwise (Alma 12:9). Without a command to withhold information, the Lord leaves it up to us to decide whether it is wisdom to share or not. There are other times, though, in which information is communicated to us and we are commanded to share it.

I have had experiences in the latter (being commanded to share) and in the first (it being my decision whether or not to impart the information), but never have I been put under a commandment not to share, except as it pertains to the things of the temple.

Personally, I wouldn't give advice to people not to share what the Lord has told them if they haven't been told by Him to keep their mouths shut. Each person on their own can make the determination of the wisdom of sharing, based upon their own, personal situation. A general rule, such as the one you recommend, if followed, may actually work against the work of the Lord. These days are, after all, those in which sons and daughters are supposed to be prophesying, etc. (Joel 2:28).

LDS Anarchist

Denver Snuffer · MAY 30, 2010 AT 8:33 AM

LDS Anarchist (a name I like, by the way), the line I draw relates to what someone has received. Once they have crossed a point involving things which are “most sacred” (as I define in Beloved Enos) then the rule I suggest is appropriate. Bearing testimony about truths learned for the most part would be appropriate as you suggest.

MAY 29, 2010

Answers to Prayers

I was asked why it seems there are seasons when a person can't get an answer from God. Even when they have previously had wonderful contact, revelation, insights and blessings, there are times when nothing is coming from God. It appears to be unrelated to faithfulness or activity. Why, then, does God remain silent from time to time?

There are multiple reasons why this happens. It is unrelated to God's love for the person.

The first and most common reason I have discovered is that you are already in possession of the answer. It was given to you by God and you have it, but you don't recognize it. It would be better to stop asking for an answer and instead ask to be able to see what you have already been given.

The second reason is that you need to struggle and make your own decision first, then to petition to know if the decision is right. It is not always appropriate to defer all decisions to the Lord. You must develop the capacity to make sound decisions on your own. The Lord will, of course, ratify the correct decision and warn you about the wrong one. But you need to develop the ability to decide first (D&C 9:7-9).

Another reason, and perhaps the least common, is that the Lord knows that in your struggle you will eventually reach the correct decision. He must let you proceed on your own because the process is important. Even Abraham endured this process (Abr. 2:21). After he made the decision and traveled to the border, just prior to his entry into Egypt the Lord returned to him and prepared him for what he would encounter there.

There are also occasions wherein the Lord has determined to give you the answer, but you are not prepared for what is coming. Therefore, you are put through experience to develop. During this time, you are moving toward the answer that you are being prepared to receive. Once the preparation is over, the answer follows. It is possible that so much transpires between the request and the answer that you forget it was your petition to the Lord that set things in motion. Nevertheless the Lord was working to give you an answer all along.

There are occasions where the answer lies before you, and your path will intersect with the answer in the normal course. The apparent silence from the Lord is really the answer—Stay true and you will find it as you move along. These moments are what develop necessary patience.

We are tempted to show ingratitude when these happen, thinking that it was our own ability which secured for us the answer, instead of the mercy of the Lord. That is a mistake.

The final reason is that you are mistaken about your worthiness or standing before God and you need to alter what you are doing. In this instance it is likely that you get an answer, but the answer is that you are in need of repentance or change. The change needs to precede an answer. Never ignore a warning that you are out of the way; it may be the kindest response of all. Get your life in order first, then the answer you seek will follow. Ingratitude to the Lord is often the first reason for needed repentance.

These are the reasons I have found for those seasons in which an answer is not forthcoming from the Lord.

MAY 30, 2010

Developing Your Faith

I've been thinking on the different kinds of questions I get, and what those questions reflect about the one asking. There are two conditions that cannot be overcome by me or any other person by answering your question. The first one is your insecurities. The other is your curiosity. Your insecurities about whatever is going on in your life will not go away because you received an answer to a question. Your curiosity will not be satisfied by hearing a spiritual experience recounted by another person.

Insecurities are a result of a lack of faith. You deserve them. You have not acquired knowledge yet. You have them as a gift, as a warning that you have not yet received what you need. Nor have you developed faith yet. I've given you a post that repeats very important and true doctrine from The Lectures on Faith. It is a blueprint for how you develop faith. I cannot do it for you. Neither can Joseph or Jesus Christ. Faith comes from within you, developed by the same process through which every man who has ever had faith developed it. There are no shortcuts, no independent conferral by sprinkling something on you, and no method different than what has always been required. To the extent I am able to explain the process, I have done so in The Second Comforter. If you are still insecure, then you have not done what that book teaches you to do. Getting an answer from me, or from any other man, will not replace the hollow feeling inside you springing from the absence of saving faith.

The scriptures are filled with spiritual experiences and doctrine. Adding another account to those already there will not benefit you nor bring you closer to developing faith. It will not fill you. That is why my experiences have never been told. (Only in my testimony of the truthfulness of what I teach have I touched briefly upon my experiences.) The focus of all I have done is doctrine. Teaching correct principles will allow you to both govern and develop yourself.

Asking for details from my experiences will add absolutely nothing to you. Those experiences will only weaken you. It will also weaken me. It will make me seem more than I am. It will cause you to surrender to another the responsibility devolving upon yourself. You will only err in thinking that having another “spiritual story” to retell has made you closer to the Lord. It doesn’t happen that way. Get your own spiritual experiences. Then, if you want more, keep them sacred. That is what I do. I teach principles. I do not reveal experiences.

I read many years ago about Abraham being the “friend of God.” I read also in the D&C about the Lord calling some early Saints His “friends.” As I reflected upon that word (“friend”) I thought about what it meant (“friendship”). After pondering the word for many days, and observing the people around me, thinking about what I saw in society, and considered the sermons I heard in church, I reached the conclusion that there wasn’t a “friend” of God upon the earth any longer.

As I considered the conclusion, I thought about it from God’s perspective. What must it mean to a Heavenly Father who has no friend upon the earth. How must He sorrow over His children who have departed from friendship. The thought grew in me until I determined I would become the “friend” of God; not for my sake, nor for any benefit which may come to me because of it. I thought of it only as a way to honor Him; to show Him that despite earth and hell there would yet be another “friend” of His upon the earth.

I have remained true to that determination from that time till now. It defines the choices I have made, the opportunities I have forfeited, the places I have been, and the doors which have opened. I may not be much of anything in this world, but I do have a Friend whose love I value and whose companionship I cherish. If I were to tell you all the details of that it would do you no good and would betray trust.

Asking about it is the clearest indication that you have misunderstood both the process and what I am trying to do to help others.

COMMENTS:

DJones · MAY 30, 2010 AT 9:40 AM

For me, what you have written in this post makes perfect sense...however, this particular forum (Blog) lends itself to a certain type of intimacy which many of your readers and students of the scriptures and the teachings of the Prophet Joseph long to receive at the feet of one “who teaches with power and authority”, as described in Alma 17:3. This type of closeness to a teacher in GD class or Priesthood/RS classes is all too rare. Your blog lends itself to a much higher level of thinking than that which is presented in our other classes, (which in itself is a very sad commentary on the level of teaching that occurs nowadays).

There is a closeness and a level of security when likeminded individuals converse about or seek the advancement of another’s understanding of a Gospel truth...isn’t that what teaching is all about? Isn’t the goal of a Teacher to assist in enhancing the faith of those who are truly seeking, as distinguished from answering idle questions of no substance?

This post led me to search out something I remembered Joseph to have taught:

TPJS: Section One 1830–34, p.11

Search the scriptures—search the revelations which we publish, and ask your Heavenly Father, in the name of His Son Jesus Christ, to manifest the truth unto you, and if you do it with an eye single to his glory nothing doubting, He will answer you by the power of His Holy Spirit. You will then know for yourselves and not for another. You will not then be dependent on man for the knowledge of God; nor will there be any room for speculation. No; for when men receive their instruction from Him that made them, they know how He will save and learn what portion of them belongs to you and the people of the nineteenth century.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 30, 2010 AT 12:04 PM

I'm distinguishing between questions which are good, appropriate and I try to answer on the one hand, and questions which essentially want to know about things which could not be of any of any benefit to someone on the other hand. Hearing another "inspirational story" is NOT what people need. They need to obtain their own inspirational, profound and intimate knowledge of God. They need to develop capacities within themselves which the Gospel requires everyone to develop.

I will answer questions which I think will help people, elevate them, and bring them closer to God. I will not entertain or profane by putting something on display with is purely personal.

The idea that spiritual messages were all meant to be shared with everyone, all the time, has somehow become associated with me. I have been one of the most discrete teachers in the Church. The subjects about which I write may be sacred, even holy. But I do not discuss them in an inappropriate way. I know the difference and never cross the line.

Questions which ask for answers which would be over the line show that some who ask here simply do not understand the difference.

This post was intended to help them become aware such a line exists. Maybe they might then go back, pay more attention, and discover what and how it is I teach.

I am trying to be of benefit to others. That is succeeding in a few cases. But it is not understood by another significant number of people. Hopefully things become more clear as they read more.

MAY 30, 2010

Constitutional Forum

At the invitation of the American Heritage School, I am going to participate in a forum this coming Thursday. The school is located across the street from the Timpanogos Temple. The announcement reads as follows:

Understanding Our Times Constitution Education Series
Community Forum, Thursday, June 3, 2010, 7:00 p.m.
American Heritage School, North Auditorium
736 North 1100 East, American Fork, Utah

Join us for our inaugural Community Forum, to be held this coming Thursday, June 3, at 7:00 p.m., free and open to the public. We have confirmed four very special guest panelists, including attorney and author Denver Snuffer, Marriage Law Foundation Director Bill Duncan, Professor David Moore of BYU Law School, and AHS Family Education Center Committee Member Larry Hilton. Come listen and ask questions on critical constitutional topics that are impacting our homes, communities, and nation. To have even one of these individuals for an event like this would be worthy of an entire evening. To have all four of them on a single panel is extraordinary and has the making of truly thought-provoking and life-changing experience. For more information on our panelists, please see below. The format for the evening includes brief opening statements by each panelist member, followed by open Q&A from audience members, on the three topics of “Sovereignty”, “Freedom of Conscience” and John Adam’s statement that the Constitution was intended only for a “moral and religious people.”

If any of you are interested in this subject matter, the forum is free to the public.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 1:46 PM

It was nice to see you in person. I’ve thoroughly enjoyed your comments and writings!

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 2:01 PM

Good to see you, too. I’ve appreciated your comments.

I thought the forum was interesting and the comments were short, quick paced and relevant. The contrast in views was also illuminating.

MAY 31, 2010

Memorial Day

Memorial Day was established to show respect to our war dead; those who died to protect the freedoms and lives of others. Now it has become a “Hallmark” (as in the card company) day for florists and balloon shops to sell junk to decorate the graves of anyone and everyone. It is now only a national day to remember deceased grandmothers and grandfathers.

Adding to the event does not make it better. Instead, it changes the focus from those whose self-sacrifice and devotion to others is remembered, into a general day for the dead. That’s too bad. I wish the focus remained narrow. Those whose lives are currently in jeopardy should know that should they pay the ultimate sacrifice of their lives the nation will honor them.

I lost ancestors who fought in the American Revolutionary War. Two great-great uncles (Owen and Paul) died during the first weeks of the Civil War in Northern Virginia. My father fought and survived D-Day, and served during the Korean War as well. He died in the 1990's, but is a veteran of combat and was honored at his burial by an honor guard and a flag- draped coffin. I still have the folded flag presented by the honor guard to my mother.

There is someone in my home town who goes to my father's grave and puts an American flag on it every Memorial Day. I do not know who it is and have never been there during Memorial Day. However, I know it happens and I appreciate that someone knows he served his country while under German fire.

There is a family tradition that one of my ancestors was in Valley Forge. I have not been able to confirm that. They didn't keep good records, but after the nation was established it was possible for veterans to apply for land grants to honor their service. Those who applied for land grants were better documented. Still, I haven't been able to confirm the tradition.

All in all we owe a debt to those who have given us freedom that we cannot repay to them. Sometimes when I contrast the devotion of those who sacrificed, to the profligate use of the freedom we have inherited, it worries me that we are squandering what took so great a price to confer. We owe more to those who died to give us freedom. We have an obligation to preserve it and hand it down to others as payment to those who sacrificed their lives. Instead we are more interested in government becoming a tool to create financial benefits. Freedom is being purchased away from us using both taxes and debt. When it is gone, you have neither the freedom sold nor financial benefits promised in the sale; as the recently failed Soviet Block has proven for all history.

COMMENTS:

DKD · MAY 31, 2010 AT 11:00 AM

I'm guessing the VFW or American Legion put a flag on your Dad's grave each Memorial Day.

Denver Snuffer · MAY 31, 2010 AT 9:22 PM

DKD: You may be right, but it is a small town and I would like to know who it is. I'm grateful and would like them to know.

DKD · MAY 31, 2010 AT 9:52 PM

My Dad (nearly 80 now) has done this with his American Legion group in a small little town in Idaho (Albion) for a number of years now. I'm glad someone has been kind enough to do this for your father too.

Anonymous · MAY 31, 2010 AT 9:52 PM

I have lived in Korea, and Germany while my husband served in the military, been to war memorials honoring brave soldiers all over the world who fought protecting our freedoms, and been moved by stirring patriotic Memorial Day services on the foreign soil our troops died defending.

You can pick your flowers or buy them, place a flag on a grave or not, visit a cemetery or not, but in my mind appreciating the sacrifices of veterans is not diminished by remembering our other dead ancestors and family. Other cultures have special days to remember the dead and memorialize them but we make do with Memorial Day. Having a son who died in infancy I appreciate a day when I can visit my beautiful grave site, bring flowers and flags. remember my great country in which God has provided me with blessings that I am continually indebted to Him for. I see nothing wrong with a memorial day that encompasses the memory of all our dead.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 1, 2010 AT 6:10 AM

The sentiment that honors all dead is why Memorial Day has lost its unique respect for those who sacrificed their lives for our freedom.

JUNE 2010

JUNE 1, 2010

Destroyer Rideth Upon the Waters

A study by the Harvard Business School has concluded that government spending does not stimulate an economy. It stifles. You can read the study here:

<http://www.people.hbs.edu/cmалloy/pdffiles/envaloy.pdf>

This was not the conclusion the study was expected to produce. It is not a welcomed study during a time when the whole commitment of the federal policy is predicated upon the opposite conclusion. Simply put, we're pursuing a course that won't/can't work.

It shows again, how foolish it is to trust in the opinions of men. I'm utterly convinced that opinions are misleading. I believe the scriptures counsel against using opinions as a basis for determining truth.

The Great Whore, which deceives the world, sits upon "many waters" (Rev. 17:1). The definition of "waters" is given in verse 15 (Rev. 17:15). These unstable waters are the "peoples, and multitudes, and nations." It is again a reminder of the original blessing given to Reuben, in which instability is compared to "water" (Gen. 49:4). Great wars, overflowing armies and unstable political movements have all been compared to a flood of water (See, e.g., Isa. 28:2; Jer. 46:8).

Opinions of peoples, multitudes and nations are as "unstable as water." They flow, and ebb and move about in dangerous currents. Finding an opinion and adopting it as the basis for a church decision or policy is a study in learning which cannot bring you to the truth (2 Tim. 3:7). Before this latest study, it was common wisdom that government spending was NEEDED in order to combat the recession. Now, it appears the solution will only mire the country in a more prolonged downward economic cycle. Opinions were gathered carefully before the commitment was made. Now, we have accepted only foolishness as our wisdom.

I have always thought the tools of industry have no place in a church which claims to be guided by inspiration. To the extent the church elects to employ opinion polling and focus group gathering to inform its decision, it will reach the wrong conclusions, make the wrong decisions, and go backward.

Inspiration does not lie within the opinions of the great and unstable waters. Indeed, the Destroyer rides upon the waters (D&C 61:19).

JUNE 1, 2010

Keys and Assignments

...For the benefit of a worthy inquirer, who has the right to know:

Keys are related to assignments given. When the church gives someone an assignment, they receive the keys associated with performing the assignment. For example, when an Elder's Quorum President is called, he receives the keys to preside over the Quorum. With those keys the President has the large assignment (making the Quorum function) and is entitled to the smaller or more detailed assistance from the Lord to serve each quorum member's needs.

If the President neglects his duties, despite the fact that the authority is conferred upon him, he lacks the power associated with the assignment. His keys become thereby wasted or lost.

Keys, however, are not limited to the church giving an assignment. When the Lord gives an assignment, commission or commandment to a person by His own voice, then the Lord similarly gives to the person the keys to accomplish the assignment, commission or commandment. By acting consistent with the duty devolving upon him, the man receives not only the larger assignment, but also the inspiration to accomplish the smaller or more detailed activities related to the assignment given to him.

An example from Nephi illustrates the point. Nephi was commanded to build a ship (1 Ne. 17:8). Nephi needed direction and instruction to accomplish the task given to him. Since he possessed the keys to accomplish the work, the direction was forthcoming from the Lord as it was needed and as Nephi inquired to obtain it (1 Ne. 17:9–10). In the process of asking and receiving direction as he fulfilled the assignment, Nephi learned other, greater things as well (1 Ne. 18:2–3).

Nephi saw in the assignment (keys) he had been given a direct relationship between fulfilling the assignment to build a ship and Moses' commission (keys) to deliver Israel from bondage. He used Moses as an example to his brothers to justify how the Lord could assign someone as untrained as Nephi to build a ship (1 Ne. 17:23–43). It was an appropriate example. It illustrates how once the Lord gives an assignment to a man, the Lord entrusts the keys and provides the inspiration to accomplish the assignment.

Similarly, all the prophets who have been sent to warn Israel in any generation have been given the keys from God to accomplish their assignment. Even among people who no longer held such authority, the Lord would directly ordain those He commissioned during the Old Testament times (TPJS p. 181).

When the church builds a temple and calls a temple president the one called to preside over the temple is the only one who can organize and run the temple. He has the keys and should be respected. Anyone who has an assignment or keys conferred upon them, by the church or by the Lord, has an assignment that should be respected.

Nephi's brothers and the royal court of King Noah all learned that it simply wasn't possible to terminate the mission of someone holding keys before they finished their assignment (For Nephi, see 1 Ne. 17:48–55. For Abinadi see Mosiah 13:2–5). Of course, once the assignment given the man has been completed, they are as vulnerable to destruction at the hands of enemies as anyone else (Mosiah 17:20; D&C 135:4).

When someone receives an assignment, and fulfills it with honor, they hold the keys of that assignment to all eternity (D&C 128:21). They are expected to come to the great meeting when keys are returned to Adam and then, in turn, to Christ, preliminary to His return as the One whose right it is to preside over all things (TPJS p. 157).

I suppose the best way to be invited to that meeting would be to obtain a key from the Lord, perform in strict conformity to the assignment He gives you, and become thereby entitled to return that key in the great assembly.

...For the rest, I'm not sure if this post will have any meaning.

JUNE 2, 2010

Gifts Come from God

Question:

In these days there are many holistic healing arts that area coming forward. EFT (tapping), angel therapy and readings, chakra work, Reiki, aura work, energy work, etc., etc. Are these gifts of the spirit? Are they gifts of the “right” spirit:?) When someone is working with you on correcting old belief systems from childhood and they say they had a dream that might be relevant, should you trust that.? What do you feel about people who do angel readings? How can you discern so as not to be deceived or lead down an incorrect path. Many people who do this kind of work are not LDS...are they entitled to gifts of the spirit? Sometimes I have seen LDS people get involved with these modalities and leave the church or become inactive...others remain very faithful. I sometimes feel that people should be able to go to the source of all healing directly...Christ... and bypass these types of healings. But then again, sometimes I think perhaps people need these modalities to help remove blocks of low self-worth and self condemnation that block them from going directly to Christ for feelings of unworthiness and believing that Christ can heal them. I remember Jeffery Holland in a conference of the last couple of years say, “Christ can heal you and he can do it now!” (not his exact words). Anyway, I have wondered about this for a long long time. I hope you give me your opinion.

First, as to gifts:

I believe there are “gifts” given (or acquired) by people which are based on real sensitivities or talents. I believe they exist as part of the talents brought into this life. Some people have talent to sing, compose music, or create art. There are those who have developed spiritual gifts. There are many kinds of gifts, but they all come from God (Moroni 10:8).

Possession of a gift, however, does not mean a person will use that gift in conformity with God’s will or plan. If a person does not seek to follow the Lord's will, they can be misled and use gifts for improper ends. People who fail to remain obedient, who begin to use their gifts to gratify their pride or to achieve their ambitions can drift away from the light and take others with them. Just because a person possesses a gift does not mean they live their lives in conformity to truth. Nor does it mean they will not mislead you. Proper use of a gift should show gratitude to and promote faith in God (D&C 20:27).

Second, as to modalities:

I do think that there are aids to faith that can help someone who is weak to still act in faith. Modalities that focus thought, bolster confidence and assist in believing the Lord can heal can aid in the process. In the end it is the authority of God and faith in Him that allows good things to follow. It comes from Him. If an act helps focus thought and confidence in Him, then the act is worthwhile.

The problems creep in when the modality is regarded as an independent authority apart from God. As soon as a person begins to view God as uninvolved, or that they can control the outcome independent of God's will, there is an opening for evil or deception. Gifts were not intended to produce a monetary profit and should not be practiced for money (Acts 8:20).

Gifts belong to the body of believers and should be used to promote faith in God (D&C 46:10, 26).

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JUNE 2, 2010 AT 5:32 PM

Denver,

I am the one who asked the original question. I just wanted to say thank you for your response. I was pondering your response today and actually received quiet thoughts that entered my mind that further clarified my question. I was excited because I have always been one of those “God answers others, but not me”, people.

I also want to say thank you for your little journal excerpts that introduced the chapters in The Second Comforter....for now, especially the one at the beginning of Chapter 4. I have reflected on it often and found myself asking questions and paying more attention to my thoughts (especially in the quiet hours of the morning) and the responses that could have easily been mistaken for my own...

In those quiet hours, I had the impression to stop working so much. Although working has been helpful financially, it isn't essential for me. So, I am doing as I felt directed to do and cutting way back. I want my faith to grow. I am tired of depending on others and not having the confidence that I can really get my own answers. Depending on others doesn't bring a feeling of peace and calm....only more questions. Thank you for your example and that which you have shared in your books and this blog. It has given me hope, courage and confidence that I really can get answers. I am beginning on the path. It feels good. My sincere, heartfelt gratitude goes to you for being willing to share a tremendous amount of time to instruct others, and heartfelt gratitude to the Lord for commissioning you to share what He directs. Thank You.

Kathy

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 2, 2010 AT 6:17 PM

Kathy: I wish all people would use the material exactly like you are. That is the whole reason for this work. It is not to call attention to me, but to let others develop themselves.

I am a private person. This work I'm doing is NOT easy for me. It invades space I never would voluntarily surrender. If I were not doing this to benefit others I simply would never undertake it at all.

JUNE 2, 2010

Be Still and Know That I am God

It is apparent from emails sent to the blog that some readers refuse to study carefully either the scriptures or what I have written. I will make yet another attempt to explain some important distinctions.

There is a difference between testifying that some principle is true and teaching others how to follow the principle, and discussing details of personal experiences which are not going to be meaningful and are not appropriate.

There are reasons why intimate details of temple ordinances are guarded by covenants they will not be revealed. It is true those covenants have been violated by many people. Some people have decided to reject what was offered, make themselves liars, and treat with contempt what should have been treated with care. All of that is between them and the Lord, with whom they made the covenant. Their violation of a trust does not detract one bit from the power of covenants kept by others.

We are not responsible for how others behave when they receive something that ought to be treated as sacred. We are all only accountable for how we individually treat such things.

It is appropriate for anyone to testify to the truth, that the Lord lives, and that He has and still does minister to men in the flesh. It is appropriate to explain that those blessings are predicated upon the same conditions for any person who will follow the law upon which such blessings are predicated. It is appropriate to explain what those conditions or laws are. It is appropriate to gather together in one continuous discussion the diverse elements scattered throughout the scriptures and put them into one convenient discussion of the whole. I have done that.

What is not important for anyone to know is the details of what goes on in a meeting between God and one with whom He deigns to appear. Joseph Smith for example remarked, concerning the First Vision, “many other things did he say unto me, which I cannot write at this time” (JS-H_1:20).

Repeatedly the Book of Mormon draws a line and says that things were “not lawful” for man to write (See, e.g., 1 Ne. 14:28; 3 Ne. 26:16; 3 Ne. 27:23; Ether 4:1, Ether 13:13). A person who does not understand the difference between the line that must be drawn and why it exists simply is not prepared to receive with gratitude what the Lord is offering.

The riches of eternity are offered by the Lord to you and each of you directly. It does not come from learning “secrets” from someone else. It comes by following the path. You do not need anything more than a description of the path. Follow it. Until you follow it, the heavens will remain shut against you. As soon as you follow it, you will have the results you would like to have.

Curiosity about sacred details that the scriptures repeatedly warn are not lawful to put into writing here in this fallen world, reveals an immaturity that should be overcome. If you want the details, learn them from the Lord. Directly. Without an intermediary. Teachers are commissioned by the Lord to reiterate the path by which they are to be obtained. He does not send someone to do the work for you. Indeed, you either do the work for yourself or it remains undone—forever.

It is clear that some who want the most revealed to them are the ones who have not yet read what I’ve written. You simply continue to ask and ask again. Study what I’ve written carefully and anyone will find it is all there. Several people have done so, and have received the promised results. But they took care and devoted careful, solemn and ponderous thought to the matters set out in what I have written. That is what the writings were intended to produce, and why they were commissioned to be written by the Lord. I know that the process is true, because I have lived it. I know that the descriptions provided in my writings are sufficient, because they have produced results akin to my own. You do not need more details from me.

You need to take seriously what I've already written. Actually, you don't even need that. What I have written is taken from the scriptures, primarily the Book of Mormon. If you understood the scriptures you wouldn't even need what I've written. I have only been instructed in how to bring the process together in a convenient single narrative, building line upon line to a whole.

Careful, solemn and ponderous thought is what is needed. Not frantic, exasperated and impatient demanding that someone tell you something right now that will fix what is amiss in your life. Such frantic conduct is likely to yield nothing.

I hope this aids in understanding what is appropriate and what is over the line. If you want to know all the mysteries of God, He is willing to reveal them. Not to the impatient, demanding and immature. But to those who develop a firm mind in every form of godliness, including patience, persistence, faith and sacrifice (Moroni 7:30). These things are not won cheaply. But they are won.

I think the words "be still and know that I am God" are more than just an admonition to 'shut-up' (D&C 101:16). I think it is a formula. Let your anxieties pass over you. Leave them. Be calm. In the great calm of pondering over what He has given to you, you will "know" Him. Therefore, if you would like to know God, then ponder deeply and meditate on the things He has already given to you (See e.g., D&C 138:11; JS-H 1:12; 1 Ne. 11:1 and Helaman 10:2–4.). This is how Joseph Smith received the First Vision, Joseph F. Smith saw the Vision of the Redemption of the Dead, Nephi saw in vision the Lord, and Nephi son of Helaman would receive his calling and election. I can't give you a formula, I can't recite any additional vision and I can't tell you about any visitation I have had that will absolve you of following the process by which God has become known to all those who have come to know Him since the time of Adam. All I can do is testify that the same path is open to everyone. But only on the same condition as it is available to all.

JUNE 3, 2010

Christ's Ministry

We have an account of Christ's "ministry" to the Nephites beginning in chapter 11 of 3 Nephi and continuing through the 28th chapter. During the ministry Christ instructed, performed ordinances, (including the sacrament) blessed, healed, taught from scriptures, provided prophecy, and extended the promise of exaltation to many, including the Twelve He called. The full extent of what He did became so sacred that the account is interrupted and we are told that it was not lawful to put it into writing (See, e.g., 3 Ne. 17:15–16; 26:16; and 27:23).

Now, if you can take all that in, (and it is worth careful consideration to make sure you get the point) then you can begin to understand this statement recorded by Moroni about the visit between Christ and the Brother of Jared:

And now, as I, Moroni, said I could not make a full account of these things which are written, therefore it sufficeth me to say that Jesus showed himself unto this man in the spirit, even after the manner and in the likeness of the same body even as he showed himself unto the Nephites. And he ministered unto him even as he ministered unto the Nephites; and all this, that this man might know that he was God, because of the many great works which the Lord had showed unto him. (Ether 3:17–18)

When Moroni wrote this it was nearly 400 years after Christ's ministry to the Nephites. When he wrote this Moroni:

1. Had the records of Christ's ministry before him.
2. Had been personally visited by Christ (Ether 12:39).
3. He also had personally been visited by the three Nephite disciples who were there when Christ appeared and called them as His witnesses (Mormon 8:10–11).
4. Had the entire Jaredite record before him, including the portion that he would not translate due to its sacred character (Ether 4:5–7).

When Moroni says that Christ “ministered” to the Brother of Jared “as He ministered unto the Nephites” this is more than just an appearance. It is more than just a conversation, with the Lord showing Himself to the man. It is more than merely giving the man an understanding that He lives, that He is the Redeemer and Savior. It would include the same kind of ministry as was had among the Nephites.

I believe the Lord's ministry in any age is the same. As the Redeemer, determined to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, (Moses 1:39) it would only make sense that He would be determined to have those who receive Him be redeemed, promised eternal life, and instructed sufficiently to enter into their exaltation. This is why Christ says that He and the Father will “take up our abode with” such men (John 14:23). That “abode” is the Father’s House. More plainly, it is the Father’s family. It is to become His son, begotten by the Father. Sonship requires initiation, and Christ’s ministry would include all the required promises, rites and teachings to allow the person to lay claim upon eternal life.

JUNE 3, 2010

“For these are they who are of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas”

It has become very clear to me that there is an intangible and almost inexpressible difference between truth and error.

Satan quotes scripture to make a point in an argument with Christ, showing how he wants to justify his ends by resorting to scriptural/true principles (Matt. 4:6).

The accusations brought against Abinadi were scripture-based (Mosiah 12:19–24), So were those brought against many others, including Christ. Indeed, the most frequent accusation against Christ related to the commandment to “keep the Sabbath day holy” and Him healing on the Sabbath.

I can see how people are almost completely taken in by the use of scriptural arguments or scriptural language, when they have never encountered the Holy Spirit, not received light and truth from God, and have not accepted guidance from a higher source.

Those who have light, and who use what light they have to accept more light, are going to find their way. Those who do not, and therefore, cannot have their path illuminated by a higher source, will be lost. They will be unable to distinguish between truth and error. Indeed, they will call good bad, and believe the truth to be a lie. It is inevitable.

This is why no man can be the guide for another. Everyone must stand on their own, acquire their own oil for their lamp, and stop leaning upon others to lead them.

I do not see that happening in any great numbers. Instead, I see fools loudly and stupidly proclaiming that it is always guaranteed safe to be led by men as long as you are careful about the men you follow.

No man will save you. No not one. You either follow them into the Telestial kingdom in wherein you presently reside, or you figure out how to get out of here (D&C 76:98–101). Notice that these people followed TRUE or authentic messengers, yet they remain captured in a Telestial existence for worlds without end.

They receive not the testimony of Jesus which is the spirit of prophecy.

I see benighted arguments couched in the language of scripture all the time. The clarity with which I can detect the errors made is not because I am smarter than other people. I am not. I can see clearly the difference between truth and error by the light given to me. I can't give that to you. Only you can acquire it. I can tell you how to acquire it. But in the end, you alone will either follow the pattern and obtain the results, or continue to live in the dark.

COMMENTS:

DKD · JUNE 3, 2010 AT 8:49 PM

I hope I have not done or said something wrong in your blog Denver. If so, I apologize.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 4, 2010 AT 1:22 PM

DKD:...not to worry... I'm getting stuff "off the blog" and responding to them here. Some are comments which are "not for posting" and they don't go up, but I put a post up reflecting their input. So I'm not always commenting on something which appears here.

That having been said, look at the one earlier today about “Why Stand we in Jeopardy Ever Hour” and you'll see that there are reasons why every one of us should continually be reminded to consider deeply the Gospel and our thoughts and behavior.

Doug · JUNE 4, 2010 AT 2:31 PM

“...and some of Thomas S. and some of Denver and some of Joseph...”

It's very possible that this post was for me. I am certain that Heavenly Father has a sense of humor as he watches us, like puppies chasing our own tails, and excitedly running to anyone that hollers, “Here boy!” The challenge is listening for and staying loyal to the True Master's voice. Obviously, I have a lot to learn here.

Even though I've never thought the true messengers were the end-all, I will admit that I often seek personal acknowledgment, which could be considered the praise of man. Perhaps any messengers along the way are meant to be mostly “hands off,” so that the culmination of the audience with the Lord will be all the more special.

Anyway, your rebuke is well-taken (consider it a whack with a rolled up newspaper) It gives me more determination to set my sights on the Master.

JR Morgan · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 10:40 AM

I'm a personal acknowledgeable seeker as well, Doug. It has made me shrink when I should have stood on very many occasion. Though it has also made me a deep seeker of the Lord's light and approval.

I know I will eventually purify out the need to please other men, or seek for their attentions and rather stand in light and truth. It is a processes. A scary one, but one I know I will accomplish with Christ's mercy and grace for he knows the fears and intents of my weak human heart. He knows my trauma he knows my need for validation and love and He will be kind to me as I seek to be kind but stand in truth with Him.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 8:59 PM

Most of what we believe are insurmountable character flaws are actually “gifts” of weakness given to us to keep us humble and penitent. When we grovel about with guilt and shame, the Lord views us with benign and non-condemning eyes. He urges us onward. He is in the middle of working to redeem us. He is instant with forgiveness, ever eager to invite us forward.

JUNE 4, 2010

“And Why Stand We in Jeopardy Every Hour?”

Every one of us needs to be challenged. None of us should be complacent about how we live, the words we speak or write, and the thoughts we entertain. If this blog does not stir you up and make you reconsider what you are doing and how you are living your life every day, then it is a waste of time. If I am not personally challenging you, then I am not worth taking the time to read.

It is a doctrine of the devil to tell you that “all is well” (2 Ne. 28:20–21). The obligation of any true messenger is to continually cry repentance. Satan employs ministers to satisfy itching ears with a smooth message (2 Tim. 4:3). They lead people carefully down to hell. The Lord commissions His messengers to deliver the opposite message. If I am really engaged in working for Him, then the words should challenge, even offend you.

Only fools think there are institutional prerogatives that entitle people to God’s favor. There is no magic ordinance. There is no certificate that can be issued to you or your group, by any person or institution, that entitles you to enter heaven. It does not exist. Those who believe there is some institutional voodoo that will guarantee you entrance into heaven are sadly mistaken.

Assume for a moment that you have indeed been given by the Father the promise of eternal life, what then? Are you entitled to rest while all around you the world is filled with unsaved souls? (Alma 13:12). Does such a promise remain yours if you do not labor all your remaining days to cry repentance and bring others to the tree of life so they may partake? Having entered into the Lord's "rest," does not the heir then owe it to everyone else they meet for the remainder of their lives to bring them with them? (D&C 18:15.)

There is no hour here when we are not in jeopardy. (1 Cor. 15:30.)

So when you read something on this blog or in a book I have written which challenges you, brings you up short, or makes you think that I may be speaking about you, then I have succeeded. On the other hand, if you believe you are justified by what you read here, then you miss entirely the obligation incumbent on both of us.

We all need to repent. If the Lord has extended to you the promise of eternal life, then you have moved to another plane of growth and challenge. That great promise opens the door for you to struggle and grow in your comprehension of what He has done. You still must learn how to exercise the new prerogatives given to you in the proper way. The challenges will not relent. We are designed for growth. It will not come to an end in this life. It is to prepare us for something far greater (D&C 132:20). We must become as He is to be like Him (1 John 3:1-3).

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JUNE 4, 2010 AT 6:16 PM

Sometimes I get a little bogged down...the need for continual striving because we are imperfect, unworthy creatures makes me struggle with finding a balance with that and "man is that he might have joy." My mind easily flips into perfectionism and then when my family isn't perfect and my children aren't perfectly obedient and doing what I feel they should (young adult children at home), I become very discouraged and down hearted about my life. Any comments?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 4, 2010 AT 7:25 PM

See the humor in it. We are all quite amusing. To say Latter-day Saints are a "peculiar people" is an understatement. I have a difficult time not finding too much humor in how we act.

Everything is more tolerable when you see humor in the predicaments we get into.

This life is serious stuff. But we all have a much more difficult time getting through it without a sense of humor.

Children require patience. Despite how much we parent them, they still turn out. I've discovered that children thrive with benign neglect. The softer the guidance, the more responsive the child becomes. It also helps if you can figure out a way to have the child believe "it is always their own idea," when you're trying to get them to do something.

Finally, everyone needs a break from time to time. No matter what it is that you're responsible for, you need to lay it down and take a break sometimes. Don't forget that your own rest is needed, on occasion, to let you face the burdens of life.

JUNE 4, 2010

"Power" or "Authority"

In the church we have a regular system for ordination to give someone priesthood authority. It requires the candidate to be interviewed, found worthy, recommended by the presiding authorities (Bishop or Stake President) to a congregation who sustains the ordination before it is performed. The ordination takes place by the laying on of hands, is recorded, and a certificate is issued to the one ordained.

In contrast, the Lord's ordination among the Nephites required only His word to be spoken, and power was conferred:

And the Lord commanded him that he should arise. And he arose and stood before him. And the Lord said unto him: I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people when I am again ascended into heaven. And again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise; and he gave unto them power to baptize. And he said unto them: On this wise shall ye baptize; and there shall be no disputations among you (3 Ne. 11:20–22).

It is interesting that the word used in His conferral of priestly right was “power” and not “authority.” Consider the difference. Consider what it means for the Lord to speak unto a man and tell him that he has “power” from the Lord.

Is there a difference between having the “authority” to baptize, as we spread it about in the church today, and having the “power” to baptize as conferred by Christ? If there is, then what is that difference?

Good questions to ponder. Particularly as you consider President Packer’s timely reminder of the general lack of power in the priesthood of today’s church in his recent General Conference address, “Power in the Priesthood.”

<http://lds.org/conference/talk/display/0,5232,23-1-1207-2,00.html>

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 8:21 PM

JR,

Another thing about these “priesthood weenies”... I’ve heard one say he didn’t need food storage because he could by his PH power call down manna from the sky to feed himself and family with some raven food on the side. That’s amazing. I’ve heard one even say he’d hold up his hands and the oncoming bullets would drop out of the air if he were ever fired upon by the Zion-haters. That's fantastic. These little things like blessings for old barren women are just beneath them, I suppose. They need to save their power for the really awesome stuff. Oh, and don't forget the ones who recognize you from the pre-existence. That's super-duper power.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 8:56 PM

Or the priesthood power which lets a young man know that God has given to him a young lady as eternal wife, even if she isn't necessarily persuaded he would make a good husband for anyone. "I bear you my testimony, sister, you belong to me." Sort of a Taylor Swift lyric, I'm thinking. Might be better put: "I bear you my testosterone..."

JUNE 5, 2010

Have a Joyful Saturday

I have a dear friend whose daughter is getting married this month. I look forward to driving out to the wedding. We're planning to take my wife's Mini-Cooper and leave the top down. A day's worth of driving to and from the wedding is about as delightful a thing as I can imagine at the moment. I don't care if we're driving at night, the seats have electric heaters and the stars overhead are as interesting as the daytime sky. More so in fact.

The greatest things we possess are our families and friends. They matter. They can endure to all eternity. Nothing will come with us from this fallen world other than the friends and family we acquire, the lessons we have learned, the covenants made with and ratified by the Lord, and the kind acts we have done. Everything else will dissolve back into the dust of this world.

Have a joyful Saturday. Do something kind for someone who dislikes you. Do something generous for someone who loves you. Go to bed tonight knowing that if this day were the one day chosen to judge your character that it is your best. Make the day holy by the way you live, the words you speak and the thoughts you entertain.

Heaven is stirred and Hell itself is shaken when even one soul lives such a day.

JUNE 5, 2010

Weep for Zion for Zion Has Fled

It may as well be a dream. It involves our collective slumber. We get pictures in our head when we are taught some truth and presume that the picture is accurate. Then after we have repeated the “truth” often enough, we go on to believe the picture must be all-inclusive.

Once we’ve arrived at that point, the truth no longer matters. Our minds are made up. We’ve decided the answers, and no further evidence will be considered.

This certainty is reinforced when more people reach the same conclusion because they share the same picture in their head. You get together with others and testify that you are all in possession of the truth; not only the truth, but ALL of the truth. Before long every one of the group can pass a lie-detector test about the truth as they explain it.

As a result, this herd is incapable of ever seeing the picture differently. They cannot open their minds to the idea that their picture is skewed or off. It is most certainly incomplete. It is, in fact, so far short of the whole story that when any part of the remaining, missing information is shown to them they are certain it is a lie.

It is painful to part with our suppositions and the traditions we hold dear. It is painful to admit there may be much more of the picture we have not yet considered, much less seen. It causes anxiety and fear. So much fear in fact, that when it comes to “eternal truth,” people literally put their lives in jeopardy if they denounce the falsehoods of the herd and proclaim the truth to those whose peace of mind and self-identity is tied to the incomplete and misleading picture they believe holds all truth.

Latter-day Saints are not immune from this process. We have wanted a complete, well defined statement of our faith since the time of Joseph Smith. We crave an “orthodox” faith so we, like the Historic Christians, can proclaim what is true and right and what is error and heresy. It gives us security. It is false security, purchased at the price of closed minds. It gives us hope. It is false hope, based on the foolishness of the deluded.

As we water down even further the true principles of what our faith contains by requiring Relief Society and High Priests to labor over a Gospel Essentials Manual as the sole fodder for our spiritual fare, we strain every particle of solid food out of the diet. The remaining gruel is so thin, lacking in substance, that we become universally malnourished. Yet in that emaciated state, as our bellies distend from the bloating of starvation, we all proclaim how well fed we are. Our bellies are swollen! We have enough of the word of God! We need no more of the word of God! All is well! Better than well, we prosper in the land of promise!

When you surrender your superstitions and arrogance and read the scriptures for the first time with an open mind, they will astonish you. They will condemn you. They will demand you repent, open your heart, and receive more. They will offer you the bread of life, a living fountain of revelation from which, if you draw, you will find not only sustenance, but also the capacity to recognize that there are those who are starving.

We still weep for Zion; for Zion has fled.

Try reading Alma Chapter 13 and take LITERALLY every word there. Don't bring any pictures in your head and read them into the text. Forget every popular and correlated notion ever spoken about the priesthood for a moment and just look at the words. You will be shocked. If you can bring yourself to do that, then read the Book of Mormon again. It was written for our day, testifying against us. A former group of inhabitants who failed and were destroyed wrote their best advice and sent it to us. We are the ones being warned. We are in a great deal of peril. Our church, if the Book of Mormon is true, is filled with corruption and priestcraft.

Or, on the other hand, just chant that "you know (insert the subject of choice here) is true" and throw about the "name of Jesus Christ" as you do. It is a tried and true mantra, which when repeated often enough, can dull the senses and reinstate the slumber we are so often wrapped. So relax. Hum to yourself a hymn and you will soon be back asleep.

COMMENTS:

Ben · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 3:48 PM

Good grief.

I didn't even get past verse 1 before I saw something I never had before.

Gotta keep going.

I add my voice to those other that have expressed gratitude. This blog is heaven sent.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 8:52 PM

I really ought to respond to Ben's comment. What is amazing about the verses, when taken literally, is that the literal interpretation fit much better than when it is overlaid with "interpretations" we are urged to adopt. In fact, many other scriptures are saying the same things. And Joseph Smith was saying the same thing, too.

It is not so much that the truth is hidden from us, as it is that the truth is ignored by us.

The verses in that chapter offer a radical re-definition of what is going on here. One which is seconded by Paul, Joseph, Abraham and Christ, too.

I am struck all the time by the amazing insights which begin to emerge from taking the Book of Mormon as the plain, simple statement of truth that it is.

Steve · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 5:02 PM

As we water down even further the true principles of what our faith contains by requiring Relief Society and High Priests to labor over a Gospel Essentials Manual as the sole fodder for our spiritual fare, we strain every particle of solid food out of the diet. The remaining gruel is so thin, lacking in substance, that we become universally malnourished. Yet in that emaciated state, as our bellies distend from the bloating of starvation, we all proclaim how well fed we are. Our bellies are swollen! We have enough of the word of God! We need no more of the word of God! All is well! Better than well, we prosper in the land of promise!

While I cannot disagree with any of this, I do wonder/worry that such words might lead to your expulsion.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 5, 2010 AT 7:52 PM

Steve: We still get to have opinions. And that opinion about the manuals is so universally shared that you hear it spoken in every candid conversation in this area of the church.

I suppose there are sycophants who would never breathe a word of that to the higher-ups. But surely many people have told the 'manual committee' members just how dreadfully the current curriculum is being received by those who have studied the Gospel for years.

JUNE 6, 2010

Spring

Spring is nearly gone (the equinox is coming soon) and we didn't get a garden planted until yesterday. We've had snow on our yard within the last three weeks. Late start.

The result of the abiding winter is nature has just begun to wake up. The evergreens are shooting out their new season's growth. I've been noticing again how even the most prickly evergreens, like the Colorado Blue Spruces, are so soft and fern-like in their new shoots. Pretty, and very soft and agreeable, in addition to being fragrant. We still get glimpses of Eden in the Spring, even in this fallen world.

Just before dark takes over the neighborhood each night the quail are hooting to get back together again. They get separated during their daily foraging and then want to regroup as a family before nighttime slumber. They will get in a tree or on a rooftop and begin to hoot. They make a funny little call. You can tell by the answer coming back which ones belong together. They hoot, get closer, re-call again, get closer, until finally they wind up together and quiet.

Deer have been wandering through the neighborhood all winter long. They seem to be clearing out now because the valley is getting warmer, and there's new growth on the foothills from the melting snow. The mountain tops are still under many feet of snow, so the deer won't really return to the high ground until another month or so.

There's an order to all this stuff. Wild and uncontrolled nature is organized, orderly, intelligent and the animal kingdom is divided into families. They feel joy at their companionship with one another as they fill the measure of their creation.

I am grateful each night, too, as my family gathers together to see each of us has made it through the day safely. There's a Divine hand that can be seen in family life. Even when there is difficulty and disappointment, the family is tied together by God and nature.

COMMENTS:

Taylor · JUNE 6, 2010 AT 5:20 PM

Loved it.

You said the equinox is coming soon in the first line. Did you mean solstice?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 6, 2010 AT 5:29 PM

Taylor: Yes. Good catch.

JUNE 6, 2010

Preaching the Gospel to all Who are Here

When I was over missionary work for my stake we would meet with the Mission President quarterly. The "Spanish Language Initiative" was where the primary missionary success was taking place in an area from Idaho to Wyoming and throughout Utah. The justification for the Spanish Language Initiative was rather an excuse. The stated reason was: "Can you imagine what will happen to the home base of the church with so many moving in if there isn't an effort made to convert them?"

Criticism has been leveled at the church for the eagerness with which the missionaries are being sent to teach illegal aliens. There are full time Spanish language missionaries being called to teach all over the United States. My wife has a friend living in Texas whose son was recently called to a Spanish language mission in Pocatello, Idaho.

Criticism has been based upon the Article of Faith which states we believe in “honoring, obeying and sustaining the law.”

The criticism is that there is some hypocrisy in seeking out and baptizing those who are illegal. The process seems to be lawless rather than sustaining the law.

At one point the church announced that law enforcement officers, judges and State prosecutors would no longer be called to be Bishops or Stake Presidents because it presented a conflict of interest for them to be a presiding church official over those who they were required to enforce the law. I do not know if that policy still exists, but it was the policy for some time while I was on the High Council.

I’ve thought the church’s position was poorly articulated and deserving of criticism. The church ought to make a well-publicized statement justifying what is happening by adopting a straight-forward explanation that everyone can understand and agree is true. I wish they would announce the following, or something close to the following, as their reason for the Spanish Language Initiative:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has an obligation to proclaim the Gospel. We believe in inviting all to come to the Gospel and be baptized. We would preach the Gospel to anyone, regardless of their race or nationality, wherever situated. Today there are millions of people welcomed into the United States by a national government that has refused to enforce any significant deterrent to cross-border crossing. Although such entry is nominally “illegal,” even the current President of the United States, the country’s chief law enforcement official, has proclaimed it is in the best tradition of the American people to welcome immigrants to the country. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is not a law enforcement agency. It is powerless to make or enforce any immigration law or policy. If the national government does not prevent migration into the United States, we believe it is altogether appropriate to offer all who will receive the Gospel an opportunity to be taught and baptized here, just as we would do for the same people if they were located in another country.

This puts the responsibility upon the Federal government, where it belongs. It shows the church is powerless to affect the outcome of the migration. It also avoids the “can you imagine what it would be like if we didn’t work to convert them” excuse, and puts it into a positive and reasonable light.

I do not think the church’s actions deserve criticism. I do, however, think they ought to be more forthright about justifying and defending the effort to convert those whose presence here is nominally illegal. There’s nothing wrong about preaching to such people.

COMMENTS:

AV · JUNE 6, 2010 AT 9:25 AM

You make a good point, this immigration problem should be placed upon the Federal Government.

But I sense that many people are more concerned with the ‘worthiness’ issue of these so-called illegal converts & members to even join the Church.

But the way I see it is that the current immigration laws we have, even if they were enforced, are unconstitutional. For it should not take 10–20 years to gain access legally to our country. My ancestors 100 years ago were just allowed to walk off the boat & live & work wherever they wanted & were given citizenship as time went on.

I don’t believe God or our Founding Fathers would want us to make it so hard & take so long for immigrants to come here, as our present laws do.

Thus, I do not believe Heavenly Father considers good self-supporting immigrants as 'illegal', at least not according to 'his laws', which are always 'supreme' to any that men may make. Our laws must be just & fair to really be legal, according to God. Otherwise God does not obligate us to usually follow them. Thus I believe these immigrants are worthy & even 'legal' in God's eyes.

Of course, what I do have a problem with & who I would wonder about their 'worthiness' & consider 'illegal', are those who come here (or any US citizen here) & take what is not there's to take (even that which is not the governments to even give) & that which they have not paid for like education, food, medical, etc. or those who commit crimes & do not respect our good laws. These people are in a different group than the good immigrants that come as my Ancestors did, who are willing & able to take care of themselves & work hard to support & better themselves & our country.

Steve · JUNE 6, 2010 AT 4:39 PM

You used the phrase nominally illegal. I guess the sense of this is that it is not really illegal or trivial at best.

I think the experience in Arizona, for example, shows that the problem of illegal immigration is not trivial, but real and potentially deadly, both in a physical sense and in the financial one.

Regardless if the one who nominally occupies the seat of the president enforces the law or not, it is still a law. And should missionaries be baptizing those who are known law breakers before they repent of their wrong doings – in other words at least leave the country?

Steve

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 6, 2010 AT 5:29 PM

That's the whole issue. Since the Church CAN'T enforce the law, and the national government won't; the burden to forge a checker-work attempt to compensate for a national failure really should not be shouldered by the Church.

JUNE 6, 2010

D-Day

On this morning 66 years ago my father landed on Omaha Beach in the first wave of the invasion. He was a combat engineer, with the responsibility to blow up obstacles on the beach to let the tanks and equipment move about unimpeded. The battle, however, changed plans. He and everyone else there that morning needed to focus on the incoming fire and staying alive.

It didn't matter that the obstacles were left. No tanks arrived on Omaha Beach that day. The explosives were better used to clear away a path to the German emplacements on the top.

As my father was dying, nearly 50 years later, he wondered why his life was spared when so many of his friends died that day. A few years later when Saving Private Ryan was released it very much reminded me of my father.

I think of him every June 6th. It seems more clearly a day tied to him than either his birthday on February 20th or the day of his death November 20th. What a great man he was. Possessed with profound insight, tempered by the things he suffered, living in obscurity, quick to laugh, never angry and capable of giving wise advice. In all my life, I only saw him angry one time. But I think I heard him laugh every single day; oftentimes at himself.

JUNE 7, 2010

If You Love Me, Receive Instruction from Me

John Hall and I were recently discussing the Gospel of John. He pointed out that Christ's words: "If you love me, keep my commandments" appear several times in the Gospel. He thought the words could be better translated to mean: “If you love me, act as a sentinel (or guard) ready to receive further instructions from me.”

The current King James translation was based on the recognition that the canon of scripture had closed and revelation had ended. Therefore they took those things into account as they rendered their translation.

For us, at least in theory, the canon of scripture is not closed. Also, in theory, revelation is still possible.

There is an effort underway to redefine revelation and circumscribe its acceptable bounds. The coming view will be that revelation should only be expected which confirms that the church’s authorities are speaking for God, and anything direct from God has ended. God has finished His work, and now given His authority to man (2 Ne. 28:5). If Nephi was a prophet (and he was) then that will become the church’s position at some point.

It is our responsibility to receive revelation. It is also our responsibility to keep the narrowing boundaries as wide open as possible. Whatever the line is, you should live at that line to prevent it from drawing even tighter.

If you love Christ, stand as a sentinel ready to receive further instructions from Him.

CHAPTER 5
Alma 13

JUNE 7, 2010

Cite Your Minds Forward

A few days ago I directed you to Alma 13. I suggested that it be read without preconceptions and you let the words just acquire whatever meaning they appear to have in the chapter itself. Some of you have begun that process and have raised questions. I thought I might revisit the chapter to open up a few ideas for those who haven't begun the exercise.

Here's the first verse:

And again, my brethren, I would cite your minds forward to the time when the Lord God gave these commandments unto his children; and I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son, to teach these things unto the people.

Why “cite your minds forward?” Especially since it was talking in the past tense? Why is this idiom in the verse? How would Joseph Smith know about this kind of word usage? (Perhaps this is an indication the text is translated from another language rather than being composed in English.)

Why “the Lord God ordained priests?” Were they ordained by God indeed? Was there another man involved in conferring that authority? Did it necessarily come from God alone? What priesthood is it that is referred to?

What is “after his holy order?” Is this Aaronic? Is this Melchizedek? Or is this something different? There are three orders of priesthood, the third being “Patriarchal” as explained in Beloved Enos. Which one is this verse referring to of the three?

What form of priesthood is “after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son?” Are all three? Or is there one that is distinguished by being uniquely after the order of His Son?

What “things” are these people to “teach.. unto the people?” Is there something associated with what is contained in the chapter that alone is the province of those possessing the “holy order” to teach? If so, why is that?

What is going on here? Is this deeper doctrine than we normally encounter? If so, why has it eluded our attention? If our preconceptions have blinded us to this material, then why would we want to ever read scripture through the blinding lens of the notions we have inherited? Is this part of the wicked “traditions of our fathers” that the Book of Mormon warn us against?

Oh ye Gentiles...

Now I’m missing the weekly Book of Mormon class I taught for so many years. There I could go ahead and discuss all the answers. My home was too small for the crowds and I wasn’t going to export it to a less sacred place where the Spirit would not permit me to teach. Well, the questions are better than merely giving answers, as I have said before. If you can learn to ask good questions, then you can go to the Lord and get the answers. Who knows where that dialogue will lead you.

JUNE 8, 2010

Alma 13:2

Continuing with Alma 13:2:

“And those priests were ordained after the order of his Son, in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption.”

Now this is important stuff here. We are really being told something quite amazing. Look at these words!

To be “ordained after the order of his Son” it must be done “in a manner that thereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption.” Did you get that?

Think about these words carefully.

The “manner” must be in a way which will let people know or understand how to “look forward to His Son for redemption.”

So, let’s clear away the institutional garbage that surrounds our thinking.

Christ WAS NOT ordained by being sustained by a congregation.

Christ WAS NOT ordained by having hands laid upon Him by another man.

Christ DID NOT carry a credential with Him or a certificate of priestly authority.

Christ WAS NOT part of the established priestly hierarchy.

We have no record of His ordination at all. We only have established, priestly class officials asking Christ about where He got His authority from. And we have Christ simply refusing to answer their question.

Christ showed that He in fact held priestly authority by His demonstration of power. More importantly, He taught profound truths with such passing simplicity and convincing prose that His message necessarily came from a higher source. In word and deed He put on display His power and authority.

But what is the verse in Alma speaking about? How does one become “ordained” in such a manner that people learning of it will then know how to look forward (or back) to the Savior and understand His redeeming power?

Do they put on display, by the words and precepts they speak, the profound simplicity and convincing prose of the angels themselves? Are they able to show their ordination by speaking words of eternal life, as He did?

How does this “ordination” acquire or show redeeming power?

How can obtaining authority by ordination to this priesthood be something which will let people know their Lord better?

What is really going on for those who hold actual priestly authority, being ordained in the required manner? Do they acquire more than administrative authority from an institution? Do they receive power from on high? Can you get it anywhere other than from on high? Is this why the power of the priesthood is inseparably connected with the powers of heaven? What have we Saints been doing? Practicing? Holding ourselves forth to possess?

Where can we get this ordination after the order of the Son of God?

Forget what you’ve been taught. Read the Book of Mormon and remove the condemnation under which this people labor. Really study its words. They are alien to your prejudices and presumptions. But they ARE in fact the words of life. You really can get closer to God by abiding its precepts than through any other book! Amazingly, this is one of the very precepts which necessarily forces you to draw closer to God!

What a marvelous work and a wonder! Will the wonder never cease? (Only if you reject it.) It is a font of living water which constantly renews and floods forth more and new information endlessly, until at last we are also caught up in the visions of eternity and know our Lord. Then we needn't ask another to know the Lord, for all shall know Him.

I labor to help you know Him; to bring you to Him. The primary means to accomplish that remains the Book of Mormon. But only if you actually let it speak to you and reveal its many hidden secrets.

I'm only asking questions here. You'll have to figure out the answers.

JUNE 8, 2010

Alma 13:3

And this is the manner after which they were ordained—being called and prepared from the foundation of the world according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceedingly great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to, a preparatory redemption for such.

It is too much! Too great of words for men to possess! Consider what they refer us to. Called and prepared FIRST! From the foundation of the world!

So here priesthood has its beginning before this world even was organized. There is a necessary link between those hallowed days and power here. No person has authority here unless it was first obtained there.

How was it obtained first—before the foundation of the world?

It was because of the foreknowledge of God. And what was God's foreknowledge based upon? Their "exceeding faith and good works!"

How can a person have "faith" when they stand in the presence of God? Do they now have knowledge? This was before the mortal estate, right? If so, then how can there be faith? What good works were involved?

Then, too, the "faith" and the "good works" were done as a result of the person having been "left to choose between good and evil." Now this is surprising! You mean that before Adam partook of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil (i.e., before the foundation of the world) that some people had already obtained a knowledge of good and evil, been tempted, exhibited good works and acquired faith? How so? When and where did they do that? What does that tell us about them? Is this why Joseph said there were "sons of God who exalted themselves to be gods before the world was made?" (TPJS p. 375). When and where and how did they do this? And was this required for any person to be able to claim they now have priestly authority here? Or is it only those who have the "holy order after the Son of God?" Is there something about these men's "holy calling" that distinguishes them from others here? If so, what is it? Who are these men? Are they always going to be from unlikely sources and places, so that people can know how to recognize the Lord?

Then, too, we have them in a class of people who had been through a "preparatory redemption" already. What does that mean? What does it imply? How did they qualify? How long have these souls been working on the process of redemption and thereby qualify through their faith and good works to hold authority in this estate? Who are they?

Oh, now my head is spinning. Can this doctrine really be true? Why do we know so little about it? Why did Joseph talk about it, but we have simply nothing to add? Indeed, we deny it exists... why is that?

This is certainly an interesting chapter. Fearsome and interesting. What a threatening, terrible, majestic, holy and challenging book this Book of Mormon turns out to be after all.

COMMENTS:

JDS · JUNE 8, 2010 AT 5:56 PM

Thank you for helping to “raise the bar.” Recently a friend who works in the missionary department shared a problem missionaries are experiencing worldwide. They seek out and find scattered Israel; they teach the “Preach My Gospel” discussions, yet scattered Israel is saying, “I already serve my neighbors, my community, and my church; I already believe in being good and kind always; why then do I need to join your church?” It seemed that he believed the problem lies with scattered Israel rather than with the church.

There are really good people out there who are filled with the spirit of truth and live according to that spirit. I proposed the idea that unless Israel’s light far exceeds scattered Israel’s light, we will not be very attractive to scattered Israel. I suggested there exists a dire need to “raise the bar” and to come out from under condemnation as a church.

Christ prophesied of those who would follow Him who would raise the dead, heal the sick, cause the blind to see, who would walk on water, cause rivers to move out of their courses, or mountains to flee, and who would do all things He did and even greater. I asked my friend if he knew of anyone in the church today who fulfills this prophecy, or if we consider this prophecy to be a folk tale or a feel-good story. We might well ask ourselves the same questions Joseph Smith asked the Father as he was seeking truth and we may hear the Father say about

LDS Today, “They draw near unto me with their lips, yet their hearts are far from me and they deny the power thereof.” Who truly possesses the power of the priesthood today? Very few.

Finally I suggested that until we truly “raise the bar” and go over that bar ourselves and teach others to do the same, our power to attract scattered Israel will be severely limited by our anemic state.

I believe we must readjust our hope, beliefs, and applied faith sufficiently that the norm is to become the very people Christ spoke of. Thank you for leading a discussion to this end.

I’m enjoying a re-read of the Second Comforter and am taking copious notes, seeking to better raise the bar in my own life. I so much appreciate this book.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 8, 2010 AT 6:09 PM

The only real reason to become LDS is doctrine. If we don’t offer doctrine which will save, then we are just another church.

We are de-emphasizing doctrine at our peril. Eventually people will just drift away. Every one of us will drift away in search of doctrine which will save us.

The whole “public relations” effort is a profound waste of time and resources. It is taking us downward in every meaningful way. It will continue to do so until we rediscover doctrine and begin to proclaim the truth again.

JUNE 9, 2010

Alma 13:4

And thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this they might have had as great privilege as their brethren.

The result of what went on before is the reason for the ordination or calling. That is, “thus they have been called.” Meaning that all of what went into the earlier experiences i.e., being left to choose between good and evil, and having chosen good, having “faith” and good works, is the reason for their ordination. These souls are not novices. They are not getting authority here for the first time. They come with power from beyond this earth, bringing it with them to this earth. They qualified before and elsewhere.

All of this is “on account of their faith.” All things are obtained through faith. That is explained in the Sixth Lecture, quoted here. Faith is a principle of power. It is capable of making things happen. There must be a connection between faith and power; between faith and priesthood.

Others reject the Spirit of God and, therefore, do not have this power. These others may claim to have authority, but they do not really receive power from the Spirit of God. They are animated by a different source.

What, then, causes someone who has a little authority “as they suppose” (they don’t really have it, you see), to attempt to use that pretense to control and dominate others? The answer is contained in revelations already in print. It is their pride, their insecurities, the need to control, to be praised and celebrated, the need to gratify their vain ambition. These are character flaws. They cover up these flaws by claiming to have priestly authority from God (D&C 121:34-44).

They are the world’s Pharaohs, not the world’s Abraham’s. Their hearts are hard, their minds blind, they do not hear the Spirit of God, and therefore none of the powers of heaven are with them. This was/is their choice. They could have had the same privilege. But, alas, they prefer instead their own aggrandizement. They prefer monuments built with their names engraven on them. There is no message of truth and hope coming from them. Their words (the only things which really endure), will fall to the ground unfulfilled. They will not be remembered. They will return without a saved soul.

What stunning doctrines we have stumbled upon here! I'm getting worried about things as I look about. This Book of Mormon is alarming...

COMMENTS:

Kisi · JUNE 10, 2010 AT 7:43 AM

That is huge! What in the heck does it mean?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 10, 2010 AT 4:07 PM

Patience. We'll get somewhere before we finish this.

JUNE 9, 2010

Alma 13:5-6

Or in fine, in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the Only Begotten Son, who was prepared—And thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest—

So there wasn't some great advantage for these people who hold actual priestly authority. We learn that "in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren." Where was that "first place?" Is it also "from the foundation of the world" referred to earlier?

What does it mean that they were "on the same standing with their brethren" while in that first place?

What was it about these who receive authority that qualified them to receive the “holy calling” from the foundation of the world? What does it mean that they “would not harden their hearts” in the first place? If they didn’t do it then, will they do it now?

Is foreknowledge about these individual’s qualifications based on prior performance? Can you determine that since they did not harden their hearts in the first place, they will not begin to harden their hearts now?

What about the “atonement of the Only Begotten Son, who was prepared” made them qualified? Did they accept Him there? Did they soften their hearts there toward Him? Are they capable of having redeeming faith in Him here because they first acquired it there?

Is all this necessary to have preceded ordination here? If it was not acquired there, can an ordination here have any effect?

What, then, do those who qualify do? What does it mean “to teach his commandments unto the children of men?”

Is there something different between teaching commandments on the one hand, and “that they [who are taught] also might enter into his rest” on the other hand? Are the two linked together? Is it necessary to both “teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest” to show such priestly authority? That is, can anyone, regardless of their true ordination to authority teach commandments? But does it take something more, some higher ordination in order to bring those taught “to enter into His rest?” If so, what is the difference? How can you recognize such teachings if they are ever put on display?

Did Joseph Smith exhibit such powerful teachings?

Did Enoch?

Did Melchizedek? Abraham? Elijah? Elisha? Nephi? The Brother of Jared? Enos? Others?

Do we see that today? If so, where? Does anyone have the audacity to presume they can bring another soul back to the Lord's rest? Maybe Joseph Smith's comment on this point is appropriate:

The things of God are of deep import and time and experience and careful and ponderous and solemn thoughts can only find them out. Thy mind O man if thou wilt lead a soul into salvation must search into and contemplate the darkest abyss and the broad expanse of eternity, thou must commune with God. (DHC Vol. 3, p. 295)

I'd like to meet such a man. They seem to be rather infrequent residents of this fallen world....

I'm only asking those questions which arise in my own mind as I read these words. You'll have to figure out your own answers.

JUNE 10, 2010

Alma 13:7

The record continues in Alma 13:7:

This high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world; or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things—

Now we encounter comments that everyone seems to use about this priesthood. It is "without beginning of days or end of years." It is "from the foundation of the world."

It is "prepared from eternity to eternity." When did eternity end and mortality begin?

When does mortality end and eternity begin again?

What does the phrase "from eternity to eternity" really refer to?

Do we pass “from eternity” then back “to eternity” as part of this mortal experience?

What went on before, back in the first “eternity?” We read elsewhere of this peaceful existence during “millennial” conditions, which end with rebellion, disputes and a war. Was Satan loosed in an earlier eternity after some season of peace to stir the hearts of men to anger one with another? (See Rev. 20:7–9). Was he cast out to hell, or the Celestial Kingdom, where we presently reside? What went on? How often would the Lord have gathered us as a hen gathers her chicks, but we would not be gathered? (I suppose His asking and the lack of an answer implies a great number.)

What is it about what went on before, in the earlier “eternity,” that allows God to possess His perfect “foreknowledge of all things” now?

What is this strange doctrine and the implications which flow from them? Was Joseph Smith trying to tell us this in the later Nauvoo talks? (Maybe we should read them again...)

How is one to take it all in? How is the priesthood tied to this prior eternity? Why do we get side-tracked into the subject of “from eternity to eternity” when we learn about this endless priesthood which is without beginning of days or end of years?

What is really going on? How can we learn of the truth? Is there no prophet who can declare it to us?

The suspense is killing me. I’m hoping to get answers. I’m hoping you want them too. I’m confident if you ask the Lord, He will answer you. He intends to pour out knowledge upon the heads of the Saints. If we will stop making others accountable for what we learn, and go to Him to receive what He offers, by the power of the Holy Ghost you may know the truth of all things. I read that somewhere...But the words are mine, now.

COMMENTS:

David Christenson · JUNE 10, 2010 AT 8:58 AM

Strange Doctrine indeed. Not sure we will find the answers in the next month's Ensign. :).

Another observation:

It is not just eternity to eternity...but from eternity to ALL eternity. A good question to ask would be...What is the difference between eternity and ALL eternity?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 10, 2010 AT 2:13 PM

Randy has left a new comment on your post "Alma 13:7":

From David Christenson (the institute instructor) he mentions that instead of eternity being like "this ring" (a wedding band). It is more like a slinky :) without beginning of days or end of years. Something like "One Eternal Round" being one full round of the slinky, but never coming back on it's self.

The mysteries of Godliness leave me in awesome wonder! and some interesting quotes....

There is no change in the eternal and everlasting priesthood. It is without beginning of days or end of years. It is from eternity unto eternity. By the power of that priesthood God, our Eternal Father, has organized all worlds and redeemed all worlds that have ever been redeemed. (Wilford Woodruff, Deseret Weekly News 38:450, March 5, 1889)

The priesthood of the Son of God is from everlasting to everlasting; it is without beginning of days or end of years, or time. It is without father, without mother, without descent; it is the power by which the worlds are and were created and the power by which they are now held in existence and by which all that are yet to come will be organized, governed, controlled and sustained. (Brigham Young, Brigham Young by Nibley, p. 453, October, 1869)

[Reposted by the CM because I deleted it on accident]

JUNE 10, 2010

Alma 13:8

Now they were ordained after this manner— being called with a holy calling, and ordained with a holy ordinance, and taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order, which calling, and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning or end—

The manner of such person's ordination is described but-

What does it mean to be "called with a holy calling?" Is there something about the nature of this "calling" that is different from an interview and being "found worthy of advancement in the priesthood" as we commonly see? What is a "holy calling" anyway? Why does this kind of priestly calling get described exclusively as "holy" by its nature? Is there some contact with God required (who is the source of all holiness) as part of this "holy calling?"

Then we have the description of their ordination. What does it mean to be "ordained with a holy ordinance?" Does our practice of laying on hands, conferring the Aaronic Priesthood and ordaining to the office of Priest answer to this description? What is the "holy ordinance" that is done to confer this priesthood?

Can we automatically rule out the entirety of Aaronic and most of the Melchizedek priesthood offices when we see the words: "taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order?" Is there some office we are aware of which is appropriately described as "taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order?" Think about that for a moment.

If this is a "holy calling" and it results in the person receiving it "taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order" isn't this something perhaps quite different from what we do to disseminate the priesthood? And if all the Aaronic Priesthood and most of the Melchizedek Priesthood offices are not what we would appropriately call “the high priesthood of the holy order” then are we talking about either of these two commonly held priesthoods anyway?

Then we have the interesting addition that the “calling, and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning or end” for those involved. That is, without reference to mortality. It was held before coming here, it will endure after leaving here. It is “endless” in the sense it comes “from eternity to eternity” as set out in the preceding verse.

This is potentially quite different from the manner in which we practice priestly ordinations in the church today. I suppose that some will want to confine all this description to our practices. They are free to see it in that way if they choose. I’m just asking if it is more likely that the words have a different meaning than we have associated with them before. If that is possible, then perhaps we ought to be asking the Lord to inform us more about the matter, rather than presuming we already possess what is being described here.

It may just be that our hopes for some great, eternal reward hinge upon getting to the bottom of this matter. It may just be that God’s control over and involvement with the “holy calling” and “holy ordinance” of having the “high priesthood after the Son of God” is immediate and direct. It may be that this “holy ordinance” will only come from that God who employs no servant at the gate, but is Himself the gatekeeper (2 Ne. 9:41). Wouldn’t that be wonderful. Think about it—no flawed process. No fooled bishop or stake president letting someone obtain an office for which they are completely unsuited. It sort of makes sense.

COMMENTS:

The Zang Family JUNE 12, 2010 AT 2:15 PM

JDS — Thanks for sharing, that was uplifting. Why are so many scared of the doctrine of translation? It is made fun of so often.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 10:19 PM

There are a lot of people who write about the subject without really understanding what the subject involves. The result is a whole lot of error gets incorporated into people's thinking. It would be a lot better if those who know nothing about translation would not try to expound on the subject. I haven't tried to straighten the subject out, and may not. But it is apparent to me there is a great deal of confusion about the topic.

JUNE 11, 2010

Alma 13:9

“Thus they become high priests forever, after the order of the Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity, and truth. And thus it is. Amen.”

Several things about this formulation are interesting. Most interesting is the closing declaration, “And thus it is. Amen.” It is iconic. It is as if the statement were an authorized, serious message, intended to be accompanied by the requisite formalities to let the reader know that this is serious stuff. This is “most holy.” This is not just a passing description. It holds terrible, eternal significance. So the material that preceded it holds important keys to understanding. Important warnings and knowledge. Perhaps, as a result of the concluding punctuation, we should be very, very careful about the words that preceded it. [This is why I'm conducting this exercise.]

Now look at the beginning—

“Thus they become...” These individuals have become something. The “high priests” about whom this material has been written have been in the process of becoming something holy from before the foundation of the world. This is pre-earth or pre-mortal existence stuff. The history, or background leading up to finding a holy high priest in mortality is eons in the making. It goes back to before this world had been reorganized.

“..high priests forever...” This priestly authority and holy order is not mortal. It is without beginning in this mortal phase of existence.

Now comes the formula of the authority: “after the order of the Son, the Only Begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity, and truth.” Look at it in pieces.

- After the order of the Son
- After the order of the Only Begotten of the Father
- After the order of Him who is without beginning of days or end of years
- After the order of Him who is full of grace
- After the order of Him who is full of equity
- After the order of Him who is full of truth.

What does it mean to be “begotten” of the Father? (Psalms 2:7).

What does it mean to be a “son” of the Father? (1 John 3:1-3).

What does it mean to be full of “grace?” (D&C 93:11-20).

What does it mean to be full of “equity?” (Proverbs 2:9).

What does it mean to be full of “truth?” (D&C 93:24).

This is interesting. What are we to make of such “holy” men who are “high priests after the order of the Son of God?”

Do you think we make a man such a thing by sustaining him in Ward, Stake and General Conferences? Can we make one of them at all?

If we never realize who they are, does that mean they don't exist? Does it mean they weren't ordained before the foundation of the world?

If they come, minister in obscurity, never hold high office and never have a single building at BYU, BYU Hawaii or BYU Idaho named after them, are they any less?

Does our recognition of them make them any more?

Are they here to be recognized? Are they here just to teach so that others may be brought back to God by learning His commandments and enter into His rest?

This is quite different than what I've been told in Gospel Doctrine class. It is beginning to look and feel a lot like what Joseph Smith was saying right at the end in the Nauvoo period. I wonder why we neglect this today?

JUNE 11, 2010

Alma 13:10

Now, as I said concerning the holy order, or this high priesthood, there were many who were ordained and became high priests of God; and it was on account of their exceeding faith and repentance, and their righteousness before God, they choosing to repent and work righteousness rather than to perish;

Immediately following the formula, the explanation continues that "many" were able to become ordained as such "high priests of God." But the way they did this was through several specific actions.

They had "exceeding faith." What do you suppose "exceeding faith" means? Why not "faith?" What is the difference between "faith" and "exceeding faith?"

They went through "repentance." So we know they made the same kinds of mortal mistakes as we do. They experience the bitter and then are able to prefer the sweet. They knew what it was like to feel the bitterness of hell, because they felt the sting of sin. So they repented. These great souls are NOT perfect, after all! They “repented” because they didn’t do it right the first time. What a refreshing idea. They weren’t fake. They didn’t feign virtue. They had failing. They were filled with life, made errors, and needed to repent. They were not immune to the circumstances of this fallen world.

More importantly, do the terms “exceeding faith” and “repentance” go together? That is, do you necessarily have to possess “exceeding faith” in order to become one who fully “repents?” If so, why? How is it done? This may be an important clue to the process of “keeping the second estate” and “proving” that you are ready to move on. Perhaps it is in this manner that some will then have “glory added upon their heads forever” (Abr. 3:26), and in another cycle of existence and eternal progression then also join in the ranks of those belonging to the “holy order after the Son of God.”

These called persons are, despite everything, “righteous before God.” God measures differently than do we. Being “righteous before God” may not mean the same thing we think “righteous” means. We want outward signs, symbols, dress, grooming and conformity. God looks at the intent of the heart.

Interestingly, they “choose to repent and work righteousness rather than to perish.” What do you suppose that means? First, they “repent,” then they “work righteousness.” Because of this, they do not “perish.” So do these things all go together? Can a person “repent” but then not “work righteousness?” Does a person have to “repent” and “work righteousness” in order to not “perish?”

COMMENTS:

Taylor · JUNE 11, 2010 AT 3:45 PM

Denver:

What do you mean by “another cycle of existence and eternal progression”?

Another cycle? Is it repeating?

Doug · JUNE 11, 2010 AT 7:14 PM

So just to be clear... if these things happened before the foundation of the world, it would necessarily mean that there was another probation, possibly similar to this one... in order to have faith, good works and repentance. A previous poster said that it could be faith in the Plan, but that doesn't make sense when there is repentance involved.

But then you said, “They were filled with life, made errors, and needed to repent. They were not immune to the circumstances of this fallen world.

So now I'm confused. Is it this fallen world or another... or the same at an earlier time??

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 11, 2010 AT 7:40 PM

They obtained it before coming here. They came here, sinned again, repented, realized who they were, and obtained the high priesthood after the order of the Son of God. They renewed who they were, resumed the authority they held before, and entered into the Lord's rest. Then began to seek and bring others into that same rest.

Kisi · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 10:09 AM

I notice that Alma and all the sons of Mosiah spent the rest of their lives preaching repentance and bringing souls to Christ, but I believe this to be the fruits of repentance and not the process. Alma was “born again” while still lying paralyzed on his cot. King Lamoni, his household, his father — the big King of the Lamanites, and all his household were baptized by fire and the Holy Ghost while lying on the floor of their homes in what looked like comas or death. They were forgiven and maybe even entered into the Lord's rest before they had any chance to make restitution.

Having been forgiven, though, it was their greatest desire to share what they had received with everyone they could, and they all spent the rest of their lives in righteous service to God and His children.

I don't think we typically teach repentance correctly. But rather, we hold people hostage, waiting for the fruits of repentance from them as though the fruits are the price. Jesus paid the price. We show forth the fruits of His gift unto us.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 10:45 AM

The church cannot forgive sin. Even when they are entrusted with judgment, it is carefully circumscribed so as to make it the Lord's and not theirs (3 Ne. 27:27). They DON'T have discretion and don't have power to forgive sin. That is the Lord's.

He forgives freely. Confess your sins and He is faithful to forgive. All that is required is real intent. The process is essentially immediate. Read the scriptures, the Book of Mormon in particular, and you see how immediate it is.

Fruits follow.

The church's use of the concept gives them the authority to exercise control and dominion and compulsion over others, it is true. But it does not grant them repentance. The Lord does that.

If a person feels compelled to confess their sins, it would be better to do that to a victim, accompanied with expressions of regret. Telling a bishop may only get your "permanent record" annotated. Which may in itself be a very good thing, but it isn't repentance.

That is not to say that a good, caring and loving priesthood leader can't help someone. I've known some great men who have helped others by using the church's processes. But in the end the forgiving comes from the Lord. And it needn't take long.

JUNE 12, 2010

Alma 13:11

“Therefore they were called after this holy order, and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb.”

If you understand these phrases, this verse clarifies the matter.

Being called into this holy order requires a person to be more than a church member, or a follower, or a believer. They need to be “sanctified.”

“Their garments were washed white through the blood of the Lamb.” No small feat!

To have white garments is to have the blood and sins of your generation removed from you. To be purified. To be sanctified by the Lamb—removing from you, and taking upon Himself the responsibility to answer for whatever failings you have.

This is not ritual purity. This is purity in fact.

The person described by this phrase is qualified to stand in the presence of God without sin. Clean of all blood and sin—righteous forever. He is Christ’s, and Christ is the Father’s, and all that each of them will be is the same; for we shall see Him as He is, because we will be like Him. To be like Him is to be sanctified.

I can use the words, but I am powerless beyond that. This is more than you think it is. Words are inadequate to explain it. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man what great things the Lord has in mind by inheriting these promises. Indeed, to receive an understanding is to cease to be a man and become something else altogether. A stranger and sojourner here, but a resident with God in another condition altogether. It is written by the Lord concerning them:

These are they who are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all. These are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of Enoch, and of the Firstborn. These are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all. These are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood.

(D&C 76:66–69)

Such persons are still in this world, but they are also associated with innumerable others who are not present here. Although mortals associate with each other, these individuals obtain a higher order. They connect with a higher plane, because a more sure word has been spoken to them. As a result they belong to an order of holy priesthood. That priesthood is an order without beginning of days or end of years, from eternity to eternity. This new, higher order, when it occurs can be the spark through which heaven itself can return to the earth.

To others looking in from outside, these are words without meaning, or definition. To those who hold this priestly position, these words are a perfect fit. The gulf between the two positions is so great that even a common vocabulary won't make meanings connect.

We proclaim we “have the truth” but we do not preach it. We claim to have authority, but we have no power to redeem and exalt. We pretend it is unlawful to preach mysteries, yet Alma is preaching the deepest doctrines to the non-converted. If we preach the truth, it will attract those whose lives are empty. Why would they join us if what we offer is as trite and superficial as the false religions they already believe?

Is there no need to cry repentance to this generation with power and authority? With the tongue of an angel? To cry out as the Book of Mormon declares the message to the non-believing and skeptical?

It does raise some troubling concerns as we claim to be the “true church” but do not act the part as shown in these scriptures. How are we justified in masking the fullness, hiding the mysteries, putting away deep doctrine that will save, and still proclaim that we are the “only true and living church upon the earth?” Does “living” require us to create sons and daughters of God who are “come to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of Enoch, and of the Firstborn?” If so, why do we hear so little about it in our day?

I suppose our audacity springs from our history? If we have lost something vital that conflicts with our current understanding of the history that GUARANTEES us that we are perfect, and that we cannot be misled, then we wouldn't want to acknowledge that. Thank goodness for these guarantees. It does let us relax a bit, doesn't it? Broad and wide are the guarantees we have inherited. We don't need to worry about that narrow and strait fringe who rummage about in the mysteries.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 9:27 AM

I didn't want to put this in the above post, but I did want to put it up: When I wrote The Second Comforter, I was persuaded that the church's cautions about speaking of mysteries was well taken and I accepted their definitions. Now I am persuaded of the concept still, but I do not agree with their definitions. As a consequence, I believe The Second Comforter is a book which ought to be given to non-Mormon investigators. They ought to learn these truths as a part of investigating what our faith includes.

I believe the idea that deep truths must not be taught or understood is a sign of atrophy in faith, loss of light, and rejection of the fullness intended to be ours. It is a damnable notion because it will damn people who might otherwise be brought to partake of eternal life. Therefore I reject it.

That is not to say that my idea is right. But it is in conformity with the Book of Mormon, a text which condemns us as a church for failing to accept and do what it teaches. I am always willing to be persuaded that I am wrong about this question involving teaching doctrine freely, openly and often. But to my core I do not think I am. I have seen apostates return to activity, inactives become reactivated, and non-Mormons convert as a result of hearing doctrine. I have also seen those who drift away, lose interest and become critical when they are malnourished by doctrinal trivia in church manuals, classes, conferences and talks. Therefore my experiences tell me I am right.

Brian Bowler · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 10:18 AM

Denver,

Thank you for showing the Light of Christ on a Hill. I know its not easy to be a target for others, as I am sure you are, but I know that the Lord places watchman on the tower to cry repentance and to warn of the coming Storm.

I LOVE Doctrine, I love The Truth, and feel the same regarding teaching doctrine. To often member use the Milk before meat principle to keep everyone on a diet of Milk. How slow do we need to go? I have learned its important to keep a grasp on the "Basic" principles, as they steady the mind in times of difficulty, but the Deep Doctrine gives me much Hope and Energy to go on to Higher Ground. Without the Deeper knowledge I have received I would be REALLY Depressed, thinking I have all that life and eternity has to offer.

I am teaching the lesson in EQ tomorrow on the Life of Christ, Any Suggestions?

Hope you have a wonderful wet weekend, and thanks again for sharing your Testimony and the Light.

Brian B

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 10:39 AM

If you haven't read Come, Let Us Adore Him, then I'd suggest you look at it. There are many things in that book which ought to find their way to the attention of all the Elders.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 12, 2010 AT 7:14 PM

DKD has left a new comment on your post "Alma 13:11":

I don't know lots about ancient alchemists. I think about them when words like "purity" are mentioned. The ultimate goal (as I understand it) of the alchemist was to transform the human body into an eternal being. The first step in the process was to see if they could transform lead into gold.... to do that, it was essential that they make the lead as pure as possible.

My battery is running low... gotta go for now. :)

JUNE 12, 2010

Alma 13:12

Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin save it were with abhorrence; and there were many, exceedingly great many, who were made pure and entered into the rest of the Lord their God."

If the earlier verse were not clear enough, the point is reiterated again here. These people are "sanctified by the Holy Ghost" as a result of "having their garments made white." They are "pure and spotless before God!"

This is the reason they can enter His presence. He has accepted them because just like Him, they are without sin. They were not perfected by their own acts. The earlier reference to their repentance makes that clear. They become pure and spotless before God because they have done what was asked of them to become clean. They have repented.

Now, measure the effects of their repentance. It has been so complete, so heartfelt, and deeply prized that they “could not look upon sin save it were with abhorrence.” It is this notion that underlies the mistaken idea that once someone’s calling and election has been made sure they are required to suffer for their own sins, because they have knowledge they are redeemed. This is a twisted view, designed by the adversary to discourage those who might otherwise seek and find.

It is not that the atonement ceases to operate for the redeemed. The atonement continues to cover the on-going sins of these redeemed souls which arise from their foolishness, mistakes, errors of comprehension, and the things they don’t understand yet. Christ does not require them to do what they don’t know is a requirement yet. As the gentle and kind Lord, He will forgive all they do that is wrong, while He reveals through greater light and knowledge a higher path. As He unfolds to their understanding more light, they can measure their conduct according to that greater light.

As they gain greater truth and light they see things how they really are. Right and wrong are seen differently. What once was “right” is now wrong as greater light and truth is received. What was once “wrong” is now seen clearly, without all the errors of understanding held before.

The spotlessness is because their heart is right. They WANT to please their Lord. They WANT to be like Him. Sin is not tempting because it is contrary to Him whom they love.

The abhorrence they feel at sin is not within them. It is not the temptations they struggle against. That is not the meaning at all. It is what they see all about them. The lost souls are the object of their compassion and care. They WANT to have others redeemed and saved from this lost and fallen world. The fruit they tasted is something they desire to share. They WANT many, an exceeding many, to share with them in the hope that can be won by repentance.

They would shout “flee from Babylon” if they thought it would do any good. But shouting does no good among a darkened and benighted people. They may speak the words of an angel to others, but it is up to others to decide whether they will listen. It will be a still, small, quiet pleading they make to others. Within their entreaties will be found the Master’s words.

Many may claim to speak in His name, but only these few have the ability to speak with His approval. These are holy men, possessing words of eternal life. In them will be found truths that come from eternity and that will save to all eternity.

Only a few will listen. That won’t detract from the power of the message delivered by those who are after the holy order of the Son of God, for their words can save any who will listen.

What an interesting chapter we have found here. And we are only a dozen verses into it! We should press on.

COMMENTS:

the weaker sex · JUNE 13, 2010 AT 1:08 AM

Ms. Anonymous...it’s because we are ‘under the men’, ‘obedient to the men,’ a ‘helpmeet.’ We’re here to help ‘them’ meet ‘their’ potential. And just so we don’t get our noses too out of joint, occasionally they’ll give their condescending talks about how special a woman’s role is. Aarrgh!!!! This is something I’ve struggled with since I was a young teenager!

And yet, would you believe. I love and worship and have faith in God. Somehow, years ago, before I would even consider worshiping and following God, He let me know that we are valued and loved by Him as much as His sons. It was at that point that I let myself learn of and follow Him. It is sooo hard for me sometimes and yet I have to trust that He truly is no respecter of persons, that He truly is full of equity — without which He would cease to be God.

Men, you don't realize the great extra challenge we women carry in this church. (Not all women, to be sure; many of my sisters and friends don't seem to struggle with this.) What if everything in the scriptures referred to 'women?' What if the order of everything put your gender in 2nd place? Can you, even just a little, understand how we must humble ourselves — even more than you — to willingly follow such a plan? Can you imagine what it is like to 'cover your face,' submit, stand in 2nd place — especially in today's world, (where we don't have to), where women have emerged (seemingly) from oppression?

At the same time, I am so ashamed at how the female population today thinks it is okay to bash and belittle men and I have fiercely taught against that. I firmly believe that women are treated with more regard by the good men in this church than anywhere in the world. I look at the men who sit in the chairs at the head of our ward each Sunday with great love and feel that many of them would lay down their lives in our preservation. (I know my husband and sons would.) And yet, it is only with the firmest faith and HOPE and love in a God, whom has shown me, countless time, that He values and loves me, that I can continue to follow this path.

You would never recognize me in a congregation. You would never know I struggle with these feelings. I have seven children, serve and strive to bring my husband a joyful life, and am very respectful to my priesthood leaders. It is all because I love the Lord. (And the Lord in His GREAT mercy, kindness and wisdom, blessed me with a husband who holds me in the highest esteem.)

The problem is this fallen and blind world, filled with misunderstanding, in which we find ourselves; not, in God's plan. Of this I have to have hope.

The Weaker sex!

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 13, 2010 AT 8:05 AM

See how quickly someone who is not prepared to understand what I am teaching manages to distract others. See how quickly some rise to the bait.

The comment by the anonymous poster was put up by the comment moderator after first showing it to me. I wanted it up only to show how little some people comprehend these things, not to ask you to respond to charges of sexism. This is about sanctification and receiving the highest and holiest of messages. Not about sexism.

Critics are everywhere. They will dog every message, criticize every thought, mock every truth. They occupy a necessary role. You mustn't give any heed to them. Nor must you exclude them. They are entitled to hear the truth, and to put their reaction on display for others to witness as well.

All of that is good, even desirable. To allow them to distract you from your purpose is to become snared. Don't do that.

What I have to say will not be affected by such comments. But if those who have actually read what I've written, and prepared themselves to understand the message are so easily distracted, then perhaps it would be best to speak of less important matters here.

The comment was from someone who is not prepared to hear the message. So let the comment pass without any argument and stay on the much more important scriptural message.

the weaker sex · JUNE 13, 2010 AT 11:16 AM

Wow, Denver...that response came as a bit of a shock. I've tried to look at my comment and see what made you feel that I was 'taking the bait.' I realize that it's maybe because, at the end of the first paragraph I didn't make the distinction that these are 'misconceptions and perceived truths' that I, and many women have to learn to see through.

I know that you, personally, don't believe those things. I know many men who don't. I do, however, know many men who do believe these things. As a 16 year old, I had to listen to a seminary teacher expound several times that women's whole existence was their focus on their husband and that all their thoughts were to him. While men, on the other hand, needed several women to fulfill them. (I am not making this up!) I wouldn't go back the next year and didn't attend any seminary as a Senior. Also, while my dad was a gentle and great man, he was a chauvinist. (ie, thinking it was a waste for girls to get any higher education.) Also, I had to listen to a brother who is a brilliant surgeon, ‘prove’ that men are superior because, in his words, ‘where are all the great women composers, artists, scientist’ and on and on. So, while many of you have not had these stumbling blocks to climb over and get to the bottom of, I have. And, I know many other women have too. I was attempting to bare testimony to “anonymous” that I know that God holds us in equal regard with His sons and that I have had to come to that knowledge so that I can get past the apparent inequality that is sometimes apparent in our church/world. (When I read anonymous comment, I felt like I could so understand what she was feeling. I wanted to reassure her. Obviously I did a poor job. But, I guess it doesn’t matter since it wasn’t real.)

Coming from where I’ve come from, and recognizing the truth and God’s love for His daughters, when I was once so angry about it all, has actually made me able to bare testimony often to other women who have felt like God doesn’t value them. Denver, while you are a great man and have been chosen by God to do a great work, maybe this is one area you can’t personally relate to.

Also, I’m truly sorry to anyone who was offended by what I wrote. It was just, an apparently poorly written, but honest attempt to explain how I’ve overcome some of the hurdles placed in my path.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 13, 2010 AT 11:37 AM

The topic is not sex related. To bring up the notion of improper sexual domination of women by men, which is a sin, as part of this discussion is to change the subject.

I agree with the issue. But it is not part of this discussion.

If that is more important than understanding the doctrine contained in Alma 13, then perhaps that ought to become a separate line of posts. It certainly can. But it is off-topic here.

Still, I’ve put up your comment.

Your pain, your legitimate complaints, your experience with disappointing “priesthood” leaders are all relevant. But not in the context of discussing this doctrine of the holy order after the Son of God, with its attendant cleansing power. Unless, of course, it is as an example of how one fails to qualify. But the comment you made was not in that light.

JUNE 13, 2010

Alma 13:13

“And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest.”

Think about what you’re reading here. Alma is essentially declaring himself as one of those possessing this priesthood because he is inviting others to enter into the rest which these people enjoy. That is, “come, join in the rest of the Lord.”

Alma has just revealed something profound about himself. It is subtle, but nonetheless true. In meekness he has proffered an invitation. He has not set himself up to be admired. He does not consider himself better. He has delivered the invitation to those to whom he is ministering, just as you would expect someone possessing this great, holy calling to do.

All the more remarkable is that he extends this invitation to an unredeemed, critical, reproachful audience of unconverted. He does not shield them from these great mysteries.

He does not flinch or hold back because it would be to “cast pearls before swine.” He knows where the line is drawn, for in the preceding chapter they have explained to an audience that there are mysteries withheld from the public (Alma 12:9–11). There are things kept from public knowledge and obtained only by heed and diligence. The line involves sacred ordinances, NOT higher knowledge. You give that and you make converts. You withhold it and you blend into the morass of churches who teach merely a form of godliness without any power to save (JS-H 1:19).

It was the same during Christ's ministry. The line is drawn as sacred events turn to ordinances. They are withheld. NOT the teaching of deep doctrine.

So when we refuse to discuss "mysteries" and limit our correlated curriculum to an approved list of 52 subjects, recycling them endlessly, we are not in conformity with the pattern shown in the Book of Mormon. The "most correct book" condemns us. But, then again, so does the word of the Lord precisely because we are not following the Book of Mormon (D&C 84:55-57).

The highest form of acceptance and redemption is to have your calling and election made sure; to be washed and cleansed from sin every whit. Alma is preaching this to unconverted, investigating, potential converts. Today we won't even permit the subject to be raised in adult Sunday School, Priesthood, or Relief Society meetings because it is considered to be "too sensitive" for the members to consider. Have we, the Gentiles, rejected "the fullness of the Gospel?" (3 Ne. 16:10). Not as long as any of us (like salt or leaven) keep these doctrines alive.

If you want to know about this fullness and how to obtain it, then read the books I have written. That is what they are about. Alma was right! His message was true!

Let all come and partake. Everyone is invited. No institutional control should be used to prevent your search into this matter. It is right in the Book of Mormon. Though the institution may be condemned for neglecting it, you don't need to be.

So, let's turn to the next verse and see what wonders continue to unfold before our eyes....

JUNE 13, 2010

Staying On Topic

Straying from the topic is a universal defect in the blog/comment world. My goal, and it is a goal I take seriously, is to stay on topic. I don't wish to offend anyone. I am trying to be very careful and methodical in my discussion of doctrine and the Book of Mormon. I want to keep the topic limited to the scriptures/topics under scrutiny.

There are certainly worthwhile side issues. I just don't think this is the appropriate blog for them.

JUNE 14, 2010

Alma 13:14

“Yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever.”

We have named a portion of the priesthood after Melchizedek. (It is not, however, the form which Melchizedek held. That is another topic I am not going to address here now. This area is complete mush in the minds of Latter-day Saint writers and commentaries. I can't straighten that out on this blog. I might take it up in a book and go through it methodically there.)

What is important is that the great events of Melchizedek's time began when people humbled themselves and accepted the teachings of this “high priesthood” holder and were, thereby, saved. Not only saved but also led into a fellowship which eventually turned into a City of Peace, or City of Salem, or Jerusalem, which was taken into heaven.

This prototype was so influential in the thinking of all who followed, that the high priesthood was named after Melchizedek. Even though he held Patriarchal Priesthood with its associated sealing power, he was the one after whom Melchizedek Priesthood was named in the form it was later transmitted which lacked sealing authority. (Again, another topic.)

What is important in this verse is the connection between the existence of the one holding this authority (Melchizedek), and a humble people who would accept and follow those teachings. The result of the combination of the two was that God came and dwelt among them.

This is a pattern that followed the previous pattern with Enoch. This was the pattern Joseph wanted to return through his teaching and ministry. Joseph wasn't able to accomplish it. We now hope to see it someday occur in the unfolding history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The most recent book on this subject, now on sale at Deseret Book (unfortunately a red-flag for me) urges the idea that the only Zion we should expect to see will come when the church president allows or directs it to happen.

This verse suggests what is needed is: 1) humble people willing to accept teaching from a high priest after the ancient order and 2) a person having that authority who will teach.

What does this do to our current accepted model?

If Zion is to return, how will it return? Will it mirror what the Book of Mormon is teaching here? Is the church president the one who will bring this gathering to pass?

Is the church president teaching doctrine about the fullness which will bring others into the rest of the Lord?

Has the church president brought a company into the Lord's presence? Attempted to do so? Taught or written about how that will happen? (If so, can someone point that out to me so I can read the talk, get the book or watch the video.)

How can I know I would actually have followed Melchizedek and become a part of his city by what I do today? (I'd like to be among them, you see.)

COMMENTS:

DKD · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 9:34 AM

Denver, have you read The Triumph of Zion by John Pontius?

If so, any reactions?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 12:53 PM

DKD re: The Triumph of Zion

Yes. I thought it was OK. It persuades me that I will need to address the topic in a book at some point. There is a great deal of compounded misunderstanding which has plagued the subject. It will take some effort to sort it out. I'm not prepared to attempt that on a blog, however. There is too much to address.

The Zang Family · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 9:14 AM

Hi Denver, referring to your staying on topic post, were you speaking about how you plod along and leave some of the conversations to move forward to where you want to go with something? Just wondering if you're hoping us commenters to do the same thing, or if you appreciate when someone takes up a tangent and suggests a few thoughts or resources for others who are interested, or if you'd rather they do that somewhere else. For instance, there are some thoughts that Melchizedek was Eber, and not Shem like some think. That Paul wrote his letter to the "Hebrews" meaning Melchizedek Priesthood holders, and hence wrote so much about their protege, Eber, or Melchizedek (probably trying to get them to move beyond the preparatory Melchizedek Priesthood and to emulate the Patriarchal part instead). Also that Eber, Shem's great-grandson, gathered a people at the time of the confounding of the languages, prayed that their language would be preserved (like the brother of Jared), and he became the official turning point for when the Patriarchal Priesthood phased out of being handed down by lineage and was opened up to others being adopted into it, like Abraham, for instance. Also, that Eber's wish of the Savior was that this be so and his faith was answered just like Enos's in your book with his request. Thus it was Melchizedek who came to Peter, James, and John on the Mount as Elias (not John the Baptist, because Melchizedek had a translated body with which to confer keys and John didn't at that point) and also the Elias who committed the gospel of the dispensation of Abraham in the Kirtland temple. So that is semi-related, but still a tangent as you say. Would you prefer that to be my last post of that sort to help keep your blog more focused? I'm tending to think you were just excusing yourself from taking up too many questions from these types of comments, but you don't mind them.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 1:02 PM

Zang Family:

I think that's fine when a post provokes related discussions. Adds, even. And I do not have any problem with other ideas which contradict or offer a different explanation. I am just not going to respond. And I am concerned when a "hot-button" current cultural idea takes over and distracts from the topic. What you've said, however, is directly on-point and adds to the discussion. I've considered and rejected the idea you propose, but that doesn't mean that others haven't heard it, or won't be persuaded by it. It is all good, even worthwhile, when the material is related.

JUNE 14, 2010

Alma 13:15

"And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one-tenth part of all he possessed."

Abraham, father of the righteous, paid tithe to this Melchizedek. Not the reverse.

I've already commented that I believe Melchizedek (whose name means "king and priest") was in fact Shem. I believe those who disagree (McConkie and Joseph Fielding Smith) base their conclusion on the words of D&C 84: "Which Abraham received the priesthood from Melchizedek, who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah;" (D&C 84:14). I believe the lineage referred to there is from the fathers who preceded Noah. But Noah was Shem/Melchizedek's father.

Abraham received the priesthood which had been promised to him by God, from Melchizedek. He (Abraham) already had the records of the fathers (Abr. 1:31). He already had the promise of priestly authority (Abr. 2:6-9). So the question should be asked as to why Abraham would need to be ordained by Melchizedek when the Lord was speaking directly to him and could have taken care of that directly. It is an important question. It is necessary to understand why the question should be asked and also what the answer is.

First, why would Abraham, who was directly in contact with God, be sent to another to receive the priesthood? What sense does it make the Lord would make him wait and send him to another? Particularly when Abraham had understanding that stretched into heavens and also possessed the records of the fathers, back to Adam. Why do that?

You should struggle with this question yourself. I feel like I'm robbing you by answering. Nevertheless, Abraham needed to be endowed and Melchizedek was set up to provide to Abraham the endowment. Therefore to receive the ordinance (Abraham was raised by apostates who had not provided that for him), he was sent to Melchizedek from whom he received necessary ordinances. As long as the ordinances needed to be performed and there was an officiator there to accomplish it, the Lord sent Abraham to Melchizedek.

Abraham also received the accouterments of kingship that descended from Adam. Melchizedek was the reigning high priest on the earth, Abraham was to replace him at his passing, and Melchizedek had awaited the promised successor's arrival for years. When at last Abraham arrived, Melchizedek was able to provide ordinances, answer questions, minister as was needed, then turn over the accouterments of kingship and withdraw from this earth. No sooner had Abraham been prepared than Melchizedek and his city also withdraw to join Enoch's people.

Second, why were tithes paid to a great high priest who would shortly be translated? What need was there for tithing?

The form the tithing took was not a check or bank draft. It was animals, food and usable material. What was provided would be used in sacrifices, feasts, celebrations and decoration of the temple maintained by Melchizedek. In short, Abraham provided material through his tithing that could be incorporated into the celebrations to which he was invited and from which he derived his own blessing and endowment. He gave, in turn he received.

Now, if you do not understand the concept of meekness and its importance for one who should hold this holy priesthood, then you do not understand either Melchizedek or Abraham. Each was a minister who served others. Each was a faithful guide because neither sought to be greater than another. They were great servants, who could be trusted with great authority because they did not seek their own will. They were interested in following the Lord's will. Even at the price of great inconvenience and sacrifice to them.

They were willing to sacrifice all things, and were therefore called to the work.

COMMENTS:

Doug · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 3:47 PM

QUOTE: You should struggle with this question yourself. I feel like I'm robbing you by answering.

It is a struggle, an area of confusion for me. Denver said "Each was a faithful guide because neither sought to be greater than another."

But he also said (in a different post), "This is why no man can be the guide for another. Everyone must stand on their own, acquire their own oil for their lamp, and stop leaning upon others to lead them."

Which would mean that A) they were not "men," B) there is an exception when it has to do with transferring this type of authority, C) that second quote was taken out of context and is not applicable here, or D) something else.

Thanks for giving us the chance to struggle. My rusty brain is starting to creak back into shape (ever so slowly).

— Doug

DKD · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 4:42 PM

have you tried an air popper? :)

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 14, 2010 AT 5:14 PM

"Faithful guides" point to the Lord, use His words to convert, and put people directly in touch with Him through what they teach. No man can substitute. When men begin to put themselves between the Lord and the ones to whom they pretend to minister, they are no longer true messengers sent by the Father. They become lights unto themselves; which is no light at all.

Good analogies in some of these comments. (DKD just couldn't resist, though. But it made me smile.)

JUNE 15, 2010

Alma 13:16

Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order, and this that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.

Notice the shifting back to “ordinances” from the discussion of priesthood. What ordinances? What manner? Why would what happened with Melchizedek and Abraham be something pointing to the Son of God?

Why would such an ordination and ordinance always be something that would prepare people to understand and accept the Son of God?

How was it a “type” of the Son of God’s order?

What is this referring to in plain language? Is it that the ordinances will reveal a pattern that will unmistakably point back to the ministry of Christ? How?

What is there in conferring priesthood and endowing with understanding that points to Christ? Was Christ endowed with knowledge? Power? Authority? From on-high? When? What account do we have of it? Was it at His baptism when the voice of God declared, “thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee” (which wording was deliberately changed during the Fourth Century Christological debates to read instead: “this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased”)? How does this identify both the holder of this holy order of priesthood and confirm Christ’s ministry as the Son of God?

More importantly, why are these things not being taught to us today? This is such basic and important doctrine that Alma is teaching it as introductory material to a potential group of converts. But as faithful members of the Church we aren't even familiar with them. What have we been doing with the Gospel we received?

Why was the "manner" something which would let those who learned about it know and identify the Lord?

Do we expect to follow Christ? If so, why aren't we anxious to learn about this holy order? Can we follow Him unless we do what is necessary to take upon us that same holy order? If so, then how are we to find it today? Who teaches about it?

It is interesting to read this chapter of Alma. It reinforces that the Book of Mormon is still being neglected. We cycle through it every four years. Perhaps we are still neglecting its true message? I think this chapter gets lumped in with three others and covered in a 50 minute class every four years. Maybe that is what is meant by "neglect." Oooops....

COMMENTS:

Steve · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 10:30 AM

Denver,

You wrote that the scripture we have was changed from "thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee". How do you know that?

Steve

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 5:20 PM

Scriptures were altered in the Fourth Century because of the "adoptionist" arguments/heresy. For information about the form of the alterations, including that one, Bart Ehrman, a Christian researcher and scholar (not a Mormon) has written a book on the changes which these debates made. His book is titled:

The Orthodox Corruption of Scripture: The Orthodox Corruption of Scripture: The Effect of Early Christological Controversies on the Text of the New Testament

It is available from Amazon. He uses this as one example of the change to the text, and shows how an underlying controversy directly caused the change to be made.

JUNE 15, 2010

Alma 13:17–18

Now this Melchizedek was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abomination; yea, they had all gone astray; they were full of all manner of wickedness; But Melchizedek having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father.

He was a king over people who had “waxed strong” in both “iniquity” and also “abomination.” Keep in mind that “waxing strong” means to be increasingly determined or committed. “Iniquity” is generally evil practice, but “abomination” involves the religious justification of wrongdoing. That is, something becomes “abominable” when it is motivated out of a false form of religious observance or is justified because of religious error.

The people to whom Melchizedek would minister were not simply in error, they were motivated by a false set of religious beliefs and errors. The result was that “they had all gone astray.” They were “full of all manner of wickedness.” This was a challenging audience for this man to minister to and try to convert to the truth.

Melchizedek began by “exercising mighty faith” in order to understand the truth and discern the difference between truth and error. Remember how difficult it is to be taught truth. It is more difficult to learn truth than it is to perform miracles (3 Ne. 17:2–7). Despite this, Melchizedek was able to set aside all he beheld and through faith acquire an understanding of the truth for himself. Conferred upon him as part of this education was the priestly authority with which to minister to others.

He “did preach repentance unto his people.” This required him to expose the errors, show them they were involved in iniquity and to expose how their religious errors had made them abominable. This preaching is always most difficult because it confronts the audience with a challenge to their mistaken beliefs, and false religion. There is a risk of violence when this happens. People who entertain abominable religious practices are more often moved to violence than to repentance. The Lord was greeted with violence. So was Lehi, Isaiah, Nephi, Samuel the Lamanite, Abinadi, Peter, Paul, Stephen, James, Zacharias and too many others to mention. To their credit, and to Melchizedek’s, the preaching resulted in repentance.

The serious errors, iniquity, and abominations of these people did not prevent Melchizedek from establishing a Zion. These people were able to acquire “peace in the land” because of their repentance. As used here, however, peace means more than the absence of violence, it means the presence of the Lord.

The statement that he established peace as the King of Salem (Shalom means peace) and “he did reign under his father” is a play on words. Which “father” is being identified in the statement. Was it Noah, or Gabriel? (A man who would also be translated and have a ministry as the Lord’s herald before the birth of John the Baptist and Christ.) Or was the “father” Him who would declare that Melchizedek was “begotten” as a “son of God?” It likely meant both. But it is also likely written this way to let those who do not understand what is being said to read it in a way that conceals the dual meanings. The scriptures are filled with such dual meanings.

What is hopeful for us today, is that no matter how much “iniquity” and religious error we engage in that results in our “abominations” in our pride and foolishness, we still may be candidates to receive something similar to what befell the City of Salem. The first step is to acquire the presence of this priesthood through individual repentance.

We envy these ancients. But we do nothing to try and follow the pattern revealed to us in their course. The Book of Mormon is a course in ancient failure and ancient success. We just do not respect what we have in that volume.

Well, let us press on...

JUNE 15, 2010

Denver's Books—In case you haven't read them yet

Someone mentioned in a comment (I don't remember who or which) that they had not read Denver's books nor did they know how to get them.

For anyone that applies to—here you go . . . Happy reading.

COMMENTS

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 9:19 PM

You don't need to buy a copy if you live in Utah communities whose public libraries have copies. Check them first, before you make a purchase. I have driven from Sandy south to the border stopping and donating copies to libraries in Utah towns as I went down. Now the Salt Lake Library system wouldn't accept them (they have a complicated system that doesn't allow you to walk in a give them a book). Some of the town libraries said they would have to review them first, and I never followed up to see if they accepted them or not. However, they were donated and I assume many of them are available free at the libraries to check out and read if you live in Utah.

Also I know both the Harold B. Lee and Law Libraries at BYU have copies which can be checked out. Therefore if you have access to those libraries you can read them there.

If the only choice is to buy a copy, then you should know that I do not profit from the sales. All royalties paid to me are donated to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Anonymous · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 3:02 PM

Denver you also named a local bookstore in an earlier blog that sold them and I can't remember which bookstore or find the blog. Amazon can't get copies here in time for Father's Day so would you remind me of the bookstore please.

Thank you

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 3:31 PM

benchmark Books

<http://www.benchmarkbooks.com/>

3296 South Main Street, #250

Salt Lake City, UT 84115

801-486-3111

(CM)

JUNE 16, 2010

Alma 13:19–20

Now, there were many before him, and also there were many afterwards, but none were greater; therefore, of him they have more particularly made mention. Now I need not rehearse the matter; what I have said may suffice. Behold, the scriptures are before you; if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction.

The “many before him, and also...many afterwards” in this sermon is not just a reference to believers, but to those who held this “holy order after the Son of God.” It is a reference to those who were made clean and pure by their repentance. It is those who, having been called by the Lord, chosen to this holy order, having their calling and election secure, hold power as a result of this relationship with God.

But none of these, before or since, (at the time of the writing by Alma) who held authority were greater than Melchizedek. As a result, he merited particular mention to identify those who held the holy priesthood after the order of the Son of God. It was merited because his example and his ministry illustrated perfectly what the “holy order” was intended to accomplish.

It is designed to save others.

It was not to exalt the man.

It was not to bring attention to the man. It was not to amass praise or a following.

It was not to make the man a ruler over others. It was not to gain control or domination. It was not to subjugate or force compulsive obedience upon the souls of men.

It was to serve and exalt those to whom he ministered. His greatness was derived by the fruit of saved, exalted souls whom he saved. There is no record of a single sermon preached by Melchizedek. We have evidence of the following things he did with his authority and power:

- He received tithes from Abraham (Alma 13:15).
- He ordained Abraham (D&C 84:14).
- He saved an entire population from iniquity and abominations, and converted them to the truth (Alma 13:18).
- He made those he converted qualified to behold the Lord’s presence (Alma 13:11).

- He performed a form of ceremony with Abraham involving breaking bread and wine (Gen. 14:18–19).

He served. He blessed. He produced exalted souls. He was not great by what he received, but by what he did with what he received to bless and exalt others.

We would see this if we understood the scriptures. We would not be following a false tradition wherein men are famous, celebrity-like, fawned over, held up to acclaim and given the authority to exercise control over men. This is a false model that the Gentiles follow, and not the way in which true priesthood holders operate (Matt. 20:25–28). No-one possessing power from heaven will do this (D&C 121:36–37).

Now, if you make this mistake and follow in this false tradition, it will be to your own destruction. Alma has warned you.

What a marvelously relevant book this Book of Mormon is for our own day! It is almost as if they saw our time, knew what we would struggle with, and had teachings designed to let us see the error and repent. I truly believe that we can get closer to God by abiding the precepts of the Book of Mormon than we can from any other book! Joseph Smith was right.

COMMENTS:

DKD · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 6:31 AM

<http://scriptures.lds.org/en/jst/4>

JST Genesis 14:

²⁷ And thus, having been approved of God, he was ordained an high priest after the order of the covenant which God made with Enoch,

What is the “covenant which God made with Enoch?”

... those who are ordained after this order have power to be translated and stand in the presence of God?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 5:13 PM

The covenant God made with Enoch dealt with preserving the righteous, rather than destroying them in the flood, marking the covenant with the sign of the rainbow in the sky, and a promise that truth would remain on the earth to preserve mankind thereafter; including a return in the last days.

Enoch's City was translated because it is contrary to the order of heaven for God to slay the righteous. The wicked can slay them, but God cannot. Since Enoch had faith sufficient to hold at bay the armies of the wicked, and God could not slay them because it would be wrong for Him to do so, the solution was to give them an assignment which would allow them to be translated. Translation only happens when it involves a calling. Enoch's City was called to minister, and ultimately accompany the Lord at the time of His return. They were likely also the choir which announced His birth, just as they are the "angels" who will accompany the Lord at His return.

Without a calling requiring it, men are not translated. If the Lord offers, and a man asks for it, the result will be an assignment which will require translation to be fulfilled. It is not a generally occurring event, commonly available. It is not available at all without an accompanying calling necessitating the translation.

Brian Bowler · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 10:13 PM

Denver,

You said that Translation only comes with a calling, which is my understanding until I read some of James Custer material. I may be mis-speaking, but Consider this, James Custer states that after the Baptism of fire comes translation. To make it through the Tribulations that are coming (and bring ones own family through)he states translation will be necessary. Though he also states some will make it through without translation, but will suffer much, then join ZION. It sounded right when I read it, At least that a High Priest of the Holy Order of the Son would receive this to fulfill the calling of bringing his family through.

I think I may have answered some of my own questions writing this, as I feel that any translation would have a mission as you stated associated with it.

Thanks again for sharing, and if I am off please let me know. I am so hungry for Christ and his Light. I feel that without Him I will perish in this harsh wilderness. I know I must go on or I will sink.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 10:24 PM

Joseph Smith said that “Translated bodies are designed for future missions.” DHC 4:425.

To conflate translation to another circumstance (i.e., Second Coming) is to mistake the notion that translation is an often available transition. It is confined to those who need a body to minister, deliver keys, function in some call, provide some necessary service assigned to the minister. It is not merely some portion of normal progression of a mortal which would be available to all without regard to the Fall, which brings the promise that “ye shall surely die” as a consequence of this current state.

Translation is not done without a calling requiring it. It seems undesirable to me; based upon the totality of the plan of salvation.

JUNE 16, 2010

Alma 13:21–22

Now we see this startling continuation in Alma 13:21–22:

And now it came to pass that when Alma had said these words unto them, he stretched forth his hand unto them and cried with a mighty voice, saying: Now is the time to repent, for the day of salvation draweth nigh; Yea, and the voice of the Lord, by the mouth of angels, doth declare it unto all nations; yea, doth declare it, that they may have glad tidings of great joy; yea, and he doth sound these glad tidings among all his people, yea, even to them that are scattered abroad upon the face of the earth; wherefore they have come unto us.

Now we get to some things which the record does not fully disclose, but does allow those with eyes to see behold it. Be careful how you respond to this, because some correct answers are not going up if they cross a line. But think of the answers to these questions:

Why does he “stretch forth his hand?” What does that signify?

In what way would that become significant, even a sign that he is a true messenger?

Why does he now “cry with a mighty voice” to make the call?

What is a “mighty voice?” Is it distinguished by volume or is there something more and quite different about it? Importantly, it is not “loud” but instead “mighty.” Is that significant? How? Why?

What does it mean that “the Lord, by the mouth of angels, doth declare it?” Who is really speaking? Who is He speaking through? What person is delivering the message? How is Alma identifying himself in this “mighty cry” he makes?

Who are these angels sent to all nations?

What is the difference in this statement by Alma and the others who can speak with the tongue of angels? (2 Ne. 31:13–14 and 2 Ne. 32:2).

If one should possess such a right or commission, then whose words are they actually speaking?

Why do His sheep hear HIS voice? Even when spoken by another man or empowered priestly minister?

What does Alma actually say about his own authority as he delivers this warning? What can Alma lead you to inherit if you will heed his counsel and warning? How can we know he is a true messenger sent by the Lord?

If the Lord sends these messages and messengers to all His people, have they been sent to us? If so, where would we be able to find them and hear their message? How are we to know they are true ministers? Should I just trust that some institutional office and office holder is a guaranteed place in which to locate such a true minister? If it is always that convenient, why hasn't the Lord implemented that system before, instead of letting people have their free agency and permitting them to make mistakes? Why did the Lord allow Eli, Caiphus and Annas become High Priests? Why didn't He come up with this neat system before? [Clearly our system makes it so much easier. It throws God's fairness into question, since He made it so much harder for earlier Israelites to figure out where the truth was being proclaimed. I think the Lord must owe them an apology.]

Well, more can be said, but I leave it to you to reach your own conclusions about this startling comment coming from a true messenger. It makes one wonder why we've been missing it, as it has been before us for so many years.

COMMENTS:

JRB · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 9:12 PM

I think that when Alma 13:22 states "the voice of the Lord, by the mouth of angels, doeth declare it unto all nations" it does not necessarily mean that heavenly angels from God's presence come down to earth to declare the words of Christ. While the scripture certainly would encompass that definition, I believe it is generally referring to God's mortal messengers, like Alma, who are speaking with the tongues of angels. In other words these messengers are speaking the words of Christ; i.e., they are saying what Christ himself would say if He were present. This is more clearly set forth in Alma 32:2-3:

² Do you not remember that I said unto you that after ye had received the Holy Ghost ye could speak with the tongue of angels? And now, how could ye speak with the tongue of angels save it were by the Holy Ghost?

³ Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ. Wherefore, I said unto you, feast upon the words of Christ; for behold the words of Christ will tell you all things what you should do.

The angels sent to all nations are, in my opinion, God's authorized mortal servants, who have received the Holy Ghost and live such a life as to make them worthy to speak with the tongue of angels. Not all who are sent forth to teach God's word among all of God's children "speak with the tongue of angels". However those that do are speaking for Christ as his authorized messengers and say what Christ would say under the same circumstances. They therefore are angels according to Alma 32:3.

In D&C 130:4–5 Joseph Smith was giving instructions and asked the following question: "Is not the reckoning of God's time, angel's time, prophet's time, and man's time, according to the planet on which they reside?" In response to the question he responded:

"I answer, Yes. But there are no angels who minister to this earth BUT THOSE WHO DO BELONG or have belonged to it."

This answer seems to indicate that some angels of God are mortals who presently belong to the earth. It appears from Alma 32:2–3 that you fit within the definition of an angel if you "speak the words of Christ" by "the power of the Holy Ghost".

Jim Boud

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 9:21 PM

I regard the missionaries who taught me the Gospel as ministering angels, who spoke the words of Christ to me.

Anonymous · JUNE 16, 2010 AT 9:37 PM

I agree with the reference to the temple and the stretched out hand.

Mighty voice....mighty can be powerful, but also dignity or perhaps even divinity. So when Alma speaks with a mighty voice he is actually speaking for the Lord. There is a different authority here than just speaking the “words of Christ”. An authority in which he is commissioned to speak as though he were Christ, perhaps. A missionary can speak the words of Christ (tongue of angels) by the power of the Holy Ghost and it is the Holy Ghost who carries it to the hearts of those prepared to hear.

True minister...not only recognized for the signs given, but also the ability to do the work and minister to the people just as Christ did during his ministry.

Anonymous · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 2:40 AM

Thanks for all the comments. My question is why would Alma choose to reveal a sacred sign publicly to this group of people? What’s the lesson to be learned? JM

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 4:34 PM

“Why reveal a sacred sign?”

First, “reveal” may not be the case because: 1) it was not in connection with covenant-making, 2) it was accompanied with warning of judgment, not ceremonial in a Temple setting, 3) the audience may already know the meaning, in which case nothing is being “revealed”, though they may be reminded, and if not, then 4) if the audience did not know the meaning then nothing is “revealed” to the audience who, in ignorance, will not associate keys or meaning to it.

Further, even you do not know the sign used unless it has been shown to you by revelation. You can know that a sign was used, but which is not stated.

JUNE 17, 2010

Alma 13:23

And they are made known unto us in plain terms, that we may understand, that we cannot err; and this because of our being wanderers in a strange land; therefore, we are thus highly favored, for we have these glad tidings declared unto us in all parts of our vineyard.

This doctrine contained in the scriptures was understood by this audience. The same audience who was full of iniquity and abominations because of their false religious traditions. It was in “plain terms” in the scriptures, if one doesn’t “wrest” them to their destruction.

To “wrest” means to apply such twisted reasoning that the philosophies of men are mingled with scriptures so that the result is error.

The object of the scriptures is to make matters “plain” and prevent people from “erring” in their effort to follow God.

What is the difference between someone who with their scriptures before them, finds their message sufficiently “plain” and “understood” that they “cannot err,” and someone who has the same set of scriptures and engages in “iniquity” and “abominations” because of their false religious ideas? How can someone who is religious be certain they are not among those who err, but is instead among those who find holiness and develop faith to repent?

How do we know which side of this line we are on?

Both sides are religious. Both sides have their traditions and teachings. Both sides are sincere and following what they believe to be true. However, one is engaged in “abominations” because of their false beliefs, and the other has entertained angels and received such cleansing that their garments are white before God. One side does not understand their awful state. But the other is certain of their promise of exaltation and purity before God.

So, how certain are you? Do you know you are pure before God? Holy? Having entered into His holy order after the order of the Son of God? Or do you entertain some doubt about whether the traditions which you value are actually based on the truth? Is it possible that you “err” or “wrest” the scriptures as part of your religious tradition?

According to Alma, all of this care by the Lord is because they are “wanderers in a strange land.” Meaning that they are in this spot at this time because they have been taken from Jerusalem, the land of their forefathers, and placed in a new, promised land. They have been persecuted and evicted from land by their aggressive cousins. All of this to stir them up to repentance. It is God’s care for them, God’s careful tutelage of them, that leads them to receive this profound understanding. They are on God’s errand, and therefore entitled to God’s guidance. God is providing the “glad tidings” which will permit repentance to occur.

So, applying Alma’s teaching to us, we should ask ourselves if we have repented? If we have received a message from angels declaring glad tidings? If we have received what we would recognize as a message from the Lord by someone declaring repentance? Or do we have a weak tradition which assures us that we are right, while letting us entertain abominable (false, religious-based) errors in our beliefs?

These are troubling questions. Worth careful, solemn and ponderous thought. Perhaps even prayerful thought where we ask the Lord if these things are not true. And if we ask with real intent, He may make the truth known to us. At least that is what He has said through past messengers. I see no reason why it would not work for us. It’s at least worth a try, isn’t it?

Powerful teachings from Alma. But then again, one should expect nothing less from a true messenger bearing a holy order of power and authority after the order of the Son of God. A weak and vacillating voice telling us all is well and we're going to be fine just seems wrong by comparison. At least I would think so.

COMMENTS:

Doug · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 1:31 PM

Anonymous — In regards to your question about foolish traditions... there are several posts from Denver.

“The traditions of men”, part 1 (Continue this post for parts 2 and 3)

“Weep for Zion for Zion has fled”

There are other hints scattered throughout the blog. Also, if you search “traditions” you will find all sorts of relevant stuff. Hope that helps.

—Doug

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 17, 2010 AT 4:30 PM

I'd add to Doug's comment:...also look at “Constantine and Correlation” as a post.

JUNE 17, 2010

Alma 13:24

“For behold, angels are declaring it unto many at this time in our land; and this is for the purpose of preparing the hearts of the children of men to receive his word at the time of his coming in his glory.”

If “angels are declaring it unto many” at the time of Alma's remarks, why are they not declaring it unto many now? Are we any less important than they were? If we are as important, then why are we not hearing of this now?

What is the definition of “angels” who are doing this “declaring” to “many?” Was Alma included? If so, what is it that turns a man from a mortal to ministering angel? Can a mortal become a ministering angel? How would that occur? What would it require? Can we thereby entertain angels unawares? (Heb. 13:2).

If an angel comes to visit with a man, gives him a message, and the man then declares it, are they both made “angels” by this message? Are “angels” always either deceased or unborn? If they are, then why did Joseph teach that “there are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it?” (D&C 130:5). If angels “do belong” to the earth are they still mortal?

How would you recognize such a person? Would it be the same way the Lord was known before He showed Himself to the disciples on the Road to Emmaus? (Luke 24:32).

If it is the “hearts” which are to be prepared, then does this relate to the disciples “hearts burning within them” as the Lord spoke to them while in the way? Why do His sheep hear His voice? How do they hear his voice?

Why is preparing “the hearts” enough to prepare a people to “receive His word?” Is it more important to “receive His word” than to receive His person? Why would that be so?

Why are we unable to receive Him in His glory until after our hearts have first “received His word?”

It is more difficult to be taught than to have faith for miracles (3 Ne. 17:2–8). Even should you behold the Lord “in His glory” just as the Nephites, it would still be more difficult for you to have the faith to be taught by Him and accept what He has to teach than for Him to perform a miracle.

How alike all the generations of men are. How very relevant, therefore, these words remain for us!

JUNE 18, 2010

Alma 13:25

And now we only wait to hear the joyful news declared unto us by the mouth of angels, of his coming; for the time cometh, we know not how soon. Would to God that it might be in my day; but let it be sooner or later, in it I will rejoice.

This comment is made in expectation that the Nephites will be told by heaven as soon as Christ is born. "... we only wait to hear the joyful news declared unto us by the mouth of angels..."

Angels declared it to the shepherds near Bethlehem (Luke 2:8–15). Alma expected a similar announcement.

"We only wait to hear the joyful news." He EXPECTED the news to be shared. He knew they would have the announcement. He EXPECTED the angels to declare the arrival. He knew heaven would not leave these people without a herald of the news.

Imagine that. A prophet confident that the Lord will do nothing without first making known to the people His secrets! (Amos 3:7). It is one thing to teach this concept. It is another to live it. Alma is living it. Therefore angels did come and did make things known to him.

What does it take to have faith like this?

If you do not possess this kind of faith, can you be saved? Moroni taught that the absence of such faith condemns the people who no longer have such things happening among them (Moroni 7:36–37).

Do we expect the Lord to tell us about things by the mouth of angels before they happen? Or do we expect the Lord will tell someone inside the bowels of an organization, and we will get some announcement through the prescribed channels, thereby relieving us from obtaining the ministry of angels? Then why is the visitation of angels an Aaronic (lowest) priesthood key? (D&C 84:26). This is the right of young people beginning at age 12, mind you. Should we expect the angelic heralds to come to everyone, 12 year of age or older? Why or why not?

Alma knows it will happen. But he does not know when it will happen. He would like it to have been in his day. It was not. But whether it was to happen in his life or afterwards, he nonetheless had faith, knew angels, awaited the message, and rejoiced at the idea of His coming.

How meek! How faithful! No wonder such a man possessed and knew the details of this holy order from God. No wonder he could teach with authority about it. How great the lesson he has left for any who will take seriously the message he taught.

Faith of this sort should be the common heritage of the Lord's people. It was never intended that an elite, distant hierarchy would be put between God and His people. If you are His, then you should KNOW Him. If you do not know Him, then you are not His. Heed His voice when you hear it. No matter how surprising a place or person from which it may come. If it is His voice, then you have heard Him.

COMMENTS:

EC · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 9:55 AM

Couldn't this verse be applicable to us, in our day?

There are websites, books, seminars not a few devoted to discussing, studying, speculating and arguing LDS prophecy and when/what events will precede the Lord's coming in glory.

IMO, they miss the point entirely. Instead, we should be pursuing (and expecting) our own "second coming" so to speak and not solely wait to see the Lord with everybody else.

I suspect the Lord is much more anxious for such an event to happen in our personal lives than we are.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 3:39 PM

EC: I agree. This is why I spend so little time on the subject of the Second Coming and so much time about the fullness of the Gospel. The more important doctrine is that which will save your soul. The less is the unfolding history we're currently seeing and shortly will see. It is comparatively so far less important that it merely diverts attention from the real challenge before us.

JUNE 18, 2010

Email addresses

For anyone who has asked for the paper discussing Joseph Smith's King Follett Discourse, I need email addresses. The email addresses will not be published nor used for anything other than sending the paper.

Thanks.

CM

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 10:19 AM

If you send the email in your comment, I will get the email and not publish the comment. That way your email stays private.

CM

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 1:29 PM

Brandon,

That is the paper.

CM

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 1:43 PM

GM

I need an email address.

CM

PS — EVERYBODY

This is not JOSEPH SMITH's discourse. You can all find that yourselves. This is a paper about Joseph's King Follett discourse.

CM

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 18, 2010 AT 7:02 PM

Some have been sent the talk. It uses comments which Joseph began in the King Follett Discourse, then revised a few days prior to his death (interrupted by rain), to set out the doctrine involved in the pre-earth identities of mankind.

— Denver

JUNE 18, 2010

Alma 13:26

And it shall be made known unto just and holy men, by the mouth of angels, at the time of his coming, that the words of our fathers may be fulfilled, according to that which they have spoken concerning him, which was according to the spirit of prophecy which was in them.

Here is a simple, but compound thought. Alma is saying this: There were “fathers” who recorded words of prophecy.

The “fathers” had the “spirit of prophecy which was in them.”

These words of the prophetic fathers promised that “the mouths of angels” will declare Christ’s birth into the world. The declaration of Christ’s birth will come to “just and holy men” by these angels.

So, Alma is assured that the promises will be fulfilled. He knows this because the fathers who revealed the promises were trustworthy and had the spirit of prophecy.

Now comes the real question: What does it mean that “just and holy men” will be the ones to whom the angels will come and make the declaration?

Is this a description of those who hold the same priesthood as Melchizedek discussed by Alma? If so, then does access to that priestly order after the order of the Son of God put the possessors into contact with heavenly messengers? Can a person hold that authority and not receive messages from angels from time to time? Who is it among us who begins an address by referring to the angel who visited them the preceding night? (See, e.g., 2 Ne. 10:3; also 3 Ne. 7:15).

I have to assume that this is the kind of information that would be generally known among faithful followers of Christ's Gospel. After all, Alma is speaking to apostates, non-believers and critics who hold a false and abominable religion. One would expect that such things are not really so sacred that they can't be preached. Why would it be "off limits" to us and be something freely declared as part of a missionary effort in the Book of Mormon? So assuming it ought to be known, if it is occurring, is this among us? Where? Who has received these angelic messengers? Where are these "just and holy" men who entertain angelic ministers?

Or is it that we don't expect angels, so we don't entertain them? Perhaps they come and we don't notice them? Perhaps we are blind that we cannot see, deaf because we will not hear, and our minds are darkened because we will not abide the teachings of the Book of Mormon? What is going on with us, when we compare and measure ourselves against this message from Alma?

Should I be concerned?

Is all well?

Will we endure sound doctrine? (Cf. 2 Tim. 4:3).

JUNE 19, 2010

Alma 13:27

And now, my brethren, I wish from the inmost part of my heart, yea, with great anxiety even unto pain, that ye would hearken unto my words, and cast off your sins, and not procrastinate the day of your repentance;

This is the reality of those who hold this holy order. They feel absolute charity toward others. It causes them “great anxiety even unto pain” to consider how others might be lost. This was exactly the same charity that motivated the born-again sons of Mosiah to perform their missionary labors at great personal peril (Mosiah 28:3).

When you hear such a man after this order speaking in plain, even blunt words, it is not because they are unkind. It is not because they are uncharitable or brash. It is because they are filled with care, concern, and longing to share eternal life with those who would otherwise be lost.

Look at his words. What does it mean that Alma’s motivation now comes from “the inmost part of my heart?” How is it possible that Alma can have such concern that it causes him “great anxiety even unto pain?” Why does he long so for others to “hearken unto his words?”

Is this motivation for Alma the same as he described Melchizedek having?

Is the plea to “cast off your sins” the same plea which Melchizedek made to his people?

If this is the plea of both Melchizedek and Alma, and it is a burden which causes pain for fear that the mission would fail, where do we find such souls today crying repentance? Are they among us? Do we have ministers using the words of angels, declaring a message from heaven, who suffer anxiety and pain at the thought we will not repent?

Are you one of them?

If you are not, then why procrastinate? Why not also join in the process? All that is required is repentance to make yourself clean, followed by keeping the word of God until you entertain angels, receive your assignment, and having been commissioned to then proclaim repentance to others.

Alma is inviting people to join the order after the Son of God, becoming thereby sons of God themselves. This is the great message of the Book of Mormon. I've discussed in six books the mysteries of godliness, using primarily the Book of Mormon as the scriptural source to explain these doctrines. It is the most correct book we have to set out these doctrines and inform us of the process. It is interesting how little of that message we've uncovered as yet.

So let us proceed...

JUNE 19, 2010

Alma 13:28

But that ye would humble yourselves before the Lord, and call on his holy name, and watch and pray continually, that ye may not be tempted above that which ye can bear, and thus be led by the Holy Spirit, becoming humble, meek, submissive, patient, full of love and all long-suffering;

Alma's formula is quite direct and clear:

"Humble yourselves:" Without humility you are not teachable. Humility and the capacity to accept new truth are directly related. This is the character flaw that prevents the Lord from teaching the Nephites when He appeared to them. They THOUGHT they already knew things. Therefore nothing that contradicted their false notions would be accepted. Christ advised the Nephites who saw Him descend from heaven to go prepare themselves for His teaching. "

Therefore, go ye unto your homes, and ponder upon the things which I have said, and ask of the Father, in my name, that ye may understand, and prepare your minds for the morrow, and I come unto you again. (3 Ne. 17:3)

This was the Lord telling these witnesses that they were not humble enough to be taught—even by Him! So the first requirement is no small matter. Are you really humble? Can you accept truth if it is taught to you? Even if it contradicts your traditions? Even if it alienates you from family, friends, comfortable social associations, your neighbors? (Matt. 19:29). See, humbling yourself is not just some droop-faced, hang-dog expression to wear on your countenance. Rather it is opening your heart up to higher things.

“Call upon God:” Not just prayer. Call upon Him. To call is to invite Him to come. How do you call Him? By devoting yourself, in humility, to living every principle He has taught to you through His messengers and in His scriptures. It’s not a laundry list of “to-do’s.” It is meekness and prayerful watching; humbling yourself and accepting what His spirit will advise you to do. When He testifies to you that you are hearing a true principle, accept it. No matter the effect it may have upon your life. Change your life, but never abandon His truths. Call, listen, and obey what you are told. Never close that line of communication. Don’t trust a message which does not come from Him.

“Watch and pray:” Answers may come in many ways. Be watchful so you don’t miss them when they are given to you. Pray that you might be seeking, preparing your mind to behold what He sends. Stay tuned, and stay attuned. Without such diligence you will miss His messages, that come sometimes frequently, but from unexpected sources.

“That ye may not be tempted above that which ye can bear:” Implicit in this is that you may be tempted beyond what you can bear. So how do you avoid falling? Does humility and calling upon God and watching and praying insure that you can avoid an excess of temptation? How would they all go together? In particular, how would being “humble” be a protection against this kind of temptation?

Alma connects all this together with the word: “thus.” Meaning as a consequence of the foregoing. As a result of what he’s just told you. As a product of this approach, you will then “be led by the Holy Spirit.” You can’t do what comes next without being so led. It isn’t in you. Not without help from within through the Holy Spirit.

So, if you do all the above, and then acquire the Holy Spirit to be your guide, then it follows that you will “become humble, meek, submissive, patient, full of love and all long-suffering.” You won’t be imitating humility, but you will be humble with the Holy Spirit’s assistance. You won’t feign meekness, but you will acquire the power to be meek (in the sense it is explained in Beloved Enos). You won’t pretend to submission, patience, love and long suffering, but you will be these things as a result of the Spirit within you. This will be your character. Not as the world understands such things, but through the power of the Spirit to lay hold upon such things.

Formulas like this one are inspired statements, providing a road map to the Lord’s methods of changing lives. Alma is making such a declaration and invitation in this sermon. It is amazing, really. How succinctly he cuts to the core of the matter.

COMMENTS:

AV · JUNE 20, 2010 AT 2:39 PM

I agree this is an amazing & wonderful verse. It teaches us so many vital truths.

For it is so true that unless we do humble ourselves & actually plead for God to stand beside us & teach us all things that we should do through the Holy Spirit & fill our hearts with his perfect love, so we are able to suffer long, we will surely be tempted more than we can bear.

And without God & the Holy Spirit & perfect love, we will heed & listen to the mocking of those around us who do not have the Spirit & who are deceived & we will succumb to the temptation to break our sacred covenants & take the easier & even forbidden path, without even knowing we have.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 21, 2010 AT 9:46 PM

JDS has left a new comment on your post “Alma 13:28”:

AV, I am sure that some who you believe to mock you actually feel Alma-like pain in your behalf and are only interested in your happiness. If I believed a person was suffering from misunderstanding and unnecessary pain and suffering, I would do all in my power, in the spirit of Alma, to preach repentance to that person, which really means, to persuade that person to receive God’s perfect light on the subject. Do I know what that light is personally. No!

In no way would I want to see anyone’s pain be mocked; however, I would like to better understand from someone who has experienced this, the doctrine that supports his experience. Wouldn’t you want to, if it is true? Perhaps that truth alone offers hope and relief that only God can offer.

JUNE 20, 2010

Alma 13:29

“Having faith on the Lord; having a hope that ye shall receive eternal life; having the love of God always in your hearts, that ye may be lifted up at the last day and enter into his rest.”

Here you have faith, hope and charity (or love). You only have a fraction of the understanding of what faith in the Lord means until you have done as Alma is explaining here. True “faith” which is a principle of power, is acquired by the method Alma is preaching.

Hope that one can receive eternal life is not the vague optimism that it might happen—it is a certitude. You have the promise. You know you will have eternal life. You haven't died and entered into the resurrected state yet. Between the time of the promise and the time you leave this sphere, you have hope. (The way it is used here is defined in Eighteen Verses.)

When God has promised you eternal life then you have "the love of God always in your heart." It is there through the indelible promise He has made. He has changed your status. He has declared through His own voice what great thing you have become. Therefore it is by knowledge alone that such love resides in the heart of man.

This life will end. But you will be raised up. You know when you are lifted up in the last day it will be the power of God that raises you. Such power as God employs to lift a man up confers upon such a person eternal life. The promise alone is a power, conferring the right to lay hold on eternal life when the moment comes. No power in earth or hell can rescind God's word (D&C 1:38). It cannot be done. Therefore, you have knowledge that you will not only be raised from the dead, but "lifted up" as well. Powers, principalities, dominions, exaltations are all promised as yours.

This is how you attain to "rest." It is the "rest of the Lord" as soon as the promise is made by Him. It is His rest when you inherit it in the last day. The words of the promise are enough to guarantee the inheritance. Therefore once the promise is made it is true enough that you have entered into the rest of the Lord. However, until you depart this life, you remain subject to the difficulties of mortality. Graduation is assured, but you must tarry for a little while here.

As one possessing this hope, being filled with faith, hope and charity, it becomes your responsibility to raise up others. Hence the ministry of Alma, and Alma's exposition on the ministry of Melchizedek. God does send true messengers. They can lead you in the way of life and salvation.

JUNE 21, 2010

Alma 13:30

“And may the Lord grant unto you repentance, that ye may not bring down his wrath upon you, that ye may not be bound down by the chains of hell, that ye may not suffer the second death.”

Alma’s closing remark here is a prayer. He is asking that the Lord “grant unto you repentance.” This is an interesting cause-and-effect way to state the proposition. We cause it by our desire and willingness to become humble and repent. The Lord causes it because without His atoning sacrifice it could not be done.

We receive the effect because we are cleansed by our acts, humility and willingness to accept what is offered. The Lord receives the effect because He has allowed us to join Him in being pure and holy. He acquires a brother (or, more correctly a son). But He has no jealousy, allowing His brothers/sons to sit upon His own throne (Rev. 3:21). He wants to have “all things in common” with us.

Alma’s petition goes further to ask that the wrath of God not be poured out upon these people to whom he is preaching. There are, of course, two levels of wrath. One is temporal—here and now. The wicked are often punished here by letting them pursue their own evil course until it destroys them. Repentance in that sense relieves them of the physical, emotional, social, military, economic, and interpersonal disasters they bring upon themselves by their ruinous pursuit of destructive behavior.

The other is eternal—meaning coming after this life. That second “wrath” is a result of leaving this life with accountability for what happened here, and the lack of preparation for the moment when “judgment” is rendered. That “judgment” consists of you finally facing reality. When you are in His presence you can accurately measure the difference between what you are and what He wanted you to become—i.e., like Him. The gulf is so great that you would rather be in hell than in the presence of a just and holy being when you are stained with the blood and sins of your generation (Mormon 9:4).

I have been in the presence of President Ronald Reagan. I met with President Spencer W. Kimball at the law school at BYU when he would come to visit with his son, who was a criminal law professor there. I shook hands and spoke with Chief Justice Warren Burger for about a half hour in the law library at BYU. I have appeared at the US Supreme Court, the Utah Supreme Court, argued before Federal and State courts in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Texas, California, Virginia, Washington DC, New York, Oregon, Nevada, Montana and New Mexico. I have seen Congress in session. Although a boy at the time, I was there when President Kennedy came to Berlin and spoke at Checkpoint Charlie, giving his “Ich Bin Ein Berliner” speech. I have seen many other men who have shaped history. But there simply is no comparison between these mere children, these insubstantial and powerless creatures, and the holiness, power, majesty and glory of the one True Man, clothed in light. You may see what the world reckons as a “great man” and think he was impressive. But you come from the presence of glory with only one conclusion: Surely man is nothing, which I had never before supposed (Moses 1:10).

It is awful, fearful and dreadful to be in the presence of God. You realize the horror of your own darkness (Gen. 15:7–18). You cry out with the realization that you are unclean, living your life among the unclean, and you are not ready for His presence (Isa. 6:5). You are not prepared, and all your careful pretensions dissolve until you stand naked, revealed, hollow and unworthy to stand in His presence.

How, then, does a man stand in His presence? Through the merits and mercy and grace of this, our Lord (2 Ne. 2:8). If your mouth is unclean, He will use an ordinance to cleanse your lips (Isa. 6:6–7). If you are covered by the blood and sins of your generation, He will cleanse them (John 13:5–13). If you cannot stand, He will raise you up with His own hand (Daniel 10:5–10). He is the God of mercy. Your discomfort is relieved by what He does, and this not of yourself, lest you should boast. There is nothing in you from which to boast other than the merit and mercy and love and sacrifice given to you by Him.

How can He love so? It defies explanation. Words fail. You can search your lifetime through every word you have ever seen or heard—nothing comes close to being able to describe it. It cannot be spoken.... Too sacred for language to capture. Beyond our power. So, you are left saying only: “Come, see.”

How, then, can a man come to the judgment and not feel the wrath which they might have overcome by His grace and mercy? Through the merits of Him bestowing upon a man the power to stand in His presence.

Alma’s pain at the thought of these people perishing was real. He was powerless to bring them to Christ. That power consists only in the authorized and truthful declaration of an invitation to come to Him. But the choice remained in those who, having heard, must decide for themselves whether they will repent. They were free to choose iniquity and abominations. Alma was only able to invite.

The invitation, if rejected, will cause those who die to die yet again. The way is broad which leads to such eternal deaths (D&C 132:25).

JUNE 21, 2010

Alma 13:31

“And Alma spake many more words unto the people, which are not written in this book.”

This is often the case. John’s Gospel ended with this observation:

“And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written (John 21:25). Records are incomplete. We do not have the full account of Christ’s acts and words. We don’t have Alma’s either.

Mormon was the editor of this portion of the Book of Mormon. He was the one who determined to omit portions what Alma said to these people on this occasion. From what Mormon left for us to read, his intent is clear. He wanted us to understand the bigger picture of God’s dealings with man, man’s possession of priestly power, and the importance of repentance and defeating religious error. Mormon had seen us, and included specific warnings addressed to us, the Gentiles. He cautioned us about the Book of Mormon as follows:

And then, O ye Gentiles, how can ye stand before the power of God, except ye shall repent and turn from your evil ways? Know ye not that ye are in the hands of God? Know ye not that he hath all power, and at his great command the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll? Therefore, repent ye, and humble yourselves before him, lest he shall come out in justice against you—lest a remnant of the seed of Jacob shall go forth among you as a lion, and tear you in pieces, and there is none to deliver. (Mormon 5:22–24)

Mormon knew the book would initially be in the hands of the Gentiles. So you can know we are identified as “Gentiles” in the Book of Mormon. Also, Joseph Smith declared in the dedicatory prayer for the Kirtland Temple that we are identified with the Gentiles (D&C 109:59–60). Although Brigham Young and President Joseph Fielding Smith taught that Joseph was a “pure blooded Ephramite.” (Doc. Sal. Vol 3:253–54).

The selected materials that Mormon gave to us were targeted to the purpose of the Book of Mormon. The title page (written by Moroni) tells us the purpose:

Written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile—Written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation—Written and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed—To come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof—Sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by way of the Gentile.

Gentiles would receive, translate and disseminate the Book of Mormon. But the Gentiles are prophesied to fail in their faith. They are to become full of their own abominations. When they reject the fullness of the Gospel, then it will be taken from them and given back to the remnant (3 Ne. 1:10–11).

Mormon is using the message from Alma to provide to the Gentiles (who will reject the invitation), an opportunity to understand the fullness which was offered to them. It was intended to remove from them the excuse that they were not given an opportunity and did not understand. Therefore, the Book of Mormon's primary purpose, to make the Gentiles aware and accountable for their failure, is accomplished by Mormon including this portion of Alma's teachings. The fact that other portions were left out mean that they would not have contributed to the task before Mormon.

A few of the Gentiles happily may be numbered with the remnant (3 Ne. 16:13). That is conditioned upon their repentance. The degree and completion of that repentance is shown by this portion of the sermon by Alma which Mormon preserved for us.

We are on notice. We are accountable for how we react to that notice. For the most part, the expectation is that we tell one another in reassuring words that "all is well." and that "Zion prospers," and to generally allow our souls to be cheated while we are led carefully down to hell (2 Ne. 28:21-25). Still, some few will follow Christ, despite the leaders' teachings that will cause them to err (2 Ne. 28:14).

The Book of Mormon is a record that will be used as evidence we have been warned. In plain language and with sufficient truth to hold us all accountable, this is the standard by which we are to find our way back to the Lord in this last dispensation before His return. We remain, of course, under condemnation because we are unwilling to do that (D&C 84:57).

What a great and terrible book. What an alarming message. It is no wonder we neglect it so.

CHAPTER 6

3 Nephi 16

JUNE 22, 2010

On to 3 Nephi

To put Alma's teachings into a larger perspective you need to understand the pre-earth life. The "picture" you have in your head about that is quite skewed. I've tried to unravel it and reconstruct the correct picture in a 42 page long paper. Because of its length, it is not appropriate to post it here. However, I am willing to let readers have a copy. It is copyrighted to prevent it from being changed and then attributed to me in an altered form. I am willing to be accountable for every word I speak, write or even think. I am not, however, willing to be accountable for what you think I said, think I wrote, or interpret on your own. Therefore it is copyrighted to prevent an alteration from becoming attributed to me.

If you want a copy, send a comment with a return email address to any post on the blog and you'll get a return email with the attachment. If, after you have read the paper, you want to comment, then the comments should be put on this blog entry.

The pre-earth life did not just consist of spirits who were born to a single set of heavenly parents, living happily before coming here, followed by a rebellion led by an older brother. It was far more complex than that. There were those who had exalted themselves before they were born. The definition of exaltation is given in D&C 132. Joseph Smith had the definition of exaltation, as well as the Book of Abraham, when he made the remark. He knew that to be exalted required they be sealed in a marriage.

There were those who were “exalted” and who are called “Gods” in Abraham 4. The wording of the scripture is set out in detail and explained in detail in the paper you can get if you ask. You read that to finish off the missing pre-earth gap in Alma’s teaching.

The word “Elohim” is plural. It is plural for reasons explained in the paper.

As I have said in a comment on the Alma 13 materials, I do not think that deep doctrine is what is covered in the caution to not “cast pearls before swine.” I think that comment is reserved only to ordinances. Those are to be kept from being profaned. Deep doctrine is meant to be preached, proclaimed and understood. Without it, men’s souls are not saved. And by “men’s souls” I mean mankind, men and women. All must hear the fullness and be offered it in order to make this life meaningful and fulfill its purpose. When the doctrine is ignored or suppressed, then those who had a responsibility to proclaim it will be damned for their refusal to sound the alarm.

Generally the gentiles are expected in the prophecies to reject the fullness of the Gospel and walk away from it. Therefore, as a gentile, you should be concerned that you do not.

Because we need to understand our precarious and limited opportunity as gentiles, I am going to move to Christ’s words in 3 Nephi Chapter 16, beginning at verse 7. That will be the next series of posts.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 8:41 AM

I guess I don't see the importance of knowing one's pre-earth status when the risks of mortality are unconditional. I can see some pride popping up with those who may think to themselves, "I was a god before! No wonder ... (this or that) ... No wonder my wife does not understand me... no wonder my ward does not appreciate me, etc. etc."

There is a reason for the veil. My pre-earth status is irrelevant as far as I am concerned. All are now on equal footing with equal opportunity for exaltation or damnation.

Anonymous · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 9:57 AM

Anonymous,

Just a thought... If you were a God before this life, your wife would have been a Goddess, for you can only become a God together, so instead of looking down on your wife, such knowledge may help you see her in a higher light.

I know that many of us made covenants to our spouse & God in the life before, to do certain things, like save our spouse & children if they need it.

How unthinkable to get back to heaven & not have kept those covenants & to have to watch our spouse or children doomed to a painful eternity alone in a lower kingdom because we were not valiant to our covenants we made there or here to help them like we promised.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 10:18 AM

In one sense it does not matter at all. That is, once you are in mortality the challenge and responsibility is exactly the same for everyone here. We all must get back on the same terms and same requirements. Therefore nothing which went before matters.

In another sense it matters a great deal. Without altering the burden we have to follow the Gospel of Christ, we are permitted to understand context, understand a greater setting and a more distant view of just how long, how great and how involved the salvation of men's souls truly is as an eternal commitment from those who love us.

We appreciate the condescension of Christ. We need it to return. However, there were others such as Abraham who also condescended. Christ rescued Abraham, to be sure. But Abraham's role and condescension, Abraham's love and generosity, are also reason to take particular note and have gratitude.

This greater context would only make a fool proud. It would make a wise soul grateful and humbled. I write for wisdom's sake. I cannot, however, prevent fools from also reading what I make publicly available.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 4:33 PM

There's a comment from the Moderator early on in which it was explained that the comments are not selected based upon doctrinal accuracy. They are just comments. I don't vouch for their truthfulness. Sometimes a comment is worth considering, even if it is rejected by the reader. I only put into a post what I believe or know to be true.

There are a lot of questions which don't get put up on the blog, but produce answers which restate the question and then respond. That is an often-occurring event, if you read from the beginning of the blog to the present. Some later posts are driven by earlier discussions or comments. Therefore, some of the later things are best understood by reading the blog from the start forward chronologically.

Personal comments or inappropriate praise is not put up, or if my wife puts it up I will ask her to later take it down. Some have praise (which I dislike) but also have some other important comment and make it onto the blog—as a result of which I grit my teeth and defer to my wife, who is the one mechanically maintaining the blog. If not for her efforts, the blog wouldn't exist. I don't have time to do it—apart from writing the posts which she then puts up.

It is my wife, by the way, who always puts in the links.

JUNE 22, 2010

The Talk

“A talk about the first three words spoken by the players in the Endowment”

This is the talk. This is the talk referring to the King Follett Discourse and this is the talk discussing the pre-existence. If you have received this then you are good to go. If not, be patient, you will. Now go forth and read—and discuss.

CM

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 3:26 PM

Annette,

I need an email address. Thanks :)

CM (comment moderator)

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 23, 2010 AT 7:49 AM

Joshua,

Leave your email address in the comments. I will not post the comment, but will then have your email address and will send the talk.

For those of you who don't have it yet, it may be a few days. Please be patient.

Thank you,

CM (comment moderator)

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 24, 2010 AT 9:11 PM

Michael A. Cleverly,

I keep getting a delivery failure notice for your email address. Could you send it again? Or another one?

Thanks,

CM

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 29, 2010 AT 8:33 AM

Sarah,

Could you send your email address again, please?

Thank you,

CM

JUNE 22, 2010

3 Nephi 16:7

Behold, because of their belief in me, saith the Father, and because of the unbelief of you, O house of Israel, in the latter day shall the truth come unto the Gentiles, that the fulness of these things shall be made known unto them.

This is a teaching from the first day of Christ's visit with the Nephites. It is a quote from Christ.

The time frame in which the Gentiles were to have "belief in [Christ,]" and merit a special blessing as a result, was the time immediately following the Judean ministry. The Gospel would be taken to the Gentiles and they would believe. The Jews were going to reject Him and oppose His faith, the Gentiles would welcome it and have belief.

Now the words Christ spoke and Nephi's record preserved were from "the Father." Christ's explanation of these prophecies originate with His Father.

Gentiles will believe. Moreover, the "house of Israel" will not believe in Him. The result of that acceptance and rejection is the juxtaposition of the roles of Gentiles and Israel.

Whereas, the Gospel came to the Jews first, and by the Jews it was transmitted to the Gentiles, later the opposite will occur. The pattern will reverse. It will go from the last back to the first. (It is an historic chiasm.)

Accordingly, the Gentiles will be the ones to whom the restoration of the “fullness” will come in the latter day. The reward for earlier faithfulness is later recognition and reward.

Now, it should take no amount of brilliant insight to realize that the restoration involved Joseph Smith. A man of English descent. May have some Israelite blood in him from the earlier diaspora of the Lost Ten Tribes, but he is nevertheless the one through whom the restoration was brought. He is necessarily identified as a “Gentile” in this prophecy by Christ, given by the Father. If Joseph Smith is NOT a Gentile, then the whole promise of the Father and word of the Son is defeated. Therefore, you may know for a surety that the Gentiles are not those nasty non-members. It is US. WE are the Gentiles who receive the first offer in the last offering.

So it was that the Father determined and Christ taught that the Gentiles would be the ones to whom the Gospel message would first come in our day. Now we have it. (Or had it anyway.)

This movement from Israel to Gentile and from Gentile to Israel is evening the playing field. This is balancing out the record of history. It is not that one is more favored than another. Rather it is that each one will have a suitable turn and opportunity to receive what the Lord offers. In the end, no people will be able to say the opportunities were unfair, unequal, or more challenging for one than for another. [I leave it to you to determine why that is so when lives come and go across generations and one dispensation may include different people than another. It raises the question as to how certain we should be about some of our premises. That, however, is too far afield at the moment. And it may not matter anyway. Today is the day of salvation, not yesterday or tomorrow. So we should confine ourselves to solving the problem we face at the moment.]

The promise is that the “fullness of these things” will come to the Gentiles. What things? What does it mean that the “fullness” will be coming to the Gentiles? Have the Gentiles in fact received it?

If we received it, what have we done with it? Do we still have it? If not, how do I know that? What will happen if we have not retained that fullness?

Fortunately for us, Christ will answer all those questions as He moves along in the message He delivers here.

COMMENTS:

Michael A. Cleverly · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 4:23 PM

“Therefore, you may know for a surety that the Gentiles are not those nasty non-members. It is US. WE are the Gentiles who receive the first offer in the last offering.”

I completely agree that WE (Latter-day Saints) are the Gentiles who have received and accepted the first offer in the last offering.

But you seem to be saying that “non-members” are not to be classified as gentiles. A Venn-diagram would not show overlap.

Is Gentile/House of Israel not an either-or (or at least an either-and-or) condition?

Clearly modern Jews and Lehi’s descendants are properly considered House of Israel. What are the masses of historic-Christians of American & European descent (who are neither Jewish nor Lamanite) if they are not Gentiles? Is there a third group they can be classified as?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 22, 2010 AT 4:36 PM

The “others” are not necessarily a focus for the Book of Mormon prophecies. They inherit the blessing of being here, as Nephi foresaw. They are blessed to be on the land, but they are not given anything other than a conditional possession. They are those who get offered the restored Gospel when it returned, and if they accept it they become part of the prophetic subject. When, however, they reject the offered restoration, then they are background and will be swept away just as the Saints who reject the fullness of the Gospel will be swept away.

We'll be discussing some of that in upcoming posts.

JUNE 23, 2010

3 Nephi 16:8

But wo, saith the Father, unto the unbelieving of the Gentiles—for notwithstanding they have come forth upon the face of this land, and have scattered my people who are of the house of Israel; and my people who are of the house of Israel have been cast out from among them, and have been trodden under feet by them;

So now the time frame is the latter day when the Gentiles have been given this restoration of the fullness. This comment moves forward from the reasons of the restoration to the Gentiles (earlier faithfulness) to the time when the Gentiles have received the fullness.

To make the time frame abundantly clear to both the Nephites and to us, the Lord explains in passing that the Gentiles will come to “this land.” The full description of them coming is set out in the earlier prophecy of Nephi as set out at length in First Nephi (1 Nephi 13 & 14). But here Christ reminds the audience that when the Gentiles come, they will “scatter my people who are of the house of Israel.”

Gentiles certainly did come. They did scatter the remnants who were on the American continent. Not only did they scatter them, but they also “cast out” and “trodden down” those populations who were here when the Gentiles arrived. Smallpox wiped out the Great Plains Indians. There were an estimated 20 million plus Plains Indians when Columbus arrived. Smallpox all but annihilated them.

So few survived that by the time of the western push of the United States, it was believed the Great Plains had never been populated.

To say they were “trodden underfoot” is descriptive. The native populations were destroyed. They were conquered. They died. Their remains returned to the earth upon which the Gentiles trod.

You must keep this image in mind as you read about the future of the Gentiles being trodden underfoot. We will get to that later in this same prophecy by Christ.

“Wo” is pronounced upon those Gentiles who are ‘unbelieving’ toward the Gospel. This is confirmed again in Section 76, describing those who are Telestial. They are religious, and follow even true messengers. However, they follow, believe in, trust and hope for salvation from the messenger, but fail to have faith, believe in, trust and receive salvation through Christ. They even claim to follow Christ. But they fall short of having a saving testimony of Him. It warns:

And the glory of the telestial is one, even as the glory of the stars is one; for as one star differs from another star in glory, even so differs one from another in glory in the telestial world; For these are they who are of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas. These are they who say they are some of one and some of another—some of Christ and some of John, and some of Moses, and some of Elias, and some of Esaias, and some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch; But received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets, neither the everlasting covenant. (D&C 76:98–101)

There is a great gulf between those who claim they follow Christ and those who receive the “testimony of Jesus.” There is a difference between claiming to follow a recognized authority such as Paul, Apollos, Cephas, Moses, Elias, Esaias, Isaiah, John or Enoch on the one hand and “receiving the prophets” on the other.

How easy it is to quote a dead prophet. How unlikely it always is to recognize a living one.

What is meant then by saying “they are of Christ” on the one hand, and saying, “receive not the Gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus?” on the other. How do you reconcile these two things? One damns to the Telestial Kingdom, the other exalts.

How perilous it is for the latter day Gentiles!

JUNE 23, 2010

3 Nephi 16:9

And because of the mercies of the Father unto the Gentiles, and also the judgments of the Father upon my people who are of the house of Israel, verily, verily, I say unto you, that after all this, and I have caused my people who are of the house of Israel to be smitten, and to be afflicted, and to be slain, and to be cast out from among them, and to become hated by them, and to become a hiss and a byword among them—

Notice once again the Lord’s motivation for speaking these words: The Father’s “mercies” and the Father’s “judgments” are what drives the coming events in history. The Father is in control and Christ does not question or gainsay the results. The Father’s mercy is not questioned by Christ, nor is there any degree of shame shown for the terrible circumstances which follow from His “mercies.” Nor does Christ hesitate to announce the Father’s “judgments” despite the anxiety which some may feel at hearing the future.

Truth should be delivered in a forthright and plain manner, whether the result is fearful or vindicating; whether you take joy in the news or you cower at what is to come.

Notice, however, that when the Father’s judgment has been given, then the Lord assumes personal responsibility for the punishment to be inflicted. He does not say it is the Father's punishment. It is His own. Christ will personally be the one who "caused my people who are of the house of Israel to be smitten." Christ will personally "afflict" and "slay" the people. The Father decides, Christ fulfills. He seeks no cover, looks to no-one else to be held to account, He does as His Father judges.

Why would Christ assume responsibility to "smite" to "afflict" and to "slay" when it is the Father's judgment? What does this tell us about Christ's acceptance of the Father's decisions?

Is (or has) there been some good result from those whom Christ calls "my people" (i.e., His people) being smitten, afflicted, slain, and cast out by the Gentiles? If so, what good has come to the Lord's people? How can these things that have lasted now for over two hundred years have been beneficial to the Lord's people? What can we learn about the Lord calling afflicted, smitten and outcast people as "His people" despite their centuries of subordination?

What does the Gentile "hatred" of the Lord's people do to diminish the Lord's plans for them? What does casting them out and making them a "hiss and a byword" by the Gentiles do to remove the Lord's promised blessing and covenant to "His people?"

What foolish pride allows the Gentiles to measure the Lord's people as stricken, smitten of God and afflicted? (Isa. 53:4).

Why would the Gentiles be put in this position? Why would Israel? What does it do to the Gentiles' ability to see through the deception of their time into truth which is timeless? (D&C 93:24).

How should the Gentiles view their momentary triumph and unchallenged possession of the land promised to others?

Why are those smitten and afflicted called by the Lord "my people" and the Gentiles referred to as "Gentiles?"

Is the irony of this beginning to dawn on you? Maybe you should re-read the title page of the Book of Mormon.

JUNE 24, 2010

3 Nephi 16:10

And thus commandeth the Father that I should say unto you: At that day when the Gentiles shall sin against my gospel, and shall reject the fulness of my gospel, and shall be lifted up in the pride of their hearts above all nations, and above all the people of the whole earth, and shall be filled with all manner of lyings, and of deceits, and of mischiefs, and all manner of hypocrisy, and murders, and priestcrafts, and whoredoms, and of secret abominations; and if they shall do all those things, and shall reject the fulness of my gospel, behold, saith the Father, I will bring the fulness of my gospel from among them.

These words come from the Father.

The Father has commanded Christ to speak them.

This material is important to understand.

“At the day when the Gentiles shall sin against the Gospel...” NOT IF. NOT SHOULD THEY HAPPEN TO DO SO. It is in the day WHEN the Gentiles SHALL sin against the Gospel.

The Father has already seen this happen (D&C 130:7). He has told Christ to speak about it. But it is before the Father and therefore He can speak with knowledge of the coming rejection by the Gentiles.

What do the Gentiles do as they reject the Gospel? They “shall be lifted up in the pride of their hearts above all nations... above all the people of the whole earth.” Read again the prior post. The Gentiles take their inheritance of the promised land as their birthright. They presume God's favor. They mistake their probation and testing as proof of having God's favor. They are on trial, and presume they aren't being tested.

What, then, do the Gentiles do with their highly favored status? The list is sobering:

- Lyings
- Deceits
- Mischiefs
- All manner of hypocrisy
- Murders
- Priestcrafts
- Whoredoms
- Secret combinations

Read the list and contemplate how much of this is among us. If we do not murder, do we delight in bloodshed? Are we warlike? Are there people whom we kill daily somewhere in the world to project our national will and great power?

Notice that hypocrisy leads to murder. Murder leads to priestcrafts. Priestcrafts lead to whoredoms. Are we seeing a progression here? By the time we have whoredoms, have we already passed through murders and priestcrafts?

What are priestcrafts? (2 Ne. 26:29). What does it mean to seek the welfare of Zion? Is "Zion" the same thing as the institutional church? What is the difference? Can a person seek the welfare of Zion without seeking to succeed inside the institutional church? What is the difference between seeking to be a "light unto the world," on the one hand, and seeking the welfare of Zion, on the other? Can one seek to be a light pointing to Zion, and never be a "light unto the world?" What is the world? What is Zion? How are they different? Can one who seeks the welfare of Zion ever get praise from the world? Can a person curry favor with the world while also seeking to benefit Zion?

If not hiring a whore, do we nonetheless watch with delight the portrayal of sexual license to entertain us, fill our thoughts, satisfy our lusts? Do you need to hire a prostitute to be practicing “whoredoms?” Utah is one of the largest consumers of pornography in the US. Hence, the continual return to this subject in General Conference.

When they do this, in turn the Gentiles will “reject the fullness of my Gospel.” To reject the fullness is not to reject the Gospel itself. As we have seen, some fragment of the Gospel remains even when it has turned into “iniquity” and “abomination.” Without some fractured segment of the Gospel to salve the conscious and let the people feel good about their sins, there couldn’t be “abominations.”

It is not the “Gospel” which is lost. Rather it is the “fullness of my Gospel” which is rejected and then taken away. It is first rejected, then it is forfeited. The Gentiles lose their entitlement to possess what they have rejected.

The Father has decreed it will happen. The Gentiles will change the ordinance and break the everlasting covenant (Isa. 24:5). What ordinance? What change? Has it happened? If not, what will be required to make a change and lose the “everlasting covenant” by the Gentiles? I hope to avoid that.

JUNE 24, 2010

3 Nephi 16:11

“And then will I remember my covenant which I have made unto my people, O house of Israel, and I will bring my gospel unto them.”

When the Gentiles have rejected the fullness of the Gospel, the Lord's memory will be stirred. He will "remember His covenant" again.

Notice the covenant He will remember is for "His people," whose interests and inheritance will now be vindicated. His words will be fulfilled. The Father's promises will all be realized. But "His people" are not the Gentiles. His people are the remnant to whom the Gospel will come as a matter of covenant and inheritance to reclaim a fallen people. This is the re-grafting of the natural branches referred to in Jacob 5:67-75. It is important to note that the Lord of the vineyard was directly involved with the few servants assigned to accomplish this final work of gathering together (Jacob 5:72).

This is to be done after the Gentiles (who are the European Latter-day Saints who descend from the bloodlines that overran and dispossessed the native people in North America), have rejected the fullness of the Gospel. Therefore, you should not expect that the institutional church, controlled as it is by those very same bloodlines, will be the means through which this final effort will be accomplished.

When the time comes, the Lord will "bring [His] gospel to them." How will He do this? What "laborers" should we expect to be sent? How, if the Gentiles have rejected the fullness of His Gospel, will the Gentiles be involved?

Can Gentiles who are lifted up in the pride of their hearts above all nations of the earth assist? If not, then what Gentiles can assist?

Isn't Ephriam to be involved? After all, they have the birthright. Are they not involved?

If they are, who will it be from among Ephriam?

How can the remnant to whom these blessings are promised, have still among them a few descendants of Ephriam? Why will Mannassah, through the remnant, build the New Jerusalem, yet it will be Ephriam through whom the blessings are conferred upon the returning Lost Tribes? (D&C 133:26–34).

How can the New Jerusalem be the property of the remnant, but there be a group of Ephriamites who bestow crowns? What must these Ephriamites possess to be able to accomplish this task? How can they possess it and not be lifted up in pride above all other people of the whole earth? How can such power be put upon some group and they remain willing to ever bend the knee and confess before Him whose right it is to rule?

How can the Gentiles both reject the fullness of the Gospel, yet there be some who are of Ephriam who are able to bestow crowns?

What an interesting picture begins to emerge. Gentile rejection, but a tiny group of Ephriamite servants whose lives are lived so as to bestow blessings upon others.

The main body in the New Jerusalem coming from the remnant, who are to build the City of the New Jerusalem, yet within that City a functioning group of Ephriamites who will crown others with glory. All this preparatory to the Lord's return to a City set upon a hill which cannot be hid. To a location in the tops of the everlasting mountains, where all will gather from every nation.

Well, let's keep going to see how much we can figure out from the scriptures to correct our foolish traditions about these future roles and perhaps gain an even better idea of locations.

JUNE 25, 2010

3 Nephi 16:12

And I will show unto thee, O house of Israel, that the Gentiles shall not have power over you; but I will remember my covenant unto you, O house of Israel, and ye shall come unto the knowledge of the fulness of my gospel.

Gentiles shall NOT have power over Israel. Gentiles, filled with pride, claiming to hold the power of God, sitting in the Temple of God and acting as if they were God, will lose their grip (2 Thes. 2:2–4). They will be cast down like Lucifer, after claiming they would sit in the congregations of the north, like the Gods (Isa. 14:13–15).

These Gentiles will not have “power” over the house of Israel, though they may claim to possess great authority (D&C 121:36–37). What, then, is the difference between the Gentiles lacking “power,” but holding authority?

How will the Lord remember the covenant?

What does it mean to come to “the knowledge” of something, rather than to start believing in something? What does it mean to have the “fulness of [His] Gospel?”

What does “knowledge... of the fulness” imply about the degree to which it will be revealed as part of remembering the covenant?

Why is the Gentile rejection of the fullness tied to the house of Israel receiving the fullness?

Are the basic Gospel Principles the same as the fullness? If not, what is the difference? What do the Gentiles risk when they reject the fullness and focus instead upon the basic principles?

How perilous is it for the Gentiles to suppress the mysteries of godliness and retain only the most basic of doctrines as their focus?

Unto whom is the Lord to teach doctrine? Who is prepared to hear? Are they necessarily to be first weaned from milk and prepared to understand meat? (See Isa. 28:9–10). If that is so, then what do we need to do to wean ourselves off the milk and be prepared to receive weightier matters?

When will these things be? How will you know when the spirit begins to withdraw from the Gentiles and blessings begin to be poured out on others of the house of Israel?

Well, let's keep going...

COMMENTS:

Gordon · JUNE 25, 2010 AT 9:31 AM

Verse 10 of 3 Nephi 16 does indeed say “WHEN the Gentiles shall sin against my gospel, and shall reject the fulness of my gospel.” So, that makes it sound like it's going to happen; the Gentiles are goners. However, later in the same sentence the Lord adds, “IF they shall do all those things, and shall reject the fulness.” This modifies the meaning. It changes the verse from a bald statement of what the Lord knows is going to happen to a conditional prophecy. It is the same formulation as, “When you start dating other men, if that happens, I'm going to leave you.” The Lord knows what is going to happen, but do we know what he knows? Not from this verse.

Also, I can find no justification for the assertion that there will only be a TINY group of Ephraimites who will bless the tribes of Israel with crowns of glory. Jacob 5:72 talks about a group of servants, but does not mention the size of the group even obliquely. And I don't understand why we should believe that this tiny group does not include the institutional church. Surely, the First presidency and the Twelve are the essential part of the institutional church and they appear to be striving to build up the Church and Kingdom of God, both in the world and in their own lives. Yes they are imperfect, but their actions and their attitudes are representative of those I would expect to find in Zion.

Lastly, if Joseph Smith was a “pure-blooded Ephraimite” (as per Brigham Young) why should we not suppose that there are varying percentages of the blood of Israel in the different members of the church? If this is true, why should we suppose that “the Gentiles” are a homogenous block which are essentially equal to the body of the church?

Because of the light which I find in your books and your blog, I am predisposed to accept what you say as true. But, you seem to make some unsupported leaps of doctrine in the last few posts. I would gladly learn why I am wrong.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 25, 2010 AT 11:13 AM

Gordon:

The relative size is referred to by the Lord in a number of places where He contrasts the “few there be who find it” with the “many who go in thereat.” He also uses the parable of wise and foolish virgins. I take the meaning of “virgin” who are attired in wedding garments and have both oil and lamps to mean those who have: 1) been endowed; 2) been sealed; 3) come into possession of both oil and a lamp—meaning the Spirit has visited with them and they have shown its fruits at some point in their lives. From this group half will be unprepared at His coming and kept from the wedding feast.

There are others, and perhaps a post would be better than a comment. But the point is not to discourage anyone. It is to make us take a sober inventory of our lives and what we do with the Gospel we’ve been given. Are we taking it seriously enough? Do we do what we can to follow Him? Are we safely aboard, or yet in peril? If aboard, are we crying repentance and warning our neighbor? Do we really love Him? Do we love His children?

Whether the Church’s leadership is or is not going to lead us there remains an open question. As with all things, they and we are free to choose. But their choice should not affect yours, or mine.

JUNE 25, 2010

3 Nephi 16:13–14

But if the Gentiles will repent and return unto me, saith the Father, behold they shall be numbered among my people, O house of Israel. And I will not suffer my people, who are of the house of Israel, to go through among them, and tread them down, saith the Father.

Here Gentiles are given hope. Although as a group, they will fall away and reject the fullness, if there are any among them who “repent and return” they may still be numbered among those who are the Lord’s people. Those whom He calls “my people.” Those dear to Him by covenant and promise.

The few who do will be required to “repent and return.” Why do they need to “repent?” Why do they need to “return?” What have they been doing that will require this “repentance” and “return?”

Does it mean they will not remain in the way, but will have been led out of it? Will they necessarily have to abandon the abominations, or false beliefs, which have become part of their religious traditions?

Where did these false religious ideas arise? If the Gentiles inherit the fullness of the Gospel, then reject the fullness, what did they first receive? What did they do with what they received?

How can some few still persist and be numbered among the house of Israel? What must those who “repent and return” accomplish? How will they be able to accomplish this?

Nephi had described these “few” earlier in a prophecy about our day in 2 Nephi 28:14:

They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men.

What does it mean to have “all gone astray?” Does “all” truly mean “all?” How can a “few, who are the humble followers of Christ” exist? Do these “few” “nevertheless err?”

What causes the “few” to err? What does it mean that they are “led, that in many instances they do err?” What does it mean to be “taught by the precepts of men?” Wasn’t that the very problem that provoked the Restoration in the first place? Weren’t men teaching for doctrines the commandments of men? Did that produce only a form of godliness, which had no power? (JS-H 1:19).

Those who “repent and return” will be spared from being trodden down and torn up. Others of the Gentiles, who do not “repent and return” are destined, like the original inhabitants of this land, to be trodden down and torn up. Their inheritance here is probationary. If they fail the probation, they will be swept away. The Gentiles will be gone, just as the earlier civilizations are gone. It will be the Father’s doing.

JUNE 26, 2010

3 Nephi 16:15

But if they will not turn unto me, and hearken unto my voice, I will suffer them, yea, I will suffer my people, O house of Israel, that they shall go through among them, and shall tread them down, and they shall be as salt that hath lost its savor, which is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of my people, O house of Israel.

The Gentiles, to whom the restoration of the Gospel came, will fail to repent and return to the Lord, and will doom themselves to destruction.

The land reverts back to those to whom it was originally promised. They, the rightful heirs, will “go through among them, and shall tread them down.” What does it mean to be “tread down?”

When salt has lost its savor, it becomes useless. The preservative has become a contaminant. The corruption, the abominable religion, is worse than what they were before inheriting the fullness of the Gospel. They have sinned against a greater light. And in the process they have rejected the Greatest Light of all.

What did the Gentiles do to become salt without savor? Why are they good for nothing but to be cast out? Why is it appropriate that the Gentiles who previously cast out and trod down previous inheritors should now be trodden down? What did the earlier heirs do to merit destruction at the hands of the Gentiles? How does the cycle seem to repeat itself in the actions of both of these peoples?

Why do the trodden down peoples, who were the first heirs, remain the “Lord’s people” even when they have been dispossessed of the land and destroyed by the Gentiles? Why are the first to become the last, and the last to become the first? Why do such cycles of history repeat themselves? Why is the Book of Mormon unable to help the Gentiles avoid this cycle of destruction? Was the Book of Mormon intended to help the Gentiles avoid their fate? What did the Gentiles do with the Book of Mormon instead of using it as a guide to avoid destruction?

These prophecies are spoken by Christ, but ordained by the Father. What does it tell us about the Father’s involvement with this unfolding history? How does the “foot of my people” reflect symbolically upon the process of destruction? If the Gentiles have rejected the fullness of the Lord’s Gospel, but the feet of those who cry peace are beautiful upon the mountains, why do the one people get trodden and the others tread upon them? Why are clean feet preserved and the filthy cast out and trodden down?

How serious a matter is this Gospel? How should we conduct ourselves toward the Gospel? What is the Gospel’s fullness? This becomes more than interesting; it is gripping.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JUNE 26, 2010 AT 11:37 PM

What do YOU think the Gospel Fulness is Denver?

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 27, 2010 AT 6:50 AM

I've set that out in The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil. I've elaborated on what comes as a result in Beloved Enos. This blog presumes you are already familiar with everything taught in those and the other books I've written. I'm trying to build upon what was set out before, not to repeat it. The first book took approximately 170,000 words which, were I to attempt to repeat it here would require years to accomplish and could not be done in as systematic a manner given the difference between a single discussion building on itself in a book and the somewhat interrupted and disjointed manner involved here.

I'm not trying to sell books. I make nothing from them (although there are others involved in publishing, printing, retailing, etc. whose livelihoods depend upon selling books—I do not). But it is the only manner in which to approach some challenges and have another learn what they need to know. It was also undertaken as a Divinely imposed responsibility, and therefore I presume that it will reward anyone who reads them with the Spirit in a way which could not be accomplished through other means.

JUNE 26, 2010

3 Nephi 16:16

“Verily, verily, I say unto you, thus hath the Father commanded me—that I should give unto this people this land for their inheritance.”

As a result of their behavior, the Gentiles forfeit the land. The ones who inherit the land will be “this people” or the ones to whom Christ was speaking. The land will belong to the remnant—those who were standing before Christ at the time of this address.

Now, the actual inheritors will not be those people, but those who claim the right as descendants through their fathers. It will not, and cannot be the Gentiles. There were no European migrants in the audience when Christ spoke on this occasion.

We need to know who “this people” is to know who will inherit the land.

We also need to know what “this land” was to be able to know if the Gentiles who inherited the “land of liberty” (2 Nephi 10:11) which would “never fall into captivity except for wickedness” was North America (2 Nephi 1:6–11). Hence the relevance of knowing the location of the Book of Mormon lands.

That is such a side-track that I hesitate to even revisit the subject. I will only add that there are arguments for both North American and Central America. I think the better argument is for North America.

The various possessors of the land all have the same condition: They either follow Christ as they occupy the ground or they are swept away and others who will follow Christ will supplant them.

This was established by covenant with Lehi generations before Christ visited with and taught Lehi’s descendants. Lehi recorded the covenant:

Wherefore, I, Lehi, have obtained a promise, that inasmuch as those whom the Lord God shall bring out of the land of Jerusalem shall keep his commandments, they shall prosper upon the face of this land; and they shall be kept from all other nations, that they may possess this land unto themselves. And if it so be that they shall keep his commandments they shall be blessed upon the face of this land, and there shall be none to molest them, nor to take away the land of their inheritance; and they shall dwell safely forever. But behold, when the time cometh that they shall dwindle in unbelief, after they have received so great blessings from the hand of the Lord—having a knowledge of the creation of the earth, and all men, knowing the great and marvelous works of the Lord from the creation of the world; having power given them to do all things by faith; having all the commandments from the beginning, and having been brought by his infinite goodness into this precious land of promise—behold, I say, if the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold, the judgments of him that is just shall rest upon them. Yea, he will bring other nations unto them, and he will give unto them power, and he will take away from them the lands of their possessions, and he will cause them to be scattered and smitten. (2 Nephi 1:9–11)

Christ's words dovetail with the covenant made with Lehi. The same Lord announcing them both. That condition and lease of this land remains conditional. Keep the conditions and you may be preserved to inherit the land and be numbered with the house of Israel. Violate them and be swept away.

So we see that the times of the Gentiles, as they end, become quite perilous for the Gentiles upon the land. They will forfeit their hold, however improbable it may seem to them at the present. Christ's Father has declared it so. Who, then, can disannul?

The many confident assurances of God's favor we have do give us comfort, don't they? They are either true and right, and we have little to fear. Or they are among the abominations that allow foolish, vain and false notions lull us to sleep. The difference between those two propositions is quite alarming. I hate it when we have to make hard choices.

COMMENTS:

Karen · JUNE 26, 2010 AT 7:56 PM

Denver,

I have spent several hours in the scriptures yesterday and today refreshing my understanding of all the references to the “remnant”, etc. I am on board 100% as to what you are helping to open our eyes to greater understanding, but I must say I am still full of questions...and I have been for several years. Every time I address this subject with my husband we have more unanswered questions than answers.

I lean toward the “North America” Book of Mormon lands concept, also, but I am wondering if that means the remnant would be exclusively referring to the Native American Indians...or are all the people in Central and South America also part of this remnant. That is definitely what most of the church believes and all my friends from such regions are from the tribe of Manasseh. Do you have thoughts on this? Does it matter? Is it one or the other or all the native peoples of both continents?

Also, you said, “So we see that the times of the Gentiles, as they end, become quite perilous for the Gentiles upon the land...”

I was reminded that a good teacher once taught me that President Benson (the chamion of the Book of Mormon in my opinion) taught in a General Conference that the times directly preceding the coming of Christ in Third Nephi...parallel our day prior to His second coming. 3 Ne 6:12 talks of the beginning of the break-up of the CHURCH. 3 Ne 7:2 talks of the break up of the GOVERNMENT and consequent division into tribes. And Chapter 8 discusses the break-up of the LAND.

Three break-ups...church, government, land. Is this a type and shadow of perhaps the unfolding events that await us in order that the remnant return and the Gentiles are cleansed and given an opportunity for the few who will to truly repent? Any thoughts?

Karen

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 26, 2010 AT 8:08 PM

I considered this subject as potentially inappropriate for a blog; because it will take a long time to lay it all out. I decided to take the task on. But it will require a lot of material to be covered. Therefore you need to be patient. We're going to cover it all in increments. It will take a while.

I think it is North America. That will become apparent as the Book of Mormon text is reviewed.

I think the remnant involved are primarily found in North and Central America, but bloodlines get disbursed.

Remember that the people who were here were destroyed in staggering numbers. 25 million Aztec (more properly Mexica) reduced to 2 million in about 5 years from disease. 20 million Plains Indians so completely killed that when the push west was made the American Colonialists thought the Plains had never been inhabited. 98% of the Mayan Empire died of disease. Who remains? What scattered blood, including Lehi's, are among the tiny fraction of the native bloodlines who were here at the time of Columbus? What mixtures exist now?

It is unlikely the Aztec/Mexica did not have some blood from Lehi's people among them. It may be that those who survived the die-off are now predominately of Lehi's mixture.

I do think the Book of Mormon will parallel our unfolding history, and that was one of its intended purposes. Their history was abridged, and sections selected because of their relevance to us. Therefore their remaining, highly selected, abridged account is not as much historic as it is prophetic.

JUNE 27, 2010

3 Nephi 16:17–20

And then the words of the prophet Isaiah shall be fulfilled, which say: Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God.

Given the scholarly arguments over the meaning and application of Isaiah, here we encounter a profound insight from Christ. He attributes this quote from Isaiah to the coming events in the Americas. In this declaration by Christ we learn Isaiah was NOT speaking of the return to the Middle East for these events to unfold. Instead the “waste places of Jerusalem” are nowhere near Jerusalem. It is another place, far away, where the residue of Jerusalem’s scattered people are wasted, then restored again. It is also plural. One is here, in the Americas, on an “isle of the sea.” (2 Ne. 10:20). Now we can know from Christ’s own interpretation that Jerusalem’s “waste places” are scattered throughout the world. This land is one of them.

Then we see something odd. After the removal of the Gentiles, there is joy, rejoicing, singing together, seeing eye to eye and a return to Zion. The emotional setting seems at odds with what we anticipate. Destroying Gentiles and having the trauma of those days would seem to produce mourning and lamentation. It does not. Instead it produces singing in joy.

To redeem Jerusalem is to re-establish the promised heirs upon their own land, and bring again Zion. Whatever bottle-neck of destruction needed to bring that triumph to pass will be worth it. So great will be the peace that follows that it will wipe away all tears. Truth, saving doctrine and being fed by Christ’s own message will end all laments (Rev. 7:17).

How is the Lord’s “holy arm” made bare? How will “the eyes of all nations” see it? What will the ends of the earth behold, as the salvation of God takes place? Why is it “all the ends of the earth” which will behold it?

What does it mean to “see eye to eye” when Zion is brought again? Why is Zion to be “brought again” rather than re-built?

If the Lord is to comfort His people, what will that “comfort” include? Why has He consistently used the word “comfort” to describe His visit with people?

Why, when the waste places are redeemed, does it say “Jerusalem” will be redeemed? Is redeeming the “waste places” the same as redeeming “Jerusalem” itself? How does that affect the meaning of other scriptures?

Why are “singing together” and “seeing eye to eye” connected in the same thought?

What does it mean to “become one” as a people? Can we ever accomplish that by acquiring enough “sameness” or “uniformity” in conduct, thought and speech? Is it worth any effort at all to mimic one another? If we are to “become one” how should each of us proceed to accomplish that? How does Christ expect us to become “one?” (1 John 3:2).

JUNE 28, 2010

What Does it all Really Mean?

There are some great comments on the previous posts. I’ve not wanted to interrupt what I was doing to address them. Before moving on to another set of scriptures relating to those questions and comments, here are a few responses:

To whom has the Book of Mormon been written?

What possible good would it be for a message to be written for an audience who would never read the Book of Mormon?

If the term “Gentiles” is sometimes quite broad (and it is in some contexts), does the message get addressed to all of them? Is the message tailored to those who would read the book?

If the warnings are read to apply only to non-LDS occupants of the land, then what do the warnings accomplish? Do they make us proud? Do they make us feel better than “them,” since only “they” are condemned and not us? What kind of a warning is it if the only ones being warned are those who will never read the book?

Does The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at least retain the power and authority to preach the Gospel and administer the rites of baptism, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost? When I prayed, as the missionaries were instructing me, I got an answer that led me to baptism. I believe that baptism to be authoritative and approved by the Lord. Does anyone think the church lacks the authority to baptize for the remission of sins? I do not. If, therefore, the church has that authority, does it not continue to occupy an important, even central role in the Lord’s work?

If you teach someone, and they want to “convert” and be baptized, would you not baptize them into The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints?

What is the mission field for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? Who is not included?

If all the world is the mission field for the church, what, then, becomes the mission field for the Church of the Firstborn? [I do not hold that the Church of the Firstborn is a formal organization, existing here as a formal order. I believe its members associate with others who are not of this world, and consequently the Church of the Firstborn is never in competition with The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.]

Would members of the Church of the Firstborn not pay tithes to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? Would they not attend its meetings? Would they not support its programs? Would they not use The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to assist them in raising their children? Would they not have their families baptized into The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? Even if they held authority given them directly from the Lord, would they not continue to be faithful members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? To uphold and respect the authorities who are given the duty to preside?

Until the Lord brings again Zion, where should we all join in fellowship?

Would members of the Church of the Firstborn ever envy those presiding in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? Ever challenge their right to preside? Did Christ ever try and displace Caiaphas? Did He not admonish us to follow His example?

Does The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints limit the amount of light you can acquire by your own heed and diligence? (D&C 130:18–19). Can any man prevent God from pouring out knowledge upon you if you will receive it in the proper way? (D&C 121:32–33). Can any soul approach the Lord, see His face, and know that He is? (D&C 93:1).

Of what relevance is it if other Saints give no heed or are not willing to receive knowledge from the Lord? Should we belittle them? If not, what then is our responsibility toward them? (3 Ne. 12:16).

What does it mean to let a “light shine?”

Why, upon seeing that light, would someone “glorify your Father who is in heaven” rather than heap praise and attention upon you? What is it about the nature of the light which you are to shine that produces notice of the Father rather than notice of you?

David Christensen's definition of "whoredoms" was interesting. Whether you take the meaning in 1830, or you take our modern sexual meaning, would it change the result of any analysis?

One fellow who worked at the Church Office Building told me that approximately 60% of active adult male members of the church regularly view pornography.

Kisi also raised a question regarding Ishmael's Ephriamite lineage. Orson Pratt, Franklin D. Richards and Erastus Snow all said Joseph Smith mentioned in passing that the lost 116 pages included a reference to Ishmael's lineage and he was from Ephraim. Does this change anything?

If so, how? What other outcome might then be possible? Would this potentially even further limit the Gentile involvement?

On the subject of Joseph's statements contained in the Nauvoo era transcripts: These were the very materials from which Joseph's talks were reproduced. The Documentary History of the Church, by Joseph Smith, Jr., was compiled from these original materials. When The Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith was prepared, it was done using these materials. The paper I wrote included the original source materials, not the derivative compilations.

As to the importance and reliability of these materials, first, those involved were the leading church fathers at the time. Thomas Bullock was the official scribe for Joseph Smith during the Nauvoo talks. His versions were kept at Joseph's request and were official accounts. Second, the Joseph Smith Papers project now underway through the Church Historian's Office is attempting to make more of these original source materials available to the Saints. If they are not important, then the Church would not be investing millions of man-hours and dollars to bring the sources into the hands of the Saints.

It is not wise to dismiss as “mud” the very kinds of materials that give the best source for Joseph’s teachings. Indeed, D&C 130 is an amalgam of comments Joseph made in a talk given April 2, 1843 recorded by some of the very same scribes used in the paper I wrote. I’m just using original materials, rather than derivative, second hand interpretations made years later by others who were not present (or living) when the statements were made by Joseph.

Well, enough of the aside—onward still...

COMMENTS:

Stone · JUNE 27, 2010 AT 3:20 PM

The question I would ask is, “Which words of Isaiah”? Which words relate to “when the Lord shall bring again Zion”? Exactly when is the “when”? After 13:13, when “the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger”? Or some other time?

This “when the Lord shall bring again Zion” does it refer to himself, or by people by his command?

How many prophecies, and what are the interdependencies, of the minor prophets that have to be fulfilled before whichever “words of the prophet Isaiah shall be fulfilled”?

This is no simple matter, but presents a complex relationship with other prophets at, or near, his time.

Denver Snuffer · JUNE 27, 2010 AT 3:42 PM

Only the Lord can “bring it again.” That is why He is said to “bring” it rather than for others to build it. All the labor may come from men, but it will be the Lord’s command, Lord’s direction, Lord’s word which will cause it. Until He speaks it, it simply cannot come again. Hence the need for us to be able to speak with Him. He cannot bring it until a people exist who will listen to Him (or those who speak His words, no matter how unlikely the source they may seem to be). Oddly, until such spokesmen or spokeswomen should be listening to Him, and then He tells them to begin, and in turn a group should be here who would listen and hear Him in that call, there is simply no need to worry about Zion.

JUNE 28, 2010

A Bit of a Detour

I received the following question:

You refer to D&C 84:26 which tells us that the “lesser priesthood ...holdeth the key of the ministering of angels..” and imply that every deacon in the church holds the key to the ministration of angels. That does not sound right to me. I believe the “key to the ministration of angels” in Section 84 and the “three grand keys whereby (one) may know whether any ministration is from God” D&C 129:9 are one and the same. If so, there is no Aaronic priesthood holder in the church today who has the key of the ministration of angels as those grand Aaronic keys are only given to Melchizedek priesthood holders in Holy Places.

My response:

The Endowment has two portions: An Aaronic portion and a Melchizedek portion. Brigham Young commented that the Aaronic portion should be given first, and separate from the rest. Then after proving oneself faithful and trustworthy, the Melchizedek portion would be received. We've never done it that way. However, if it were to be done that way, then those holding the Aaronic Priesthood, possessing the associated keys, would have the key to the ministering of angels.

Now, apart from that, before Joseph received any priesthood he entertained angels. Aaronic Priesthood keys may give one a right to seek such a visit, may give a basis for such a search, but possession of such a key alone will not force it to happen. Nor does the absence of such a key prevent it from happening.

In effect, what we sometimes view as hard and fast rules are more like rules for polite conduct. It is the way which things “ought” to occur. But the Lord is not powerless to work around it anyway.

There is almost no hard and fast rule. Just as soon as we think we’ve figured out what the Lord MUST always do, we find out that He has a work-around plan that opens up any number of other possibilities as well.

D&C 84 is correct. And such a key does belong to the Aaronic order. However, the “key” referred to is to be found in the Aaronic portion of the endowment, which permits you to recognize a true messenger should one visit with you. However, as D&C 129 also reports, if the messenger does not have a body, he will nonetheless deliver his message.

As to questions about the church and its current “failings” I am not inclined to make a list. Salvation is not “corporate” anyway. Whatever the church does or doesn’t do, salvation is an individual process to work out person by person. If you say: “The church is perfect!” Then I wonder how that saves me. Am I not imperfect? Does the church’s perfection aid me in any respect unless I will repent and return? Also, if you say: “The church is a corrupt mess!” Then I wonder how that damns me. Am I not still required to follow the Master? Was Peter perfect? Was Paul? Did their quirks and imperfections damn those who came forward and accepted baptism, received the Holy Ghost, and lived the Lord’s commandments?

There is a great disconnect between the church and Zion. But there is an even greater disconnection between the church and an individual’s salvation. We rise or fall based upon what light and truth we are willing to receive. Those who have the most should have the greatest capacity to help, encourage, and raise others. Sometimes the church puts on display the meanest of conduct.

The most petty and self-serving of behavior. That does not relieve us from living as we should.

If a person trusts the church to save them, they must be shaken and brought to see the foolishness of their false belief. If a person despises the church, they should be taught to show patience and charity toward their fellow Saint.

Sometimes you and I need to speak of the church's perilous and foolish conduct. Sometimes we need to think of the church's vital and continuing role.

As reasonable people we should no more entertain the myth of church perfection than we should view the church as an abhorrent enemy to our salvation. It is neither. It is a tool. It serves an important role. Ultimately, however, the church should not (and indeed cannot) come between you and the Lord. No-one belongs there.

When the church tries to insert itself between you and the Lord it deserves criticism; even censure. When the church makes a well-intentioned mistake, the mistake should be noted and avoided. But frank discussions about those things do not weaken the church or the faith of those who engage in the discussion. It means, instead, that people care and take seriously the subject of their salvation.

I have no interest in leaving the church. Nor do I have any interest in leading it. Each of us has a duty to proclaim the Gospel, and having been warned, to warn others (D&C 88:81). Elder Ballard told us to use the internet to share the Gospel. The article is in the July 2008 Ensign. Basically, this blog is Elder Ballard's idea.

My view of sharing the Gospel is not, however, to defend the indefensible, or to dress up swine and decorate them with jewelry and pretend we aren't debasing either the pig, the clothing or ourselves. There is so much mischief going on inside the church right now that I don't think 500 General Authorities can get control over it. It is a run-away train. Between correlation, and the organizational systems in place, it is almost dysfunctional.

The management structure for the church's various departments is similar to what one would see in General Motors or Black+Decker. Each "division" is separately accounted for and needs to justify its expenditures based upon performance. Measurable results are expected. The goal of course is salvation. However, goals such as "increasing faith in Jesus Christ" are used to justify expenditures. Then polling or focus group information is used to show the goals are being met. The lengths to which charades are enacted inside the Church Office Building are painful to many of those who work there. Agreements to keep information confidential has not prevented private sharing of the frustrations lived inside the great white building downtown.

The justification for Correlation is set out by them (the Correlation Department which oversees all manual writing) in the Gospel Doctrine Manual on The Doctrine and Covenants and Church History; lesson number 42. In there the following quote appears: "Explain that the purpose of Church correlation is to preserve 'the right way of God' (Jacob 7:7)." The quote is taken from Sherem, the first anti-Christ in the Book of Mormon, who is bringing an accusation against Jacob. Sherem, the anti-Christ accuses Jacob of perverting the right way of God by teaching of Christ. It is this accusation which the Correlation Department has lifted and used to justify their own actions.

Sherem was stricken and died. May those who use his words to justify their own failures share a similar fate when the coming plagues arrive. If his words are good enough to justify their actions, then his fate is good enough for them to share.

Correlation has robbed the church of vitality, deprived the Saints of power, and created an environment in which oppression and abuse is inevitable. Seeking to have true doctrine is no excuse for suppressing discussion, enshrining a militant orthodoxy, and following down the same path that destroyed Historic Christianity's connection with God.

Well, I'm off topic and not doing any good with this. So let's return to a discussion of the scriptures. If we want light, we find it in the Book of Mormon.

CHAPTER 7

1 Nephi 13

JUNE 29, 2010

1 Nephi 13:30

The role of gentiles in the history of this land, promised to Lehi's descendants, is not just covered in the Lord's words. It is set out in some detail by Nephi. Therefore, we will look at some of Nephi's prophecy from 1 Nephi Chapter 13. Below is verse 30:

Nevertheless, thou beholdest that the Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity, and have been lifted up by the power of God above all other nations, upon the face of the land which is choice above all other lands, which is the land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance; wherefore, thou seest that the Lord God will not suffer that the Gentiles will utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed, which are among thy brethren.

This comes after an explanation of how the gentiles will flee oppression in another land (Europe), come here, and overtake this land. Nephi has been shown the establishment of a great church that alters the teachings to be given by Christ to the Jews. Then the prophecy continues with the above statement.

Flight from captivity has brought the Gentiles here. They came here (originally) for religious freedom. They wanted to follow their consciences when it came to matters of God and belief. This land was a land of religious freedom for these gentiles.

They then were “lifted up by the power of God above all other nations.” This “lifting up” is not only to enjoy religious freedom to worship God. It also included the power to retain that freedom against any foreign threat to remove it. Therefore, ancillary to the religious freedom, the gentiles were necessarily given economic and military might with which to retain that freedom against “all other nations.” But the “power of God” which “lifted [them] up” is conditioned upon them always serving the God of this land, who is Jesus Christ (Ether 2:12). The power of God cannot be used to protect a wicked people.

The land is “choice above all other lands.” Why is that so? What is it about the American continent which makes it more “choice” than any other location on earth?

Notice that here again Nephi is told that the land has been given to Lehi’s descendants as “the land for their inheritance.” Whatever dispossession the gentiles cause, these people have God’s covenant to return the land to them. What does it mean to have this land promised by God through covenant to Lehi’s descendants? Does that promise contain any condition? Will these people forfeit their right if they are wicked? If they will not forfeit the right, then what will happen to them if they cease to serve the God of this land?

Because of the covenant, the Lord will “not suffer that the Gentiles will utterly destroy” the covenant people? Note the “mixture of thy seed” mentioned to Nephi. Why is Nephi promised a “mixture of thy seed” will be preserved? Does gentile oppression remove the promises to Lehi and Nephi? If not, what then do the promises assure them?

Why does God make a covenant to a worthy prophet-patriarch and bind Himself to fulfill the promise even with a posterity which may not be similarly faithful? Has the Lord done this before with Abraham? With Isaac? With Jacob? With Noah? Even though we knew nothing of these covenants when the gentiles overran the land, are they nonetheless God's promise and something which He will fulfill? How certain should we be that the Lord will deliver this land back to those who descend from Lehi and Nephi?

Why can a righteous prophet-patriarch obtain such promises from the Lord? What reason is there for such covenants to be made? Can they still be made? How? What did Lehi and Nephi do to qualify to receive such a covenant? Was there any intermediary? Will the Lord employ a servant when making such a covenant?

Well, this is interesting stuff. Worth continuing to consider, I think.

JUNE 29, 2010

1 Nephi 13:31–32

Neither will he suffer that the Gentiles shall destroy the seed of thy brethren. Neither will the Lord God suffer that the Gentiles shall forever remain in that awful state of blindness, which thou beholdest they are in, because of the plain and most precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which have been kept back by that abominable church, whose formation thou hast seen.

The gentiles are limited in how far they may go. Although the covenant people will be smitten and afflicted, they will not be utterly destroyed. Diminished, broken to the dust, but not altogether lost. And, no matter what afflictions they may be called to endure, the Lord intends to give them this, their promised land.

A hopeful note sounds for the gentiles: The Lord will not let them “forever remain in that awful state of blindness” they are in when they arrive here. The Lord has commended the gentiles for coming to this land. They did so in response to the Spirit of God which “wrought” upon them (1 Ne. 13:13). The gentiles came out of captivity and humbled themselves before God (1 Ne. 13:16). The gentiles were given the “power of the Lord” because of their humility (Id.). In the preceding verse, the power of God was how they were delivered from their captivity (1 Ne. 13:30). Despite all this, these gentiles are “in that awful state of blindness.”

How can the gentiles be both blessed to inherit all the Lord’s assistance and yet in an awful state of blindness? What caused them to be blind?

If something is “plain” in the scriptures what must it include?

If something is “precious” in the scriptures what must it include?

If something both “plain” and “precious” has been removed, what has happened to the scriptures? What does it mean to be blind? What does it mean to “stumble?”

What does it mean to cause plain and precious things “to be held back?”

Does any organization or group which “holds back” plain and precious things become part of that “abominable church?” Since “abominable” requires the use of religion to suppress truth or impose a false form of truth, can the definition of “abominable church” be limited to Historic Christianity? What about a modern church, even a restorationist church like the Community of Christ (formerly RLDS) which suppresses or abandons truth? If they “hold back” truth, do they join in the collective assembly of false religions called the “abominable church?” Even if they came through Joseph Smith and accept the Book of Mormon?

What are the “plain and most precious” parts of the Gospel, anyway? Would it have anything to do with knowing Christ? Since this is life eternal, to “know” Him, would it be a simple and plain, but most precious teaching to urge people to part the veil of unbelief and behold their Lord? (John 17:3).

Where do we hear that message preached today? I think when I find such a message taught, I will give heed to it. Nephi’s vision of these events does inform us, does it not?

JUNE 30, 2010

1 Nephi 13:33–34

Wherefore saith the Lamb of God: I will be merciful unto the Gentiles, unto the visiting of the remnant of the house of Israel in great judgment. And it came to pass that the angel of the Lord spake unto me, saying: Behold, saith the Lamb of God, after I have visited the remnant of the house of Israel—and this remnant of whom I speak is the seed of thy father—wherefore, after I have visited them in judgment, and smitten them by the hand of the Gentiles, and after the Gentiles do stumble exceedingly, because of the most plain and precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which have been kept back by that abominable church, which is the mother of harlots, saith the Lamb—I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them, in mine own power, much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb.

Here is meat indeed! What amazing truths unfold in this announcement!

Notice the definition of the “remnant” to whom the prophecies apply has now been given. The distinction between the “gentiles” and the “remnant” are apparent here. Notice that although the gentiles will receive “much of my gospel” they will still remain identified as “Gentiles.” We may refer to the restored church as “latter-day Israel” or similar terms, but the Book of Mormon vocabulary applies the term “Gentiles” to us. This is akin to the “Samaritans” many of whose blood was as Jewish as those who were exiled to Babylon and returned. Even Christ didn’t acknowledge they were Jewish.

Why is it that the gentiles receive “much of my gospel” rather than the “fullness of my Gospel?” As you consider that, remember Joseph used to lament about the Saints’ unwillingness to be taught new truths. Here are two of his comments:

There has been a great difficulty in getting anything into the heads of this generation. It has been like splitting hemlock knots with a corn-dodger for a wedge, and a pumpkin for a beetle. Even the Saints are slow to understand. (DHC vol 6, p.184)

Paul ascended into the third heavens and he could understand the three principle rounds of Jacob’s ladder—the telestial, the terrestrial, and the celestial glories or kingdoms, when Paul saw and heard things which were not lawful to utter. I could explain a hundredfold more than I ever have of the glories of the kingdoms manifested to me in the vision were I permitted and were the people ready to receive them. (DHC vol 5, p. 402)

Joseph administered a form of endowment ceremony in Nauvoo, but told Brigham Young that he would have to finish it. Joseph initiated a few in the manner he received, but was not content with the form of the endowment. Brigham Young reported that Joseph told him,

Brother Brigham, this is not arranged right. But we have done the best we could under the circumstances in which we are placed, and I wish you to take this matter in hand and organize and systematize all these ceremonies. (See Journal of L. John Nuttal, Vol. 1, pp. 18–19, quoted in Truman G. Madsen, Joseph Smith the Prophet, Salt Lake City: Bookcraft, 1999, p. 97)

Joseph also initiated a practice of sealing others to him, as the Patriarchal head of a dispensation. The nature of Patriarchal authority Joseph administered is different from what we currently understand or teach. Today we “seal” families together in genealogical lines based upon birth or legal adoption. Our families are tied together in what we understand was the intended purpose of Elijah’s prophecy about “turning hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers” so that the earth would not be smitten with a curse at the Lord’s return. But Joseph’s practice was somewhat different.

Joseph, who received the revelations on this matter, attempted to set out the manner in which the “family” will be constituted in eternity. He used Christ’s comment in Matthew 19:29 to support the idea that those who are worthy will be placed in a family organization that would be completely restructured in the resurrection. Orson Hyde later constructed a diagram of this teaching and published it in the Millennial Star Vol. 9 [15 January 1847] at pages 23–24. If you search for that on-line you can find it. You need both the diagram and the explanation to understand the teaching. It is also in The Words of Joseph Smith at page 297. Please find and read it. You need to understand that teaching, which came to Orson Hyde from Joseph Smith.

As a result of this teaching, beginning with Joseph Smith and continuing until Wilford Woodruff discontinued it, sealing for eternity was not done in family lines. It was done instead to bind those who had received the Gospel to Joseph Smith, as the Patriarchal head of this dispensation. Joseph's teaching was followed by Brigham Young, who sealed himself to Joseph as his (Joseph's) son. John D. Lee, who was executed for the Mountain Meadows Massacre, was another sealed to Brigham Young as his son. Heber Grant's mother was sealed to Joseph Smith, although his father was Jedediah Grant. As a result he (President Grant) considered himself Joseph's son. That's a side issue.

Returning to the gentile inheritance of "much of my gospel" referred to above, does it suggest that the gentiles are not/never were given generally or as a group possession of "the fullness?" Is "much of my gospel" something worth considering? Can you be certain Joseph delivered all he could or would, were the Saints willing to receive it? If it was "much" rather than "the fullness" then how does that change things?

Assuming "much of my gospel" includes (as it tells us) those things which "shall be plain and precious" then do the gentiles have enough to allow them to receive an audience with Christ as the promised Second Comforter from John's Gospel? (John 14:18, 23). If so, then will not Christ, along with the Holy Ghost, teach you all things needed, even if the gentiles are not in possession of the "fullness" of it all? (John 14:26).

This is important to understand. Nephi makes it clear how the gentiles can become adopted into the promised line and inherit a place among the chosen people who will be preserved, inherit this land, and be numbered among the house of Israel. While that jumps us ahead a bit, it is directly connected here. The first two verses of the next chapter state the following:

And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest himself unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling blocks—And harden not their hearts against the Lamb of God, they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father; yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever; they shall be no more brought down into captivity; and the house of Israel shall no more be confounded.

If the gentiles will hearken to the Lamb, He will manifest Himself to them. What does that mean?

What does it mean to manifest Himself to us “in word?” What does it mean to manifest Himself to us “in power?” What does it mean to manifest Himself to us “in very deed?”

How would Christ manifesting Himself to you in word, in power, and in deed “take away your stumbling block?”

These are the means promised by the Book of Mormon to deliver gentiles so that they may become “a blessed people upon the promised land forever” so as to never be brought down into captivity. But to know this would require you to come into possession of the fullness. Gentile possession of the fullness does not come from group-think, or group possession of some institutional magic. It comes by the same means as salvation has come to mankind from the beginning. The Catholics don’t have it and can’t give it to you. No institutional church has the means to deliver the gentiles. It will come, if it comes at all, from Christ and on the same conditions as saved Joseph Smith, Paul, Alma, Moroni, Peter, Moses, Enoch, Abraham and others.

Now there is a great deal to understand about how to move from having “much of the Gospel” to having a fullness of it. But it was always planned for that final step to be taken by you with the Lord. After all, He is the gatekeeper who employs no servant between you and Him (2 Ne. 9:41). This is why true servants will always point you to Him. False ones will claim they can save you, they have power to bring you to Him, they have been entrusted to open the door for you. The “gatekeeper” however does not need a doorman. Nor can He be fooled by men making pretensions to have authority while lacking any of His power. You must confront Him; or, to use His description, you must be comforted by Him.

If Joseph taught the organization of the Celestial Kingdom would involve reconstructed “family units” based upon the capacity of the individuals’ involved, did he understand doctrine differently than we now do? Why were the original sealings performed to bind people to Joseph as the Patriarch? Why was that continued through Wilford Woodruff? Why was it discontinued? Although it was replaced with a method that provides us with sentimental associations, is there something about our understanding that is less complete, less accurate and less of how Christ intends to organize the eternal family?

It is clear from these verses in 1 Nephi Chapter 13 that the Lord intends to make redemption available to the gentiles, if they will receive it. But the primary means was never intended to be an institution. It was intended to be the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon speaks right over the heads of those who are trying to distract you from returning to Christ. You must either seek and find Him while here, or remain in this Telesial state worlds without end. His invitation is extended. He will open the gate.

Where will we find true doctrine taught? From what source does it come? Will He not, as He has promised, send true messengers to warn before He cuts off and divides asunder? If you do not understand this it is because you will not ask Him.

So, let us press on. I find this is more interesting a Gospel than I had at first imagined. Truly, such things do not enter into the heart of man. They must be revealed, or they stand unknown. Fortunately for us, the Lord has provided the Book of Mormon and sent Joseph Smith to establish a foundation from which we gentiles may derive hope.

JUNE 30, 2010

1 Nephi 13:35

For, behold, saith the Lamb: I will manifest myself unto thy seed, that they shall write many things which I shall minister unto them, which shall be plain and precious; and after thy seed shall be destroyed, and dwindle in unbelief, and also the seed of thy brethren, behold, these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles, by the gift and power of the Lamb.

It is the Lamb who makes this promise. He declares He will “manifest” Himself to Nephi’s seed. Christ promises the same thing (to “manifest” Himself) to the gentiles in our day (1 Nephi 14:1). This original promise would be repeated by later Book of Mormon prophets.

The descendants of Nephi to whom the Lord would manifest Himself “shall write many things” which the Lord would minister. What does the qualification “many things” imply? Is “many” the same as “all things?”

The things to be written are what Christ “shall minister unto them.” Is this limited to His ministry after His resurrection? Would it include all things which He “ministered” to them, even through prophetic ministers sent by Him?

Here again the words “plain and precious” are repeated. Why is this phrase used? What does it mean? Why was this what was removed by the “great and abominable church,” but replaced through the things to be written by the Nephites? Is the fact Christ “ministered” to the Nephites, over a thousand-year dispensation, through many different ministers, in many different settings, alone evidence of something “plain and precious” to us? When Nephi would later write:

Wo be unto him that shall say: We have received the word of God, and we need no more of the word of God, for we have enough! For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom; for unto him that receiveth I will give more; and from them that shall say, We have enough, from them shall be taken away even that which they have. Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts! For notwithstanding I shall lengthen out mine arm unto them from day to day, they will deny me; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto them, saith the Lord God, if they will repent and come unto me; for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long, saith the Lord God of Hosts.
(2 Nephi 28:29–32)

Is not speaking to the Lord, and more importantly hearing from Him the most plain, the most precious of things? Would the Lord have ever promised to come, take up His abode (John 14:23), and sup with you (Rev. 3:20–21) if He did not mean it? Does the Book of Mormon reiterate the promises given in the New Testament? Have they been restored to us by the Book of Mormon?

Here again we find the word “destroyed” used. “Destroyed” does not mean complete eradication. It means the loss of order, political independence and social coherence. Many will die, but they will not cease to exist.

What does “dwindle in unbelief” mean? Will anything be kept, although they should “dwindle?” Can a people “dwindle” and yet retain some truths?

It is not just the Nephite descendants who will “dwindle in unbelief,” but “also the seed of thy brethren,” the Lamanites. Whatever truths remain will not permit them to have on-going access to the Lord’s presence. However, that does not mean they will not have Divine favor, does it? After all, the Lord gives to everyone precisely what will be best for them to know according to His wisdom (Alma 29:8). Does dwindling mean that people are altogether lost to some portion of God’s teachings and favor? How is it possible to determine if any people from any society are not being brought wisely along by the Lord?

The teachings that Christ will “minister” to the Nephites will be written, and then “these things shall be hid up, to come forth unto the Gentiles” at the appointed time. Why write them? Why preserve them? Why are the records of His acts important for others to learn about? Why would a record of His dealings need to eventually be brought to light? Will all His dealings eventually be brought to light? (2 Nephi 29:13; D&C 133:30). If He, therefore, imparts His word to you, what becomes your responsibility?

What does the coming forth of the Nephite record “by the gift and power of the Lamb” mean? Will this same pattern repeat? (D&C 133:26). Will the “gift and power of the Lamb” be on display again? Will this “make bare His arm?” Will people finally consider things which they have previously ignored? (Isa. 52:15). Can you and I consider them now?

JULY 2010

JULY 1, 2010

1 Nephi 13:36

“And in them shall be written my gospel, saith the Lamb, and my rock and my salvation.”

Christ’s Gospel is in the Book of Mormon. I’ve written books explaining just how much of His Gospel is contained in the Book of Mormon. When writing The Second Comforter I found the Book of Mormon was the best source to explain the process. In the Preface to Eighteen Verses I wrote (and meant) the following: “I am convinced the Book of Mormon is the preeminent sacred text for our times. All other volumes of scriptures are not just inferior to it, but vastly so.” (Id. p. iii).

The Book of Mormon contains Christ’s Gospel. It also contains His “rock” and His “salvation.” What is the “rock” contained within it?

John Hall thought the better translation of Christ’s colloquy with Peter would have included the Lord identifying Peter not as a “rock” but as a “seer stone.” And upon the stone or seership would the Lord build His church.

I’ve thought the Book of Mormon was more a Urim and Thummim than a book. It is a tremendous source of subject matter upon which to ponder, oftentimes drawing a veil at critical moments while inviting the reader to ponder, pray and ask to see more. Used in that fashion, the Book of Mormon can open the heavens and make any person a seer indeed.

The words of a prophet are best understood by a prophet. If you can come to understand the Book of Mormon's words, you can become a prophet. Or, more correctly, a seer before whom scenes of God's dealings with mankind, past, present and future, will be put on display. Mosiah 8:17 reports:

But a seer can know of things which are past, and also of things which are to come, and by them shall all things be revealed, or, rather, shall secret things be made manifest, and hidden things shall come to light, and things which are not known shall be made known by them, and also things shall be made known by them which otherwise could not be known.

Another way to interpret the "rock" is found in Eighteen Verses where I discussed the meaning of 1 Ne. 1:6. The meaning of the "rock" before Lehi (who wrote in Egyptian and would therefore understand meanings) would mean Ma'-at. Facsimile 2, figure 4, for example, shows the image of the Horus Hawk atop a rock and on the heavenly boat.

Still another meaning is found in Moses 7:53 where Christ uses the term as a proper noun, or name for Himself. He is "the Rock of Heaven." In this instance the meaning of the above verse is that you can find the Lord within the Book of Mormon. (Remember that EB Grandin's print shop provided all punctuation and capitalizations to the first edition. It was actually John H. Gilbert who did the work, which he described in a written recollection of the events dated 8 September 1892. (John Gilbert's September 8th, 1892 recollections) If this was a proper noun and Gilbert did not capitalize it, we still don't. But that would not mean the word "rock" ought not to be rendered instead "Rock" as a proper name for Christ.)

The “salvation” to be found in the Book of Mormon is the same as salvation to be found in all the Gospel. That is, by finding Christ. For life eternal consists in coming to know Christ, and in turn Christ introducing you to the Father (John 17:2–3). It is this appearing which Joseph Smith referred to as literal, not figurative (D&C 130:3).

The prophetic message of the Book of Mormon is deeper and more profound the closer you examine it. It begins to become quite unlikely Joseph Smith could have produced such wisdom unless it truly is an ancient document. Of course the critics labor to make it seem so, but they haven’t seriously examined its contents to see what it says.

JULY 1, 2010

1 Nephi 13:37

And blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost; and if they endure unto the end they shall be lifted up at the last day, and shall be saved in the everlasting kingdom of the Lamb; and whoso shall publish peace, yea, tidings of great joy, how beautiful upon the mountains shall they be.

Now we encounter words that require us to know meanings first. For the Lord’s “Zion” to be brought forth, we need to know what “Zion” means. What is it? When the Lord calls it “my Zion” does it belong to Him. Will the Lord be the one who “brings again Zion” as stated earlier in the 3rd Nephi materials of Christ’s prophecy? (3 Ne. 16:18, quoting Isaiah 52:8). What are the role of people in “seeking to bring forth His Zion?”

Will they actually “bring again Zion” or is that the Lord’s doing? Unless the Lord determines to “bring again Zion” will men be able to accomplish it? Even if they are quite sincere and determined? What, then, must precede Zion's return?

Even if they are not given the commission or command to participate in Zion's return, will they nevertheless be blessed if they seek to bring it again? Is the promised "gift and power of the Holy Ghost" promised to those who would seek to bring forth Zion? What does that mean? How could anyone accomplish that?

What does it mean to "publish peace?"

What does it mean to "publish tidings of great joy?"

How does the "publishing of peace" and "tidings of great joy" relate to having your feet become beautiful upon the mountains? (I've already discussed having your feet clean of the blood and sins of your generation in an earlier post, How Beautiful Upon the Mountains.)

Why feet "upon the mountains?" What "mountains?" Are these literal, or figurative, or both? If the "mountains" are a symbol, what do they symbolize?

Tuesday I went to the Salt Lake Temple early with a missionary who reported to the MTC on Wednesday. I teach him in priest quorum. I wanted to make sure before his departure that the "endowment" he received would include some details of what the Mountain of the Lord's House was intended to confer. Young men are still teachable. I'd really like to move to the Primary, however. Primary kids, despite their energy, have open hearts and they are willing to receive.

By the time we get LDS adults to teach there is just too much idolatry to deal with....

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 1, 2010 AT 5:59 PM

Denver, I have a son whom I never thought would go on a mission that is about to turn in missionary papers in a few weeks. Going through the temple has been on my mind too. I have thought I would pull out his Dad's clothes and show them to him for one thing. But what suggestions might you have about what I should talk to him about... if you are willing. Your understanding is so much greater than mine.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 1, 2010 AT 8:27 PM

Let him know that the language of the Temple is symbolism. The ceremony is not telling you about history, but telling you about the universal problem of mortality. It is the story of every person who has ever lived or will ever live.

I've written a paper about the first three words spoken by the players in the endowment. If you've sent your email address in we've sent you a copy. I think the talk is a good example of how the Temple has meaning to orient all of us in what we are now facing in mortality.

The more you bring with you to the Temple, the more you get out of it. It was intended to make us reflect or meditate deeply. Its meaning surrenders to patient and solemn thoughts. It is a feast for those willing to contemplate meanings and explore symbolism.

Anonymous · JULY 2, 2010 AT 7:10 AM

You remember all the questions Aidan used to have? You would have been a wonderful teacher for him.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 2, 2010 AT 7:11 PM

I would have enjoyed that immensely. Children are open to truth in ways adults will no longer tolerate.

JULY 2, 2010

1 Nephi 13:38

And it came to pass that I beheld the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the book of the Lamb of God, which had proceeded forth from the mouth of the Jew, that it came forth from the Gentiles unto the remnant of the seed of my brethren.

Roles and definitions continue to be established here. Nephi's seed has been "destroyed" and only a "mixture" of his blood remains at the time of these events. Nephi has taken to calling them "the seed of my brethren" rather than a "mixture" of his (Nephi's) seed.

The "book of the Lamb of God" is later identified as the record we know as the New Testament. Altered, limited, with plain and precious materials removed, nevertheless called the "book of the Lamb of God." Acceptance of this New Testament book, notwithstanding its limitations and omissions, is akin to Christ referring to the Temple of Herod as His "Father's house" despite the fact that it had been profaned.

Although Christ called Herod's Temple His Father's house, He did not commune with His Father there. Christ visited with angelic ministers on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1-3), in the Garden of Gethsemane (Luke 22:43), in the wilderness (Matt. 4:11), and alone while apart from others. But there is no record of Him entertaining angels while in Herod's Temple. Though the Temple had been profaned and was unworthy to receive such visitors, Christ still honored the site and referred to it in sacred terms. This is a great key to understanding Christ's language here.

The "book of the Lamb of God" is revered and held in extraordinary esteem, as is evidenced by the terminology used in this revelation to Nephi. Nevertheless the book is corrupted, changed, with many plain and precious things removed.

Can the book that has come to the “seed of Nephi’s brethren” be said to be less than a fullness? Can the book be called “the book of the Lamb of God?” If it can be called “the book of the Lamb of God” can it also be said to contain a fullness?

[Here’s a modern detour in question-asking: Do you focus on the book’s value and worth by calling it the “book of the Lamb of God” or do you focus on the book’s failings by saying many plain and precious things have been removed? If you do the one are you “positive” and “hopeful” and “Christ-like?” And if you focus on the other are you “negative” and “judgmental” and “un-Christ-like?” Is Nephi being fair and accurate by including the book’s limitations? Or is he just another crank, tearing down the good works and valuable intent of others? Should he repent of his negativity? Ought we be offended?

These kinds of questions are more a reflection of our own insecurities and foolishness than they are helpful to understanding Christ’s “strange act” unfolding before our disbelieving eyes (D&C 101:93–95.)]

This “book of the Lamb of God” will originate from the Jews, be brought by gentiles, and provided to the “remnant” who are identified with the “seed of Nephi’s brethren.” Since we can recall the history of these events, and know it is talking of the New Testament, we can see the various identities. New Testament converts from Judaism to Christianity, including the Apostles, Seventy, and Paul, are called “Jews.” The descendants of the Puritans, English Colonies, American States and United States who dispossessed the native peoples are all referred to as “gentiles” in the prophecy. (I’m ignoring Central and South American for the moment.) The natives will include among them some faction which is the “seed of my brethren” that is the “remnant” about whom these promises are being made.

The question remains as to the identity of the “remnant” about whom these prophecies are speaking.

I know side-issues are arising throughout this discussion. But I’ve been focusing only on the “remnant” for weeks now. I won’t depart from that single subject, despite the temptations that arise from questions flooding in on tangents. Bear with me. We’ll eventually get to other issues.

I’ve debated whether it is even possible to cover this subject on a blog. This is an experiment. I’m trying to cover a topic that should rightly be put into a book. Whether it will work or not is still an open question. I think it is helpful even if the ultimate objective can’t be met. We’ll press forward and see how it turns out.

JULY 2, 2010

1 Nephi 13:39

And after it had come forth unto them I beheld other books, which came forth by the power of the Lamb, from the Gentiles unto them, unto the convincing of the Gentiles and the remnant of the seed of my brethren, and also the Jews who were scattered upon all the face of the earth, that the records of the prophets and of the twelve apostles of the Lamb are true.

We know the New Testament will come forth first and get into the hands of the “remnant” of the promised people. It will get into their hands BEFORE some other materials will also come forth.

When did that happen? Was it something that occurred before the publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830? Which native tribes received copies of the New Testament before the “other books” came forward? What are these “other books” referred to here? They “came forth by the power of the Lamb” but came “after” the New Testament was given to the “remnant.” What books have come forth “by the power of the Lamb” to your knowledge? Apart from the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Moses, Book of Abraham and Joseph Smith History and Matthew, what other books would qualify? Did all these come after the “remnant” had first received the New Testament “book of the Lamb of God?”

The effect of the “other books” will be to “convince” the gentiles as well as “the remnant of the seed of my brethren” of the truth of the New Testament and “records of the prophets.” Have the gentiles become convinced? Have the “remnant” become convinced? Have the Jews who were scattered upon all the face of the earth become convinced? Are they convinced of the truth of “the records of the prophets” even if they are not yet convinced of the truth of the “twelve apostles of the Lamb?”

Is this a serial progression? That is, does it come and convince the gentiles first? Then, having convinced them, does it next convince the “remnant?” Then, after having convinced both the gentiles and the “remnant,” does it in turn convince the scattered Jews? If serial, what stage of the unfolding of these events is happening now? What is needed before the phase would be completed and the next one begin?

What does it mean that “other books” will come forth? What kinds of “books” would they be? Who would have written them? Why would they come “by the power of the Lamb” only to meet the criteria? Is a good commentary written by CES among the promised “books” coming forward? What about the Ensign?

How would you be able to recognize a book coming “by the power of the Lamb” in fulfillment of this promise? Will these “books” be recognized as scripture? Do they include discoveries at Qumran and Nag Hammadi? Was Hugh Nibley working on such projects, and if so, was he among those in whom the “power of the Lamb” was working?

This verse has potential for broad application. It raises questions worth contemplating and may surprise you at some of the issues it requires us to confront. Such are the Lord’s dealings with mankind in every generation. We are made prayerful because He gives us great subjects with which to grapple.

JULY 3, 2010

1 Nephi 13:40–41

And the angel spake unto me, saying: These last records, which thou hast seen among the Gentiles, shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them; and shall make known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him, or they cannot be saved. And they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb; and the words of the Lamb shall be made known in the records of thy seed, as well as in the records of the twelve apostles of the Lamb; wherefore they both shall be established in one; for there is one God and one Shepherd over all the earth.

The “books” that the prior verse referred to are now called “records” by the angel. The “records” will be among and originate from the gentiles. The purpose of the “records” is to establish the truth of the original records of “the twelve apostles of the Lamb.”

The purpose of the whole is to confirm the reality of Christ in His mortal ministry. Christ, who came to earth, lived and died as a mortal, was the Savior of mankind. The New Testament record confirming His ministry, sacrifice and resurrection is true! Their testimonies of Christ are reliable. He is our Savior and our God!

The “plain and precious” things that got removed will be returned to us. I’ve spoken of that before and won’t repeat it again here. But the “plain and precious” things will become known to “all kindreds, tongues and people” again.

I was thinking about what was required for Joseph Smith to be able to get a message out in his day. He needed a printing press, which he could not afford. He needed Martin Harris to give a $3,000 note backed by a mortgage on his home to motivate the printer to make the first printings of the Book of Mormon. He needed an army of disciples to distribute the material on foot or horseback. He needed an infrastructure that went well beyond his individual means. Today Joseph would need a keyboard and an internet connection. He could speak to more people in a few minutes, across a wider swath of the globe, as a single individual acting alone, than he was able to speak to through an army of followers who uprooted their lives to follow his teachings.

We continue to make great sacrifices in purse and time to send missionaries throughout the world even today. In truth, if Joseph Smith had access to the internet he could have restored more things to more people in less time than has been done from 1830 to the present. It makes you wonder—if the truth were not packaged, marketed, focus-grouped through approved language, and accompanied by supporting photos and digital graphics—if the truth were simply spoken plainly, would it have any effect? Does it need an infrastructure of trained professional marketing to accompany it? Does it need a slick website to attract His sheep? Is His voice enough?

What if someone were to declare “that all men must come unto the Lamb of God, who is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior of the world, or they cannot be saved.” What if they were to declare in sober words that the Lamb of God lives still! That He had appeared to and spoken with the one making the declaration. Would there yet be those who would hear and repent?

Would that message be drowned out by the chorus of foolish and vain things being spoken in the name of Jesus Christ by those who, despite having real intent and sincere desire, have not been given power to declare His words? Would such a message only be another bit of entertainment for the bored and curious to give but passing notice? Could the world be given such a message and warned, but fail to see what it is they are being offered for one last time before the harvest is to begin? If so, would we notice?

The verse raises interesting options for the Lord to fulfill His promises in ways which have only come into existence in the last few years. He certainly does have the ability to “hasten His work” when He chooses (D&C 88:73).

Should someone choose to come, the verse reports:

they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb; and the words of the Lamb shall be made known in the records of thy seed, as well as in the records of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

What does that include? Authoritative baptism? Authoritative bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost? Prophecy? Revelation? The “rock” of seership we discussed a few days ago? How must they come? The Book of Mormon suggests it must be through the gate of revelation (Moroni 10:4–5). Without revelation you cannot obtain the testimony of Jesus; which is the spirit of prophecy (Rev. 19:10). Or, in other words, unless you find prophets who can bear testimony of Him, you have not yet found the means for salvation. This becomes quite interesting and important. Very frank about the conditions for salvation.

Then the promise is that all these witnesses, all these records, and all these disciples are to become “one.” “[T]hey both (records) shall be established in one; for there is one God and one Shepherd over all the earth” who in turn makes people to be “one” as well. A great assembly, a general congregation and Church of the Firstborn.

How great a promise has been offered to those who will receive! What good, however, is it to offer a gift if the one to whom it is offered refuses to accept? (D&C 88:33).

JULY 3, 2010

Fourth

It's the Fourth (third, actually, but because we're in Utah it gets celebrated early so as to keep the Sabbath, or something). Therefore my wife, in her wisdom has determined to only put up one post—I'm adding this as an aside.

I had a couple of off-blog comments addressed to me that haven't been put up. But to make certain that the matter is clear to those involved: Rest assured I take no offense at criticism. It really isn't important if folks like, dislike or are otherwise disposed toward me. Largely I'm irrelevant. Some of the things I have to say are quite important, in my view. But they derive their importance from the subject, not from me.

I probably deserve more personal criticism than I will ever receive. Therefore I do not and have not taken any offense at anything said to me on or off the blog. Do not trouble yourself for a moment at the idea that you've offended me; because you certainly haven't.

I'm a trial lawyer. That means someone is hired (and paid quite well) to oppose everything I do, everything I write, and every argument I make as part of my daily work. Criticism is always with me whenever I am working. So to be criticized over ideas I present is no more offensive than to have a spirited argument in a case at work. I have thick skin and a tolerance for being criticized. Since I took no offense I don't feel the need to forgive, but nevertheless if forgiveness is wanted it is freely given.

One other thought: I think there are a number of you that are really seeing the Book of Mormon in its true light. That is joyful for me. Such a treasure; so unused; so little understood. To have it become treasured by some of you for the first time is truly a delight for me. Thank you.

JULY 4, 2010

1 Nephi 13:42

And the time cometh that he shall manifest himself unto all nations, both unto the Jews and also unto the Gentiles; and after he has manifested himself unto the Jews and also unto the Gentiles, then he shall manifest himself unto the Gentiles and also unto the Jews, and the last shall be first, and the first shall be last.

Christ showed Himself to the Jews during His mortal ministry. He showed Himself to the Nephites after His resurrection.

He visited others, who have also kept records of His appearances to them. The full extent of the records that have been kept has not become apparent to us yet. Nephi would report in the final summation of his lifelong ministry the following about the many records to come forth:

Wherefore, because that ye have a Bible ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written. For I command all men, both in the east and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them; for out of the books which shall be written I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written. For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the Nephites and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth and they shall write it. And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews. And it shall come to pass that my people, which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will show unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham that I would remember his seed forever. (2 Nephi 29:10–14)

The “lost tribes of Israel” are plural. However many the number may be, each kept records and they are to come into our possession at some point in fulfillment of this prophetic promise.

All of this was foreseen by Zenos even before Isaiah. Zenos tells us the lost tribes of Israel will be spread all about, into the “nethermost” parts of the earth:

And these will I place in the nethermost part of my vineyard, whithersoever I will, it mattereth not unto thee; and I do it that I may preserve unto myself the natural branches of the tree; and also, that I may lay up fruit thereof against the season, unto myself; for it grieveth me that I should lose this tree and the fruit thereof. And it came to pass that the Lord of the vineyard went his way, and hid the natural branches of the tame olive-tree in the nethermost parts of the vineyard, some in one and some in another, according to his will and pleasure. (Jacob 5:13–14)

Where is “nethermost?” How many were there?

When Christ informed the Nephites of His post-resurrection ministry, He informed them He would be visiting the various Israelite people: “But now I go unto the Father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them.” (3 Nephi 17:4). He visited the Nephites. They were an organized body, led by prophets, expecting His birth and death. There were other organized believers who also looked for His coming. What their prophets told them, and how they understood His ministry will be in their records. What He taught them when He visited with them after His resurrection will also be in their records. It is likely to mirror the Nephite experience and record. However, it is undoubtedly true that we will again learn how involved a Redeemer He has been. Should we already realize that from what we’ve been given? We ought to welcome His direct ministry among us. Somehow we find His intimate involvement hard to comprehend. We think, if someone should acknowledge they have seen Him, that such a person is somehow special, different, or unique. It ought to be commonplace.

In the unfolding ministry of the Lord, the Jews were the first, but will be the last, to receive again His ministry. The gentiles have been given the Gospel. The remnant will be receiving it from them — soon.

CHAPTER 8

1 Nephi 14

JULY 5, 2010

1 Nephi 14:1–2

And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest himself unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling blocks—And harden not their hearts against the Lamb of God, they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father; yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever; they shall be no more brought down into captivity; and the house of Israel shall no more be confounded.

I've referred to these verses before. When Elder Mark E. Peterson claimed the Lord would not visit with "gentiles" but only with the house of Israel relying upon 3 Nephi 15:23, it was my view that the 3rd Nephi statement of Christ was as to His immediate post-resurrection appearances to the various scattered lost tribes. He had no commission from the Father to appear to the gentiles in that time frame. These verses are about a different, much later time. These are speaking of the time when the Book of Mormon (record of the Nephites) would come into the possession of the gentiles. The gentiles will, if they hearken to the “Lamb of God IN THAT DAY,” have the Lamb manifest Himself to them. Today is THAT DAY. It is now when the gentiles are promised He will manifest Himself to us, in “word” and in “power” and “in very deed.”

His assignment immediately post-resurrection was to visit with each of the still organized, prophet-led, but scattered children of Israel. They had been put into the “nethermost” parts of the earth. He went to and visited with each of them serially. He did not visit with gentiles during that ministry.

But in the time following the publication of the Book of Mormon, and as part of removing the stumbling blocks of the gentiles, He is to visit the gentiles “in word” and “in power” and “in deed” so that it will “take away their stumbling blocks.”

What does it mean to stumble? What is a “stumbling block?” What kinds of things would impede you from walking back to the presence of God? How will Christ’s ministry in “word, power and deed” to gentiles remove these things?

It is AFTER the ministry of “word, power and deed” when the stumbling blocks are removed, that the gentiles are then “numbered among the seed of thy father.” Note that they are not numbered among other branches of Israel. Note that they are not sealed to their fathers and made Ephriamites descended from other branches. They are to be “numbered among the seed of thy father” or counted as part of Lehi’s seed. They are, in short, to be sealed to Lehi as their Patriarch and father. It is necessary to understand the doctrine discussed in this post.

This was always a part of the Gospel. Joseph Smith understood it and practiced it. Today we think it was an oddity that got corrected at the time of Wilford Woodruff. However, if you read the Book of Abraham you realize that the adoption of people into an inheritance was always the manner the Celestial Kingdom was to be organized here. Look at the Lord's discussion/explanation to Abraham found in Abraham 2:8–11:

My name is Jehovah, and I know the end from the beginning; therefore my hand shall be over thee. And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee above measure, and make thy name great among all nations, and thou shalt be a blessing unto thy seed after thee, that in their hands they shall bear this ministry and Priesthood unto all nations; And I will bless them through thy name; for as many as receive this Gospel shall be called after thy name, and shall be accounted thy seed, and shall rise up and bless thee, as their father; And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee; and in thee (that is, in thy Priesthood) and in thy seed (that is, thy Priesthood), for I give unto thee a promise that this right shall continue in thee, and in thy seed after thee (that is to say, the literal seed, or the seed of the body) shall all the families of the earth be blessed, even with the blessings of the Gospel, which are the blessings of salvation, even of life eternal.

Those who receive the same priesthood (Patriarchal) from the time of Abraham forward become his (Abraham's) seed. Therefore they become his (Abraham's) inheritance and posterity, sealed to him as a part of his family.

This was the priesthood that was bestowed upon Joseph Smith, as a result of which he received the promises of Abraham. While looking for references to Abraham throughout Section 132 is interesting, I'll just take an excerpt. [PLEASE forget about plural wives while you read this. Think only about Patriarchal Priesthood and the authority which was with Abraham and renewed in Joseph. It is that issue that I want to focus, and not to become side-tracked on plural marriage. At some point I'll spend a few weeks on that side issue. NOT NOW.] So here is Section 132:28–32:

I am the Lord thy God, and will give unto thee the law of my Holy Priesthood, as was ordained by me and my Father before the world was. Abraham received all things, whatsoever he received, by revelation and commandment, by my word, saith the Lord, and hath entered into his exaltation and sitteth upon his throne. Abraham received promises concerning his seed, and of the fruit of his loins—from whose loins ye are, namely, my servant Joseph—which were to continue so long as they were in the world; and as touching Abraham and his seed, out of the world they should continue; both in the world and out of the world should they continue as innumerable as the stars; or, if ye were to count the sand upon the seashore ye could not number them. This promise is yours also, because ye are of Abraham, and the promise was made unto Abraham; and by this law is the continuation of the works of my Father, wherein he glorifieth himself. Go ye, therefore, and do the works of Abraham; enter ye into my law and ye shall be saved.

Exaltation came through this priesthood, which linked together the fathers and the children of promise. The priestly sealing together of Patriarchs into a family that will endure as the government in heaven was the object of the Gospel in every generation. We are returning, at the end, to what it was at the beginning. However, the way in which it was to occur was “by my word” and “by revelation and commandment” so that the person knows he is to have a part in the Father’s kingdom. It was not to be merely a distant expectation, uncertain in origin and doubtful in authority. It was to be certain, not doubtful: “The more sure word of prophecy means a man's knowing that he is sealed up unto eternal life, by revelation and the spirit of prophecy, through the power of the Holy Priesthood." (D&C 131:5). It is directly connected with this Patriarchal Priesthood, the same authority which belonged to Abraham, the possession of which by any man makes him the seed of Abraham.

Returning to the subject of "remnant" and "gentiles," the Book of Mormon prophecies still do not refer to the latter-day gentiles as anything other than "gentiles" even when they are "numbered among the seed of Lehi." Gentiles retain in prophecy their identification with "gentiles" although they are adopted as Lehi's seed. Hence Joseph Smith's reference in the Kirtland Temple dedicatory prayer to the Latter-day Saints as "gentiles" by identity (D&C 109:60). Whenever a gentile manages to acquire this adoption, they do not become identified as the "remnant" as a result. Instead, they become heirs to share in the promised blessings, but as "gentiles." They will get to assist the "remnant" but as "gentiles" not as the "remnant." Still, those who are adopted as Lehi's seed inherit with the "remnant" the Lord's promises. But they are nevertheless called in prophecy "gentiles" throughout.

COMMENTS:

Gordon · JULY 5, 2010 AT 8:55 PM

How wonderful, this makes sense of D&C 84:34. We become the sons of Moses and of Aaron and the seed of Abraham by being adopted into their heavenly lineage, and we become members thereby of the church and kingdom of God.

This makes the oath and covenant of the priesthood CLEARLY about receiving the second comforter and the attendant blessings.

It does require a paradigm shift, however. The Patriarchal priesthood instead of being an archaic, obsolete, appendage to the Melchizedek now appears as a the ultimate, glorious flowering of the Melchizedek priesthood.

But I am confused about D&C 84:6. It seems to say that Moses has sons which are his as a result of having received the Holy priesthood. If this refers to one of the Holy Orders of the Priesthood, then how can he have received it from Jethro, a mortal man. If vs. 6 refers only to the Melchizedek Priesthood, then how has it given him sons?

J. · JULY 5, 2010 AT 9:57 PM

If a 'Gentile' accepts the 'fullness' of the Gospel that is offered — and receives his calling and election unto eternal life, — he is then the seed of Jesus Christ — correct?

In your June 30 blog you mentioned that Joseph Smith is head of this last dispensation and those in this dispensation — are they not part of his 'family' rather than Lehi's?

Those who accepted the gospel under Abraham became his seed by adoption — are you saying that all 'Gentiles' who are faithful become 'adopted' as Lehi's 'sons' rather than to Joseph, who is head of this dispensation holding the keys of the Patriarchal Order, even as did Abraham as head of the patriarchal order of HIS dispensation.

Abraham & Joseph are both dispensation heads — where does Lehi fit into this picture?

Does Joseph still stand at the head of this dispensation? This has been my understanding.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 5, 2010 AT 10:24 PM

The priesthood held by Melchizedek was Patriarchal. The "City" was a family, sealed to him. They came into the order through the authority given to him to seal on earth and in heaven.

We have two divisions of priesthood in the Church, one which we call Melchizedek and one which we call Aaronic. These are not the same as what Melchizedek held, because in the Melchizedek order sealing authority is not generally granted.

Moses had authority from Jethro, but also visited with the Lord face to face, at which time the Lord gave him a work to do. The work was greater than the authority given by Jethro, and of necessity included all keys to accomplish it (as I have explained earlier in a post about keys accompanying assignments).

Lehi was a descendant of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph; as was Joseph Smith. There is no conflict with Joseph as Dispensation head being the Patriarch of all who came after him, and Lehi being the father of all gentiles who convert in this dispensation.

Go back and review the chart from Orson Hyde I referred to earlier and you will see that genealogical order does not control, but worthiness and capacity control. How the eternal family will be structured will be the result of what the Lord knows to be the right, joyful, best and holiest of family orders.

Anonymous · JULY 6, 2010 AT 9:16 PM

Thank you, Ben. I'm feeling much better about the hundreds of hours I've spent researching my ancestors and sealing them (because I was inspired by the experience Denver shared in 2nd Comforter about doing temple work for his ancestors.)

CBK

Denver Snuffer · JULY 6, 2010 AT 9:27 PM

I continue to do Temple work for my ancestors; having attended the Temple twice last week. I see nothing wrong with doing work for my kindred dead. That is the program the Church has underway at present.

That having been said, I also know that families will not be organized in eternity exclusively in the same way as we have been born into a genealogy in mortality.

In the Family of God, Abraham will preside over the entire human family which comes after him. So, too, will Joseph Smith preside over all those who came after him, no matter their family relations. He is the head of this dispensation and will receive that position.

There will be others who are placed into the family lines of the Eternal Family based upon where they belong in God's eyes, which may be far different than where they were born. Some of the last will, after all, be first.

JULY 6, 2010

1 Nephi 14:3–4

And that great pit, which hath been digged for them by that great and abominable church, which was founded by the devil and his children, that he might lead away the souls of men down to hell—yea, that great pit which hath been digged for the destruction of men shall be filled by those who digged it, unto their utter destruction, saith the Lamb of God; not the destruction of the soul, save it be the casting of it into that hell which hath no end. For behold, this is according to the captivity of the devil, and also according to the justice of God, upon all those who will work wickedness and abomination before him.

Now I wish Nephi would only prophecy smooth things to us (Isa. 30:10). But once again here we find him being negative. He needs to repent or he's going to lose readers.

The “great pit” is an interesting symbol. Remember when the brothers sought to kill Joseph? Before they sold him into slavery, they put him into a pit in which there was no water (Gen. 37:23–24). They stripped him of his sacred garment—not of “many colors” but of “sacred markings.” Having stripped him of the garment that belonged to the heir, and assured him of his exaltation, they cast him into a pit without water. He descended, as the damned, into the waterless pit. This pit symbolizes the damned souls in spirit prison who, without deliverance from the waters of baptism, are left to suffer (See Zech. 9:12). Joseph's pit without water is a reminder of how the ordinances that pass us through the water are the means of deliverance. (Hence the Red Sea and rebirth of Israel as they emerged from Egypt.) Christ also alluded to this in His parable of Lazarus, when the torment could only be cooled by covenantal water (Luke 16:24).

Well the abominable church offers ordinances, but they leave people in a pit, without redemption and in need of authoritative washing to cleanse from sin. The devil and his children are the founders of this great and abominable order. They seek to cheat mankind of salvation. If they can cause even a little error that robs power from the ordinances performed, they can keep mankind captive. For death and hell will claim all those who have not been redeemed from the awful pit.

How unkind would it be to fail to warn people of this risk they face? How unkind would it be to allow them to proceed into the afterlife unprepared, uncleansed, and unredeemed? Which would be better, to stay silent while the idolatry of the Latter-day Saints robs them of redemption, or to speak up and warn? Men and institutions will never redeem a man. Idolizing an institution will damn every participant. Idolizing men will damn those false religionists. In the Latter-day Saint community we have two groups: Those who are humble and follow Christ, but who are taught by the precepts of men and err (2 Nephi 28:14). And the rest are those who follow men and worship the institution and proclaim "All is well" with their faith. For the first group there is hope, so long as they are able to find the truth (D&C 123:12). For the rest, they will become heirs of this prophecy of Nephi's, all the while assuring one another that the odds are they are going to be exalted.

The goal in every generation is to become Zion. To do that you must have a return of a Patriarchal head, as in Enoch's day or in Melchizedek's day, wherein they organized again after the pattern of heaven. A family. One. Where all things are in common because there is a loving environment where all are of equal worth. No one aspires to be a leader, but all become sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives where the care of all is as natural as family affection for one another.

The devil and his children seek to fragment, to divide, and to keep mankind from organizing into a family where the hearts of fathers are with the children and the hearts of children are toward their fathers. When you divide up into separate clans or divided families, while still paying tribute to the honored position of “family life” among the divided clans and families, you still have only a form of godliness without any power. This is the goal of the devil. It will prevent Zion from ever being brought again. It will leave people unorganized and unprepared to assume a place in the government of God, which is His eternal and singular extended family, where all are one.

The references to the “hell that hath no end” is that same play on words that is defined in D&C 19:5–12. It is a place of torment, where people suffer as in the Telestial Kingdom, or the world in which you presently reside (to paraphrase the Endowment). How long will people endure such an experience? Until they repent (D&C 76:99–101). What if they do not repent? They will suffer, worlds without end (D&C 76:109–112).

All of this according to “the justice of God.”

Notice that people arrive here because of the “abominable church” that will always be ready to preach to you false, vain and foolish doctrines. They will offer anything to distract you and keep you from seeing the Lord “bring again Zion.” They will use the words of Zion to preach a false faith. They are “abominable” because their false teachings are clothed in the vocabulary of truth.

At that day even the very elect will be the targets of deception. Those claiming falsely to be “prophets” will arise and lead away many. They will show great wonders, spacious and glorious buildings, feats of charity and good will. But the elect will not be deceived, though they may be troubled (JS-M 1:22–25). They will not be deceived because they treasure up His words. They know His voice, recognize when it speaks, and will use it to keep them from deception. They will have entertained angels, who will have gathered them, and will be waiting for His return (JS-M 1:37).

Now, indeed, is the great day of Satan's power; who rules from the rivers to the ends of the earth and there are none to molest him or make him afraid. We look for the day when, again, a voice will cry out in the wilderness saying to walk in the strait path of the Lord. It would be interesting if that should happen to see who would recognize it, and who would want to know instead "by what authority" such a voice cries out.

Well, there's more to the verse than this. Ask yourself:

- Why is it a "great pit which hath been digged for the destruction of men?"
- Who is it that "shall fill" it?
- What does "utter destruction" mean?
- What does the phrase "not the destruction of the soul, save it be the casting of it into that hell which hath no end" refer to?
- Why is this "according to the captivity of the devil?"
- Why is this "also according to the justice of God, upon all those who will work wickedness and abomination before him?"

It is an interesting insight into the patience of God, the eternal purposes of God, and the endless, even "worlds without end" which will be provided for all those who will not repent. What a vast, eternal work God has set about to accomplish! Imagine bringing to pass the immortality and eternal life of man! What an endless process such a work may entail! Why would anyone procrastinate the day of their repentance?

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 6, 2010 AT 7:52 AM

How do you come up with They stripped him of his sacred garment — not of “many colors” but of “sacred markings.” from the scriptural reference? Gen. 37:23–24

Thanks

Anonymous · JULY 6, 2010 AT 8:36 AM

Denver, I read Gen. 37:23–24 and it says “coat of many colors”. Can you please clue us in as to how you got “sacred markings”. Are there other cross references that you used to put two and two together? Did you come to the conclusion through the voice of the Spirit? Are they words of another that have become your own? I am baffled. Hope you respond. thanks.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 6, 2010 AT 2:46 PM

The idea of a garment of many colors is an invention. If you look in your Bible every time it mentions many colors the word colors (even in the commentary) is in italics [the word in italics is actually many] because it is put in there by modern editors. It's found in no ancient source. It's not a garment of many colors at all. A garment of certain marks is the term that's used here. We'll see what it is in a second. 'This garment had belonged to Abraham, and it already had a long history.' It's history was lengthy because it went back to the Garden of Eden, you see. That's the garment; it's the only one. Just as we treat the story of Cain and Abel, we trivialize this. We say, 'Joseph was the youngest kid, so his father favored him and gave him a pretty garment of many colors.' There is no mention in any ancient source of a garment of many colors. That's an invention of modern editors trying to explain it. But here it was the garment he gave him. It was the garment of the priesthood. No wonder they were jealous of him, they being the elder brothers and he the younger in the patriarchal line coming down from Abraham. This garment had belonged to Abraham and had come down to Joseph instead of to the other brethren. (Hugh Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, vol. 3, 51–52)

JULY 6, 2010

Comment Error

Blogger is having a problem with their comments—apparently a worldwide problem. It has been reported to them. I will save the comments that come in and not post them until they fix the problem. If your comment has come to me and I have moderated it and it has gone on into hyper-space, I will repost it by copy and paste.

Keep the comments coming. Blogger should have it fixed soon, I hope.

Thanks

CM

JULY 6, 2010

1 Nephi 14:5

And it came to pass that the angel spake unto me, Nephi, saying: Thou hast beheld that if the Gentiles repent it shall be well with them; and thou also knowest concerning the covenants of the Lord unto the house of Israel; and thou also hast heard that whoso repenteth not must perish.

Again a reminder that Nephi's teachings come from an angel. He's not on his own errand in making these things known. I doubt a person of good faith and common sense would ever dare to make declarations as Nephi does unless he had received the message from such a source. Joseph put it this way:

None but fools will trifle with the souls of men. How vain and trifling have been our spirits, our conferences, our councils, our meetings, our private as well as public conversations—too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending for the dignified characters of the called and chosen of God, according to the purposes of His will, from before the foundation of the world!” (DHC Vol 3, pp. 295–96).

Nephi was no fool. He wanted us to understand these teachings came from a higher source, and not man’s wisdom. Indeed, what man can open up the mysteries that have remained hidden? Either God makes them known or they remain a mystery.

I believe the wisest course would have been for all our teachers, from Joseph till today, to either declare what the Lord and His angels have made known to them or to remain silent. Had that been the practice our libraries would undoubtedly be sparse. But what few books that remained would be the “best books” worthy of study (D&C 88:118). I understand that not all have faith. But teachers do a profound disservice whenever they pontificate about something they do not understand. No-one is an “authority” who has not received intelligence from the Lord or His angels. They are simply trying to be helpful, or seeking to magnify a calling, but they are not on His errand. Alas, the full extent of this problem cannot be known. All those who have spoken in His name, but without His instruction and direction, have indeed taken His name in vain. This will be a great burden for those who have chosen to use His name in violation of a fundamental commandment to the contrary (Exo. 20:7).

The happy news is that “if the Gentiles repent”—is always a condition for moving forward. We can’t get through carrying on our backs the false, vain and foolish traditions men have handed to us. We must lay them down. Unless we do so we wind up exactly at the point when this Dispensation began: suffering under doctrine which consists merely of the commandments of men, having a form of godliness without power (JS-H 1:19).

What must gentiles do to “repent?” All gentiles, including those who have accepted the Restoration and who claim to believe the Book of Mormon...What must they do? To answer that look again carefully at the Lord’s condemnation of us:

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received—Which vanity and unbelief have brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all. And they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written— That they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father’s kingdom; otherwise there remaineth a scourge and judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion. (D&C 84:54–58)

Then Nephi’s angel-minister reminds Nephi of two different thoughts: 1) There are covenants with the house of Israel. So they will be remembered. 2) Whoever repents will find things will be well. Nephi was told: “thou also knowest concerning the covenants of the Lord unto the house of Israel; and thou also hast heard that whoso repenteth not must perish.” The result is that even though the gentiles are not given a covenant status, they are nonetheless included within the promise that it is well with whoever should repent. Accordingly, if they will repent, the gentiles will not perish but will have eternal life.

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those who declare that God reigneth and will deliver His people. How merciful it is that the Lord God will accept all those as His people who will repent and come unto Him.

COMMENTS:

Taylor · JULY 6, 2010 AT 4:10 PM

Denver

What does “unbelief” mean as used in the book of mormon? During a book of mormon discussion a while back I remember you speaking to the more specific definition of the word as used in that context. Rather than misquote you I wanted to ask.

I remember something to the effect of unbelief not so much meaning that a person didn't have a belief, or willngness to believe something, but that unbelief meant a person believed in something false, distorted or incomplete.

Given the Lords direct words specifcilly about the churches unbelief and vanity I think this would be valuable to know.

Is to me anyway.

Taylor

Denver Snuffer · JULY 6, 2010 AT 9:33 PM

Almost without exception the Book of Mormon uses these words in this way:

“Belief” means you understand and accept true doctrine.

“Unbelief” means you do not understand and have not accepted true doctrine.

“Faith” means you have been visited by an angel.

“Knowledge” means you have been visited by the Lord.

The Book of Mormon is trying to teach you true doctrine, to have you reject false or incomplete doctrine, to develop faith and to bring you to receive at last knowledge.

Beverly · JULY 7, 2010 AT 3:17 PM

Denver — Can you clarify even further your definition of faith as you stated above. If I have faith in the Lord, in what he did and promises, then knowingly or unknowingly have I been visited by an angel? Would the Holy Ghost be classified as an angel?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 7, 2010 AT 5:23 PM

If you have correct understanding of Him then you have belief. Belief does not become “faith” as used in the Book of Mormon until an angel has ministered to you. Your belief in Christ is belief.

The Holy Ghost is not an angel in the sense used in the Book of Mormon.

There are different definitions of “faith” and I’m not saying that is the only definition ever given. In the Lectures on Faith Joseph Smith gives a different meaning. He defines faith as a principle of power through action, in which you put your beliefs into action and thereby acquire power; because Joseph related faith to having power.

What you are describing would be classified as “belief” in the Book of Mormon’s typical use of the term. It would also be called “faith” by Joseph Smith if, as a result of your faith you have acquired power from the Lord.

An answer I give only responds directly to a question asked. It does not attempt to cover all other applications, meanings or uses.

JULY 7, 2010

1 Nephi 14:6

“Therefore, wo be unto the Gentiles if it so be that they harden their hearts against the Lamb of God.”

Interestingly, rather than shouting out in rejoicing that all who repent will escape punishment, the angel instead pronounces a “wo” upon the gentiles. It is almost as if the future of the gentile conduct inspires nothing but pessimism for the angel. It inspires another warning and condemnation for the gentiles who, having received the Book of Mormon and other sacred writings, are then fully responsible to repent.

Notice that the relationship is between the “Lamb of God” and the gentiles. It is not between the gentiles and “leaders” or “prophets” or “administrators” or “general authorities” or even messengers. It is between the gentiles and “the Lamb of God.”

Why that specific a relationship? Why is it exclusively between the individual and Christ?

Read again the description of the Telestial folk who return “worlds without end” to their condemnation:

And the glory of the telestial is one, even as the glory of the stars is one; for as one star differs from another star in glory, even so differs one from another in glory in the telestial world; For these are they who are of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas. These are they who say they are some of one and some of another—some of Christ and some of John, and some of Moses, and some of Elias, and some of Esaias, and some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch; But received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets, neither the everlasting covenant. (D&C 76:98–101)

From what you’ve now learned can you see how one might follow even a true messenger but fail to gain “the testimony of Jesus?”

Can you now understand why, although you have followed messengers, you may have not in fact received the “everlasting covenant?”

The Temple is a type and shadow. It is a symbol of the real thing, but it is not the real thing. The “everlasting covenant” is taught there. But to gain it you must receive it through “the testimony of Jesus.” Is this “testimony of Jesus” yours? Or is it rather Jesus testifying to you? If it is He testifying to you, then what must His testimony be?

In light of that does it mean then to “harden your hearts against the Lamb of God?” As you answer that, keep in mind His formula in D&C 93:1:

Verily, thus saith the Lord: It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am.”

Here Christ is but reiterating the message of the Book of Mormon.

Then how do you repent? I was asked about idolatry among the Saints. Anything that separates you from the Lamb of God is an idol. Cast it aside and come to Him. Why we have idols between us and the Lord is as different as one person is from another. Almost without exception, it comes as a result of a false tradition handed down. Your false traditions are based on your life's experiences while another's false traditions are based on theirs. No matter what they are or how they were acquired, whatever separates Christ from you must be set aside. Come to HIM. Not to me or any other. Only He can save you.

No wonder that after making great promises to the gentiles, if they will but repent, the angel cries out “wo be unto the Gentiles!” They won't receive: 1) the Gospel, neither 2) the testimony of Jesus, neither 3) the prophets sent to warn them and the message given to them, neither 4) the everlasting covenant offered to them.

Will you?

COMMENTS:

ML1321 · JULY 7, 2010 AT 8:45 AM

Joseph said the following about the telestial kingdom:

“And thus we saw, in the heavenly vision, the glory of the telestial, which surpasses all understanding;

“And no man knows it except him to whom God has revealed it.”

Denver, it appears you are teaching multiple mortal probationations (an idea seemingly believed by Eliza R. Snow and Heber C. Kimball, two of the prophet's closest friends). How are verses 89 & 90 quoted above reconciled with that doctrine? If we are, here and now, experiencing a telestial kingdom and glory how is it that “no man knows it except him to whom God has revealed it?” And is this glory we now enjoy the “glory” spoken of which “surpasses all understanding?”

Thank you for all of your insight!

Matt

BTW, can somebody please teach me how to use the HTML tags?! I can't for the life of me figure out how to use those things.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 7, 2010 AT 10:22 AM

I'd say the glory of the telestial kingdom surpasses your current understanding; and will become known only as God reveals it.

JULY 7, 2010

1 Nephi 14:7

For the time cometh, saith the Lamb of God, that I will work a great and a marvelous work among the children of men; a work which shall be everlasting, either on the one hand or on the other— either to the convincing of them unto peace and life eternal, or unto the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds unto their being brought down into captivity, and also into destruction, both temporally and spiritually, according to the captivity of the devil, of which I have spoken.

There will be a time when the accounts will all be settled. Everything will become everlasting and people will either inherit eternal lives and move forward, or they will return to be destroyed both temporally and spiritually again. Joseph Smith commented in the King Follett Discourse about the process of gaining exaltation. He said, you must begin with the first, and go on until you learn all the principles of exaltation. But it will be a great while after you have passed through the veil before you will have learned them. It is not all to be comprehended in this world; it will be a great work to learn our salvation and exaltation even beyond the grave.

Death and hell are the devil's domain. He's the god of that world, and since we have death and suffering here, he calls himself the god of this world. Those who come here are subject to his buffeting, and his will. They are tormented, tempted, troubled, and then they die. While captive here, they endure the insults of the flesh, and the difficulties of trying to find their way back to God.

Those who find Him, however, are able to receive "peace and life eternal" through a higher way. The devil is bound for them, and they are able to be "added upon" by the experiences and difficulties here.

All of this is called a "great and marvelous work" to occur "among the children of men." Note it isn't the "remnant" or the "gentiles" but "the children of men." Why so? Is everyone invited? Why, if everyone is invited, will it largely only affect the "remnant," and the "gentiles," and the "scattered Israel," and "Jews?" What about the "heathen," since they are also "the children of men?" Don't they also have part in the first resurrection? (D&C 45:54). Will even some of them be included among the "children of men" who behold this "great and marvelous work?"

Why is it "everlasting" whether it is for "peace and eternal life" or "captivity and destruction?" Isn't "Everlasting" another of God's names just like "Eternal" and "Endless?" (D&C 19:10–12). If so, then what does the "everlasting peace and eternal life," and "everlasting captivity and destruction" really involve? [You really need to read that paper I've been emailing out if you haven't read it already.]

Why does God want us to respond to His message and get out of this Telestial Kingdom into another, higher kingdom? Why does

He want us to become like Him? How is this experience able to make us more like Him?

If one is involved in the “continuation of the lives” (D&C 132:22) is that distant and second-hand? Or does God (or the Gods) get involved directly with His/Their children? (Abraham 3:24–25).

What causes “hardness of their hearts?” What causes “blindness of their eyes?” Why are those whose hearts are hard unable to receive Christ? Why are those who are blind unwilling to see Him?

This cycle of inviting people to come to the Lamb of God has been going on for some time now. When mankind generally rejected Him after the time of Noah, there was a chosen people who were given a sacred tradition. Ultimately they got proud, failed to recognize Him when He came, rejected His message, and killed Him. Gentiles converted and became the inheritors of His teachings. Then the gentiles began to persecute the previously chosen people for generations. In this verse the gentiles are remembered, sacred materials are entrusted to them with an obligation to spread that sacred material back to the earlier chosen people. However, for the gentiles to be able to accomplish this they need to hold onto the sacred materials and teachings. You simply can't spread abroad what you've failed to retain.

If the gentiles let the sacred materials and teachings fall into disuse, forfeit their priesthood by draining it of any power, and have nothing to offer the previously chosen people, then the gentiles will be cast off, trodden under foot and destroyed, as we have earlier seen.

This verse reminds us what is at stake: Eternity. Or at least God's judgment. It'll be embarrassing to return to Him unimproved and un-added upon. Particularly when His hand was stretched out to us all the day long. Gentiles who do as they are asked are given all the blessings of the chosen people. Those who do not are rejected and destroyed.

As a friend and I discussed last week, Hindu's advise us to get off the wheel and return to God. They may be onto something with that thought. One eternal round, indeed...

JULY 8, 2010

1 Nephi 14:8–9

And it came to pass that when the angel had spoken these words, he said unto me: Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel? I said unto him, Yea. And it came to pass that he said unto me: Look, and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose founder is the devil.

The dialogue between Nephi and the angel is interrupted. Nephi is brought into the dialogue as the angel interrupts and asks Nephi a question. You should ask yourself why an angel behaves in this manner? Why interrupt the teaching by asking Nephi questions?

And what a question it is: “Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel?” Once again, it is the “covenants of the Father” that is important and controls what is being taught and all history involved. It remains not only “in the beginning” but throughout “is the Word of God.” Consider how broadly the “Word” of God may be applied:

- Christ is the “Word of God” because He lived and did all in conformity with the will of the Father (3 Nephi 11:11).
- All of creation came into being because of the Father’s Word, or power (Mormon 9:17).
- Christ’s spoken Word had such power as to astonish onlookers (Luke 4:32, 36).

- Nothing of power hereafter will exist unless obtained by the Father's Word (D&C 132:13).
- Moses made water come forth from the rock by the Father's Word (1 Nephi 17:29).
- Joseph Smith was able to bring the Book of Mormon forth because of the Father's word (Mormon 8:16).
- His Word is "quick" and "powerful" and can cut like a two-edged sword (D&C 11:2).
- It was by this Word of God that Enoch had power to hold at defiance the armies of nations (Moses 7:13).

Without the "covenants of the Father" the best laid plans, the most noble aspirations, the desire to have Zion return, will all fail. It will return by a covenant or not at all. It will return in strict conformity with His covenant, His Word, and not according to the vain desires of men.

The angel is setting up a contrast for Nephi. First he asks if Nephi remembers the Father's covenants, to which Nephi responds that he does remember them. Now, often in the Book of Mormon the word "remember" is used to mean "keep." If that is the way it is used here, then Nephi is being asked if he keeps the covenants of the Father, so far as they apply to him. Using that meaning, the angel is inquiring about Nephi's worthiness to receive more. Or, in other words: "Do you follow the Father's commandments?" "Yes." "Then I will show you more." Reminding Nephi that the only reason he is beholding these things is because of his obedience and sacrifice. Or, to put it more plainly, reminding US that this kind of information and learning from angelic ministers comes as a consequence of following everything taught to you before. You receive more because you follow what you already have.

Now, after the inquiry and answer, the contrast is shown: On the one hand: The Covenants of the Father. On the other hand: the Great and Abominable Church.

God's covenants are strict and apply in a very precise manner. The great whore uses religion to promise to all people everywhere their desires for being comforted in their sins. The great and abominable church does not want you to forsake your sins, but to retain them and expect God will forgive and overlook them. The great and abominable church wants you to believe that the way is broad and many will enter into exaltation. This whore teaches that no matter your conduct, the odds are you are going to be exalted. So eat, drink and be merry. If God is going to be upset He will merely beat you with a few stripes and promote you into the kingdom of God anyway (2 Nephi 28:8).

This contrast is drawn for Nephi because these are two extremes. Both of them are religious. One is founded on a true religion, the other is a false religion. One follows the Father's covenants and will result in God's promised results. The other follows the commandments of men who have mingled their own philosophies with scripture so that their doctrines are all corrupt. They share a vocabulary, but nothing else. For one, to "repent" is to return to God's presence, for the other "repent" is to satisfy institutional demands and surrender to control by others. The angel uses the contrast because this is where mankind finds themselves. We live between these two choices. Our eternal consequences hinge on how we choose. Among all sects there are good people who are blinded by the craftiness of deceitful men (D&C 123:12). Even though they may be honorable, by surrendering to deceit they forfeit the crown (D&C 76:74-76).

This contrast is shown to Nephi, and shared by him with us, because we are always facing the dilemma of choosing between those who will promise you everything and give you nothing, and those who warn you to repent, as a result of which you may receive everything. Oddly, mankind seems to prefer the former.

JULY 8, 2010

1 Nephi 14:10

And he said unto me: Behold there are save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth.

There are and always have been two churches only. One is true. Its members belong to the Lamb of God. The Lamb, and their Father.

Either you belong to the elect family of Christ, the Church of the Firstborn, or you don't. All other religions and philosophies are false. Read again the description of those who are saved (See What's in a name?) There are only "two," and one of them is not the Catholic Church, nor the Presbyterian Church, nor the Lutheran Church, nor The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. However, the ordinances received through The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are expected for those who belong to "the church of the Lamb of God," but there is not a complete overlap of the "church of the Lamb of God" and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Therefore, based on what Nephi says above, unless we are part of that body of believers whose Father is Christ, and who posses a covenant from Him that they will be His, we belong to the whore of all the earth, a church of abominations. Those who are believers are they who He has declared to His Father “. . . having been true and faithful in all things.”

The other and all-inclusive great church is comprised of all philosophies, all belief systems, all unbelief systems, all rationalizations, all theories and vanities that distract people from repenting and following Christ. These vary from very good things that are uplifting, and possess even great portions of truth, to the degrading and perverse. This all-inclusive church is a “whore” because she is completely indiscriminate and open for all to have her acceptance and affection. She welcomes you. The only requirement being that you have false beliefs.

She will make you rich, or she will make you covet riches. If she gives them to you it is to corrupt you. If she withholds them from you, it is so you will lust and envy what you do not have.

Look at her list of trade goods, given in the description of her fall by John the Revelator:

And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. (Rev. 18:11–13)

The final two on the list are the reason for the other items. The earlier ones lead inevitably to slavery and loss of the souls of men.

The devil, who founded her, is not interested in anything other than slavery and the loss of your soul.

The great illusion of a whore is to imagine she likes you. To imagine she cares for you. To imagine she desires what you desire and is cooperating with you because she finds you attractive, appealing, and that you fulfill her longing. It is a lie, an illusion and a fraud. Her bodily diseases are less virulent than her contamination of the soul. Empty, false, vain and foolish thoughts occupy the imagination of those who have intercourse with the great whore. She prefers the lie, relies on it. You would not be her customer if not for the lies.

What an amazing congruence of sexual images and religious failing have been given to us by Nephi and John the Revelator. How apt! How perfect! Imagining something that is degrading and debilitating to be sacred. It is a work of a god or a devil. And of course it is for us to decide between them.

The whore does have her allures, doesn't she? How many of us are in her embrace, speaking of love and Jesus and the joy of the Saints, while remaining wretched, poor, foolish and lost? She offers you vanity as a religion. "Vanity" because it is vain, or without any effect to save, i.e., without power. Only a form of godliness, nothing real.

Such powerful deception as is implied in these verses demands our attention. It ought to force us forward to seek and obtain a more sure word of prophecy, so we know our God and covenant directly with Him. It should make us refuse all the imitations, all the deceptions, all those who pretend to speak truth, and instead demand that true messengers be sent from whom we can be taught further light and knowledge.

There's the rub, isn't it? How to tell the one from the other? A concealed and veiled resurrected Christ laid aside all glory and walked with two of His disciples for approximately seven miles on the day of His resurrection. After His departure, the one asked the other: "And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?" (Luke 24:32). Undoubtedly the reason they already knew it was Him was because truth has power that vanity does not. Therefore, it appears that before our eyes are opened, we must determine truth first. I've written about this in the Appendix to Eighteen Verses.

Interesting cause and effect. Interesting the Lord would open the scriptures to touch their hearts. What a powerful pattern the Lord has given for those who follow Him.

JULY 9, 2010

1 Nephi 14:11–12

And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people. And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters; nevertheless, I beheld that the church of the Lamb, who were the saints of God, were also upon all the face of the earth; and their dominions upon the face of the earth were small, because of the wickedness of the great whore whom I saw.

The whore has "dominion" over all. All nations. All kindreds. All tongues. All people. She has dominion over them all. What does "dominion" mean?

Notice the “church of the Lamb of God” are referred to as “the Saints of God.”

The Saints on the other hand, were “few” in number by comparison with the great dominion of the whore.

The Saints numbers are few because of “the wickedness and abominations of the whore.” How would the whore’s wickedness and abominations cause the Saints to be “few” in number? What trouble must the Saints overcome because of the whore’s widespread wickedness? What challenges must the Saints overcome because of the whore’s universal abominations? How do they “overcome” these challenges? (D&C 76:53).

What does it mean the whore “sits upon many waters?” (Rev. 17:15). Why are they likened to water? (Gen 49:4).

Note the Saints are also “upon all the face of the earth” but are not said to be “sitting upon many waters.” They do have, however, “dominions” (in the plural). Why is the whore’s dominion singular, while the Saint’s plural? The whore’s control is one, but the Saints are divided into sub-groups. Why? Will they be led by various prophets from various locations? (D&C 133:26).

This fragmentation of the Saints is set in a time frame of this prophecy and it will not last. However it will exist before the wrath poured out upon the whore begins.

Why is the whore much more successful than the church of the Lamb of God? Or, more importantly, is the number of those involved in these two different cultures any indication of their relative standing before the Lord? If not, then what matter? Is it the quantity of those who are following a particular creed or organization, or the quality of the knowledge some few possess of the Lord?

Will getting more people to join the Church change the outcome of this prophecy from Nephi?

What is important, then, for those who want to be on the right side of this divide? How do they become one of the “few” who are Saints belonging to the Lamb of God?

How should “success” be defined? By numbers, buildings, activity and wealth or possession of knowledge of Christ? If success has nothing to do with numbers, buildings, activity and wealth, why do we concern ourselves with them? If it has something to do with knowledge of Christ, why are so few able to declare they know Him? Who can state they have seen Him? Who can testify as a witness of Him? How successful have we been in distributing the knowledge of the Son of God?

Where should our efforts be focused? Is the Book of Mormon important in accomplishing what the Lord expects from His Saints?

What interesting information Nephi has given us in this verse. But it gets more interesting as it proceeds further....

JULY 9, 2010

1 Nephi 14:13

“And it came to pass that I beheld that the great mother of abominations did gather together multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all the nations of the Gentiles, to fight against the Lamb of God.”

Did you notice that? The whore is also a “mother?” Why is that? What do we learn from that bit of information? Just how loyal will the deceived be to the institution they regard as their great mother? It’s no wonder they react with such hostility at the threat posed by the Lamb of God.

Now did you notice also that the fight is against “the Lamb of God” and not the “Saints?” They are opposed to Christ and are going to fight against Him.

This is akin to David's response to Goliath:

Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand; and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the carcases of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel. And all this assembly shall know that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is the Lord's, and he will give you into our hands. (1 Sam. 17:45–47)

David knew the fight was between the Lord and Goliath, not between him and Goliath. Therefore the advantage was all the Lord's.

The coming fight will be between those who regard the worldly order as their mother, and the Lamb of God.

Did you notice also that the great mother whore includes “all the nations of the Gentiles?” Meaning that included among this great false order will be the United States, the greatest of the Gentile nations. We've been told in modern revelation that along with all other nations, the United States will be destroyed (D&C 87:6). We disbelieve this and hope to save the nation. We want to follow the counsel of the Lord to make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when we fail we may be received into everlasting habitations (Luke 16:9). Your affiliations here will serve you here, but you will not be trusted with true riches (Luke 16:11). The result is that we have no choice but to flee.

Well, the great whore wants to defeat the Lamb, but she cannot get access to Him. She must settle for destroying His teachings,

His doctrines, His ordinances. She will target these truths because they link the Lord to some few who are here. She will at every turn deceive, mislead, corrupt and discourage. She understands that the fight is with the Lord, but to destroy Him she must destroy all that testifies truthfully of Him.

All that is corrupt and corrupted is welcomed by her. All that fails to redeem the souls of men and return them to the Lord's presence is welcomed here in her dominion. She will confer tax benefits, honors, protection and awards upon those who cannot teach the doctrines that save. Wealth will amass, privileges will be given, and the great whore's dominion will expand to include "all churches" in these last days (2 Nephi 28:12–14). Persecution is the heritage of the righteous because this world has no part in Christ (John 14:30). When the righteous are no longer persecuted, and the honors and awards of men begin to be bestowed upon any religion, you may know they have made friends of the children of mammon.

She cannot destroy Him, so she will turn her anger upon those who preserve His doctrine, His teachings, His truths and destroy them that He may be cast out of this world. This is her plan.

But this battle is between principalities and dominions involving spiritual wickedness in high places, and not just flesh and blood (Eph. 6:12). Therefore we should fear not, because the battle is, always was, and always will be the Lord's (D&C 105:14).

JULY 10, 2010

1 Nephi 14:14

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were armed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory.

Once the whore sets about to destroy the Lamb of God, He does not remain in His pavilion away. He takes up the fight for His Saints.

What is the “power of the Lamb of God?”

Why does this “power” “descend” upon the Saints?

Why are there two groups identified, “the Saints of the Lamb of God,” and also, “upon the covenant people of the Lord?” Are these the same or two different groups? If two, what is to happen in this descending of “power” upon these two?

Why are the “Saints” and the “covenant people” both “scattered upon all the face of the earth?” Why are they not gathered together in one place?

What does it mean to be “armed with righteousness?”

Why are “righteousness” and “the power of God” two different things?

Do the “covenant people” have to have “righteousness” to receive the “power of God?” Are they blessed for the covenant’s sake? What about the others? Who are “righteous” and their protection? Are they protected for righteousness sake?

Assuming the “power of God” is given to protect these groups, do they need munitions? Do they need intercontinental firepower? Do they need to form an army for their own defense?

What is the “power of God in great glory?” Will the children of the great whore be able to behold this “power of God in great glory,” or will it be hidden from them? If hidden, will they sense something? Will fear fall upon them that they flee from the presence of this glory? Wasn’t that the case with Daniel’s friends? (Daniel 10:7). Wasn't that the case with the companions of Saul? (JST Acts 9:7 "And they who were journeying with him saw indeed the light, and were afraid; they heard not the voice of him who spake to him.") Will Zion not be protected by this "power of God?" (D&C 45:70). If it is to be like the days of Noah (Luke 17:26–27), then won't there be someone who can speak the word of God and mountains flee, armies held at defiance, and rivers turned out of their course? (Moses 7:13).

Will the same things happen that happened at the time of the great flood? If so, how much relevance does the history from Enoch through Noah have to our day? Should we be familiar with that pattern to know how the pattern may repeat itself?

What can you do to be numbered with those who will be spared? Does the known history of the antediluvians tell you anything about how you need to prepare? Since Enoch had 365 years to develop a people who were worthy to be spared, how much greater a work will it be to prepare now that life spans are generally less than 90 years? How great a work lies before you?

JULY 11, 2010

CD Talks Available

There are a couple of talks I gave in the past that were digitally recorded. They have been sold in the past for (as I recall) $10.00 apiece. The proceeds from those sales were donated to a shelter for abused girls in Utah.

The recordings are still available. They are not charging anything for the copies, but are asking that donations be made. There are costs associated with producing and mailing the copies, so some donation is appreciated to be fair to those providing them. Any donation you make that exceeds the costs to reproduce and mail them will be used to support the missionary effort of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Below are descriptions of the two recordings:

Denver Snuffer, One CD: Zion Symposium Talk, 4 Nephi, given February 23, 2008

Denver Snuffer, Three CDs: Christ's Discourse on the Road to Emmaus, given April 14, 2007

Cost: Donation

For orders email: thembones47@yahoo.com

While I own the copyright for these materials, all the money raised in selling them has been donated. None of the donations will be given to me, nor have any ever been given to me.

If you choose to make a donation, the money will go to those who will take the order, process your donation, and return anything above production costs to the missionary effort. Other than giving the talks and making this announcement, I am not involved in any other capacity.

The second recording (3 CDs) is a talk that became the appendix in Eighteen Verses. There are some differences between the recorded talk and the published appendix.

Anyone interested can contact the email address shown above to get a copy. Please do not contact me or the comment moderator. I am only making the announcement.

JULY 12, 2010

1 Nephi 14:15–16

And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon that great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth. And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things—

God's wrath is "poured out" and takes a specific form: "wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds." People go to war. The "wicked kill the wicked." (D&C 63:33; Proverbs 11:5; Mormon 4:5).

The wicked get to destroy one another, but they do not get to destroy the righteous (1 Nephi 22:16).

The destruction of God's judgment will be "among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations." But that was all nations, was it not? Therefore, what nation will not be at war in this coming day?

The angel makes a point of stating what Nephi is beholding: "Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots." How is this God's wrath? The answer is that when God is angry, He withdraws His spirit (Helaman 6:35; Helaman 13:8). And when He withdraws His spirit from one, He generally pours it out on another (Helaman 6:34–36). When His spirit withdraws, men are left to their natural, carnal state, filled with envy, jealousy, covetousness, ambition and greed. When the heavens become silent, the judgments of God follow (Revelation 8:1; D&C 88:95).

This is the means by which the tares ripen in iniquity, and the wheat ripens in righteousness. However, to preserve the spirit among those to be saved in the last days, it will be necessary for the same priesthood, the same calling, to be in possession of those to be preserved. Otherwise they can't ripen into wheat (D&C 86:1–11). For the wheat are destined for Celestial Glory and eternal life (D&C 101:65). This cannot be realized without a covenant (D&C 132:20) and the testimony of Jesus to them (D&C 76:51–57).

How should we each proceed?

Can anyone make you “wheat” if you do not the things the Lord commands you to do? (Luke 6:46—a favorite verse of President Kimball’s).

Can anyone give you “oil” for your lamp?

What is your responsibility to obtain these things?

When the time comes that all nations of the earth are at war with one another as the means for the Lord’s wrath to be poured out upon the wicked, what is the role of the righteous? Will they join in the battle? Will they be spared? (D&C 45:68–71).

Why does the Lord not require the righteous to shed the blood of the wicked? Why would He use the wicked to destroy the wicked?

If His spirit withdraws from the world, but remains with His Saints, what peril is there if the Saints don’t also withdraw from the world?

Will citizenship in both Babylon and Zion be possible? Will Zion need a bank?

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 12, 2010 AT 5:12 PM

“Will Zion need a bank?”

I though [sic] Zion was a bank. :-)

Denver Snuffer · JULY 20, 2010 AT 1:07 PM

Zion’s Bank is a different subject:

On Friday, May 21, 2010 the Church News posted an article about President Monson dedicating a new multimillion dollar Zion’s Bank center in Provo, Utah. It was on the inside, third page, where everyone who subscribes to the Church News could not miss the article. I was reminded of the Kirtland Anti-Banking Safety Society. The dedication was given prominent mention to quiet LDS members' concerns about keeping money in the bank. Using President Monson at the dedication was a calculated effort to keep deposits in the bank.

Today's Deseret News reports that Zion's Bank continues its slide in failing performance. The seventh straight quarter of losses, this quarter totaling $135.2 million. The Troubled Asset Relief Payment (TARP) bailout money of $1.4 billion has not been repaid.

Oddly the bank's stock has risen on expectations that the bank would be improving in earnings. Much of that expectation being fueled by unrealistic optimism.

Zion's has 500 offices in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Texas, Utah and Washington. Many of the depositors are subscribers to the LDS Church News and are no doubt keeping their money in the bank as a result of confidence in its ties to the LDS Church. The recent well publicized dedication of the Provo Center is, no doubt, calculated to keep that confidence high among depositors.

JULY 12, 2010

1 Nephi 14:17

And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose founder is the devil, then, at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people who are of the house of Israel.

Now we get some indication of timing. A great deal has been described, but the timing of the events has been left out until now.

The “day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots” — that is, when the great and abominable church is caught up in worldwide violence, every nation at war with its neighbor or within itself. It is when those events are underway “the work of the Father shall commence” to fulfill all the prior commitments and covenants.

First, the great whore will reel and stagger as a drunkard, drunk with her own blood.

Then the “work of the Father” will “commence.” What does it mean to “commence?” Why choose such a desperate hour to begin?

Are there signs of this international and internal violence already afoot? Is the work of the Father now commenced?

The “commencement” of the work is “for the fulfilling of His covenants.” What does it mean to “fulfill?” Will every whit of His covenants be all completed, all finished, all kept? (D&C 1:38).

Interestingly, the “fulfilling of His covenants which He hath made to His people who are of the house of Israel” is not divided into “remnant” and “gentile.” At the time when His final work begins, all of “the house of Israel” will be remembered, in whatever scattered place they may be found. Why the change? Why no longer focus upon the “remnant” and “Jew” and “gentile” and “scattered house of Israel?” Why does He now call them all “his people?”

Do the fractures heal? Do the divided groups come together at last? Will the scattered, lost and forgotten remains of Israel be found throughout the world? (Jacob 5:67–68). Will the results be a restoration of all Israel, no matter what group they may have been identified with previously? (Jacob 5:72–73). Will these divided, but remembered people become one at last? (Jacob 5:74).

How much purging will be needed to bring this to pass? (Jacob 5:71; D&C 45:68–71; D&C 133:9–12).

If the work has begun, are there “servants” already here beginning to move the now wild branches back to their natural roots? (Jacob 5:70). How does one respond and return to their natural roots? Who is the “tree of life?” How do we reattach ourselves to Him? (John 15:1–6). What of those who would have you attach yourselves to them, to become their disciples, to follow what they claim as their right to lead and control you? (D&C 121:36–37). How must they lead, if not by exercising control and dominion? (D&C 121:41–42).

[As long as we are in Section 121, there is an important but still unrecognized truth in that revelation. The caution in Section 121 about abuse is directed in whole at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Among other things, it is warning the LDS Church not to persecute the Lord’s Saints, and thereby fight against God (D&C 121:38). It has been traditionally interpreted by the LDS Church to the complete contrary. The LDS teaching turns the warning on its ear, and reads it to mean that you shouldn’t fight against the LDS Church! The warning, however, is addressed to the Church and warning it to exercise caution, lest they find themselves fighting against the Lord’s Saints, and thereby in turn fighting against the Lord. Read it carefully. It is not a caution to you or me, but a caution to the LDS Church itself. It means that there may be Saints of God who are at times at odds with, or critical of the LDS Church. When that happens, the LDS Church is warned to refrain from persecuting them, or else they may find themselves fighting against God. It is an unnoticed warning because the traditional interpretation is used to give the LDS Church protection against criticism.]

COMMENTS:

Ben · JULY 12, 2010 AT 3:32 PM

I need to read more carefully section 121, but on a quick look at the section you mention, I can’t see how that is directed at the institution of the church. Against individual members, yes, but verse 37 specifically mentions amen to the priesthood of “that man,” singular, individual.

I’ve also never heard this scripture used as a protection against criticism.

I’d love more insight on this interpretation, I’m not seeing what you do.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 12, 2010 AT 7:57 PM

Ben:

Search for references using Section 121 in General Conference talks.

CHAPTER 9

3 Nephi 21

JULY 12, 2010

3 Nephi 21:1

Now we jump to late in His ministry where Christ is teaching the Nephites. We pick it up in 3 Nephi, Chapter 21:

3 Nephi 21:1

And verily I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place—that I shall gather in, from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them my Zion;

Christ is telling the Nephites (and us) about timing. He will provide a “sign” to those who watch for such things. Contrary to what you’ve heard all your life about “signs,” they are and always have been part of the true Gospel. They invariably follow faith, but do not and never have produced faith (D&C 63:9–10). There are examples of signs throughout God’s dealings with those who follow Him (See, e.g., Helaman 14:4; Ezek. 24:24; Ex. 10:2; Acts 2:22, among many others). We are supposed to see signs, that we may know God is dealing with us (D&C 68:10–11).

Christ is giving a sign to us so we may understand when His Father's promises are being fulfilled.

The time when His Father's covenants are to be fulfilled will be the moment when Christ will "gather in, from their long dispersion, my people." Note it is "I" meaning Christ, who will do the gathering. Christ is the great husbandman of this, the Lord's vineyard. It is Christ who will personally do the gathering. How do you suppose Christ will "gather in" those whom He calls "His people?"

Notice how the gathered are referred to by Christ as "my people" and "house of Israel" and "my Zion." When the gathering is complete, the various groups are no longer separately identified. On the other side of this gathering they will be "one" people and a restored "house of Israel."

But note the sequence:

First, gathering in from a long dispersion.

Second, they convert into "my people" or the "house of Israel." Then they are "established" as "Zion."

Why does the Lord refer to it as "my Zion?" Can you have Zion without the Lord's presence? Can there be Zion without the Lord dwelling among them? (Moses 7:16-18). Notice in Enoch's City that it was the Lord who came and dwelt there, then later the Lord is the one who names or calls the people "Zion."

When the Lord calls it "my Zion" how literal is this? How directly will the Lord be involved?

If you want to have a place there, do your connections in a church, organization, fraternity, fellowship, quorum or brotherhood matter? If not, what association alone will allow you to participate? How important is the "testimony of Jesus?"

Read again the description of the group of Saints who are included with those who will comprise Zion. As you read, keep in mind all we have discussed up to this point as you recognize familiar words used below:

⁵¹ They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given—

⁵² That by keeping the commandments they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power;

⁵³ And who overcame by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true.

⁵⁴ They are they who are the church of the Firstborn.

⁵⁵ They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things—

⁵⁶ They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory;

⁵⁷ And are priests of the Most High, after the order of Melchizedek, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the Only Begotten Son.

⁵⁸ Wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God—

⁵⁹ Wherefore, all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

⁶⁰ And they shall overcome all things.

⁶¹ Wherefore, let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet.

⁶² These shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever (D&C 76:51–62).

These, then are Zion. These are those who become “one” and are called by the Lord after they are gathered in the “house of Israel” and “my Zion.”

JULY 13, 2010

3 Nephi 21:2–3

And behold, this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign—for verily I say unto you that when these things which I declare unto you, and which I shall declare unto you hereafter of myself, and by the power of the Holy Ghost which shall be given unto you of the Father, shall be made known unto the Gentiles that they may know concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and concerning this my people who shall be scattered by them; Verily, verily, I say unto you, when these things shall be made known unto them of the Father, and shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you;

The sign Christ is giving requires a specific knowledge of a sequence of events. These verses begin to detail how you will recognize the sign as the proper chronology unfolds.

First, Christ’s words which were “declared unto you” (meaning the Nephites) will be “made known unto the gentiles.” So, the Nephites must receive both what Christ has declared and will declare to them before His ministry was completed. Then these Nephites must record or preserve the words Christ declared. These words, recorded by the Nephites must in turn, become “known unto the gentiles.” This initial part of Christ’s sign is directly tied to the Book of Mormon. However, what does it mean that the words of Christ must be “made known unto the gentiles?” We have them, but do we know them in the sense that is being used here?

Second, the gentiles must come to a knowledge of “this people (Nephite audience) who are a remnant of the house of Jacob.” The gentiles must understand or “know” that the promises made to the “remnant” exist. Has that happened? If not, why not? Is it happening at the moment as you become aware of this information that has been in the Book of Mormon since its publication in 1830? (No wonder the Lord’s condemnation of the Latter-day Saints).

Note the Lord calls the audience, and in turn their posterity, “this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob...this my people.” It is important to know that the Lord describes them with this identity as “my people” throughout His sermon and prophecy. This careful limitation of the reference to the Lord’s “people” should not be applied broadly. It does not include gentiles. We should not change His meaning. He is speaking about a single identified group as “my people” and it is those before Him and their descendants.

Now, although it is a parenthetical thought, He adds a third event in the chronology. The third event is the scattering of the “Lord’s people” who are the “remnant” by the gentiles. It will happen before the second listed event, but it is the third tier of the sign Christ is giving.

[By the way, this scrambled chronology is one of the things that evidences it is authentic and not a product of Joseph Smith’s imagination. The time-line is always scrambled somewhat when the Lord or His true prophets speak. Information is not presented to their minds in a chronological manner, and therefore it is grouped by subject, not by time (D&C 130:7–8). Isaiah, for example, was always grouping information according to subject, not chronology. Indeed, when looking back on a sweeping revelation, it is not possible to reconstruct a time line of events shown to a prophet in vision without some considerable effort. But this is merely an aside.]

The fourth portion of the sign is when the gentiles, who have the words, and appreciate or “know” them, bring them to the attention of the remnant. When those standing before Christ, through their descendants, come to receive these words of Christ from gentiles who know them to be true, then the fourth portion of the sign will have occurred.

Notice how Christ attributes the coming forth of the Book of Mormon to the gentiles as the work of “the Father.” Christ was and is directly involved, He is the husbandman and the true vine. But He does not take credit as the Son. He says this coming forth will be “of the Father.” All things are done by Christ according to the will of the Father, to whom He always gives the credit. There is a profound lesson in that for each of us. We are only accomplishing something good, enduring and valuable as we conform to the will of the Father and His Son. Whenever we are on our own errand, it is foolishness and vanity.

The “sign” given to us will continue in the Lord’s statement which follows. So let’s turn to more...

JULY 13, 2010

3 Nephi 21:4

3 Nephi 21:4

For it is wisdom in the Father that they should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things might come forth from them unto a remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel;

Christ attributes the wisdom of this plan to “the Father.”

The gentiles will be set up “in this land.” What land has become a land for free people “by the power of the Father?” The most common answer is the United States. That is the conclusion of Meldrum and Porter in their book Prophecies and Promises - The Book of Mormon and the United State of America.

The “wisdom of the Father” decrees that the gentiles will receive the record and the land where Christ visited the Nephites. Why is it wise for this to be the case?

From the gentiles, who inherit the record, the record will “come forth from them unto a remnant of your seed.” The gentiles receive it first, then it will come from them to the “remnant.” Who are the gentiles? Do the Latter-day Saints have the record? Even though they are in possession of the record, they are nonetheless called “gentiles”

Note that the “covenant of the Father” is the reason for these events to unfold. Why is the unfolding history of the remnant, gentiles and house of Israel to fulfill “the covenant of the Father?” What was/is Christ’s role in the process? If Christ is directly involved, why is it nevertheless the “covenant of the Father?”

Christ refers to the objects of the covenant as “his people” — the Father’s people. This is an important transition in the description. These people belong to the Father! Immortality and eternal life is a family affair. Christ’s harvest of souls is for the glory of the Father. If there were any doubt of Christ’s motivation and selfless service, His comments here remove that doubt.

From what source does the gentile freedom come?

If gentile freedom is based on the Father’s power, how vulnerable is their hold on freedom if they rebel and reject the Father? How much credit can the gentiles take for establishing their land of freedom? To whom should gratitude flow for the gentile freedom?

The backdrop Christ gives to our history is wholly based on the Father's will, covenants and design for mankind. We tend to question how involved the Father and His Son are in the daily events of life. From Christ's statement here, how involved are they?

JULY 14, 2010

3 Nephi 21:5–6

Therefore, when these works and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter shall come forth from the Gentiles, unto your seed which shall dwindle in unbelief because of iniquity; For thus it behooveth the Father that it should come forth from the Gentiles, that he may show forth his power unto the Gentiles, for this cause that the Gentiles, if they will not harden their hearts, that they may repent and come unto me and be baptized in my name and know of the true points of my doctrine, that they may be numbered among my people, O house of Israel;

Now keep in mind this is all within a “sign” Christ is telling to the Nephites. It is a “sign” of when the great latter-day work will begin to unfold.

What are “these works” referred to by Christ? Was it necessary for the “works which shall be wrought among you hereafter” to be included in the “works” the gentiles were to receive? Why? Why would the gentiles need to know of the great success and ultimate failure of Nephite faith? The greatest time in the Nephite history would be after Christ's visit, when they lived a united order. But the harrowing end described by Mormon and Moroni shows a depth of shocking evil. The violence, killing, cannibalism are disgusting to read and consider. Why did Christ want the “works which shall be wrought among you hereafter” to be included for the gentiles to have before them? What lessons would we not learn without these subsequent portions of the Nephite record?

Why do (from Christ's vantage point)/did (from our vantage point) the records need to come "from the gentiles?" And how did that "show forth [the Father's] power unto the gentiles?" What about the restoration was a visible display of the Father's power? Latter-day Saints have a "testimony" of the restoration, but gentiles seem unimpressed. The missionary effort among Americans today is nearly at a standstill. There are about as many people slipping into inactivity, or asking for their names to be removed as there are people volunteering to join at the present. So how is the restoration a display of "the Father's power" to the gentiles?

Does the Father use "small means" to display His power? (1 Nephi 16:29; Alma 37:6). Is it possible for the Father to show forth His power and for people to miss it entirely? What kind of "power" is missed by those who reject it?

If they do not reject it, notice what the "Father's power" may lead the gentiles to receive:

- repentance,
- baptism,
- knowledge of the true points of Christ's doctrine,
- being numbered among Christ's people, even Israel.

But if not, then they will be swept away by their own wickedness and violence.

Now it may not be appreciably "powerful" when the gentiles receive the Book of Mormon. But if they repent, and are baptized, and come to know the true points of His doctrine, how great a change will take place? How great a show of power is it when the only ones at peace are those who dwell in Zion? (D&C 45:68–71).

It is clear the Lord will only gather to Zion in the great day of calamity those who had previously seen in His “small means” the path to safety and redemption.

For the most part, the gentiles will be unimpressed with the Lord’s stretched out arm. Gentiles will remain slow to respond, skeptical of the means, and dispute whether the Lord is really involved. Even those who claim to believe in His restored Book of Mormon and covenant will take lightly what He offers them. Only a few will be willing to undertake a form of repentance. But to receive “knowledge of the true points of my doctrine” it will require something more than half-hearted conversion.

How do you suppose “knowledge of Christ’s true points of doctrine” would change you?

Why do you think it will be necessary to “repent” before you receive “knowledge of the true points of His doctrine?” (John 7:17).

Why are both of these (“repentance” and “knowledge of true points of doctrine”) required before you can be “numbered among Christ’s people?”

Why do some of the gentiles need to become so numbered? How will we know when that sign has occurred? Has it already? If not, then the sign isn’t before us yet—But if so, then the sign has begun. Are you among those who have repented, been baptized, know the true points of His doctrine, and become numbered with His people?

JULY 15, 2010

3 Nephi 21:7

And when these things come to pass that thy seed shall begin to know these things—it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel.

Now the completion of the sign:

When all that has been described has happened, and the remnant will “begin to know these things,” that beginning is the sign. Has it happened? Is it happening? Then who is the “remnant” that has or will “begin to know” about the Book of Mormon to fulfill the sign?

We’ve lost the history of Joseph Smith’s efforts to locate the “remnant” of the Nephites. The first mission to locate them was called by revelation in the first 5 months after the church was organized (D&C 28:8–9). Oliver was called and later that same month Peter Whitmer was also called (D&C 30:5–6). This began an effort to locate the “remnant” that continued after the death of Joseph Smith. That will take some time to set out and cannot be dealt with in this post. We’ll get to it.

When the remnant is at last identified, and have been given the Book of Mormon, and start to know about their history and the Lord’s covenants with them, that will be the moment at which the “sign” given by Christ will have occurred.

It is when this happens that all of us will “know that the work of the Father hath already commenced.” Or, in other words, the Father’s hand is in motion to finish up what He promised to accomplish. What is it He intends to accomplish? What does it mean “fulfilling of the covenant?” What does the reference to “the people who are of the house of Israel” mean? How broadly will this final work of the Father spread? How many of those who are included in the covenant to Israel will become affected by the Father’s work fulfilling the covenant?

Assuming the work “commences” at that time, how long will it take for the work to be completed? Will it be a single generation? (JS-M 1:34–37). How long is a “generation?”

Why is the fulfillment to result in “the house of Israel” being given their covenant again?

How can we participate?

Why would the “sign” be given? If it was given to inform us, how can we watch to behold the sign when it happens?

Is there any indication that the sign is now unfolding?

If the organized church does not pay any attention to these things, and does not search for the remnant as Joseph did, will that change these promises? Will the covenant of the Father be forgotten by Him if the Saints themselves forget about it? What effect does our neglect have on the Father’s covenants?

COMMENTS:

Brian Bowler · JULY 15, 2010 AT 11:19 AM

Denver,

I have noticed among the American Indians there is a lot of people looking for the Remnant, and there are a lot of Indian Prophets (some look like they lean to the anti-Christ type) that are saying their people will rise up again and lead the Gentiles in building Zion. Some even quote Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon extensively, as Joseph was supposed to bring the Remnant the Covenants of the Father.

Again, it’s a mixed bag as some are good and some appear to be in it for themselves, but I feel it’s all beginning to come to pass.

What are your thoughts, Denver?

Anonymous · JULY 15, 2010 AT 10:57 PM

If the majority of the BOM took place in this northern portion of America, then I think all the Indian groups in “this land” already know about the BOM and the “Mormons” who failed their duty to establish and maintain the fulness as it was given to Joseph to restore.

Let’s hear it Denver, what do you think? Or do you only pose the questions?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 16, 2010 AT 10:13 AM

I would refer you to this post for my position on questions and answers (“Cite your minds forward” — June 7, 2010).

JULY 15, 2010

3 Nephi 21:8–9

And when that day shall come, it shall come to pass that kings shall shut their mouths; for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider. For in that day, for my sake shall the Father work a work, which shall be a great and a marvelous work among them; and there shall be among them those who will not believe it, although a man shall declare it unto them.

Christ is quoting from Isaiah and applying the words to a specific time frame. It is post-gentile receipt of the Book of Mormon, post-delivery of that book to the remnant, and post-opportunity for gentiles to repent and know of the true points of His doctrine. When that happens, the Lord will be freed up to fulfill the covenants of the Father.

When the Father’s covenants are in being fulfilled, “kings shall shut their mouths.” That is, the noble of this world will not know what to say. They will be at a loss of words because of the Father’s acts.

Things that haven’t been “told them” will take place, and they will not understand.

Things that they never had taught to them will unfold, and they cannot comprehend, cannot get their hands around it all. It will dumbfound them.

Even when people who understand that the events are according to the Father's plan, and the Lord's covenant, they will not be able to believe it.

Too much! Too distressing! Too unexpected! Too great to take in! It will be confusion and distress, and the idea that God is behind it all will be unbelievable to them (Isa. 52:15).

Their plans for managing the world will be dashed and end. Their great investments will be lost. The control they imagined they had as "kings" will fade to dust (Hag. 2:22).

How can such splendor, such great and masterful arrangements, such glory in mankind become nothing? How can it all fall to the dust? (Rev. 14:7–8).

It will be "great and marvelous" because it shows the Father's power and might. But it will be inconvenient and distressing, unbelievable and terrible (Malachi 4:1).

What is coming will leave proud men speechless and believing people vindicated. Everything will change.

Once again we see the tremendous relevance of Isaiah's words. You can search for language to capture our times and find no-one who has given phrases that capture this moment better than Isaiah. Even the Lord finds his words appropriate to quote as His own. Words of inspiration, given Isaiah by the Lord, become Isaiah's, then are taken by the Lord and used again as His. The symmetry of this chiasm is a reminder of how closely the Lord works with those He inspires. It is "His voice" even when the message comes from His servants. Who has ears to hear?

JULY 16, 2010

3 Nephi 21:10–11

But behold, the life of my servant shall be in my hand; therefore they shall not hurt him, although he shall be marred because of them. Yet I will heal him, for I will show unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the devil. Therefore it shall come to pass that whosoever will not believe in my words, who am Jesus Christ, which the Father shall cause him to bring forth unto the Gentiles, and shall give unto him power that he shall bring them forth unto the Gentiles, (it shall be done even as Moses said) they shall be cut off from among my people who are of the covenant.

This statement has caused endless conjecture. Who is the “servant?” Was this Joseph Smith? Wasn’t it Joseph who was “given power to bring forth the words to the gentiles?” If Joseph was this “servant,” then what does it mean he will be “marred,” but the Lord will “heal him?” Is he coming back? Will Joseph be resurrected? Will he be born again?

Although Christ is speaking, this raises a matter worth addressing in connection with the statement. Therefore we’ll take a bit of a detour and address it. First, the purpose of prophecy is not always to make a matter clear before it happens. Prophecy may not have a clear meaning before an event happens, but once it has happened it becomes apparent that the event was foretold. This keeps the prophecy from controlling the event, but allows those who have faith to see the Lord’s hand in operation. Therefore, having some difficulty in attaching specific meaning to the prophecy is exactly in keeping with prophecy’s traditional way of communicating an event.

Second, the words of prophecy are not always established in the same way. In fact, there are a variety of ways in which the language is fixed. Below are descriptions of the various ways the language of a prophecy comes about:

The Lord may give, announce or dictate the language and the prophet takes it down word for word. If this is the case, then the one who receives the language may not understand their meaning, even though they received the message. (In this case it is Christ who is speaking. We assume He would know fully the word's meaning. However, Christ has explained that His Father knows things that have been withheld from Him. See, e.g., Mark 13:32. So, you cannot rule out that even in this case the language was given and the meaning withheld.)

Sometimes it is not the language or the words that are given to the prophet, but a vision is shown or opened and then the prophet is left to craft a description. In such cases the words are the prophet's, but the underlying meaning is the Lord's.

Sometimes a vision may be shown or opened, but when the prophet takes to write the description, the language is prescribed, or limited by inspiration. In this instance, the prophet's understanding may be greater than the words used, and the language will be designed to accomplish the Lord's purposes rather than to make what the prophet understands clear to the recipient.

With respect to when one or another form of language is in scripture, we may not always be able to tell. Section 76 is one example we know how the language came to us. There was a vision, opened to both Joseph Smith and Sydney Rigdon, and as the vision proceeded Joseph would dictate the words given to him by the Lord to describe what he and Sydney beheld. The words were the Lord's. The vision was greater or included more understanding for Joseph and Sydney than the words of the revelation. Hence Joseph's comment: "I could explain a hundred fold more than I ever have of the glories of the kingdoms manifested to me in the vision, were I permitted, and were the people prepared to receive them” (TPJS p. 304).

It is not important to fully understand the statement of Christ in this prophecy until AFTER it is fulfilled. Before it is fulfilled the following questions are interesting to contemplate as you think about its meaning:

Is the “servant” who will be “marred” and then “healed” a single individual, or a people with whom the Lord is working? If a people rather than an individual, then who is this servant?

If the ones who will cause the servant to be “marred” are plural, who are they? Are they a group, or groups? If groups, which are they? What is their affiliation with the “great and abominable church?”

What does it mean that the “servant” will not be “hurt” but will be “marred?” How can one be “marred” without being “hurt?”

Is the “servant” in verse 10 the same as the “him” in verse 11? Have the subjects changed? That is, can verse 10 be speaking about a people, but verse 11 be addressing a person whose work it was (or is) to bring forth Christ’s words? If an individual, is Joseph Smith the only one who can qualify? Can others also bring forth words of Christ to the gentiles, and the gentiles given an opportunity to accept or reject the words at their peril?

If they risk being cut off by rejecting the words, then can more than Joseph Smith be qualified to be “(even as Moses said) they shall be cut off from among my people who are of the covenant.” That is, when the latter-day prophets are sounding alarms and warning, is the message from Christ—no matter who speaks it— something, if rejected, will cause people to be cut off from the covenant?

How does one cut themselves off from the covenant? If you will not listen to Christ’s words, do you thereby cut yourself off by not listening? Would that be true if Joseph Smith is a prophet and you reject him? Would that be true if Brigham Young were a prophet and you rejected him? What about an angel sent to you? What about someone like Abinadi, or John the Baptist, or some other unexpected messenger? Would the same be true anytime someone decided to reject a message authorized or sent from the Lord?

Now go back and re-read verses 10 and 11 with these questions in mind and see if you get a different meaning from them.

JULY 16, 2010

3 Nephi 21:12–14

And my people who are a remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, yea, in the midst of them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he go through both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Their hand shall be lifted up upon their adversaries, and all their enemies shall be cut off. Yea, wo be unto the Gentiles except they repent; for it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Father, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots;

Notice again the distinction between the gentiles and the remnant.

The “remnant” will behave in a way which will “tread down and tear in pieces” the gentiles. As they do this, “none can deliver” the gentiles.

Unlike the previous slaughter of the remnant by the gentiles, this time it is the gentiles who are slaughtered at the hands of the remnant. Those who are “enemies” to the remnant will all be “cut off.” What does “cut off” mean?

The woes of that coming time can all be avoided by the gentiles—predicated upon their willingness to “repent.” So we return again to the recurring question of what it means to “repent?” How can “repentance” be the only means by which the gentiles survive the slaughter? What is it about gentile repentance that spares them from the wrath that is to be otherwise poured out upon them?

What symbol comes to mind when you think of “horses?” What does cutting out the horses symbolize?

Does the symbol of the “horses” and the symbol of the “chariots” go together? That is, does cutting out the horses and destroying the chariots express a single thought? If it does, what do the horses and chariots symbolize? How vulnerable is the American military might to destruction? What effect would symbolically destroying the horses and chariots of the American population have?

If the United States is to be engulfed in domestic violence, will it continue to have foreign military influence? Economic influence? Social and cultural influence?

Assuming the gentile population is swept away, trodden under foot and torn in pieces, what culture and social influence will remain?

What symbol does the lion among the beasts of the forest suggest? The young lion among the sheep? What is the difference between the beasts of the forest and the sheep? If both beasts and sheep are gentiles, then are the beasts different than the sheep? What sort of person called a gentile “beast” will be swept away? What kind of person called a gentile “sheep” will be torn in pieces? Why would both gentile beasts and gentile sheep need to “repent?” Does repentance of a “beast” and repentance of “sheep” take the same form? Why would both need repentance when they are so remarkably different in symbol? Is it enough alone to be a gentile sheep?

What message is being sent by this warning?

JULY 17, 2010

3 Nephi 21:15–18

And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strongholds; And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thy land, and thou shalt have no more soothsayers; Thy graven images I will also cut off, and thy standing images out of the midst of thee, and thou shalt no more worship the works of thy hands; And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee; so will I destroy thy cities.

Cleaning up things so that the course of wickedness comes to an end involves some highly specific purging. However, the description is not given to us so we can know what will be coming as much as it is given to us to guide our own conduct and beliefs.

“Cities will be cut off” means what? “Strongholds thrown down” refers to what? Interesting things to contemplate to be sure. But much more relevant are the warnings in what follows:

“Cut off witchcrafts” is a warning to those who engage in certain practices. What should you do to avoid being cut off as a result of being involved in “witchcraft?” What does that mean? Are only wiccans being warned by this?

Who are the “soothsayers” who are to be terminated? What constitutes “soothsaying?” Look that word up. It appears in interesting contexts. The typical example involves predictions made using means other than true prophecy. But you should look at it and ask yourself how it would apply in modern applications: in business, government, economics, weather—especially long-term weather, politics, etc.

What are “graven images?” What are “standing images?” Why are the “standing images” said to be “in the midst of thee?”

What does it mean to “worship the works of thy hands?” How can a person worship their own works?

What are the “groves” that are to be plucked up? Why are the groves also “in the midst of thee?” The ancient usage of groves involved fertility rites, sacred sexual practices, or the worship of intercourse. What modern versions of this ancient form of fertility worship would be similar to the ancient behavior as to merit being called the same thing?

What does it mean to have our “cities destroyed?” Does this have anything to do with the other prophecy that the final victory of Israel will inhabit the desolate cities of the gentiles? (Isa. 54:3).

Remember this is Christ speaking. This is the Redeemer, the merciful author of our salvation. Therefore, you must conclude that these direful predictions are actually based on the overall long-term best interest of those involved. They are better off, improved and advanced by these judgments. Imagine that. The wrath of God is best visited upon those who are destroyed, rather than leaving them to continue the course they are headed in. It is an interesting thing to contemplate.

JULY 18, 2010

3 Nephi 21:19–20

And it shall come to pass that all lyings, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes, and priestcrafts, and whoredoms, shall be done away. For it shall come to pass, saith the Father, that at that day whosoever will not repent and come unto my Beloved Son, them will I cut off from among my people, O house of Israel;

Notice that the first four defects that are to end, include “lyings, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes.” These are somewhat different than the next two. These first four are character flaws that lead to the next two.

The character flaws should not be thought of as defects in our ability to do business or conduct commerce. These are flaws leading to the failures of our redemption. Therefore, think of them as flaws in our beliefs, leading us to have what the Book of Mormon terms unbelief.

What lying goes on among us leads to priestcraft? How is our lying keeping us from knowing the Lord? What is it about our peculiar form of false belief that leads us to believe in, and spread about lying as part of the fallen, false faith we entertain?

What deceivings are part of our culture of unbelief? How is it we can celebrate the great priesthood “authority” we possess while acknowledging that it lacks any “power?” Are we deceiving ourselves? Are we alienated from God while thinking ourselves His peculiar people?

What envy is there among us? Has envy become a tool for church governance? If so, how does it become a tool for church governance? Have we built it right into our system at present?

Are we filled with strife? Is strife among us suppressing healthy exchange of ideas by labeling such discussion as “contention?” Is strife different from contention? Is uniformity of ideas and suppression of dissent something that will remove strife? If not, then why not?

These character flaws in turn lead to “priestcrafts” where people seek approval of the world but not the best interest of Zion (2 Ne. 26:29). Do we want popularity from the “world?” What is the “world?” Why would someone practicing priestcraft seek in particular to have approval and lead the world? Why is the distinction made between the interests of Zion and the interests of the world? Is public relations always focused on approval from the world? If so, why are we seeking such approval? Does the world’s opinion of us matter? Why? When have the followers of Jesus been popular? What have they suffered for His name? (Heb. 11:36–40).

Then we see “whoredoms” which we have discussed earlier. David Christensen’s comment on the meaning of false religion is worth returning to read again in this post.

David Christensen’s comment:

Many of these topics discussed on this blog would benefit the general membership of the church and I long for the day when such teachings could be spoken openly in GC.

After reading Alma 36:14, I learned a new definition of Murder.

Yea, and I had murdered many of his children, or rather led them away unto destruction; yea, and in fine so great had been my iniquities, that the very thought of coming into the presence of my God did rack my soul with inexpressible horror.

That is a different way of looking into the word “murder”.

According to Alma, murder means “leading someone away unto destruction” ... Not the shedding of blood. Could we personally or as an institution ever be guilty of ever leading anyone away unto destruction? I know that might sound extreme. But read again what Alma thought of his actions after he lead others away. He has inexpressible HORROR. (what if we are to lead someone away just one degree (reminds me of President Uctdorf’s talk) ... Do we lead or follow others who possibly might be leading us off by maybe even just 1 degree?

Another word:

Whoredoms: From Webster's 1828 dictionary: "the desertion of the worship of the true God, for the worship of idols. Unfaithfulness to God; idolatry.

So do we have idols today? We sure see enough of idols on television. Are we guilty of committing whoredoms under this definition which is not necessary of a sexual nature?

One last thought from another eye witness to our days, Nephi, who said that many false churches shall be built up in the last days—They shall teach false and vain and foolish doctrines—Apostasy shall abound because of false teachers. What is this false doctrine? What is the "murdering" or leading someone away unto destruction? What is this vain and foolish doctrine? What is this apostasy?

THIS THE DEFINITION OF APOSTASY: Any doctrine that does NOT teach that salvation comes in and through CHRIST!

If we believe that our church attendance, our temple recommends, or our good works will save us.. to me that is apostasy...

Nephi says and I close with this: "They have ALL gone astray save it be a FEW, who are the humble followers of Christ."

Then Christ sounds the alarm, attributing it to the Father. Repent. Come unto Christ. Otherwise you will be cut off. What does it mean to come to Christ? Read the short statement in D&C 93:1. There is a succinct description of the process. You haven't come to Him until you have "seen His face and know that He is," or, in other words, until you hear from His own voice that He has atoned for your sins and He promises you a place in His kingdom.

All of these warnings are being given to orient you to what is important. The important thing is to come to Him. As Christ put it to Martha, “but one thing is needful.” (Luke 10:38–42). Until we have come to Him, all our concerns about other matters must remain secondary. Of what good is it to know all mysteries, if we have not come to Him? This is why, in the middle of this warning of calamities to come, the Lord places this invitation to come to Him. He can help. He can restore and protect. But only if you are His.

COMMENTS:

DKD · JULY 18, 2010 AT 8:15 AM

Denver, I'm confused by the reference to D&C 91:1...and the apocrypha.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 18, 2010 AT 8:51 AM

Oops, should be 93:1. We'll edit the blog to correct that mistake. Thanks.

JULY 18, 2010

One a Day

I will be posting one post a day Tuesday and Wednesday because I will be gone. CM

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 18, 2010 AT 10:21 PM

I know that this may not be the place to post this, but it doesn't really go with anything in particular. I am curious to hear Denver's (or anyone else's) thoughts on Mormon.org's new approach to reach out. Specifically, <http://www.mormon.org/people>

Anonymous · JULY 19, 2010 AT 8:42 AM

I looked at all the video clips of people who are Mormon. I never quite understood what Denver was referring to when he talked about focus groups and marketing. I think, though, this is an example of it.

The premise behind the videos is, “We are just like you...” albeit, seemingly nicer and happier versions. “We surf and sing and do art and skateboard and are ‘citizens of the world.’”

I’m not wanting to criticize per se, I was just wondering if this is what Denver was referring to when he talks about “groveling to gain acceptance from a doomed and ignorant religious tradition ...”

Denver Snuffer · JULY 19, 2010 AT 10:50 AM

The church uses what are called “personas” to market various ideas and programs. They create or fabricate a person and use that artificial person to present a point or make a “comment” as if it were a real person. Then when enough others have gotten the idea and are running with it, the personas are no longer needed and can be withdrawn or eliminated.

It would be interesting to know how many of the “people” whose names and information appear on the church’s new site are now real and how many were personas created to populate the blog. It probably has enough traction now that they aren’t needed anymore.

Beyond that, I don’t have a reaction. It certainly represents a major investment to create and maintain.

JULY 19, 2010

3 Nephi 21:21–22

And I will execute vengeance and fury upon them, even as upon the heathen, such as they have not heard. But if they will repent and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance;

Again the warning and the promise. Vengeance and fury are terrible words. It will be the responsibility of Christ to inflict it, and Christ says it will be His. “I will execute vengeance and fury” not “the Father.” This is Christ’s assignment—His cup.

His fury will be executed upon unbelieving gentiles, as well as the offending and violent heathen. When the spirit withdraws and they are left to themselves, it is only the limits of their cruel imagination that will compass the torture and evil they will visit upon one another. He will allow it by withdrawing the light of Christ, or His spirit. Without conscience, without remorse, without affection, filled with anger and hatred, it will be vengeance and fury.

This is juxtaposed with the reminder that “if they will repent and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts” He will be with them. If they will follow His path, His light and spirit will not forsake them. They will not descend into the same violent vengeance and fury. They will remain at peace. They will have hope in Him.

For those who will “repent,” and “hearken unto His words,” He will establish “my church” among them. Does this mean The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or the church of the Firstborn?

When His church is joined it is through “the covenant.” What “covenant” is that? Merely baptism, or something more?

When the “covenant” is given them, they become “numbered among this remnant of Jacob.” Who is that remnant? When they become “numbered” among them, what significance does that hold? Does it imply a covenantal link which, like being sealed to someone, makes you part of that eternal family line (as discussed earlier)?

Why is it necessary to become first in the covenant and numbered with the remnant before they receive the blessings of being “given this land for their inheritance?” What does the promise of land have to do with entering into a covenant? Can it ever be the same as the covenant made with Abraham if it does not involve an inheritance of land? If, therefore, the covenant of land is part of that new and everlasting covenant which was begun through Joseph, is this a promise of reuniting the recipients with the “fullness of the Gospel” as opposed to receiving “much of the Gospel” discussed in earlier posts?

What is the Lord setting out in this declaration and prophecy? How do we become part of those promises? Is this something which an institution can do for you? Must you repent and come to Christ in order to become a part of it? If so, why not repent?

COMMENTS:

Kisi · JULY 19, 2010 AT 8:14 AM

Hi Stephanie,

I just got back on here to read the second post for today (3 Nephi 21:23) to a friend of mine, and you’ve taken it off!! It was so good and important. Did you take it off because you accidentally put it up before this afternoon? You can email me your answer, or whatever. THANKS FOR EVERYTHING. You can even email me the post!!! :)

love, Kisi kwatki2@gmail.com

Denver Snuffer · JULY 19, 2010 AT 10:35 AM

That was a mistake caused by my ineptitude in working on the blog myself. Normally Steph does everything technical on the blog. I just write stuff, she puts it all up and puts in the links, etc.

That post will come up in order, and she has scheduled it to be up while she’s out of town. So you’ll see it again, but in order and on her schedule.

JULY 19, 2010

Temporary Blog Disarray

While my wife is at girl’s camp for the next few days you may notice some temporary disarray in things here. This is caused by my direct involvement in the blog, rather than hers.

The problems you witness as I take a direct hand will be less, I'm sure, than the domestic tragedies which will undoubtedly unfold in the absence of my wife. Fortunately, I recognize my limits and will make use of Taco Bell, KFC and Arby's to avoid some of the perils I now face.

She has scheduled posts I wrote before her departure for the next few days, and they will come up in regular order. I may add comments as well, but they will interrupt the discussion rather than continue it.

I'm hoping things will not deteriorate too far before her return. And that I can keep the garden watered...

The dog seems to recognize his life is temporarily in jeopardy. But I think I have my son and remaining daughter fooled into thinking its going to work out.

JULY 19, 2010

3 Nephi 21:23–24

And they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob, and also as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem. And then shall they assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem.

Who are those referred to as “my people?” “My people” are “the remnant of Jacob.”

Who are those referred to as “they?” The “they” are gentiles who have repented, come to Christ, entered into a covenant with Him, received the fullness of His Gospel, become heirs, and received the promise of land, and a connection with the promises to the remnant.

So it will be these few, chosen, covenantal gentiles who will “ASSIST” the remnant.

- They won't lead them,
- preside over them,
- control them, subjugate them,
- nor dominate them.

They will “assist” them. What does “assist” mean? Who is taking the lead if the gentiles are only to “assist” in the process? What will the remnant do? What city is to be built? Why is it called the New Jerusalem?

Forget everything you think you know about where the New Jerusalem is to be built. Most of the myth and traditions about it are based on incomplete and inaccurate recreations of the events.

Joseph sent the first missionaries to the Lamanites to find the place. The entire block of Native Americans east of the Mississippi, from the Delaware to the Cherokee, had been relocated at the time of the 1834 revelations regarding the New Jerusalem. At that brief moment in time, all of them were located just over the boundary of western Missouri. The closest you could get to them was Independence, Missouri. Since it was the remnant who would build the New Jerusalem, the obligation was to find them, preach to them, and assist them in building. But the missionaries couldn't do that. When they tried, they were sent out of the Indian Territory on the threat of being imprisoned. So Independence was as close as they could get.

The Native Americans have relocated and relocated again. Now they are nowhere near Independence. When Joseph fled Nauvoo in late June, days before his death, he was leaving for the Rocky Mountains where he intended to locate the remnant. He returned, was killed, and never made it out here.

Brigham Young tried to locate the remnant. In fact, the St. George Temple was built as the next fully functioning Temple at the chosen location precisely because it was intended to be near the remnant. In the very first endowment session, the Hopi Chief and his wife went through, received their endowment, and were sealed the next day. They were invited to try and connect with the remnant and this tribe was suspected as the one the Saints were to locate.

We've lost that fervor. We've assumed Independence is the site. We think we're going to build it. We have no clue we are only to "assist" and not control.

All of this is worth some study. But you're going to have to search back into history and ignore all the recent re-done and re-worked histories that ignore this early material. It's too much to get into in this post, but maybe I'll take it up at some point.

COMMENTS:

Matt · JULY 20, 2010 AT 2:42 PM

Denver,

I'm baffled by your assertion that the New Jerusalem is not to be built in MO, centered in Independence. How on earth do you square this with D&C 57:1-3? At first I thought "Maybe I've incorrectly assumed that 'city of Zion' (v. 2) refers to the 'New Jerusalem'," but that seems clear from the 10th article of faith, Moses 7:62, and D&C 84:2. And speaking of D&C 84, verses 2-4 seem to further confirm the statement in D&C 57:1-3 that the city will be in MO, centered in Independence. Please explain.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 20, 2010 AT 2:49 PM

Stay tuned. We'll get there.

As I said when we began, you need to let the Book of Mormon speak for itself, and not impose upon it your own preconceptions.

We're just going to take the Book of Mormon text and keep looking at it. When we finish, we'll then look at the D&C, and Joseph's own conduct.

A different picture will surely emerge. You'll then have what you need to be able to make a choice.

JULY 20, 2010

3 Nephi 21:25

“And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst.”

What does the “power of heaven” include? (We’ve already looked at 1 Nephi 14:14 which is speaking about this same event, you should read again that post.)

What is the difference between the “power of heaven” and the Lord’s presence? Why would the power of heaven come first, then the Lord? (Moses 1:11).

What would it require for you to be able to endure the presence of the Lord? (Moses 1:2).

If you are not prepared for His presence, what will your reaction be? (Mormon 9:3–5).

Those who are directly in a covenant with Him, who have been promised forgiveness of their sins by Him, and who have sought and obtained His face, will be able to dwell in His presence. They will be prepared for His glory, have part in it, and thereby be protected when they are with Him.

If people have the “power of heaven” with them, do they need some other means to protect them as well? Why not?

Haven’t we already been promised this as early as 1833? (See D&C 97:15–19). What happened that we did not obtain these things? Have our Temples been kept undefiled? If not, why? Have we permitted the unclean to enter? If so, why? Is the glory of the Lord in our Temples? Can we behold His presence there? If not, why not?

If the promise was made to us in 1833 and we haven't realized it from then till now, then are we to be numbered among those who will have the Lord "in their midst" as set out in this verse? What should we do to change that?

By and large, the church has failed to honor the Book of Mormon, keep its terms and become heirs of its promises. Our collective failure does not prevent individual success. Individuals may still realize the blessings offered. But each of us must meet the exact same conditions. Having met them, however, nothing can prevent you from obtaining the blessings.

The Lord has been willing to bring individuals back into His presence on the same conditions throughout all time. Read again The Second Comforter if you do not remember what those conditions are. He is as willing to make you a citizen of Zion, member of the church of the Firstborn, and part of the general assembly today (D&C 76:66–69) as in the future established Zion spoken of in the verses we have been reviewing. Many have done it in times past. Some have done it in our day. All are offered the same opportunity, but always on the same conditions.

The unchanging Gospel of Jesus Christ is always the same, and its blessings are always available.

JULY 20, 2010

Roles and Limitations

My wife is gone and I have access to the blog, so I will add a thought to this line of discussion as an aside:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a role in the Gospel, but not the central role which some have tried to make it assume. It prints copies of the Book of Mormon, Doctrine & Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. It conducts Sacrament Meetings at which an essential ordinance is performed. It provides missionaries an opportunity to teach, and then gives the ordinances of baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. These are important and I do not think there will be any freelance practice of these rites so long as the Church exists. All of these things take place at the lowest level, where the hand of the Lord is still apparent. Elder Oaks' examples of the Holy Ghost come from that lowest level of the Church. It was at this level I first received companionship of the Holy Ghost as a gift, and not merely a visit to bear testimony of the truth.

The Church above this local level, however, has become somewhat of a deterrent to the Saints' progress and happiness. Mandates and control from an increasingly distant hierarchy more often than not detract from what could be enjoyed. The Church has first sought to obtain the ability to micro-manage every member's lives through the correlation process, then upon securing that ability has felt duty-bound to exercise that control. Now it is a matter of whether you are a "good member" if you conform to the central authority's direction on everything from opening your scriptures in Sacrament meetings, to engaging in an order of prayer in the privacy of your home, to your lesson's content when permitted to teach in a class of the Church. The color of the priests' shirts, the length of their hair, their dietary habits and dating restrictions are all weighed against programs like "Duty to God" and conformity to "Church Standards."

The standards and conditions ALWAYS have as their goal the betterment of those involved. But the results are to mislead those who conform into thinking they've become better as a result. The practice of universal conformity becomes a distraction in which the distracted believe their strict Church regimen pleases Christ; when it was the heart He was always after. It was the religiously scrupulous who persecuted and killed Him. His persecutors were careful about their diet, dress, language, behavior and conformity. We may be reminding Him of His mortal opposition when we engage in this conformist behavior. He captured the hearts of fishermen, outcasts, prostitutes, tax collectors, the heretical and rebellious. Their outward behavior may not have conformed, but their hearts were in the right place.

The Church has something to add, to be sure. But what it adds comes to an end, so far as I can tell, once you move above the ward level. As LeGrand Richards quipped: “Everything above the Stake is just talk.” He’s right, but I would have said the Ward instead of the Stake. And some of that “just talk” actually interferes with the development of the Saints’ hearts. It would be better to remain silent than to speak up and justify interference by a flawed program between a man and his God, or a woman and her Lord.

I am active, but not merely in my weekly Church attendance. I am active also in my daily obligations to the Lord. It is my daily service which I consider the more important of the two.

JULY 21, 2010

3 Nephi 21:26

And then shall the work of the Father commence at that day, even when this gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people. Verily I say unto you, at that day shall the work of the Father commence among all the dispersed of my people, yea, even the tribes which have been lost, which the Father hath led away out of Jerusalem.

Christ reiterates again the work of the Father is only at its “commencement” when the fullness of the gentiles is completed. The gentile day ends, the message goes to the remnant, and then will the work “commence at that day.”

We think the work was underway when Joseph initiated it. In one respect it was. But Joseph never lived to locate the remnant, nor to deliver the Book of Mormon to them, nor to see them return to believe in and obtain a renewal of their covenant with Jesus Christ. It was one of his great priorities. But Joseph was killed before the work advanced to the point which is called the “commencement” by the Lord in this prophecy.

The work of the Father consists in fulfilling covenants. His great latter-day work of bringing the return of the Gospel to the remnant, who had the promise, used Joseph Smith and the gentiles to lay a foundation. The work of the covenant, however, will commence when the gentiles hand off the restored truths, the record of the fathers, and the reminder of what great things are promised, to the remnant.

The work of the Father, once it commences, is not limited to restoring the remnant to their former status. It reaches to all those who had been “led away out of Jerusalem.” Therefore, all of those tribes who are “lost” to us, but are not lost to the Father, will be brought back and restored to the Lord.

This restoration of the lost tribes and return of the covenant is a subject Isaiah wrote and rejoiced about. I do not intend to take that detour in this post, but if you read Isaiah (particularly those portions quoted by Nephi), you will see how great a focus this final restoration has been.

We call our time the Dispensation of the Fullness of Time, because our time is leading to that return to fullness. However, in one sense Joseph Smith was much like the Protestant fathers who laid a groundwork for a greater, further return of light. They did not see the full return. We might.

From the time of Joseph Smith until now, however, we have neglected or forgotten a great deal of what Joseph was given. There are doctrines we circulate today that are incomplete or misleading. We have not been diligent, and as a result our conferences, meetings, associations and discussions continue to be too low, too vulgar, too condescending from what we were called to receive.

How few or many of us will be permitted to participate in the on going process of the Restoration remains to be seen. However, when the fullness returns, those who become the heirs will look back on the era of the Latter-day Saints with much the same reaction as we look back on the Jewish era in which Christ lived. They will be astonished at the great principles of truth we discarded, neglected or ignored. They will wonder in astonishment at our groveling to gain acceptance from a doomed and ignorant religious tradition calling itself “Christianity.” They will find it utterly incomprehensible that we argued we should be regarded as one of them, rather than proclaiming their doctrines are the commandments of men, having a form of godliness but lacking any power. They will wonder why we would trade the power of God for acceptance and popularity; particularly when we were told that pandering for popularity is at the heart of priestcraft. Why, they will ask, did the Latter-day Saints invest tithing in opinion polling and focus group testing to insure the language and opinions of doomed Babylon were employed in declaring what little we kept of the restored Gospel? Our failure will be clear to them, although we find it quite opaque. We still think we’re approved by the Lord, even though our condemnation is set out in scripture.

The work of the Father will commence in the future. What is underway at present cannot be what was intended to bring the return of the Lord's Zion because we have neglected the ordinances, forgotten the teachings, and drifted into a "feel good" sentimentality which suggests that all of us are likely to be exalted. Using a gambling term to capture the grave risks we take, Deseret Book proclaims: Odds Are, You're Going To Be Exalted—while they risk damning all those who are willing to gamble with them on such foolish, vain and untrue notions. Nephi condemned that foolish idea long ago in a book which, if we kept its principles, would have spared us from our current plight (2 Nephi 28:8).

JULY 22, 2010

3 Nephi 21:27–28

Yea, the work shall commence among all the dispersed of my people, with the Father to prepare the way whereby they may come unto me, that they may call on the Father in my name. Yea, and then shall the work commence, with the Father among all nations in preparing the way whereby his people may be gathered home to the land of their inheritance.

When it begins in earnest and for the last time, it will be universal. There won't be an effort among one part of the vineyard which isn't mirrored by similar efforts in other parts of the vineyard. All the natural branches will be returned and reunited with the natural roots, as all are gathered again into one.

The Father will determine the timing. The Son will implement the plan. The process will require everyone, in every scattered part of the vineyard, to "come unto Christ." Unless they "come unto Christ," they will not be gathered and cannot be saved.

When they are brought again into their original state and begin to bear fruit, “they may call on the Father in [Christ’s] name” with His approval and blessing. Without that, the “gathering home” cannot become a reality.

The Father’s work will be “among all nations” because it will involve the judgment and destruction of all nations (D&C 87:6).

This will “prepare the way.” Why does the work need to happen “among all nations” for the way to be prepared?

What does it mean to now call all those who are to be included in this final gathering “his people” meaning the Father’s people? Why would they end their long sojourn by becoming the “Father’s people?” Christ has spoken of them being “His people” (meaning Christ’s) but now the culmination will result in them becoming the “Father’s people” as well (D&C 76:92–95).

Notice that part of the final covenant being fulfilled involves re-gathering into the lands promised as their inheritance. This does not mean a single step. It means that the great work of the Father in destroying the nations, eliminating the wicked, and returning knowledge and a connection to Him through His Son, will prepare the way for the final step of gathering the chosen people into the lands of their inheritance.

There will be gatherings, and a great gathering, and at last a distribution of the survivors into their respective promised lands. Between the time of the great upheavals, and the time of the final distribution, there will be a season in which there will a great gathering in the “Mountains” (2 Ne. 12:2) where it will be a fearsome, even terrible thing for the wicked to contemplate (D&C 45:68–70). This will be in “the tops of the mountains.” (Micah 4:1; 2 Ne. 12:2; Isa. 2:2). This will be where the New Jerusalem will exist. This will be before the final distribution into the various places of inheritance of the Lord's people.

Before the return to the lands of inheritance, however, there will be terrible days, the likes of which have only been seen in the final pages of the Nephite record (Mormon 6:6–22).

The choice is between the Lord, His offered redemption and protection, and destruction. The gentiles are now offered a choice while reenacting the same poor judgment that led to their own loss of opportunity. That needn't be true of individuals. It seems apparent that the prophetic message of the Book of Mormon foretells gentile arrogance and pride, collectively claiming they are on the road to Zion, while they are instead doomed to repeating the errors of prior civilizations of this continent. We will get to that in the coming days, but for now we remain interested in the definition and destiny of the "remnant" of the prior occupants.

(What an interesting text this Book of Mormon proves to be. It makes one wonder why it would ever suffer from neglect.)

JULY 23, 2010

3 Nephi 21:29

"And they shall go out from all nations; and they shall not go out in haste, nor go by flight, for I will go before them, saith the Father, and I will be their rearward."

When the time comes to redistribute the survivors to their respective promised lands of inheritance, they will not flee, nor will the process be hurried. No one will pursue them. They will at last be free to go to their homes without being molested along the way.

The Father will go before them. The Father will be on their rear guard. His glory and His presence will be their shield and protection.

How will the earth respond to such a passage? Psalms 48:1–4 gives some idea of this great and joyful procession. Psalms 67 is another great anthem of this event.

Though the days before were terrible, in their wake all be comforted, for to know the Great Comforter is to know at last peace. Isaiah could not refrain from adding to the anthems of praise of this future event:

Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places. They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them. And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted. Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim. Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted. (Isa. 49:8–13)

This ultimate triumph was always intended to be the outcome. The end will be joyful. Though His covenant people may pass through the trials and rigors of mortality, the fruit offered to them is delicious even in times of tragedy and distress (Alma 32:28). To make it through what is coming and endure to the final comfort, it will be necessary to come and plant that seed inside you now. Unless you do so, you will not have the strength to lay hold on the promises of the Lord.

The end will be worth all the shame and bitterness endured while the world still lies in sin and error (2 Nephi 9:18). The final triumph will be won by those who can endure the presence of the Father. This requires more than enduring the presence of the Son. Those who can rise to this glory must be sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise, and become kings and priests, holding that same priesthood and bearing that same right which was in the beginning and is named after the Son of God. They will be everlasting, for they came from everlasting and have reconnected with that while here in mortality.

The Book of Mormon is a message of hope and triumph. But to win that triumph and possess that hope requires the reader to follow the same path and take the same steps as all others who went before. There simply is not a way to avoid the rigors of the journey. It must change YOU. The work of the Father is to develop YOU. To do so it will require you to cooperate with Him. It is His work and His glory, but you must choose to let Him bring you along. Read Nephi's remarkable summary:

Behold, the Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it. And he raiseth up a righteous nation, and destroyeth the nations of the wicked. And he leadeth away the righteous into precious lands, and the wicked he destroyeth, and curseth the land unto them for their sakes. He ruleth high in the heavens, for it is his throne, and this earth is his footstool. And he loveth those who will have him to be their God. Behold, he loved our fathers, and he covenanted with them, yea, even Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and he remembered the covenants which he had made. (1 Ne. 17:36–40, emphasis added)

Can you not see the pleading, the meekness and the humility in this description of our God?

Great is His wisdom and endless His mercy and the extent of His doings no man can find out! He makes Himself known to those who seek after Him, and those who cry out they do not know Him is only because they have chosen to ignore His plea!

We will return then to Nephi's writings and continue this effort to understand what great covenants the Book of Mormon lay before us if we choose to receive them.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous2 · JULY 23, 2010 AT 4:08 PM

So, Denver Snuffer, where do we go from here? Think there are some of us in need of a lot of help. Any suggestions?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 23, 2010 AT 4:23 PM

I'm going to keep going. So keep reading.

One thought related to this post: In 2 Nephi 14:3 the prophecy of those who survive the purging states: "they that are left in Zion and remain in Jerusalem shall be called holy..." Meaning that these survivors are holy beings; having become holy before the purge. They survive because they were holy.

Two verses later the manner of their survival is explained in terms you should recognize: "The Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory of Zion shall be a defense." (2 Ne. 14:5). To dwell in a house with a pillar of smoke by day and fire by night is to dwell in a holy house. In effect, every home will be a Temple of the Lord and every occupant themselves holy.

This is why the wicked will be content to not go up against Zion. This is why Zion will appear to be too terrible to confront.

The answer to what we should do is always (in the Book of Mormon) to "repent and come unto Christ." He is called the Savior because He saves. He is called the Comforter because He comforts. If you have not read The Second Comforter, you should. It is a manual of how to come to Him.

Anonymous · JULY 23, 2010 AT 5:32 PM

I read it for the 3rd time before Denver started teaching from the Book of Mormon in his blogs. Now that there is some light and understanding gathered from these lessons, I'll start over for the 4th time. I'm sure I missed a lot.

Denver, could you confirm, I think I read once that all the personal commentary you put in the book was to show us how NOT to proceed. Is that correct?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 23, 2010 AT 7:31 PM

The personal vignettes at the beginning of the chapters illustrate a principle discussed in the chapter which follows. However, more often than not, the personal experience related shows how I failed, did not understand, or did not follow the right course in my life. My own errors were required for me to learn.

The purpose of this approach was to show the reader that I am not different or better than they are. I had no advantage. If, therefore, someone as prone to error and failure as I am was able to finish the course, then the reader should be confident that they too may be comforted by our Lord.

Anonymous · JULY 23, 2010 AT 10:23 PM

Denver you said....

“To dwell in a house with a pillar of smoke by day and fire by night is to dwell in a holy house. In effect, every home will be a Temple of the Lord and every occupant themselves holy.”

What if currently you live in a home where not all of the occupants have caught the vision of the importance of studying the scriptures and things are a little disconnected, although all are good people, members of the Church, but plod along in the “institution”. A weekly (I know...it should be daily) gospel discussion doesn't occur unless I am the one to prepare it. I believe in covenants, I believe in family's and

I love mine, but it gets discouraging. What to do, what to feel, how to proceed. Discouraging.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 24, 2010 AT 9:08 AM

A home or Temple is called “sacred space” because the Lord may come and dwell there. It is a place of refuge and peace. It would be good to have such a house right now. But, if not, “know ye not that ye are the Temple of God?” God can come and dwell with you, even if others will not permit Him. Since you are the Temple, you may become the sacred space to which He comes. The blood on the posts and lentil saved the occupants, for the sake of the righteous. For the want of a few Sodom was destroyed. Be the few. Be the leaven. Be the salt. If you are the Temple you preserve more than yourself.

Further, what makes any of you think you can become redeemed without bringing others with you? Why would you think that those given to associate with you are not a gift from God, deliberately in your life to permit you the high honor and great responsibility of showing by a godly walk what redemption can bring? Why shrug off others, thinking they will fail when you will succeed? You will only succeed if you minister to them in patience, all the while seeking their redemption even before your own. Christ came not to be ministered to, but to minister. Why would it be different for His servants?

JULY 24, 2010

Discussion of the Gentiles and the Remnant

We’re still in a discussion which began June 7th to try and make sense of the present and future of Zion.

We have seen how priestly authority is more complex than a list of names on a page showing some connection to the Prophet Joseph Smith. We have examined how necessary it is to reconnect with heaven itself to have not just authority, but also power in the priesthood. That connection of power in the priesthood comes from the hand of God, not from another man. The powers of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven and the hand of God (D&C 121:36).

Men do not make priests, God does. For those who have eyes to see, God's hand in priestly authority has been seen by endowed Latter-day Saints from Nauvoo onward. Men do not make prophets. God has reserved that right for Himself (Numbers 12:6). God will call them whether or not men accept or recognize them.

We think we have a hope in membership in the church, but the scriptures offer us no reason for that hope. Hope lies in Christ.

We have seen how carefully the Book of Mormon distinguishes between the "remnant" to inherit great promises, and "gentiles" who must align themselves with Christ to become inheritors of those promises. We have seen how members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are always identified with the gentiles (D&C 109:60), and not the remnant.

We have seen how the gentiles will be given authority over the remnant, and will be permitted to abuse and tread upon them for a season. We have seen that the promises once given the remnant will be given conditionally and for a season to the gentiles, who will receive the book written by the remnant's forebearers. The gentiles will become a great nation, and will be protected and powerful. They will be greater than any other nation on the earth. We have read how that will result in pride and foolishness.

We have seen that the gentiles will be swept away, just as the remnant was swept away. But those gentiles who will repent and receive Christ will receive a covenant entitling them to also belong to and possess this land as a place of inheritance.

Those gentiles who enter into this covenant, repent, come to Christ and receive Christ's presence will be preserved as the remainder of the gentiles' probation ends. When the time of the gentile dominance ends, they will be swept away.

We have seen that the gentiles who do not possess the covenant will become trodden under foot just as the remnant. The world will descend into darkness, as the Spirit and the Light of Christ withdraws from all but those who are chosen heirs. The wicked will destroy the wicked. The gathered faithful will have the Lord's Spirit as a protection and shield. The wicked will fear and not go near them, for they will be "terrible" to the wicked.

The covenant people will be gathered in the "tops of the mountains" where there will be a refuge and the Lord will be among them. When the destruction ends and the wicked have been swept away, the Father will return these gathered covenant people to their lands of promise. When He does, His hand will be over them, and will be their rear guard. Nothing and no-one will hurt or make them afraid.

This orients us to begin to consider more carefully what the gentiles have done and will do with their opportunity. So we return to Nephi's writings to look more carefully at ourselves and the perils we face.

All of this is an experiment to see if it is possible to have this kind of discussion take place on a blog. I used to teach a weekly Book of Mormon class where we examined the text carefully. In those ten years we were able to go from 1 Nephi 1:1 to Jarom 1:4. I know the material could be taught in that setting because the people were in front of me and I could take in what they were receiving as I taught. This is an alien way to teach, where disembodied words are put into a blog to be read by those who may or may not be attentive, diligent, prayerful and prepared. I cannot gauge the effectiveness of this as well except from how the Lord assists me at my end. At the reader's end I am divided by circuitry, time and space and cannot measure as I could if you were in front of me.

I will continue the experiment, but remain doubtful that this will work as well as a book or a meeting would. In the end, the reader (or listener) must have the Spirit to be able to take in any light taught. So you will determine for yourself if you will receive what is offered. So, we will see...

COMMENTS:

Kathy · JULY 24, 2010 AT 3:32 PM

Denver — Question if you care to answer. How does the oft quoted comment that “the constitution will hang by a thread...the elders will be the ones to save the constitution” relate to the gentiles being swept away and all nations being destroyed (their governments). Is that a quote a tradition, a misunderstood quote? Where does it come from and in what context does it belong in light of what we have been studying?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 24, 2010 AT 3:52 PM

I only want to address the quote itself:

The quote was attributed to Joseph Smith after his death. It was rendered differently by different people. The one I think was most accurate was “if the Constitution was to be saved at all, it would be the Elders of Israel who would save it.”

The other versions make it definite. I think Joseph would likely to have been indefinite. Hence the preference for the version “if it is to be saved at all.”

CHAPTER 10

2 Nephi 28:1–19

JULY 25, 2010

2 Nephi 28:1–2

And now, behold, my brethren, I have spoken unto you, according as the Spirit hath constrained me; wherefore, I know that they must surely come to pass. And the things which shall be written out of the book shall be of great worth unto the children of men, and especially unto our seed, which is a remnant of the house of Israel.

Nephi, as any prophetic writer, says what “the Spirit hath constrained” him to say. This is the very definition of using the Lord’s name with permission and not using His name in vain (Exo. 20:7).

Nephi held power from God in the words he used. Therefore he could “know that they must surely come to pass” because he sealed them as he wrote them (D&C 1:38). For any person holding the sealing authority (which is an indispensable part of the Patriarchal Priesthood discussed earlier), the authority requires an alignment between the prophet, the Lord and the Lord’s will (See, D&C 132:45–49, in particular verse 48 which mentions “by my word and according to my law”—which required Joseph to align himself with the Lord before using that power.) Those who have this authority will not do anything contrary to the will of the Lord (Helaman 10:5). It is because of this trust between the Lord and His messenger that the power is given to the man. Nephi was such a man. His book contained a seal upon it bearing the power of God.

Nephi knew. Knowledge came from Christ. Nephi knew Christ (2 Ne. 11:3).

Notice how Nephi refers to the “remnant” who are “our seed.” Nephi refers to the remnant variously as:

- descendants of his father Lehi (1 Ne. 13:34)
- descendants of his brethren (1 Ne. 13:38–39)
- his family’s descendants or “our seed” (1 Ne. 15:13–14)
- a mixture of Nephi’s descendants who are among his brother’s descendant’s (1 Ne. 13:30)

Nephi’s primary line of descendants would be destroyed, but that destruction would not include all. There would remain a mixture of blood that would include partial descent from Nephi (1 Ne. 13:30–31). The various bloodlines remained identified as Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites and Ishmaelites (Mormon 1:8). Although it would be impossible, without revelation, for us to determine which of these lines a person might belong to today, the Lord nevertheless revealed in 1828 that these various divisions remain identified to Him (D&C 3:16–19). No doubt, in time, He will restore to the remnant descendants this knowledge of their sacred paternity and eternal identity.

Their blood may be mixed, but the remnant remains. Nephi may have referred to them more often as descendants of his “brethren,” but they have within them some of his blood as well. In the day of redemption and restoration, the promises will all be fulfilled. The whole of the family of Lehi will be represented in the remnant.

Notice Nephi's prophecy is that "words which shall be written out of the book" rather than the book itself. This is, of course, exactly what we have. The actual book has been withheld. Only words from the book have been given us. But those words are intended to be of great worth to mankind, and in particular to the remnant.

This process is sacred, the promises are from the Lord. These words are given to us by Him, through a servant possessing authority to seal them up. We cannot prevent them from happening. We can, however, align ourselves with them and in turn be saved as well.

JULY 26, 2010

2 Nephi 28:3

For it shall come to pass in that day that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other: Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the others shall say: I, I am the Lord's; and thus shall every one say that hath built up churches, and not unto the Lord—

The Book of Mormon will become available to the remnant in a day when there will be "churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord." Generally this is interpreted by Latter-day Saints to mean OTHER churches, but not ours. However, the context requires all, including our own church, to be considered at risk as well. Here are the questions bearing on whether we (LDS) are among those being warned:

- Is the prophecy limited to the time before the Book of Mormon comes forth? (No; it will reach until the time when other records of the Lost Tribes are to come forth—a future event) (See, 2 Ne. 29:13–14).

- Is the prophecy about only those churches created by man, and not one intended to become Zion? (No; see verses 21– 24).
- Can a church established by the Lord become one which is not built up to Him? (Of course; see Eze. 44:10; Isa. 53:6; John 5:39).

Does the promise that the Lord will never abandon His latter-day work (D&C 138:44) mean that the church He established will not drift into condemnation? (See D&C 84:55–58).

Should we, therefore, consider these warnings to be equally applicable to us as Latter-day Saints as to the larger community of churches?

Nephi warns that each church will claim it is the Lord's. Do we do that? Each will claim divine authority and approval. Do we do that? Each will assert it belongs to the Lord. Do we do that? But the question Nephi focuses upon is whether it is “unto the Lord.”

What does it mean for a church to be “unto the Lord?” What would the opposite be?

How certain are we that what we do as a church is building up to the Lord? Do the procurement practices of the church “build up unto the Lord?” Does the auditor's report in General Conference even begin to allow you to make that determination? If some of the large and well-connected Latter-day Saint families own the businesses which contract with the church and have become wealthy by reason of trading with the church, is there some question which ought to be considered about “building up unto the Lord” in how business is conducted?

I explained how the church distinguishes between tithing money and “investment income” in a post on April 1, 2010. Does this seem consistent with the Lord's parable about the talents? (Luke 19:20–23). If in the parable, all returns realized on the money were the Lord's, why does the return on the Lord's tithing now become investment money to be used for commercial projects developing condominiums, shopping malls, banks, and other income-producing ventures? Who is benefiting? What careers and fortunes are being made? What families are being benefited? Are they the Lord?

Assuming the purpose of a church were to "build up unto the Lord" what single purpose would be most important? In the Book of Mormon, as I've explained earlier, the writers seek to have you trade unbelief for belief; then to trade belief for faith; then to come beyond faith and receive knowledge. The knowledge it would have you obtain is of Christ (See Ether 3:19).

The lack of knowledge condemns a people who claim to be the Lord's. Nephi quoted Isaiah in 2 Nephi 15:13: [You will not understand Nephi's purpose in quoting Isaiah if you are unacquainted with Nephi's Isaiah.] "Therefore, my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge; and their honorable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst." Captivity comes from a lack of knowledge. Joseph Smith warned that "a man is saved no faster than he gains knowledge." (DHC 5:588). The ones who are considered "honorable" are "famished" because they lack knowledge. The "multitude" who follow the "honorable men" are in turn "dried up with thirst" because they are not taught enough to become saved (2 Ne. 28:14).

If the Lord promises to never abandon His latter-day work (D&C 138:44), does that mean men cannot abandon Him? Although men may abandon Him, can He work with you individually and "remember" His promises? Even if others are without knowledge, can you still obtain knowledge from Him? Though others may be "dried up with thirst" can you still obtain "living waters" from Him?

Can you rely upon the assertions from any church today that it is “built up unto the Lord?” How can you be “built up unto the Lord” even if you do not have any institution you can trust to bring to you that knowledge? Was the Lord always intended to be directly involved in your life? (Matt. 11:27–30).

If “captivity” comes from a lack of knowledge, and Joseph Smith tied knowledge to salvation, then why is the correlated curriculum of the church focusing less and less on doctrine? Why was the Relief Society and Priesthood Manual on Teachings of the Presidents volume on Joseph Smith carefully edited by the Correlation Department so as to support meanings somewhat different than Joseph’s? If you think meanings were not changed, then go to the sources quoted in the History of The Church and read each of the whole statements made by Joseph from which the excerpts were taken. I leave it to you to decide if the edited versions in the church manual were or were not both incomplete and misleading. [Personally, I was dismayed. But I have a sensitivity to words that is quite acute, and therefore something left out that is important to me may not be significant to you. You must decide that question for yourself. You will find it an interesting exercise even if you disagree with my conclusion.]

If a church claims to be built up to the Lord, but does not attempt to confer knowledge of the Lord upon people, then how are you to seek after this knowledge? [We are going to be discussing Nephi’s instruction to us about this very subject for the coming weeks. So keep the question in mind as we go forward.]

Remember this is the promised day when all are intended to grow into knowledge of the Lord, from the least to the greatest (See, e.g., JS-H 1:41 and Joel 2:28–29; and D&C 84:96–97). “Those who remain” will remain because they have “knowledge” that will save them. Hence Joseph’s teaching about the link between “knowledge” and “salvation.” Also, the captivity spoken of by Nephi because people lack knowledge.

Go back to the post on Lecture 6 of The Lectures on Faith, April 21, 2010. If your church encourages you to become part of a broad mainstream without asking for the sacrifice of all things, then it is not requiring you to take the steps necessary to develop faith to save you. Rest assured, however, the Lord still has the same requirements, and He will work directly with you to develop you into a person who has the required knowledge. It was always intended to be individual. It is your quest. Others may encourage you along, but you must confront the process for yourself.

[Now, as a complete aside, I want to address the misapplication and overreaching misinterpretation of the idea one is “evil speaking” when a person explains something that concerns them. First, we are dealing with the souls of men. We are addressing salvation itself. If there is an error in doctrine or practice, everyone has an obligation to speak up, from the least to the greatest (D&C 20:42, 46–47, 50–51, 59, among other places). Second, the “truth” cannot ever be “evil.” Though the truth may cut with a two edged sword, truth is not and cannot be “evil.” Therefore, if someone should say something that is untrue or in error, then correct their doctrine, show the error, but do not claim what is good to be evil, nor support what is evil by calling it good (2 Ne. 15:20). Using a broad generalization to stifle a discussion of the truth is a trick of the devil, who is an enemy to your soul. It is not the way of our Lord. He was always open to questions, always willing to answer questions, ever willing to speak the truth even when it caused those with authority over Him to be pained by His words. We must follow Him, and not men, in that example. Even if we would personally prefer to not endure insults but remain silent. So, rather than condemn something as “evil speaking” that you believe to be wrong, explain the error and bring us all into greater understanding. But if something is true, then even if it disturbs your peace of mind, it cannot be evil.]

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 26, 2010 AT 1:53 PM

Denver,

I appreciated your comments about what it means to speak evil. I have wondered about this. A couple further questions I have...

If it is not considered “evil” because it is the truth...how can I be certain that my perspective is IN FACT the truth and I’m not the one in error? Is it just because you are weighing actions against the scriptures? (Personally, I have had many of the same observations you have had, but have only shared them with my most intimate family as I felt I was stepping into forbidden territory in my thoughts and would possibly damage someone else’s testimony with observations that I believed true, but nonetheless did not shake my faith or desire to remain an active participant in the Church. I have also feared that even if it was the truth...there was a poison I was succumbing to by being overly critical. Is there a concern with being too critical?

My second question stems from my husband...(this is the one I would really love to hear an answer about) whereas he agrees with your assessments(he would say they are the truth), he struggles with the fact that you are voicing them publicly because he fears that in essence it is the same thing as trying to “steady the ark”...which of course didn’t go over to well in the Old Testament. He basically thinks the Lord has forbidden any of us to try and steady the ark...no matter how precarious the situation it is in. That is not our appointment. I would love to know how you respond to that concern because I don’t really have a good response to that.

Is it just in the use of the scriptures you posted talking about “watching over the church?” How can I address the specific concern of steadying the ark? Is there no correlation between the ark then and the church? Maybe I just need some enlightenment on the proper context of what steadying the ark was versus you trying to point out weaknesses or errors. Would love a response.

BTW, I have read all six of your books and read the blog daily and really appreciate it all.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 26, 2010 AT 3:42 PM

Anonymous:

The problem with steadying the ark was related to interfering with a function assigned to someone else. No one other than properly called priesthood authorities have the right to: organize a stake, call a stake presidency, organize a ward, call a bishop and his counselors, organize an elder's quorum and its presidency, call a conference, preside at a conference, conduct at conferences, authorize baptisms, interview for worthiness for baptism, interview for worthiness for callings, interview for priesthood advancement in church assignments, organize auxiliary organizations, collect tithing money, build and dedicate chapels, temples, etc. If anyone other than a properly designated authority were to undertake any of these, they would be steadying the ark and without appropriate authority to do so.

On the other hand, every one of us is obligated to preach, teach, exhort, expound and cry repentance as soon as we have been given the Aaronic office of teacher. Every adult who has been warned, is required to warn their neighbor. We are required to teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom.

Further, with respect to this particular effort, Elder Ballard has imposed the obligation to use the Internet to preach the Gospel.

This is NOT steadying the ark.

Finally, you must understand that there are many Saints who are perfectly content with their version of the Gospel and who have no interest in confronting questions or grappling to understand something more. I do not want to trouble them. But there are many more who are inactive and disaffected, or who continue to attend but who are alienated by the teaching which appears in church, or who would leave the church altogether if they wouldn't disrupt their families. I believe they are struggling because they haven't yet read the Book of Mormon and been informed that this process, this struggle, their frustrations are not a defect in themselves. They can be active, faithful members of the church while searching more deeply into the faith. When eyes begin to open, they needn't abandon the church because they see issues. It will be alright. There is still hope. I write to help them, to show how to put context to problems. To see that despite all we have and will pass through, the Gospel is a personal journey, and they can remain in that personal journey despite earth and hell.

I should add, also, that none of you either get the off-blog emails or participate in the personal conversations which I have. There are some people whose names you would recognize who are quite supportive of my effort. I have it on good authority that presiding authorities are themselves divided over the correlation process and how it is affecting the church. Some have the identical view I express on this blog. I am not as radical in my view as some of you may think. Or, if radical, there are some in authority who share my view. I am trying to help them, as well.

Anonymous · JULY 26, 2010 AT 3:32 PM

Joseph Smith:

I will give you one of the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom. It is an eternal principle that has existed with God from all Eternity that that man who rises up to condemn others, finding fault with the Church, saying that they are out of the way while he himself is righteous, then know assuredly that that man is in the high road to apostasy and if he does not repent will apostatize as God lives The principle is as correct as the one that Jesus put forth in saying that he who seeketh a sign is an adulterous person, 8 & that principle is Eternal, undeviating & firm as the pillars of heaven, for whenever you see a man seeking after a sign you may set it down that he is an adulterous man (wjs p.20).

Denver Snuffer · JULY 26, 2010 AT 4:45 PM

The “Anonymous” quoting Joseph Smith:

Show me where on this blog I have criticized any leader of the Church. I have praised President Monson, singled out President Packer repeatedly for praise, spoken of Elder Scott and Elder Oaks in high terms, and explained that this blog is as a result of Elder Ballard’s admonition to use the Internet to teach the Gospel.

I freely admit I have criticized the Correlation Department, which I believe to be working at cross-purposes to the Brethren. They deserve criticism. I hope to see their department either come to an end altogether, or to be so vastly reduced in their influence as to become irrelevant.

I have high hopes for the Saints, and for the ability of the church to repent and remove its condemnation for neglecting the Book of Mormon. A proposition which President Benson and Elder Oaks have urged us onward to accomplish.

JULY 26, 2010

2 Nephi 28:4

“And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another, and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.”

Nephi foresees that churches in our day will argue over the claim to have truth. When it comes to the Latter-day Saints, the relentless accusation made against us is that we aren’t “Christian.” This accusation is made by those who claim the right to define the word “Christian” to necessarily include acceptance of the creeds of Historic Christianity. These creeds are an amalgam of Neo-Platonic philosophy mingled with scripture.

We just ought to concede the point. We should proudly acknowledge we are NOT part of Historic Christianity. We disagree with Historic Christianity, and at a fundamental level we denounce it as false. We are a restoration of Primitive Christianity. We do not share in accepting the creeds which Christ Himself denounced as “an abomination in His sight” (JS-H 1:19).

Oddly, from our end, we try and avoid the argument, fit in, claim we are “good Christians too,” and part of the larger community of churches. There isn’t as much fight left in us as there was once. Or, perhaps more correctly, our arguments are focused instead, toward those who attempt to preserve practices from the early part of the Restoration. In other words, we try to make ourselves seem more like Historic Christianity, and avoid or discard what once set us apart. We have inverted the picture from where we began. (Nephi will address that, as well.)

Although there are numerous examples of how we have altered our views to become more like other faiths, we can take just one to illustrate the point. We have abandoned plural marriage. But it is hard for us to claim the doctrine is false because it remains in Section 132 of the Doctrine and Covenants. While we do not practice it, and believe those who do have failed to stay on track, we cannot gainsay that the doctrine is true. Yet no other church is so vehement in denouncing and persecuting those who practice plural marriage. It is as if we want to lead the argument against the practice in order to distract people from the fact that the practice is approved in our scriptures.

Let me be clear that I do not advocate the practice nor recommend it. Nor do I think those who continue the practice do so either with approval or authority. I’ve explained the defects in their arguments to authority in Beloved Enos, and I am confident in the explanation given there. They do not possess the keys to continue that practice. Their own position is self-defeating.

Nor do I think these people will be given the hand of fellowship until Zion returns. But when it does, I do not expect those who follow the practice of plural marriage in a humble and devout way, having real intent, and proceeding prayerfully will be excluded from the gathering. It also seems self-evident that if John D. Lee, who was executed for the Mountain Meadows Massacre, has been reinstated to the privileges of the church, that those practicing plural marriage after the 1905 letter from President Joseph F. Smith will some day not also be reinstated to church membership.

Well, that was an aside merely to illustrate a point. We fail to contend about errors of other faiths, fail to defend our unique status, and in turn attack doctrines that we know to be true.

What Nephi will focus on in his prophecy is not the contention, but the absence of guidance from the Holy Ghost. This criticism will become the theme of the coming chapters. This collection of chapters at the end of 2 Nephi are his final warnings in which he tells us the great themes of prophecy that rest so heavily upon his soul. He is most alarmed that, in our day, men will “teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.” What do you suppose it means to “teach with their learning?”

We know that other churches employ trained theological experts to professionally teach them as a paid clergy. We have always been critical of that approach because once a minister has been to college and been trained for the ministry, they mingle the philosophies of men with scripture. We have always been taught that even a child with the Spirit can edify a congregation in Sacrament by speaking with the influence of the Holy Ghost. We intend our meetings to be directed in word and thought by the Holy Ghost. But how much of what we are taught in our meetings and conferences are the result of man’s learning? Of focus group opinion gathering? Of opinion polling? Of careful study of trends and development of data bases from social sciences? (See “Slippery” on February 22, 2010).

How much of what we are taught is from the “Spirit which giveth utterance?” How often are we fed as the Lord directed in D&C 84:85 through entirely spontaneous utterance? If Joseph was commanded to speak spontaneously so the Spirit could direct him (D&C 100:5–6; see also D&C 24:5–6) then why is a Correlation Department allowed to control talks today and prevent any spontaneous speaking in our conferences?

I know the purpose behind correlation was to ensure false doctrine was not taught. They seem to have instead insured that no doctrine is taught.

In my view, correlation has failed in its purpose. It has stifled the Spirit and stripped us of doctrine which should be prized and taught. Furthermore, it has not insured the doctrine it permits to be taught is true or consistent with scripture or earlier teachings.

Even though correlation has not prevented us from having errors of doctrine I do not believe an error of doctrine makes a person a bad man. Joseph Smith said:

I did not like the old man being called up for erring in doctrine. It looks too much like the Methodist, and not like the Latter-day Saints. Methodists have creeds which a man must believe or be asked out of their church. I want the liberty of thinking and believing as I please. It feels so good not to be trammled. It does not prove that a man is not a good man because he errs in doctrine.” (DHC 5:340). I do not believe anyone should ever be subject to church discipline for believing false doctrine. The false teaching should be overcome by teaching the truth, not by stifling discussion. The quickest way for truth to triumph is to allow free discussion. When we are open, the truth will always win out.

I agree with Joseph Smith that teaching false doctrine does not prove “that a man is not a good man.” Take the “Proclamation on the Family”, for example. It states:

All human beings— male and female— are created in the image of God. Each is a beloved spirit son or daughter of heavenly parents, and, as such, each has a divine nature and destiny. Gender is an essential characteristic of individual premortal, mortal, and eternal identity and purpose.

This statement conflicts with what President Joseph Fielding Smith taught in the arrangement prepared by Bruce R. McConkie (and therefore undoubtedly approved by Elder McConkie as well):

Some of the functions in the celestial body will not appear in the terrestrial body, neither in the telestial body, and the power of procreation will be removed. I take it that men and women will, in these kingdoms, be just what the so-called Christian world expects us all to be: neither man nor woman, merely immortal beings having received the resurrection. (Doctrines of Salvation 2:287–288; emphasis added)

In another place President Smith taught,

Is not the sectarian world justified in their doctrine generally proclaimed, that after the resurrection there will be neither male nor female sex? It is a logical conclusion for them to reach and apparently is in full harmony with what the Lord has revealed regarding the kingdoms into which evidently the vast majority of mankind is likely to go. (Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol 4, p. 66— a set that was also edited by Elder Bruce R. McConkie)

If it is a grave offense to now err in doctrine, either President Smith and his son-in-law Elder McConkie should be condemned, or those who signed the Proclamation on the Family in September 1995 (the entire First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve) should be condemned. They contradict one another. The Apostle Paul would seem to agree with President Smith and Elder McConkie (See Gal. 3:28). The “Christian” world, of course, denounces marriage in eternity precisely because they disbelieve sexual identity ends with mortality. They base this upon Luke 20:34–35, Matt. 22:30, and Mark 12:25 as well as Paul’s statement in Galatians.

It appears to me that someone errs in doctrine. Despite that, I absolutely DO NOT BELIEVE that either the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve in 1995, nor President Joseph Fielding Smith and Bruce R. McConkie are bad men. Nor do I think that the contradiction should be managed by the Correlation Department. I think it should stand and become something on which each of us consider, ponder, pray and reach some conclusion for ourselves. It isn’t necessary for us to always have controversies taken away from us, particularly at the expense of losing our doctrine.

The approach now is to prevent spontaneous talks from being delivered under the influence of the Holy Spirit because of fear that we would excite criticism by contradicting one another. I think this is wrong. If we want to be cautious about doctrine, then we ought to call men who understand and teach doctrine to preside. I see trustworthy men and women on KBYU discussing doctrine all the time. Elder Packer was a Seminary Instructor before his call to be a General Authority, and he has always been reliable on doctrine. I would love to hear him speak spontaneously every time he speaks. Elder Scott, also, seems to me to be a man who, if allowed to speak without a prepared text would have a great deal to share. It would be delightful to hear him speak extemporaneously. There is something valuable enough when an inspired man does this that the D&C admonished Joseph Smith to only address the Saints in this manner. If that was the Lord's desire for Joseph, and it remains in the D&C, then it is little wonder we pay a price as a result of the correlation process.

This is what the verse we are considering here is telling us SHOULD be the case. We cannot help but “deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance” when we do not permit the Holy Ghost the opportunity to inspire by giving spontaneous utterance.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 26, 2010 AT 3:37 PM

President Wilford Woodruff: “I say to Israel, the Lord will never permit me or any other man who stands as president of this Church to lead you astray.”

Denver Snuffer · JULY 26, 2010 AT 4:39 PM

President Brigham Young:

What a pity it would be if we were led by one man to utter destruction! Are you afraid of this? I am more afraid that this people have so much confidence in their leaders that they will not inquire of themselves of God whether they are led by Him. I am fearful they will settle down in a state of blind self-security, trusting their eternal security in the hands of their leaders with a reckless confidence that in itself would thwart the purposes of God in their salvation, and weaken that influence they could give to their leaders, did they know for themselves, by the revelations of Jesus Christ, that they are led in the right way (JD 9:149–50).

Joseph Smith cautioned about trusting too much in the prophet and neglecting the duties devolving upon the Saints individually. And George Q. Cannon also taught the principle that you cannot trust leadership to save you.

You would, of course, already be familiar with that material if you had done as the blog suggests and first read what I've written.

I assume you are not acquainted with the carefully prepared things I've written and therefore misapprehend the subjects under discussion.

JULY 27, 2010

2 Nephi 28:5

And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men;

The defect Nephi terms “deny the power of God” is an interesting matter to ponder. What do you suppose denying that power involves? How would it manifest itself in the way religious people go about their lives? Is praying without seeking an answer “denying” God’s power? Is presuming you have an answer when your own desires are all you are considering perhaps also “denying” God’s power?

I reflect on how many times I’ve learned something surprising, unanticipated, or which had never before entered into my mind. I think, too, about Joseph’s comment before his First Vision that “it had never entered into [his] heart that all were wrong” (JS-H 1:18), but the answer from God informed him otherwise. God’s answers are quite often:

- unanticipated;
- never something you would have considered;
- inconvenient;
- requiring of you something you would prefer not to give or do;
- clear and unequivocal;
- enough to make your frame shake as it penetrates to your soul.

When prayer gets through to God and provokes an answer from Him, it is offered with a sincere heart, having real intent (Moroni 10:4; James 1:5). If a prayer is offered without a sincere heart, and while lacking real intent, is this “denying” the power of God?

If a minister lacks real intent, and does not go to God in mighty prayer, has never become acquainted with the “power of God,” but proceeds to teach with their own learning anyway, do they deny the power of God?

In place of preaching what the Lord reveals, men will claim they teach correct “precepts.” They have all the revelation they need, and they are now proceeding with the authority given them by God. But they don’t hear from Him, don’t have new revelation to deliver from Him, and do not expect God to be involved any longer.

In effect, God has become so distant that “there is no God today.” He finished His work. He’s given His authority to men.

Whether the claim is based on Protestant claims that authority is derived from the New Testament, and all men who believe have authority from God, or it is a Catholic claim to have a line of authority back to Jesus Christ, it is the same. Without some involvement from God in the church itself, the teachings end in the same conclusion: “God has given His power unto men.” The institution has taken over. The claim is always that “the church is true” without regard to whether the Lord remains involved, revealing Himself to the church. This is what the Catholic Church has claimed for centuries God has finished His work and surrendered the “keys of authority” to the church. Now God has transmuted into a church, a Holy Roman Church, to which you may confess your sins, obtain absolution for your sins, and have entry into heaven provided to you.

With such a claim, why ask God for help? Why turn to a priesthood advancing such claims? Why make the difficult, inner changes that bring about real intent and faith in Christ? Why seek for and come into contact with “the power of God” if a church can be an adequate substitute?

How like the Catholics have we become?

Was Nephi only warning about Catholic error? Do his warnings apply equally to all?

JULY 27, 2010

2 Nephi 28:6

“Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work.”

This lack of faith in receiving answers to prayer from God leads to skepticism about any other manifestation by God. If the leader isn't having any experience with God, then they distrust claims by anyone else. Everyone is a fraud, if the leader can't receive an answer to prayer.

The root of this is jealousy and envy. But it is completely unfounded. Revelation received by another person has no limiting effect on what personal revelation you can receive. The Lord is willing to share with all. However, it is predicated on the same principle. If the leader were willing to humble himself and seek in the prescribed manner, he would receive the same result. Everyone is invited. No one is excluded.

Nicodemus came to Christ in the dark, and Christ taught him the same way He taught others. There are some sources which suggest Nicodemus was ultimately converted. If he was, there is little doubt that after his conversion, the spiritual life he had as one of the Lord's disciples was greater than that of a member of the Sanhedrin. The Lord was not unwilling to share with the Sanhedrin, but they were unwilling to receive Him. When one (Nicodemus) changed his heart, the Lord came to him.

This seething distrust and accusation of any who claim to experience the miraculous leads in turn to denouncing the gifts of God. When denounced, such gifts depart from us. We no longer hear about miracles, healings, visions, tongues, visitations, or other gifts experienced by those we read of in scripture. Therefore, when the presence of the gifts end, the record of scriptures ends. There is nothing to add, and so nothing is added.

Eventually the end of this spiritual journey into the dark is to denounce all things coming from the “hand of God.” No “miracle wrought by the hand of God” will be acknowledged, but will be denounced instead. The position becomes unalterable: “God is not a God of miracles anymore.” You must trust leaders and leadership. You will be deceived if you profess revelation or the miraculous. And so the approach into hell is carefully laid by argument, emotion and fear.

Nephi foresaw this. He is warning us against it. We should not be seduced into thinking God has finished His work. He hasn't. He is in the middle of fulfilling promises made generations ago to the “fathers.” We inherit from the Lord the promises He made to them. Now is a great day of miracles, visits, visitations, dreams, and healings. The heavens are open, if you will ask with a sincere heart having real intent, He will manifest the truth unto you. God remains the same. His blessings remain predicated upon the same conditions.

Seek. Ask. Knock. It will all be unfolded to you. He is no respecter of persons.

JULY 28, 2010

2 Nephi 28:7–8

Yea, and there shall be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die; and it shall be well with us. And there shall also be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God—he will justify in committing a little sin; yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this; and do all these things, for tomorrow we die; and if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God.

This notion that religion should always encourage merriment and feasting has so taken hold that it becomes impossible to cry repentance. Anything that challenges a happy outlook is thought to be negative and of the devil. It creates the misunderstanding that the right to feel good about one's self is a higher obligation than the duty to teach repentance and forsaking sin.

If you are laden with sin (Isa. 1:4), it is of no consequence, for God intends that you be happy. It is of little matter that happiness cannot be found in sin (Alma 41:10), the gospel of positive attitude and flattery will triumph with the ungodly every time when it competes with a warning to repent and return to Christ.

The whole system has been worked out for us. The odds are you're going to be exalted. Deseret Book has taken a firm stand on that very subject. We have it from God, you see. Because Deseret Book is owned by the church, the church has been headed by a prophet, the prophet can't lead you astray, and therefore the odds are you're going to be exalted—Or so the reasoning goes.

If Nephi's warning is urged against the tide of permissiveness, supported by this false gospel of positive attitude and false hope, then the message must surely be meant by Nephi for someone other than us. We cannot possibly be among those who incorrectly believe the Lord will justify us in committing a little sin. We do not believe in the utility of a little lie, do we? We do not use words to take advantage of others do we?

What pits have we dug for our neighbors?

By what measure do we advocate to live life pleasantly and not fear death or judgment? How could we be taken with the notion that a little guilt will result in merely a “few stripes” from an irritated, but ultimately tolerant, and permissive God? What doctrine is it we advance that suggests all of us will, at last, be saved in the kingdom of God?

Assuming this was meant to be a warning to US, the readers of the Book of Mormon, and not to another audience who will never read the book because they aren't converted to it, then how do we fit into this warning? Do we have a mistaken view of God's plan? What do we say, preach or believe that would provoke this warning from Nephi? Have you scrutinized the recent manuals from the Correlation Department to see if there is any basis for concern? Have you read the General Conference talks for hints of these teachings? Do you find them there?

How many articles do you find in the LDS Church News, Ensign and New Era which are positive, flattering and reassuring? How many articles confront you, call you to repent, warn you of the judgment and the duration of eternity? (Enos 1:23).

Why is the Book of Mormon constantly calling upon us to repent? Why are we not called relentlessly to repentance by our current leaders? Is there a disconnection between the message of the Book of Mormon and our modern messages? Has the Lord changed His mind? Was Nephi just a crank? Is the Book of Mormon a negative book not relevant to an enlightened people who are specially chosen by God for endless happiness and promised they will never be led astray? Why would the Book of Mormon be a message for us? Why do we have a book so negative in tone, pessimistic in its view of us, while we sit atop the promises of never again having to face an apostasy?

What accounts for this disparity?

An interlude by:

Bobby McFerrin:

“HMMMMMMMM, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmm, hmmmm, hm-hum-hm-hm.... Don’t worry. Be happy.”

He’s Mormon now, isn’t he? I heard someone’s friend’s boyfriend baptized him when serving a mission in Southern California....

Poets and artists have been proclaiming the coming apocalypse in songs, art and movies for several decades. Nephi gives us the same message. But we spin happily out of control, loosed from the moorings and tossed by the approaching hurricane, all the while promising one another that it will all turn out right. We are special. We are chosen by God. Surely He will not judge us, nor hold us to account for what we believe. If we’re mistaken, He owes it to us to give us a warning, and an opportunity to repent. Other than that sad account of the prior occupants of this land, He hasn’t done that....

Oh. The Book of Mormon is important, isn’t it?

The foolishness of the doctrines that Nephi is denouncing provokes such dismay that our own foolishness needs to be paraded out in all its stupidity. We just don’t seem to get it. We’re reading Nephi’s warnings to us and pretending they were meant for everyone other than us. They aren’t—they are aiming at us. Read the verse again and try to see our own teachings being laid bare. We are his target. We are his audience. We are being warned.

JULY 28, 2010

2 Nephi 28:9

Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false and vain and foolish doctrines, and shall be puffed up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their works shall be in the dark.

The alarming use of the word “many” suggests this is to be a widespread problem in our time. These teachings are denounced as “false and vain and foolish.” We should look at each:

What does “false” mean? Does something have to be thoroughly and completely wrong to be false? Is it enough to be off by enough to rob the teaching of power? How many truths will a liar tell while trying to get you to believe an ultimate lie? How well does a deception work if there isn’t some truth included in the message? So, then, how difficult will detecting the error be? May the very elect be deceived? (Matt. 24:24, see also JS-M 1:22). How will one be able to decide between a false and a true teaching? (Moroni 10:5).

What does “vain” mean? Is the best meaning “futile” or “without power?” If a teaching robs you of power, deprives you of the Spirit, is that “vain?” What would you trade in exchange for having power in the Spirit? If a little flattery is enough, would you take the assurance that God loves you, and will never let you be deceived enough to get you to let go of the responsibility to ever have His Spirit to be with you? (Moroni 5:2). If the current President of the Quorum of the Twelve has lamented our lack of power, is it really a lament about our vain beliefs? If so, what can you do about it? How can you avoid having your faith become vain?

What does “foolish” mean? Would something that is so poorly based, so weak and powerless to save, and utterly false be foolish? What about trusting a man to save you, rather than the Lord? What about the notion that there is a man who will be perfectly unable to ever lead you astray? How foolish is it to trust your salvation to the inerrancy of a man?

What kind of a heart is “puffed up?” How would these false, vain and foolish doctrines result in a proud following? Why would they think themselves better than they are because of these doctrines?

What does it mean to “seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord?” What does it mean to “seek deeply?” What foolish men would think they could ever “hide their counsel from the Lord?” Who would believe that God would be bound to follow what a man dictates—because they have keys to bind Him—rather than recognizing that the Lord alone holds all authority to judge and will alone determine all judgment? (See 3 Ne. 27:27). How foolish is it to become a sycophant of priestly pretenders, hoping that they will save you in the day of judgment? Will appeasing an LDS authority be of any more value than kissing a Cardinal’s ring when you are standing before the Lion of Israel to be judged? How well will the vain ceremonies and guarded conspiracies work in the day when everything is shouted from the rooftops?

What does it mean to have “works” which “shall be in the dark?” Does this just mean hidden? Does “darkness” also include the quality of the works? What kinds of work are “dark?” Can obliterating part of a sacred ceremony remove light and replace it with dark? Does curtailing the Saints’ ability to discuss true principles, exercising control and dominion and compulsion to prevent knowledge from spreading all contribute to darkness in the minds of the Saints?

When is the last time you were encouraged in the Temple to understand and discuss the meaning of the Temple ceremonies? When was the last time you were told NOT to discuss the Temple meaning inside the Temple? If you can't discuss it inside the Temple, and you covenanted not to discuss it outside the Temple, then where can you discuss its meaning? How will you learn if you are unable to share ideas about the symbols and their meaning? Is it "dark" when the light of teaching is closed to view?

I don't know if any of you recall that Hugh Nibley was given access to the chapel in the Provo Temple to speak to waiting patrons about the meaning of the Temple for a number of years. While waiting for a session to begin, patrons could listen to and ask questions of Hugh Nibley in an atmosphere of sharing and getting answers. Today, in contrast, they discourage you from discussing anything about the Temple even inside the Temple. I refer to an incident in the Jordan River Temple in The Second Comforter. I was told to not discuss meanings while in the Celestial Room speaking with full time missionaries assigned to my stake. I presided over the missionary work of the stake and worked closely with these wonderful young men. But I was told to stop teaching them. This is common today. It ought to end. We will only understand sacred symbols if we are able to teach one another about what we have learned. When I think of the library of material I have had to get through to be able to understand, I am left to wonder at how difficult the process has been made for those who would sincerely and humbly like to seek after further light and knowledge by teaching one another.

We should welcome as much light and truth in our exchanges with one another as we have to offer; in the right setting and with the right Spirit. It is not casting pearls before swine when the audience is prepared, worthy and interested in obtaining knowledge for the right reason. Now even if you have the very best of audiences, in the most sacred setting, we are told to not discuss what may be of vital interest to a soul seeking to gain further light and knowledge by conversing with the Lord through the veil.

How little discarding of light must one cause before they are doing “works in the dark?” It is such a terrible question with such fearful results that I would hesitate to be the one who limits the Saints’ ability to seek into truth.

Now, to balance things somewhat, I want to affirm several fundamental truths:

- We are accountable for our own search into the truth.
- No one can limit you if you are searching with real intent having a contrite spirit and broken heart.
- There is no conflict between fulfilling your duties to the church on the one hand and your responsibilities to the Lord on the other.
- You cannot blame anyone else if you have not been diligent about your own search.
- In the end, whether there is active opposition or active assistance provided to you, it is necessary for you to make the internal changes and to follow the path.

No outside party will control what is yours alone to control. But the first step to be taken is to realize you really are personally responsible. You can’t depend on others nor on an institution to do the work for you. But as you awaken to that recognition, you should not lose heart or become discouraged. Nothing has been lost collectively which you may not still lay claim upon for yourself.

I do think we could make a greater overall gentile success with a different, more benign attitude as a group. But even if you must work against a corrosive environment, you can still do it. You have the greatest tool in your hands. You truly can get closer to the Lord through the Book of Mormon than any other means. It is a guidebook written for us and for now.

COMMENTS:

Ben · JULY 28, 2010 AT 8:37 PM

I think this is an example of the Samuel Principle that Custer talked about. We asked for a shorter endowment, we were offended at certain things, so the Lord basically said “go ahead” to our modifications to our own condemnation. I feel similarly to the changes to initiatory where now everything is “symbolic.” We aren’t meriting more, we are losing what we have because of the wishes of the Saints.

I think we will continue to hemorrhage youth from the church until we make many of the changes we’ve talked about here. We’ve set up impossible situation of trying to teach the gospel with the tools of Babylon. Frankly, I think youth see right through it, and see the world and Babylon in its undiluted “glory” and wonder why they should chose watered-down Babylon in the church. We need to go the other direction and present a real alternative. Ditch scouting and all of the now failed temporal attempts at reaching the youth through socialization and lets get down to the business of salvation.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 28, 2010 AT 8:46 PM

Ben:

I think at a very deep level (not something people recognize or can articulate), people can sense the truth. It comes from a primeval knowledge which comes from before birth. We accepted truth before, we are looking for it again. We crave it and love it when we find it. Everyone senses truth. They know when they hear it. And know when they don’t. It is innate.

We are losing truth, and also losing interest among the youth, investigators, and members.

JULY 29, 2010

2 Nephi 28:10–12

And the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them. Yea, they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted. Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted, and their churches are lifted up; because of pride they are puffed up.

Why does this mention the “blood of the saints?” What does it mean for their “blood to cry from the ground?” I’ve discussed this before, speaking of the earth’s own spirit.

What does “all” include? Even us? If “they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted” includes us, what does that mean? How could we also be “out of the way?” Is Nephi right? What about Wilford Woodruff’s claim that we would never be led astray? Can someone who promises to not lead you astray then lead you astray? How solid a guarantee does any man offer to you?

What does it mean to “have become corrupted?” Can a church be “true” and still be “corrupted?” (D&C 84:53–58).

What “pride” can religion impose upon people who believe false traditions? Does your faith make you “proud” to belong? Do you think it makes you better than others? Do you believe you’re saved while others will be damned, because they don’t share your faith? Does that make you lose sleep at night, and want to cry out to save them—or to relax and enjoy your security?

What does it mean that the faiths are “all out of the way?” Is there only one “way?” If so, how would you recognize the right “way” from the wrong one?

Who are “false teachers” that teach “false doctrine?” Does “false” include omission of important truths? If one teaches truths about Christ, but does not teach you how to return to His presence, is the teacher “false?” What would qualify someone to be “true” and teach the right “way?” How would you distinguish between true and false teachers? Between true and false doctrine?

How can “false teachers” corrupt a church? Can they corrupt any church? Even ours?

Why does becoming “puffed up” and “pride” follow false teachings? What is it about false religion that brings pride to its followers? How does false security caused by corrupt doctrine lead to “pride?”

What would the opposite religious attitude be for “pride?” Would humility, a broken heart and a contrite spirit be different than “pride?” What kind of teaching would cause a listener to become contrite, humble, meek and submissive? What kind of teaching would defeat pride and break a person’s heart? Can you have both? Can you be “humble” and “broken hearted” and also be proud of your religion? If you cannot, then can you think deeply about your faith, your meetings, your conferences, your private as well as public conversations and ask yourself if the teachers to whom you listen lead you to pride? Lead you to humility? Lead you to contrition and repentance?

Who is Nephi describing? Is it possible it could apply to us along with all other organized faiths?

I have often heard my fellow-Saint speak of the sense of pride the Conference Center gives them. It is a great, spacious and technologically advanced center. I’ve thought the ceiling of that building looks somewhat like that very successful evangelist Joel Osteen’s amazing church. I’ve wondered if the architectural firm took hints from other successful mega-churches when designing the Conference Center. Have you noticed how the dimmed lights and the magnified images, magnified voices and focus upon the great pulpit is designed to use all the modern audio-visual technology to create heroic images within the building for the audience? It is a technical marvel. Really state of the art. It is hard for me not to take some pride in it all. Anyone who wonders if our church is respectable, successful, powerful or advanced, who visits the facility will no doubt leave with the conclusion that, despite our humble origins, we certainly have made a success in the world for ourselves. It is a story of overcoming and prospering.

If those whose bloodstained footprints covered our westward migration could see what we've become, I wonder what delight (or disappointment) they would feel. Would they have any mixed emotions at seeing this monument in granite, glass, brass and walnut? The third-of-a-billion dollars we spent on it produced a landmark of splendor for the ages. Poor Joseph had only an open air bowery to use. Adam, too, used the open plains of Adam-Ondi-Ahman to meet. We are, of course, blessed with more resources to use as part of our "worship."

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · JULY 29, 2010 AT 2:58 PM

Denver, please read again pages 281 – 286 of The Second Comforter. I really enjoy your books but I am getting weary of this blog. Let's continue reaching upward without pulling down those around us.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 29, 2010 AT 4:11 PM

Anonymous (7/29/10 2:58pm):

You mean Nephi, right? Because this isn't my subject, it is Nephi's. I'm just laying out what he is talking about. It is quite disturbing to me...

JULY 29, 2010

2 Nephi 28:13

“They rob the poor because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek and the poor in heart, because in their pride they are puffed up.”

You must keep the prior verse in mind as you read this one. They are a continuation of thought.

It is an interesting thought to equate “fine sanctuaries” with “robbing the poor.” Why do you suppose Nephi would make that equation? Does it give us any pause?

What “duty” would be owed to the poor that entitles them to come before a “fine sanctuary?”

Is there a duty to care for the poor that comes before the right of someone to wear “fine clothing?”

What does it mean to “persecute the meek?” Can you “persecute the meek” just by ignoring them? By neglecting them? Does any religion owe some duty to the meek? What obligation is owed to the meek by people of faith?

Who is “poor in heart?” What obligation do we all owe to the poor in heart?

Now look at the last phrase. It begins with “because.” Isn’t Nephi saying that our defects are all due to “our pride.” That is, “because of their pride they are puffed up” and this is the reason we “rob the poor.” This is the reason we “persecute the meek.” This is the reason we “persecute the poor in heart.” Or, in other words, we are proud and puffed up and therefore we cannot help but cause these other offenses.

We necessarily ignore our obligations to the poor and meek because we are filled with pride. We don’t give a second thought to what we're doing with resources entrusted to us to bless and benefit others, because we believe we are entitled to have "fine sanctuaries." We just presume we are justified in our "fine clothing" without regard to what we may owe others.

There is a moment in film that helps illustrate this verse. It is in the closing of the movie Schindler's List. The Allies had overrun the area and the Nazi rule had ended. As Schindler was receiving the gratitude of those who had been saved by his efforts, he was struck by what more he could have done. He was less interested in receiving gratitude than he was guilt ridden by how many more lives could have been saved had he parted with a ring. Had he parted with a car it would have secured other lives. The thought filled him with guilt. He had done some, it was undoubtedly true. But his conscious was filled with remorse because he could have done more. And in that setting, doing more was saving lives. He preferred a ring to another man's life. He preferred a car to a family's lives. It tormented him. If you can harrow up your mind to remember this scene, then think of what we might have done with the great resources we have been given in place of some of the monuments we have built.

Why do we need chapels at all? Why not meet in homes? What good could be done with the money we have invested in the chapels we have built? Joseph Smith built temples; he did not build chapels. General Conference was held in an outdoor bowery. Do we have anything to apologize for in how we use our resources? Were or are there poor toward whom the Lord would have preferred us to show mercy, and do more? There are families who have supplied church leadership from their large construction companies who have built projects for the church. I am told these relationships are natural. They call who they know and associate with, after all. I suppose that is true.

Nephi seems troubled by his view of us. We seem untroubled by his words. At least we don't seem to change our behavior much because of Nephi's counsel. We deflect it, and point to others as his real target.

Well, Nephi is nothing if not relevant to almost everything going on today.

JULY 30, 2010

2 Nephi 28:14

They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men.

This is so sobering and relevant a verse that it is the first thing quoted in the dedication of the first book I wrote, The Second Comforter: Conversing With the Lord Through the Veil. This is our moment. Inside this foolish age there are nevertheless a “few, who are the humble followers of Christ.” These are the salt which preserve the world. These are the leaven who keep us still from destruction.

“Stiff necks” do not bow in prayer and praise before a Lord to whom they regard themselves as unworthy. They are undaunted by their unworthiness. They think themselves justified, and therefore without any need to bow in reverence.

“High heads” do not tilt down to behold the less fortunate to whom they might have provided relief. They ignore the destitute and needy, preferring only to see those who are on their standing or above. Who can help elevate them? Who can give them an advantage? Who is a good contact to keep? The “high heads” will be careful about what social advantages come from associations, and will always pick carefully those whom they deign to notice.

But these stiff necks and high heads belong to those carrying a burden of sin. They are prideful, wicked, given to abominations and whoredoms. These are the ones who sit upon the labors of others, and fare sumptuously here. So long as your neck remains stiff and your head held high, you will never notice Lazarus lying at your gate.

But what of the “few, who are the humble followers of Christ?” What of them?

It is clear in this verse that they do NOT lead, but are instead being led. They are “led that in many instances they do err.” That is, those who qualify to be called the “few, who are the humble followers of Christ” are not themselves leaders. They are being led by others.

The others who lead them “cause them to err.” And why do they cause this? “Because they are taught by the precepts of men.” Therefore, the humble true followers are misled into accepting false, foolish and vain (or powerless) beliefs because the ones who preside over them are only able to offer the “precepts of men.” These “precepts of men” are unable to bring the “humble followers of Christ” to the knowledge of Him.

Keep in mind that the “precepts of men” are repeated by Nephi in this written sermon more than any other phrase. The learning used to lead is distracting, even damning, whenever it fails to lead to the Lord. Men’s precepts cannot rescue us.

Why are not the “humble followers of Christ” doing the leading? Because they do not have the “stiff necks and high heads” to become noticed, to be added to the group of insiders. Their clothes are not costly, their home “sanctuaries” are insufficiently ornate. They are not the stuff of renown and recognition. They are, in a word, the least.

It is a troubling image which begins to emerge from Nephi’s words. They are shocking for us to consider. If the alternatives are what Nephi seems to leave us, then how much better is it to be among the “few, who are the humble followers of Christ” than among those with the authority to lead them?

I do not believe any of us are in a position to fully understand our times. We live inside a cultural fog that makes our judgments inside the bubble distorted in ways Nephi did not experience from his vantage point. The Lord can give us a clearer perspective through revelation, as He did for Nephi. But we are not equipped to fully recognize our peril standing inside this age and culture.

The one thing that is abundantly clear is that Joseph Smith was right about the need to reconnect with God. His first and primary message remains the testimony of James 1:5: If we lack wisdom, we should ask of God. God will give liberally to those who ask with a sincere heart, having real intent. Whether you believe Joseph’s account or not, Joseph was pointing us to James and testifying James made a promise which God will fulfill. So test James. Ask with real intent. Perhaps you will begin to see how Nephi’s words of warning are exactly what is needed to save us from our peril. At a minimum, the petition will make you closer to being one of the “few, who are the humble followers of Christ” because of your desire to know from Him the truth of your plight.

He always intends to save those who wait upon Him. Those who serve Him and do as He asks will never be forsaken. All that is required to qualify is to repent and come to Christ with sincere intent. No matter what else is going on, the Lord can take your life's circumstances and make them work to fulfill His work. And His work is your salvation and exaltation.

The first step is to recognize the peril you face. The second is to then do something about it. To take the first step without the second is worse than meaningless. It inspires fear and pessimism. That is wrong. Happiness is the goal of our existence. That comes from Christ. So do not just notice your plight, but make the necessary flight back to Him.

JULY 30, 2010

2 Nephi 28:15

O the wise, and the learned, and the rich, that are puffed up in the pride of their hearts, and all those who preach false doctrines, and all those who commit whoredoms, and pervert the right way of the Lord, wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell!

Now we reach a terrible point. Nephi records an inspired condemnation. For a person in Nephi's position, recording words of condemnation holds terrible significance. They are not written unless they are instructed to do so, because their words will be fulfilled. I've explained this in Beloved Enos.

Nephi pronounces three "wo's." This is a three fold condemnation. It goes beyond this life. It will follow them into the hereafter.

Associated with the three "wo's" are three names used for God: "Lord God Almighty." It is a three fold assertion of divine authority. "Lord" refers to the Savior as Guide. "God" refers to Divine right and authority. "Almighty" refers to the irrevocable nature of the word used by God, and in turn the words given to Nephi. When you are confronted with all three, the "wo's" are pronounced by a power that cannot be altered.

This is more than a setback in the hopes of the “learned, and the rich” who are being condemned. This is a condemnation which reaches into hell itself. It is so significant a pronouncement that when you read it you should pause and think of the dreadful import for anyone who fits into the curse.

Those, who in their pride, use the precepts of men as the basis for their “preaching false doctrines,” are not just wrong, they are damned for this perversion of the religion entrusted to them to preach in purity and truth.

In effect, they were given a precious and eternally significant treasure, and they have diverted it into something that makes them rich, puffed up, and powerful. It is tragic. It is pitiful—meaning it should inspire pity in each of us. These could be well meaning people who have fallen into this error. But they claim to preach the truth, using God’s name in vain, while they spread a vain religion which cannot bring people to the knowledge of Christ.

Who would wish such a condemnation upon others? Who can read these words and not be moved with compassion and alarm for those who have fallen under this condemnation? Who would not remove it from those who are condemned if they could?

Nephi could not make a greater plea for the salvation of all those involved. The pronouncement is terrible and its implications eternal. Yet this verse seems to have escaped notice.

Who alone claims they are speaking for God Himself when they preach? Who could possibly qualify for this level of condemnation? This should make all of us think long and hard about any utterance we speak before we make our assertions “in the name of Jesus Christ.” The thoughtlessness which accompanies that expression among the Saints is contrary to the seriousness of the condemnation we invite if we preach false doctrine while puffed up in pride; thereby perverting the right way of the Lord.

In an example which is chilling to read, the first anti-Christ we encounter in the Book of Mormon (Sherem) uses this phrase to justify his preaching. He accuses Jacob of “perverting the right way of God.” (Jacob 7:7). He brings himself under Nephi’s curse. It was a small thing, therefore, for Jacob to reiterate the condemnation of Nephi against Sherem (Jacob 7:14). Jacob was merely repeating what Nephi had already pronounced. And since Nephi had sealed the condemnation, it would be Nephi, not Jacob, who was responsible for the cursing.

This three fold wo, and use of three titles for God all suggest that teaching false doctrine and using man’s learning, while being filled with pride is so grave an offense that great care should always be taken before teaching, preaching or expounding on the Gospel. Only a fool would undertake to do so without knowing their words are approved of God. You cannot take cover using a Correlation Department, or a commentary, or a scholar’s words, or a selected bibliography. When you presume to preach the truth, you need to realize how serious a matter you are undertaking. Joseph Smith wrote from Liberty Jail:

The things of God are of deep import; and time, and experience, and careful and ponderous and solemn thoughts can only find them out. Thy mind, O man! if thou wilt lead a soul unto salvation, must stretch as high as the utmost heavens, and search into and contemplate the darkest abyss, and the broad expanse of eternity— thou must commune with God. How much more dignified and noble are the thoughts of God, than the vain imaginations of the human heart! None but fools will trifle with the souls of men.

How vain and trifling have been our spirits, our conferences, our councils, our meetings, our private as well as public conversations—too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending for the dignified characters of the called and chosen of God, according to the purposes of His will, from before the foundation of the world! (DHC 3:295–6)

When we speak about Christ and His Gospel with others, we should do so with a sense of terrible awe and fear. If we have doubts about our message, we should remain silent rather than risk proclaiming what may be an error. It is a burden to be carefully undertaken.

As Nephi warns about our day, there will be many who will teach vain, foolish and false things coming from the precepts of men.

COMMENTS:

DJones · JULY 30, 2010 AT 8:29 PM

To Ben:

RE: your post on July 28th and Hugh Nibley's Endowment Talk to the First Presidency and The quorum of the Twelve:

Check out this web link:

<http://www.bhporters.com/Porter%20PDF%20Files/histort%20of%20endowment.pdf>

For others seeking to be taught a greater significance of the Temple, paste this link:

<http://www.bhporters.com/Porter%20PDF%20Files/the%20temple%20and%20its%20significance.pdf>

These should keep you busy for a while.

Denver Snuffer · JULY 31, 2010 AT 6:46 AM

I believe these words from Nephi are primarily directed at the leaders, and only secondarily relevant to those who are following. The trends and direction are always set by leaders.

I know there are humble people reading this who want to condemn themselves and justify leaders. But taken in context, Nephi's condemnation must necessarily be primarily aimed at those who lead.

I wish it were otherwise. I cannot tell you how these words cause me grief. I take no delight in this.

It would be easier to stop than to go on. But this Book of Mormon is something we must study if we are going to remove our condemnation. And it seems as if no one is willing to face its words. So the burden remains upon us.

DKD · JULY 31, 2010 AT 11:12 AM

Denver, could you help me better understand the covenant we have made not to speak evil of the Lord's anointed? How does that fit here? or does it?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 31, 2010 AT 1:01 PM

On "evil speaking" the following are relevant:

First, it is not "evil" to say what is true.

Second, it cannot be "evil speaking" when it comes from an accepted prophet (Nephi) and is found in the scriptures.

Third, if the Spirit underlays the concept or thought, it is not you speaking it is the Spirit. If the message which comes from the Lord, or the Spirit, then it is not even you speaking. You are voice, but it is another who speaks.

Fourth, a call to repent is not "evil" speaking; because if it were then we could never be urged to repentance. Because the issues involved in repentance are always going to be somewhat personal, cutting and difficult.

DKD · JULY 31, 2010 AT 4:47 PM

Thank you for the reply Denver—that makes sense...meanwhile, why do we make that particular covenant in the temple? What exactly are we promising? Maybe we need to be clear who is the Lord's anointed? It has always been my practice to pray about a bishop or stake president that serves in my ward/stake when they are called. In once case over the many years, I had a bishop that I did not get an answer about after he was called. In another case, I was prompted in advance who was to be called as our bishop..... as it turns out, I served with that bishop as his secretary. Are these the Lord's anointed (ie as revealed to us)?

Who are the Lord's anointed?

Denver Snuffer · JULY 31, 2010 AT 9:05 PM

In the narrowest sense “the Lord's anointed” would be those whom the Lord anoints. It would be those whom the Lord makes His, sealing them up to eternal life.

In the broadest sense it would be anyone who has been through the Temple to receive their washings and anointings.

It is NOT the Lord. As to Him, there are other commandments which relate to using His name in vain, His status as our Savior, and other appropriate rules for respecting and worshiping Him. But it only takes a moment of reflection to see the Lord's anointed would be those whom He has anointed.

JULY 31, 2010

2 Nephi 28:16–17

Wo unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth! For the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity they shall perish. But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of Hosts.

Nephi warns against “turning aside the just for a thing of naught.” A “thing of naught” means something without value. To “turn aside” is to leave or move away from. So he is telling you to be careful to not walk away from the truth being taught by a “just” or true source, and instead follow after something of no value.

This rejection of a true messenger and following after a false one inevitably results in “reviling that which is good.” When you reject the truth you normally have to deal with a troubled conscious. The way to calm it is to “revile against” the thing you have rejected. Not only do people “revile against” the message, but they go on to “say that it is of no worth!”

Think about the general reception given to the Lord’s messengers throughout scripture. They are always the object of criticism and reviling. Nephi is describing a syndrome here which always attaches to the true message and true messenger. They aren’t valued, but thought “a thing of naught.” The argument is always: “If what they had to say were important, it would come from someone more important.” Content is ignored in favor of status.

Now the Lord allows this to go on and always has. But, as Nephi reminds us, there does come a time when the limit has been reached. When the limit has been reached, the end “will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth.” That is, when the time has come, the turn will be so swift that they cannot repent any longer. Judgment will overtake them too quickly.

The moment when they have reached the limit is described by Nephi as “fully ripe in iniquity.” That means they will no longer even listen to the truth. They have completely closed minds. It would do no good to extend them further opportunity, because they will not take any advantage of it.

So they are scheduled for destruction.

BUT, Nephi reminds us, they can repent. If they will change their minds and come to Christ, He will forgive them and heal them. If they repent, they will be preserved from the destruction. However, as has already become clear, their destruction is due to the fact they are “fully ripe.” So although repentance remains theoretically possible, and the Lord will accept even late return to Him, the offenders are committed to their offense. They are not likely to take advantage of the opportunity.

How humble it is for the Lord to be willing to accept the reluctant, tardy and slow to repent. Nevertheless, He is willing to accept even them. He suffered for all, and will redeem as many as will come to Him. Initially, He won't destroy them with the wicked. Ultimately the outcome will depend upon how committed they are to the process of repentance. For to repent is to come to Him. They decide if His open arms will be where they finally embrace Him; or if they will stand afar off and think it too hard to surrender their sins and go further.

AUGUST 2010

AUGUST 1, 2010

2 Nephi 28:18–19

But behold, that great and abominable church, the whore of all the earth, must tumble to the earth, and great must be the fall thereof. For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

Remember that this comes at the end of Nephi's ministry. He saw the vision of the great and abominable church at the beginning of his journey into the wilderness. There has been over forty years between the time of the earlier visions and the time of this summary of his great teachings (See 2 Ne. 5:34).

Between the time Nephi saw the visions (set out beginning in 1 Nephi 11) and the time of this final instruction, Nephi has had decades to ponder on the things he was shown in vision. He has, in fact, spent those years reflecting constantly upon the visions he received (2 Ne. 4:16). It is foolish to believe that Nephi, Joseph Smith or any prophet understood what they saw the day they saw it. Only time, careful, solemn and ponderous thought can unravel what a person is shown in vision by the Lord. The understanding of a prophet is not static. It unfolds. Joseph's first impression of the first vision was personal. He thought it was a message to him about himself. By the time he had finished translating the Book of Mormon, organizing the church, and collecting a following, Joseph realized the first vision was not his, but it belonged at a minimum to a larger community of believers. Eventually he would come to see it belonged to the world. The version we have in the Pearl of Great Price reflects that changing understanding. In it he gives the first understanding in what he told his mother the day it happened: He learned that Presbyterianism was not true (JS-H 1:20).

So this statement goes back forty years earlier and Nephi's vision of the fall of the great whore. This universal false religion will fail. It will "fall." The "fall" will be "great." It will "tumble to the earth"—meaning that it will no longer stand on its own, but will altogether collapse.

The purpose of this great calamity is to bring about repentance. The purposes of God, even in punishment, are to elevate and save others.

Notice the devil's tool that will be used in opposition to repentance: they will "be stirred up to anger, and perish." That is, to harden hearts and to blind eyes, anger will be the most effective tool. Rather than being humbled by the fall of the great whore, those who will continue to resist repentance will be angry for the losses. They will lament the loss of what they held so dearly.

This, then, is how the groups break down — For those who repent, the difficulties they encounter bring humility and contrition. For those who refuse to repent, they respond with anger at their trials.

This is the great watershed test. If your set backs in life humble you, then your heart is soft and you are a candidate for repentance. If you become angry, accuse God of causing evil, and refuse to be comforted, you are not a candidate for repentance. Your anger is a tool used to blind you. The one employing the tool is the enemy to your soul.

The trials and difficulties are gifts to stir you up to repentance. That is how you ought to respond. The only way to approach the Lord is through humility. Anything that aids you in becoming humble is good, merciful and just. You should view it as a gift. No matter the difficulty. Christ descended below it all; and none of us are greater than He (D&C 122:8).

from the desk of Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 3

Copyright © 2022 Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

All rights reserved.

ISBN: 978-1-956909-02-9

from the desk of Denver Snuffer

VOLUME 3

AUGUST 2, 2010—OCTOBER 26, 2010

Denver C. Snuffer, Jr.

A Note to the Reader:

This multi-volume series covers blog entries beginning in 2010. Scripture references in the text refer to the LDS versions of scripture found in the King James Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine & Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. Beginning about March 2018 the scripture cites change to the Restoration Edition of the scriptures. Cites of the Restoration Edition scriptures are typically denoted with OC, NC and T&C references e.g., (NC Matt. 8:10), or alternately (1 Ne. 1:22 RE) setting them apart from the former LDS scripture version references. For those interested, a scripture reference conversion tool that allows navigation between the various scripture references and versions can be accessed at: <https://scriptures.info/Scriptures/ReferenceTranslator>

CHAPTER 1
2 Nephi 28:20–32

AUGUST 2, 2010

2 Nephi 28:20

“For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.”

One of the most effective ways to end thought or discussion is to get angry. Lawyers use anger as a tool to turn witnesses into thoughtless and emotional pawns. People make very bad decisions when they are angry. I’ve mentioned before my father’s saying that he never spoke a word in anger than he did not later regret.

This is a time of great anger. Anger about religious ideas flows from insecurity and feeling threatened by the idea. It is not possible to have a discussion when people are insecure, angry and unwilling to be thoughtful about ideas.

This is the work of the devil. He succeeds when people close their minds and fill with anger at teachings which introduce ideas that challenge assumptions.

This is why the Jews wanted Christ killed. This is why they wanted to kill Lehi when he spoke of Christ. The teachings ran contrary to the presumptions, and as a result the response was emotional, angry and closed down thought and discussion.

Using fear to shut down people's ability to consider, ponder and pray is a technique used with amazing success. When you hear the argument that something will put you in peril, jeopardize your salvation, and to be afraid of the idea or discussion, you ought to ask yourself whether the notion that shutting down discussion seems right or not. Is it merely using fear to cause rage and anger? Can it be a tool to cause you to turn "against that which is good?"

All kinds of ideas need to be considered to bring you to the Lord. Closing down because of fear will hinder the process, as the devil knows (D&C 38:30).

The tool of anger is the other side of fear.

The object of this is always to cheat your soul, close your mind, keep you from learning the truth.

Now is the great day of anger. Have you noticed how much of the discourse in public life is based upon fear and anger? Those larger social dynamics invade the community of Saints, as well. We are as vulnerable to this technique as the rest of society.

Be slow to anger, quick to forgive; open and prayerful. The great plan to cheat your soul will not succeed with you if you remain humble and open.

AUGUST 2, 2010

2 Nephi 28:21

And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

Now we have reached a point where the audience becomes unavoidably identified with the gentiles of the last days who claim to be assembling as “Zion.” This term gets applied in the Book of Mormon in a highly selective way. It includes the following:

- Last days time frame;
- Post-restoration of the Book of Mormon;
- People who are either claiming or who have actually assembled together as Zion.

We are the only ones who fit this definition. Therefore the application of these verses to include us is required. We cannot point to others and say we are not among those being warned.

What does “pacify” mean?

What does “lull” mean?

What does “carnal security” mean?

If you have people who are pacified, lulled with carnal security, what kind of people are you speaking about?

Why would these people think they were “Zion?” What possible basis could people who are pacified, and lulled with carnal security have for thinking they are “Zion?”

What does it mean that “all is well in Zion?” What does it mean “Zion prospereth?” Does “all is well in Zion” mean the same thing as “Zion prospereth?” If not, what is the difference? Is one “spiritual” and the other “carnal?”

Can one be an attitude, while the other is a measurement or statistic? Can “all be well in Zion” mean that we have comfortable controls and guarantees in place which will protect us?

Can “Zion prospereth” mean new converts, new buildings, new numbers, more tithing receipts, growth and political influence? What else might it mean?

Do we satisfy the notion that “all is well in Zion?” That is, can you see a reason to say that Zion is well at present? Do our people say that?

Do we satisfy the notion that “Zion prospereth?” That is, can you see any reason to say that Zion is presently prospering? Do our people say that?

Why would it “cheat souls” to make them think “all is well in Zion” and that “Zion prospereth?” Why would it lead people “carefully down to hell” for them to believe all is well and Zion prospers?

Can Zion ever relent? Can Zion tolerate a little sin? Does it cheat us if we are good, decent people, and we recognize we are good and decent? Even if we are good and honorable, can we be deceived? (D&C 76:75). How does prosperity blind us? Do John’s words to the Laodiceans tell us how we can err? (Rev. 3:17).

What quality does the devil employ to mislead us? Does being led away “carefully” mean it is harder to recognize the peril? Should it be hard to avoid deception? Why do those who take the Holy Spirit as their guide avoid this kind of deception? (D&C 45:57). Can anyone qualify to receive guidance from the Holy Spirit (Moroni 10:5). Can anyone qualify to receive Christ as their guide? (D&C 93:1).

What good does it do to follow even a true messenger, if you do not receive a testimony from Christ? (D&C 76:98–101).

To whom should you look for salvation?

Does part of the problem Nephi relates here grow out of the notion that being part of a group will matter? If you accept baptism and other saving ordinances from those with authority to minister them, but you do not come to Christ, will the ordinances alone save you? Since the ordinances do matter (Mark 16:16; 2 Nephi 9:23), what must you do after receiving them? (D&C 20:25). Is part of enduring to the end helping others within your own ward family? Can you just walk away from your obligations to the church after entering into the covenant of baptism? (Mosiah 18:8–10).

COMMENTS :

Gordon · AUGUST 2, 2010 AT 5:19 PM

I had never before equated “enduring to the end” with seeking the face of the Lord while in this life. If there is a continuing path after receiving the ordinances which MUST be walked in order to please the Lord and enter into His presence, then why would the Lord not be more explicit in His directions? Why obscure the “way,” by lumping all of what is a very long, exacting and absolutely essential process, into a fuzzy, generic directive called, “enduring to the end.”

It really is no mystery to me why so many members of the church, having received the ordinances, are complacent about their standing with the Lord; the scriptures are written in a way which allows such complacency.

Or, maybe the Lord’s lack of direction is really my lack of discernment.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 2, 2010 AT 5:53 PM

Gordon:

Read again the chapter titled “What it Means and What it Does Not Mean” in The Second Comforter.

AUGUST 3, 2010

2 Nephi 28:22

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance.

How can the devil “flatter” someone? Why would it be “flattery” to tell someone “there is no hell?” What does it mean that “there is no hell?” Have you ever heard this idea taught? Historic Christians are fully persuaded of the existence of hell. We, on the other hand, have three degrees of GLORY in which the idea of hell is sometimes lost.

So, is there a “hell?” (D&C 19:15). Do those who go there suffer? How difficult is the suffering? (D&C 19:16–18).

How can it be flattery for the devil to tell someone “I am no devil?” Would his appearance to someone as an “angel of light” be flattery? (2 Ne. 9:9). Did the devil attempt to do this with Joseph Smith? (D&C 128:20). How was Joseph able to determine the devil was the devil, rather than an “angel of light” when he appeared? Did Joseph learn something about detecting evil spirits from this encounter? What did Michael do to teach Joseph how to detect the devil? What did Joseph later teach about how to detect the devil? (D&C 129:8). What kind of a handshake would you expect to be used to detect a true messenger?

Have others been confronted by Satan appearing as an angel? (Moses 1:12). Now if one were deceived by the devil, thinking him an angel of light, would the devil teach them false doctrines? (Alma 30:53).

Would the false doctrines make them and those hearing from them feel secure, or would it stir them up to repentance?

What does it mean for the devil to claim “there is none?” I’m reminded of Peter asking a minister if he knew who he (the minister) worked for. The minister did not know, and so Peter informed him he worked for the devil. We don’t think about that much anymore, but it is nonetheless the case that there are many people offering instruction who are really either in the employ of the devil, or using then precepts of men as the fodder for their teaching.

What comes to mind with the image of the devil “whispering in their ears?” How close must the devil come to be whispering into a person’s ears? How attentive must the devil become to his target?

Why “awful chains” and not just “chains?” Are there “chains” that are not “awful?” Why would these particular chains always become “awful?”

What does it mean that “there is no deliverance” from these chains? Why would there be no more deliverance provided?

The verses we are considering are part of a careful message and cannot be separated from each other. They blend together. So when considering this portion of the message you must also keep in mind the other things that went before in Nephi’s sermon.

I am awestruck by this great prophet’s message. It inspires fear for my fellow man when I read it. The plight in which some men find themselves by the traditions handed to us seem to be such a trap as to defy escape. What can I say to liberate them? What can I do to help them escape? Who am I to even dare think I can make any difference? What petitions might I weary the Lord with to help avert this end for others?

We seem to all be asleep and incapable of noticing this terrible warning. Why cannot we all awake and arise and put on the beautiful garments, going forth to meet with the Bridegroom? (Moroni 10:31; D&C 133:10).

Perhaps some of you may make a difference in this battle. All of our souls are at risk and we seem more interested in preserving our current circumstances than in understanding them.

This Book of Mormon is alarming when we consider it a warning for us. Not at all the docile and superficial text we can turn it into when studying 8 chapters in a single 50 minute Gospel Doctrine class—reduced by the time taken for announcement, opening and closing prayers, and witty banter exchanged among affable Saints as part of our renewal of weekly fellowship. Those things are good, of course, but the book commands deeper attention.

If I had to say one thing has done more to bring me into harmony with the Lord than any other thing it would be this: I have taken the Book of Mormon seriously. I have assumed it is an authentic and ancient text written by prophetic messengers whose words ought to be studied for how they can change my life. Though all the world may treat it lightly, I have tried to not do so. For that I believe the Lord's approval has been given to an otherwise foolish, vain, error-prone and weak man.

Take the Book of Mormon seriously. Apply it to yourself. Not as a means to judge others, but as a means to test your own life. It is one thing to evaluate our circumstances, which the book compels us to do, but we needn't go further than to realize our terrible plight. From that moment the warning should work inside ourselves to help us improve within, see more clearly our day, think more correctly about what is going on, and act more consistent with the Lord's purposes.

The Book of Mormon is the most correct book available. A person can get closer to God by abiding its precepts than with any other book.

AUGUST 3, 2010

2 Nephi 28:23

Yea, they are grasped with death, and hell; and death, and hell, and the devil, and all that have been seized therewith must stand before the throne of God, and be judged according to their works, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

This is a continuation of the warning. Nephi wants us to take quite seriously his warnings.

When you read words like these it becomes apparent the only safe way to measure his warning is to apply it directly and personally to ourselves. To think this was meant only for “others” is too complacent.

When the truth has made you angry, and you have forfeited the option of repentance extended to you, the “grasp of death” is upon you. You will remain subject to “death and hell.” Being “seized” by these two things, as you stand before the “throne of God” you will be certain that there will be, for you, a continuation of “the deaths.” (D&C 132:25).

Judgment is based “according to their works.” (See also Rev. 20:12–13; explained further in D&C 128:6–8). Joseph ties sealing power to these “works” which must be done under this authority and then recorded to become binding. This is the practice of the church. It is and has always been the practice of those having such authority. They not only perform the work, but upon having done so they create a record of having done so.

Upon being judged, they go “into the place prepared for them.” This place is, for those who are grasped with “death and hell” called “a lake of fire and brimstone.” A lake because it engulfs them so tightly they are flooded with the guilt. Fire because it is designed to purge and refine. Brimstone because of the bitterness of the experience. The torment there is “endless” meaning from God (D&C 19:4–12).

This purging does not confer blessings, but merely balances out the claims of justice for those who would not accept mercy (D&C 19:15–19).

Crying repentance is to warn, so the claims of justice may be avoided by obtaining mercy through Christ. Christ's mercy is offered to all, but will only be received in full by few. All will be resurrected because of His sacrifice (1 Cor. 15:22), and those who died without law will not be punished for their ignorance (D&C 76:71–72; D&C 45, 54), but to receive the full benefit of His atonement must do as He commands (D&C 132:22–23).

Those who love others and want their eternal welfare will invite everyone to repent and come to Christ. The prospect of others suffering needlessly because they would not repent is a great horror to them. This is why Nephi's words are at times so blunt. This is why he wants to stir us all up to our terrible situation. It is merciful to speak to us in these frank terms.

I know some who have read these words of counsel from Nephi and find them objectionable. However, Isaiah spoke against those whose words were "smooth" but filled with deceit (Isa. 30:10). To people who are content and filled with pride, it takes a great deal of candor to bring them to their senses (Enos 1:23). Nephi's warnings are intended to save as many of the gentiles who read his record from self-destruction as he can bring to repentance. It is better for us to take counsel from his hand than to dismiss his teachings. He can only warn his readers. Since we are his readers, he must be speaking to us.

AUGUST 3, 2010

Constitutional Forum 2

I will participate again at the American Heritage School in a Constitutional Law forum. The format is a panel discussion. It is at 7:00 p.m. this Thursday, the 5th. American Heritage School is located across the street from the Timpanogos Temple in American Fork.

This panel will be discussing First Amendment freedom of speech issues.

Since some of you attended last time, I thought I ought to post a notice again.

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 3, 2010 AT 4:56 PM

If you attend you will miss the Rush concert at Usana. In fairness I thought you should be reminded of this considerable sacrifice.

AUGUST 4, 2010

2 Nephi 28:24–25

“Therefore, wo be unto him that is at ease in Zion! Wo be unto him that crieth: All is well!”

The word “therefore” ties all that went before to this warning about “Zion.” The threat of damnation, the pronouncement of “wo’s,” and the cautions about false teachers spreading false teachings are all designed to cause unease to Zion. That would be us. Or it would be what we claim about ourselves.

It is foolish to turn Nephi’s message into a warning to some other latter-day group. The gentiles, who have received the Book of Mormon, and who claim they are better than others, puffed up with conceit about being chosen and highly favored of God, are the ones who would identify themselves as “Zion” in Nephi’s prophecy. Not others. Us.

If you have reacted to the previous discussion with the notion that the interpretation given is really just my “opinion,” and not an actual warning targeting the Latter-day Saints, you should reconsider. Although Nephi’s message has been construed to apply to other faiths, (and the language certainly permits it) this part of Nephi's sermon makes the conclusion inevitable. He is not warning others. He is not primarily targeting the world of the last days. He is warning and attempting to save the souls of those who receive his writings and self-identify themselves as "Zion."

This means if we are "Zion" we can never be "at ease." We can never relent. Self-praise and assuring words that make us relax are not only false, they cheat us whenever they remove the burden of repentance we must bear.

There can be no ease. There can be no determination that "all is well" until we have repented and come to Christ. When Christ has forgiven us, we can know we are forgiven. When Christ has promised us eternal life, we can know we have eternal life. Until then, we remain at risk and in jeopardy every hour we are here (1 Cor. 15:30). When, however, you know you are sealed up to eternal life, you have the more sure word of prophecy or the testimony of Jesus (D&C 131:5).

When can a person know they have a part in Zion? When the Lord Himself has made them a citizen. When the description given below is the description of their lives, then they may know it will be well with them:

They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given — That by keeping the commandments they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; And who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true. They are they who are the church of the Firstborn. They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things— They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory; And are priests of the Most High, after the order of Melchizedek, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the Only Begotten Son. Wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God— Wherefore, all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's. And they shall overcome all things. (D&C 76:51–60)

These are they who have been told by the voice of God from heaven that they have eternal life. They are those who have obtained a hope in Christ.

When the Gospel of Christ is taught, it is always the purpose to bring people to this point. It is not Christ's Gospel when the teachings fall short of declaring this to the audience. Nephi was not trying to get you to improve your behavior or to become a good citizen. He was not attempting to make you a conservative, mainstream American. He was warning you to flee from this corrupt and failing society to a higher place where you can obtain communion with the Church of the Firstborn. A place where you join the household of God.

Zion is not and has never been the product of an institutional organization on this earth. It is a byproduct of there being citizens of heaven living here. Zion is the only way such persons can live with one another. First obtain a hope in Christ, and then all things will be added to you.

Why, then, should there be no ease among us? Because we have too few for the Lord to bring again Zion. Until then we do not have Zion, and our false claims to it only serve to make us at ease while there remains yet a great unfinished labor to perform.

It is Nephi's love for us, his desire to see us saved and happy, that causes him to use such harsh words of warning. He knows what we lack. He wants us to overcome it all and join him in the chorus singing anthems of praise, because our joy cannot be expressed without such songs! (D&C 84:98–102).

AUGUST 4, 2010

2 Nephi 28:26

“Yea, wo be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost!”

Now we return to Nephi's theme. Don't listen to the “precepts of men.” This warning is not for the teachers or leaders. Nephi is not saying to them: “don't teach with your own learning.” He has already consigned them to hell (2 Nephi 28:15, supra). Now he is speaking to the “few, who are the humble followers of Christ.” (2 Nephi 28:14). In place of three “wo's” there is only one.

Nephi pronounces a “wo” upon those who “hearken” or accept the “precepts of men.” They will be condemned. Their hopes will not be realized. They will suffer setbacks in their progression and will not attain to the hopes they might have otherwise attained. But their offense is less than that of the “lead them” and “cause them to err.” (2 Nephi 28:14).

If you “hearken” to the “precepts of men,” you are denying “the power of the God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost.” It is necessary for you to both deny God's power and rebel against the gift of the Holy Ghost in order for you to “hearken to the precepts of men.” God's power was designed to keep you from making these errors. The gift of the Holy Ghost was given to lead you to the knowing the truth of all things (Moroni 10:5). When, therefore, you hearken to men's precepts you are not confirming through the Spirit that what is being taught is merely man's precepts.

With a tool like the Holy Ghost available to you, you are accountable for what teachings you accept. It is possible for you to listen to a teacher whose precepts are dark and to know as he speaks that the Spirit does not ratify his words. It is your responsibility to weigh all things and hold onto only those things which are good (1 Thes. 5:21).

When Jesus was asked about two witnesses He said He was one, the other was His Father, who also bore witness of Him. If they did not listen to the power of the Father, nor incline their hearts to receive the witness of the Spirit, then they could not know the Father, and could not receive that second witness (John 8:17–19). Nephi is saying the same thing. That is, no man teaching the precepts of men should be able to deceive you. Rather, for every teaching and every teacher, there should be a second witness coming from above which bears witness to you that you are hearing the truth.

So many Latter-day Saint teachers resort to sentimentality and emotion in their teaching, talks, books and testimonies. Some are fooled into thinking an emotional reaction is the same as a witness of the Spirit. Emotions rarely communicate light and truth or intelligence. The Spirit bears witness of the truth, conveys light and intelligence, and may not at all be emotional. Or, if emotions are involved, it may be fear (Isa. 6:5), dread (Gen. 28:17), or even horror at what you encounter (Gen. 15:12–18). Mere sentimentality is a false substitute for the witness of the Spirit. Joseph Smith explained it this way:

When you feel pure intelligence flowing into you, it may give you sudden strokes of ideas, so that by noticing it, you may find it fulfilled the same day or soon; (i.e.) those things that were presented unto your minds by the Spirit of God, will come to pass; and thus by learning the Spirit of God and understanding it, you may grow into the principle of revelation, until you become perfect in Christ Jesus. (TPJS p. 151)

The warning from Nephi about how you deny the power of God, you reject the gift of the Holy Ghost whenever you “hearken to the precepts of men” is based on this principle. You have the tools to detect when you are being taught by men using the arm of flesh to advance an idea or notion. You are accountable, hence the “wo” pronounced on you by Nephi.

Ask yourself the following questions as you hear a teacher:

- Does he teach you to come to Christ?
- Do the teachings convey intelligence upon you, or just sentiment?
- Do they awaken inside you light and truth that you hadn't considered before?
- Are the teachings based on the revelations of heaven, or some study, analysis or tool developed by academics?
- Are you encouraged to seek for a confirmation from the Spirit?
- Did you learn something new, but find yourself feeling you have known it before?
- Whether it causes dread, fear or even horror, does the Spirit tell you, nonetheless, it is of God?
- Are you more inclined to get on your knees and call upon God because of what you have learned?
- Does the speaker merely want you to honor her, or an institution?
- Does the speaker hold him/herself out as an expert or someone with impressive credentials?

- Does he rely on status or office as the reason to trust his teaching, or instead rely on the truthfulness of his message? No power or influence can or ought to be exerted by virtue of office or position, only by persuasion and pure knowledge (D&C 121:41–42).
- Are the words noble and great, despite your view of the person who is delivering them?

You may be surprised when you ask such questions at what you learn. Nephi is saying it is your own responsibility if you allow yourself to be taken in by the precepts of men. Wo unto you if you do.

AUGUST 5, 2010

2 Nephi:28:28

And in fine, wo unto all those who tremble, and are angry because of the truth of God! For behold, he that is built upon the rock receiveth it with gladness; and he that is built upon a sandy foundation trembleth lest he shall fall.

This is the constant problem. People do not care about religion. So when someone like Nephi delivers a message to the audience that is threatening because it contradicts their presumptions, they get upset. They are fearful. They “tremble, and are angry.” When Nephi puts out the message, he knows those he addresses are going to react in a very negative way. He will become the object of their distrust and dislike.

But Nephi reminds the audience that it isn't him they have a problem with. It is “the truth of God.”

There are two reactions: One is anger, because it condemns them. The other is gladness. Those who are “built upon the rock” — meaning Christ—have their hope and faith in Him, for

He is the “Rock of Heaven,” (Moses 7:53) and they “receive it with gladness.”

Those who are “built upon a sandy foundation” will “tremble.” This would mean they are struck with fear. They are afraid of the message. They fear because they begin to realize their religious convictions may be wrong. They are afraid they “shall fall,” or in other words, if the message is true then they may be doomed and their high hopes dashed.

They would rather be angry and try and suppress the message than to receive it and repent. If someone has a good heart, then any warning is appreciated. Even if it informs them they are mistaken. They want truth. So a warning is appreciated when it permits them to correct their errors. These people are built upon the Rock, because truth alone determines what they will accept. They “hearken to the truth” because they are interested in knowing truth.

This message from Nephi reminds all of us about the difference between those who are grounded in the testimony of Jesus (the Rock) and those who hope their brand of religion will aid them (the sand). False hopes are quickly threatened when exposed to the truth. Knowledge that you are built upon the testimony of Jesus, however, cannot be shaken. Critics will be ground into dust by such a stone, but will not damage it (Daniel 2:45). Those with such knowledge would suffer death, but not deny the Lord (Mosiah 17:10). Though called upon to suffer for His name, they will not submit, but choose to die secure in the knowledge they have of Christ (D&C 138:13–14).

This kind of faith requires sacrifice, as explained in The Lectures on Faith previously posted. The Book of Mormon calls it “knowledge” and that lecture requires you “actually know the course you are pursuing is pleasing to God.” That is, whether you call it “faith” as the Lectures do, or “knowledge” as the Book of Mormon does, it is the same. You must come to know Christ has accepted your sacrifices. You should re-read that if you want to reacquaint yourself with the requirements for gaining such faith.

AUGUST 5, 2010

Trivial Pursuit

I got a question which I’m going to interrupt and answer. The question included the following:

[After describing some personal stuff that’s mentioned in passing on the blog, it continues] they are things that I would have steered away from because I truly believed that is what would please the Lord...I am seriously asking myself what is it that I am not understanding. I thought I was being obedient to what the Lord would want me to be doing. But am I actually like a Pharisee about these things? Are they not as important as I make them? Does the Lord really not care that I try to be really careful about what I see or listen do...even though I am doing it because I believed it to be offensive to MY spirit and THE spirit? Are these important things? Are you trying to give us a message to open our eyes that we get caught up in the wrong things?

First, I have tried to be invisible in what I write, other than to point out failings. I think the only things about myself which are important are: 1) flaws; 2) my witness of Christ. Everything else is distracting and moving focus from the real subject (Jesus Christ and His teachings), to a distraction and non-issue (myself).

In The Second Comforter I mention what I called the “Pharisee Phase” in which the endless rules of conduct are followed by a Latter-day Saint in an attempt to be good. I've said this was useful and probably everyone goes through it. But it isn't going to work.

Most of the stuff we concern ourselves with is meaningless and time wasting. What matters are the principles and ordinances of the Gospel; and more important still, the underlying charity or pure love of Christ. Everything is attempting to get you to love your fellow man. Not in the sappy sentimental way we associate with "loving" someone. Because sometimes the most charitable thing you can do is rebuke someone, as we see from Nephi. Sometimes a sharp word comes from being moved upon by the Holy Ghost (D&C 121:43). But in the end the person rebuked should still feel they are loved and the reason for the rebuke was the concern held for them.

I know the church advises against R-rated movies. I think that's good advice. But there are some movies that are important works, but have an R-rating. Schindler's List was rated R. So was Braveheart. We are related to Robert the Bruce, and this movie has been seen by my children as part of understanding what it means to descend from the Scotts. My father landed on Omaha Beach on the morning of June 6, 1944. Saving Private Ryan is, for me, a personal story about what my father went through. I have watched it and own a copy of it, and my children have seen it in an attempt to have them understand their grandfather's sacrifices. So I do not always follow that advice given us. But others may, and I have respect for them. Your question said you "believe it to be offensive to your spirit" which is so important a statement that I would always defer to your decision on such matters. It simply is not my place to tell you to do something which offends your spirit. You should trust it as a guide.

Paul's teachings in Romans Chapter 14 (which I posted about earlier), is the only way we can become "one" as a people. I respect your motivation more than your actions, because they are pure. But we err when we judge another's actions and attribute to them motive. Pure motive cannot be known by observing actions. If we could judge motive from acts, then we would condemn Nephi for murdering Laban and stealing the brass plates. We would condemn Abraham for lying about the status of his wife Sarah, claiming her to be a sister. We would condemn Jesus for violating a clearly understood teaching about the Sabbath and not doing any labor upon the Sabbath. We would be wrong. Nephi was constrained to implement God's judgment, Abraham was acting on the direction of the Lord, and Jesus was honoring the Sabbath by keeping it holy, even if that came at the expense of performing labor.

We are told to refrain from judging one another precisely because we cannot judge motive from actions.

I would rather laugh than be stern. In fact, when Joseph refers to his "native cheery temperament" I would go a little further. I am prone to sarcasm and irreverence, because Mark Twain influenced my sense of humor while a child and I've never recovered. To me most of our problems are so stupid they compel us to mock them. But people wouldn't understand that if I adopted that approach, so I do not. When, however, I see Elijah mocking the priests of Baal and I identify with Elijah's conduct in that undignified scene (1 Kings 18:27). But most people would find that troubling and mistake the conduct and misjudge motive.

The Lord was gregarious, but we've turned Him into a caricature. The leaders of the church have themselves become imprisoned by an image which requires them to be holy from birth and never stray from a sort of "plastic-fantastic" single, dimensional, cardboard persona. Inside this trap you see them living as if on constant display (which they are), wearing the uniform of a white shirt, dark suit and power tie to see a movie, (should they ever attend a movie). The Saints want it, the Brethren deliver, and everyone moves about judging motive from conduct when it is utter rubbish.

Don't think I am important or spend any time trying to understand me. It is less than worthless, it is a distraction. I'm simply not important. About me there are only two things which matter: 1) I am flawed and error prone and anything but perfect. I watch inappropriate movies, laugh out loud at stupidity, have a highly acute bullshit-detector and tend to use it at the wrong times. I do not seek for, nor want anyone's admiration. It would be better for me if people readily accepted that my errors are many, and therefore, they ought not depend upon me. They will more quickly look to the Lord if they do not look to me. 2) I have seen the Lord and He has ministered to me. The details are only set forth to the extent I have been required to set them forth. They appear in 9 words in The Second Comforter, and in two chapters in Come, Let Us Adore Him. I can tell you that when I said on this blog: "I have never won an argument with the Lord" that I was referring to what appears in Come, Let Us Adore Him. Long before anyone leveled any criticism at me for publishing something which I should have kept to myself, I made the same (and better) arguments with the Lord against putting it into print. He has "strong reasoning" which I am unable to overcome (D&C 45:10). I am no volunteer. I do as I am required. And I understand Joseph's comment that if he hadn't lived it he wouldn't have believed it. I doubt I would believe me if I were anyone else. What I have written is, nevertheless, true.

COMMENTS:

Sarah · AUGUST 6, 2010 AT 5:40 PM

Since when are we supposed to let our spirits be our guide? I thought we were suppose to take the Holy Spirit as our guide. I don't feel comfortable saying, 'you avoid whatever offends your spirit and I'll avoid whatever offends my spirit and we'll all be happy in our relative worlds.' Can't we just call good good and evil evil? My understanding was that if I obey the commandments, THE Spirit will abide in me. And if that same spirit abides in you, than whatever is sinful will be offensive to both you and I. And I know that it's impossible for us all to be on the same page at the same time (that's why we need to be patient with each other and withhold judgment), but aren't we all supposed to 'shake at the appearance of evil'? I chose not to see Braveheart and Saving Private Ryan, not because they were rated R, but because it was obvious that those movies would be extremely violent. It sounded like they were otherwise excellent films, but I detest those particular tools that Satan commonly uses to trap people: poisoning by degrees and using something beautiful to deliver a small but potent dose of sin that would harm any spirit. What am I missing here? Isn't 'badass' a bad word? I mean I won't judge you for saying it, but shouldn't we ought NOT to say it? Am I being a Pharisee here? I'm confused.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 6, 2010 AT 6:41 PM

Your own spirit should be connected to and enlightened by the Light of Christ, given to all men/women. That is your conscience. It is an important first line of deciding right and wrong. You ignore it and you risk searing your conscience. So following your own internal compass is something I would advise.

Those movies would be extremely violent. So was Mormon's life. Between the carnage and cannibalism, rape and murder, unrelenting genocide and end of his culture, his life was filled with horror. Yet he was the one who abridged the Book of Mormon and provided us with this great religious masterpiece. Somehow the violence, rape and murder did not prevent him from being the Lord's primary prophet to preserve His primary scripture for our time.

Words convey meaning. Sometimes the best tool in the lexicon to convey a meaning requires one word, sometimes another. The best translation of some of John the Baptist's remarks would be of questionable civility; nevertheless altogether appropriate.

AUGUST 6, 2010

2 Nephi 28:29

“Wo be unto him that shall say: We have received the word of God, and we need no more of the word of God, for we have enough!”

This general principle is addressed first. Nephi will build on it in the following verses. But the first statement is the broadest.

An earlier “wo” was pronounced upon those who rely on the uninspired teachings of men who use their own precepts. Now he adds a second “wo” to those who also deny the need for continuing revelation. We claim we are unlike all other faiths because we believe in the concept of continuing revelation. However, that notion is greatly modified by us to the point where the continuation of revelation is so limited, so curtailed, and so distrusted that we are generally unacquainted with any new revelation.

Do we hear of visions and visitations? Not much, if at all. We think that such things are reserved for leaders. For example, if Elijah were to return with a message to someone, we would expect the person with whom he would visit would be the church President. If it were someone other than the church President, we would instantly be suspicious because Elijah wasn't following the “chain of authority” as we expect. [Interestingly, as soon as you know Elijah was involved you should consider that another line of authority may be created.] So even if we heard from Elijah, it would cause us trouble and likely be rejected as too irregular. This would be true of other heavenly messengers, as well.

What visitations could we tolerate? Pretty much we'd only think it appropriate for an ancestor to visit with a descendant to give a family message. A deceased great-grandfather coming to bring a message about one of his descendants would seem to fit within the whole "chain of authority" model we have created. Family business. Seems to be acceptable. However, even then, we would expect the person involved to "keep it to themselves" because it was inappropriate to share things like that. Too personal. Too sacred. Too much information of a deeply personal nature to warrant talking about it with others.

What if the great-grandfather were Abraham? Would that fit the model? What if his concerns ran to all who are living? Would that family be large enough to warrant talking about it with almost anyone? Oops, we're back to the whole "chain of authority" argument again, and would expect Abraham to limit his visit to the chief Mormon-in-charge. So a visit by Abraham would be suspect as well.

What if the message were from John the Beloved? He has a continuing ministry to visit with people and bring them to salvation. In fact, his ministry includes visiting with those who will be "heirs of salvation who dwell on the earth." (D&C 7:1-6). Still, if a person had him minister to him, we would not want to hear about it, would question the propriety, and wonder why John would come when other perfectly authoritative men are living on the earth inside the church holding the same keys as John. So, that would be questioned and regarded as irregular as well.

So as Latter-day Saints we believe in the continuation of revelation, visitations, visions, etc. so long as they conform to our limited model, come to the right person, and don't disturb anything we have going on at the present. Which is to say we don't believe in continuing revelation much at all.

What about Christ? Can He visit with anyone whom He deigns to visit? That's a little closer call, because He seems to have promised to come to all. He also displayed remarkably democratic tendencies both on the day of His resurrection, and when visiting the Nephites. (I've explained His disregard for the church hierarchy He established on the day of His resurrection in Come, Let Us Adore Him.) He seems much less interested in respecting established religious authority than we do. So we might allow the Lord to visit with someone, but, then we wouldn't want to hear many details because that would be wrong for some reason. Probably "casting pearls before swine" or "profaning" or "disrespecting the line of authority" or something. Not sure which one, but there's got to be a prohibition against it somewhere.

So we have tendencies that are difficult to put into a hard and fast rule, but I'm going to attempt it Rule 1: We believe in continuing revelation; predicated upon the following:

Mostly to the President of the church;

But with others whenever:

—(i) It is a grandparent who lived sometime during the restoration or had some unique reason to be coming back, but never

—(i) an ancestor so long back they would be Biblical, because that puts us back into (a) above;

—(ii) if they have a message which would be of general interest, because that puts us back into (a) above;

—(iii) if the visit involves knowing something or clarifying something which might be sacred, because such things are wrong to discuss or acknowledge.

— (2) It is the Lord, but that's because He pretty much gets to do what He wants to do; except if it's important we'd want Him to explain why He didn't follow (a), above — and it better be a pretty good reason or else we'll have to question the report.

Well, we believe all that God has revealed to authorized people in positions of authority, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal to the proper channels many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; and that once it has been reviewed by the Correlation Department and published by Deseret Book it will become something which we can all accept as being from an authorized source and reliable.

Until that happens, we have absolutely received enough of the word of God and we don't need any more of the word of God. And, by damn, if someone comes claiming revelation or an independent apostolic witness of the Lord's resurrection we will want them to cut off an arm or some other member of the body and then restore it again, so that we may know he has come with power. I'm quite confident that ought to satisfy our need to see a sign before we will believe a proposition.

Now we know for certain Nephi's warning is to those other faiths that do not accept continuing revelation and not to us. However, as to those, Nephi has pronounced a prior "wo" for their acceptance of the precepts of men, and now a second "wo" upon them for their refusal to accept continuing revelation. These begin to mount up and ought to worry those to whom these concerns are addressed, whoever they may be. Perhaps Nephi should have written his book for those people, instead of us good folks who read the book and know for certain that we're alright.

COMMENTS:

DJones · AUGUST 6, 2010 AT 7:21 AM

Denver...you say the most outrageous things...I could hardly contain myself...this is the best yet..'by damn'

Well, We believe all that God has revealed to authorized people in positions of authority, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal to the proper channels many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; and that once it has been reviewed by the Correlation Department and published by Deseret Book it will become something which we can all accept as being from an authorized source and reliable.

Until that happens, we have absolutely received enough of the word of God and we don't need any more of the word of God. And, by damn, if someone comes claiming revelation or an independent apostolic witness of the Lord's resurrection we will want them to cut off an arm or some other member of the body and then restore it again, so that we may know he has come with power. I'm quite confident that ought to satisfy our need to see a sign before we will believe a proposition.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 6, 2010 AT 8:31 AM

Interestingly the catalog from Deseret Book is pushing on the front page a new book titled: The Silence of God. An oddly titled work of fiction which is, according to the catalogue "a powerful, extraordinary novel of devotion and loyalty." While I doubt I'll read it, I just thought the title was strangely appropriate for Deseret Book.

AUGUST 6, 2010

2 Nephi 28:30

For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom; for unto him that receiveth I will give more, and from them that shall say, We have enough, from them shall be taken away even that which they have.

Here Nephi shows he is the prophetic precedent upon which others would build. We often quote Alma for this idea, because Alma lays it out more completely. But Alma's teaching has its root in Nephi's warning here (See Alma 12:9–11).

Notice the Lord's promise that He will "give unto the children of men." He is liberal and does not upbraid us for asking (James 1:5–6). Indeed, He admonishes us to seek, ask and knock (Matt. 7:7–11; D&C 88:63).

Notice that "unto him that receiveth" is the singular. It isn't "those" but "him." Meaning each of us individually may come to Him and ask and receive. However, "from them that shall say, We have enough" is plural. Meaning, there are many who could have been taught, had they not shut the doors. The collective will resist new revelation, even when it continues. They will shut their minds and not tolerate learning of truths.

When, however, groups close their minds it becomes impossible to keep what they have. It is inevitable that "from them shall be taken away even that which they have." Meaning, that we are either in a process of restoration or apostasy. The instant we stop restoring truths, we begin to lose them. You cannot just keep what Joseph restored to you. That will be lost. You either continue on and receive on-going revelation and new visions, visitations and restoration, or else you begin to forfeit what you already have. So soon as you walk away from one precept, from one doctrine, from one ordinance, you have begun the process of apostasy or falling away.

This environment is not static. It is always in change. Either it is being built up, created and newly formed, or it is decaying, dying and falling apart. It never holds static. This is because the things of this world testify of Christ's Gospel (Moses 6:63). The path is only upward. So soon as you stray from it, you lose the path. This is why you take the shoes from off your feet and put them on again as a symbol that you accept the path. You never remove them again, because once upon that path you are to remain so. The path is accompanied by greater light and truth, going from grace to grace until you receive a fullness (D&C 93:19, 26–28).

Nephi is telling us how to receive the fullness. It comes only through revelation and the opening of heaven. You may be anointed to become kings and priests, but the realization of these blessings depends upon your faithfulness. If you are true and faithful the time will come when you will be called up and anointed, whereas now it is all conditional. Only Christ can remove the conditions. To have Him do that requires Him, as the Word, to intercede on your behalf. It requires Him to confirm by His own voice from heaven that you are His, and to establish His covenant directly with you.

Whether it is the words of an old book or the words of an older ceremony it is the same. They can't save you. Only following the exact same path as the ancients followed can result in arriving at the same end. As the Sixth Lecture from The Lectures on Faith states:

When a man has offered in sacrifice all that he has for the truth's sake, not even withholding his life, and believing before God that he has been called to make this sacrifice, because he seeks to do his will, he does know most assuredly that God does and will accept his sacrifice and offering, and that he has not nor will not seek his face in vain. Under these circumstances then, he can obtain the faith necessary for him to lay hold on eternal life. It is in vain for persons to fancy to themselves that they are heirs with those, or can be heirs with them, who have offered their all in sacrifice, and by this means obtained faith in God and favor with him so as to obtain eternal life, unless they in like manner offer unto him the same sacrifice, and through that offering obtain the knowledge that they are accepted of him.

What role does revelation play? Without it no person can be saved. Who must receive the revelation? Each person for themselves.

What happens when revelation stops? To the person for whom revelation has ended, there is no salvation, (Moroni 7:37–38) and they will immediately begin to lose what they were previously given (Verse above). To the people who refuse to receive more, “from them shall be taken away even that which they have.”

Nephi has declared it, using authority from God to do so. We either accept his counsel and warnings or reject it at our peril.

AUGUST 7, 2010

2 Nephi 28:31

“Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost.”

Now we move beyond the wo’s to cursing. Cursing by one holding authority to seal is a terrible thing to encounter. However, we should expect that one having that authority, possessing correct knowledge, along with the ability to lead into light and truth, would do all he could to be clear about a matter so those who read what he has said will understand unmistakably the responsibilities they face. Nephi is discharging a duty, and doing so with our best interests in mind. We shouldn’t take offense. We should be grateful even if it is painful to read.

So again we confront the phrase “trust in man” along with “maketh flesh his arm.” Have you considered the meaning of these terms? Have you thought about them as symbols?

“Trust in man” is another way of describing reliance on man to save. Man’s theories or hopes or vain formulas as the path to God is another way to describe “trust in man.” Do you want a preacher who will give you the philosophies of men mingled with scripture?

Something from Bartlett’s Familiar Quotations to “flesh out” the meaning of a phrase in scripture? A little story of personal experience from your own life, to personalize the meaning of a verse from the Bible? Will you trade that for an inspired warning that your soul is in jeopardy and you are cursed because of what you accept in place of the power of the Holy Ghost as your guide?

“Maketh flesh his arm” is another way of saying the “strength” of man, rather than the “strength” of God. The arm is also the means by which a sign or covenant might be set forth. By putting the “flesh his arm” rather than the signs of priestly authority from a true messenger, the implication is that any surrogate for God will do if they just have a few bona-fides. Credentials will be enough. Have they been to college and received training for the ministry? A man cannot preach unless he’s been trained for the ministry, you see. Are they a scholar? We like to defer to them. We quote them, study them, and believe in their techniques and methods.

But Nephi keeps thundering back: No man’s precepts should be accepted when they do not originate in revelation and the Holy Ghost. Without a connection to revelation and the Holy Ghost, the teachings are all the arm of flesh. If you want to trust in that, you will be cursed.

Nephi puts it into two, opposing camps. There are only two. There are either inspired teachings, given by revelation and confirmed by the Holy Ghost, or they are man's understanding. The first will save you. The other will curse you. There is no happy marriage. You cannot have both. This sword cuts both ways, and forces you to make a decision. Your eternity will be affected by the decision. So either you find the right way and follow it, or you are relying upon men and will in the end be cursed.

Interesting choice. Terrible dilemma. Glad we are absolutely guaranteed that the men we trust to lead us cannot ever lead us astray. Or the majority of them won't anyway. Because if we had to rely only on something as flimsy as the Holy Ghost to choose we would be forced to fast and pray, be humble and penitent to solve this terrible dilemma for us; working out our salvation with fear and trembling before God (Philip. 2:12).

I'm glad we don't have to go through that. We're the best of heaven and have come down to strut and fret our hour upon the stage, all the while enwrapped in several layers of guaranteed eternal life insurance policies paid for by the blood of martyrs and pioneers who suffered so we might be able to live comfortably. We are just GOOD people. They envied us. Everyone has, you know. The prophets all looked down from antiquity and longed to live among us, the favored few...

Oh, wait a minute, I got carried away. I forgot we were trying to understand Nephi's message. For a minute there I was too wrapped up in our own message. Well, to return to Nephi—someone's going to be cursed for trusting in men. Only those whose precepts and teachings originate in the Holy Ghost are going to be saved. It is a terrible burden to confront. It almost makes us want to turn away in sorrow rather than continue on following our Lord (See John 6:65–67). But, then again, who else has the words of eternal life other than Him?

AUGUST 8, 2010

2 Nephi 28:32

Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts! For notwithstanding I shall lengthen out mine arm unto them from day to day, they will deny me; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto them, saith the Lord God, if they will repent and come unto me; for mine arm is lengthened out all the day long, saith the Lord God of Hosts.

After all these warnings, the mention of Zion, the foolishness of following the “precepts of men” Nephi turns again to identifying the most relevant group being warned. It is “the gentiles” (or us). As he considers our collective effort and how we allow the “precepts of men” to be our guide, he states his overall conclusion about our performance: “Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts!”

This is the third wo. And it is accompanied by a three name title. This time incorporating the “Hosts” or Family of God. This is the Father’s judgment upon us. His status as the “Lord God of Hosts” is clearly intended to let us know those proud gentiles who rely upon the sparks of their own fire as their light will lay down in sorrow (Isa. 50:11; 2 Ne. 7:11).

When the Lord’s open arm is extended all the day, they reject Him and walk away. They prefer their own false ideas to the truth found in Christ. In the end they have “denied the Lord” because all His efforts toward them have been rejected.

Still, despite all these failings, and all the wo’s pronounced upon them, it is NOT the Lord’s failure. It is the gentiles. Even now the Lord would welcome them “if they will repent and come to Him.” His arm is yet “lengthened out all the day long.” So long as life remains, He is pleading for our repentance. So long as we are here, He will welcome our repentance. And, so we do not miss the point, He also uses a three-name title when extending the plea to us for our repentance. He is speaking on behalf of, and as the chief among, all the “Hosts of heaven.” The entire council would welcome us back, if we would but return.

Can you not sense the agony of this plea? Can you not feel the mercy God would grant to any penitent soul? Despite this, men prefer their arrogance, their own precepts, their own false teachings to being taught by the Holy Spirit. We refuse to repent because we prefer our false teachings. We prefer our traditions that build up our pride, and tell us we are going to be exalted because we are good and deserve God’s favor. We’ve put up with tithing, and with faithful meeting attendance, and followed faithfully all kinds of leaders in every ward and stake we’ve ever attended. We’ve passed temple recommend interviews and attended faithfully our tithing settlement meetings—in short we think we’ve done everything God could possibly ask of us.

Except we have NOT repented and come to Christ. Had we done that, we would have been embraced in those opened arms of our Lord. In five points of contact with a loving God, we would have heard unspeakable things and know we escaped the wo’s pronounced by Nephi.

Nephi’s assessment of the gentile performance is consistently pessimistic. Coupled with Nephi’s description of a consistently open and accepting Lord who would welcome us at any time were we willing to repent.

Nephi’s message gets mangled in our distorted cultural rewriting of meanings. When someone points out what he’s saying, it produces anger and resentment. The result is not particularly encouraging for the gentiles. Not merely because of Nephi's prophetic words, but also because of our reaction to them.

AUGUST 9, 2010

Come and Be Saved

In the preceding verses Nephi has changed from giving his own advice and counsel to quoting the Lord. He began in verse 30 with the words: "behold, thus saith the Lord" and continues quoting Him through the end of that chapter and into the next.

The third "wo" was pronounced by Nephi as a quote from the Lord. The "cursing of the gentiles" was pronounced by Nephi as a quote from the Lord.

Now I didn't point that out as we went through the materials. It is significant enough that it requires additional attention.

Christ has divided judgment up into two separate functions. For those who will be blessed, He will delegate the honor of blessing to others, including His twelve at Jerusalem, (Matt. 19:28, 1 Ne. 12:9) and twelve Nephite disciples (3 Ne. 27:27). Their judgment is honorary, however, because they are given no discretion in the matter. The Lord will decide the judgment. It is His alone, so as to insure it will be the right decision (3 Ne. 27:27). For those who are to be cursed, however, Christ will be the one who pronounces the judgment (D&C 29:27-29).

It is of terrible significance that these statements come from the Lord who alone holds the right to judge. He sacrificed His life for all, and is the Savior and Redeemer, seeking to save all who will come to Him. This is the same Lord who pronounces the words through Nephi:

Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost. Wo be unto the Gentiles, saith the Lord God of Hosts! (2 Ne. 28:31–32)

The message is delivered by Nephi. The words are the Lord's. The merciful and loving Christ who suffered for all that they might not suffer if they would repent (D&C 19:16), is announcing His pessimism about the latter-day gentile effort to obtain repentance. Why do we seem destined to fail? Why is repentance so difficult for us? What terrible “precepts of men” hold us bound in chains that we cannot break free.

Several have made comments on the question of how we are to repent and come to Christ. There is a fundamental first step to be taken which the Lord has explained repeatedly in His teachings. I have written about this often, including in my first and last books.

In the chapter on the Atonement in Come, Let Us Adore Him there is an explanation given of what Christ suffered and what obligations are devolving on us as a result. We must do as He did, suffer in like manner, and forgive all offenses. His infinite suffering cannot be replicated in one sense, but in our own sphere and time we do suffer offenses and abuses. We are required to forgive as He forgave. It is our own forgiveness of others that qualifies us to receive forgiveness from Him. When we harbor grudges and resentments, we cut ourselves off from His Atonement. If we are to be forgiven we must in turn FORGIVE others. In The Second Comforter it is shown how we must make intercession on behalf of others, even our enemies, if we are to have a hope in Christ. We must lay down the burden of sin to enter into His presence. Much of that “sin” in each of our lives has been the offenses against us, and the resentment and anger we hold from these abuses. There are people who have done you wrong. There are some who did so intentionally. When you forgive them, and plead on their behalf for the Lord to also forgive them in sincerity and love, you are not far from the Kingdom of Heaven. Your Lord did this. You must do as He did to be like Him. It is the only way to understand your Lord. In this, you must suffer as He did, choosing to forgive offenses rather than to seek justice. When you show mercy, you merit mercy. The beginning of repentance is found in forgiving others.

Your just claims for retribution must be surrendered. Your worthy desire to have vindication must be abandoned. Your right to have judgment against the ones who abused you must be forfeited. And you must go on to pray for their forgiveness.

If you have read all I have written you already know this. I am disappointed to have those who have not read what I've written trying to make sense of this blog. It will make absolutely no sense if it is not seen as an extension of what I've already covered. Even this brief statement about the relationship between your own salvation and redemption through following Christ is a brief note, a cryptic signal, and altogether inadequate to explain the matter. The careful, patient and fulsome explanation has been laid out elsewhere in what I've written. You must go there to see why, along with the many places in scripture where the Lord has made the matter clear.

Nephi takes no delight in pronouncing these wo's and writing the "cursing" the latter-day gentiles face. The Lord takes even less. He suffered and died to make salvation possible for these very same latter-day gentiles. He would save them all. But to do so it is absolutely necessary to bluntly warn those whom He loves. Enos recorded his own ministry and how it was affected by the audience he addressed:

And there was nothing save it was exceeding harshness, preaching and prophesying of wars, and contentions, and destructions, and continually reminding them of death, and the duration of eternity, and the judgments and the power of God, and all these things—stirring them up continually to keep them in the fear of the Lord. I say there was nothing short of these things, and exceedingly great plainness of speech, would keep them from going down speedily to destruction. And after this manner do I write concerning them. (Enos 1:23)

Why would a joyful Lord, who delights in our own happiness, speak in terms of “wo’s” and “cursing” to us? What is it about us as His audience that compels Him to rebuke us? Have you thought of the standard in Section 121 (“reproving betimes with sharpness when moved upon by the Holy Ghost”) as part of this rebuke?

He so completely loves us that John equated Him with love (1 John 4:8). Can you imagine the frustration it causes our Lord to have to speak in these terms to us?

Why do we not repent? Why do we harbor and protect our sins? Why do we worship men rather than God? Why do we cleave to the precepts of men rather than the Holy Ghost? Why do we resist the truth when it is declared to us. Why do we demand that the truth be conformed to our understanding of the precepts of men? Why do we measure the things of God against our own traditions? Why do we not abandon instantly our false notions, and stop arguing against the truth which is in Christ? Why do we think any institution, fellowship, association or man can lead us to salvation instead of Christ alone who can save? (2 Ne. 31:19).

How long will you harden your heart against your Lord, whose pleas are aimed only at saving your soul? Why turn away and say that you prefer membership in a great and spacious building, pointing an accusing finger at those who would lead you to eternal life? (1 Ne. 8:26–31). Your awards and honors are nothing. Your recognition and praise is corrosion. Everything here is doomed to decay, rot and fail (Matt. 6:19–20). This is the Telestial Kingdom. Everything here, every institution, organization and order is Telestial. None of it will survive death (D&C 132:7). Even the one association intended to endure (the family) will not endure unless it is through the Holy Spirit of Promise.

If you are going to be rescued from this Telestial Kingdom, it will be Christ who rescues you. His arm has been stretched out to you as long as you have been here, and it will remain stretched out until you depart here. If you are not saved, it will be because of your rejection of Him, not His rejection of you. He has done all He could. He has sent stern warnings, warm invitations, cheerful messengers, the dignified and the undignified, to show in all things He is willing to meet you more than half way. Those who reject these widely different invitations are accountable for their failure (Matt. 11:7–24).

The Lord continually asks: “What more could I have done?” (Jacob 5:41, 47, 49, 75; 2 Ne. 15:4).

Apparently we will only accept the “precepts of men” and trust the “arm of flesh” and therefore merit the coming disappointments.

Come unto Christ and be saved.

CHAPTER 2
2 Nephi 29

AUGUST 9, 2010

2 Nephi 29:1–2

The quote of the Lord continues into 2 Nephi 29:1–2:

But behold, there shall be many—at that day when I shall proceed to do a marvelous work among them, that I may remember my covenants which I have made unto the children of men, that I may set my hand again the second time to recover my people, which are of the house of Israel; And also, that I may remember the promises which I have made unto thee, Nephi, and also unto thy father, that I would remember your seed; and that the words of your seed should proceed forth out of my mouth unto your seed; and my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel;

The thought, “there shall be many” will be concluded in verse 3, and will be discussed there.

The day of the Lord’s “marvelous work” will be when He “remembers [His] covenants” made previously to “the children of men.” Those covenants to “the children of men” are all inclusive. This will include promises made to all mankind, without regard to their status as Israel, gentile, heathen, or even if they are living or dead as the work begins. It is the Lord's covenants made in the pre-earth councils, and is for all mankind.

As fulfillment of these complete covenants, the Lord will "set [His] hand again the second time to recover my people." Now the focus moves from "the children of men" to a sub-set of those He calls "my people." His people are, by definition, necessarily affiliated with "the house of Israel" through covenant. These would include those called the "remnant" as well as those believing "gentiles" who accept the covenant and return through repentance to Christ.

Why do we see layers of covenants or promises referred to here? Why the covenants made "unto the children of men?" Why then further "the house of Israel?" Why further "promises made unto Nephi?" Why still further "thy father" [meaning Lehi]? Why a work which will affect all these groups? And, finally, why does all of the foregoing return to "remembering Nephi's seed?" What role does Nephi's seed, or remnant fulfill in the promises made to all mankind?

Why does the Lord make a covenant with all humanity, but then reiterate the covenant with Abraham? Why do the covenants get repeated through Isaac and Jacob, the last of whom supplies the name of the covenant people "Israel?" Why, after all those covenant recipients do the covenants get renewed with Lehi? Why immediately following Nephi do the covenants get renewed yet again in Nephi? Why does the Lord engage in this covenant making process to tie together the events of history and the lives of men? Can He still do this today? Does He still expect or want to enter into covenants with men today to further His purposes? Do those covenants necessarily get confined to an institution or priestly process rather than through Him, directly? Why not?

When we get to Nephi's descendants, why are they the ones who are to provide "a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel?" What does this say about the significance of the Book of Mormon? Why is it the "standard unto the Lord's people?" What does that do to clarify the condemnation resting upon the church under D&C 84:57? How important is "the standard" established by the Lord? Why would Joseph Smith say the "fullness of the gospel" is contained in the Book of Mormon?

Why does the title page of the Book of Mormon, which was part of the translated record, contain this description:

Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever— And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations.

What does it mean that these words shall "hiss forth to the ends of the earth?"

Did you notice the Lord taking personal credit for the words of the Book of Mormon? What does the phrase "the words of your seed should proceed forth out of my mouth unto your seed; and my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth?" How does the Lord taking personal credit for these words affect the Book of Mormon's significance?

AUGUST 10, 2010

2 Nephi 29:3

"And because my words shall hiss forth—many of the Gentiles shall say: A Bible! A Bible! We have got a Bible, and there cannot be any more Bible."

This is one of the great missionary scriptures. It is used to show the Book of Mormon already anticipated an argument against it, and as a result shows there is no reason to reject the Book of Mormon because there is already an existing, recognized volume of scripture.

The gentiles are prone to prefer the Bible to the Book of Mormon. We emphasized the Book of Mormon for a few years, but found that other faiths were critical because we were not using the Bible as we should. So there has been a conscious effort to re-emphasize the Bible and de-emphasize the Book of Mormon. This has been done to broaden our appeal to members of other faiths.

The gravamen of the argument is in the words: “there cannot be any more Bible.” The idea there are other words of God, requiring equal respect to the words in the Bible, is a shocking heresy for many of the gentiles. Remember that first phrase in the first verse: “Behold there shall be many” who are going to say this. The “many” are the gentiles, and their criticism will be Bible-based.

So, how are we doing with this idea? Do we prefer the Biblical teachings to those of the Book of Mormon? Do we spend more time with the Bible than the Book of Mormon in our own individual study? If we had to choose one as the “standard for our people” which one would we choose? The Book of Mormon (as verse 2 suggests) or the Bible (as verse 3 suggests)? The Lord’s standard is the Book of Mormon. The gentile standard will be the Bible. Once again we are at odds with Historic Christianity.

This is not to say we disrespect the Bible. We don’t. We accept it as scripture. It is an admittedly valuable standard work, to be used in study and receiving knowledge of the things of God. Indeed, among other things the Book of Mormon testifies of the truth of the Bible. Therefore the Bible is certainly accepted as a work of importance and value to us in matters of faith. But only one can assume primacy. The primary one for us is the Book of Mormon.

We may be justified in our attachment to and affection for the Bible. But the Book of Mormon must be preeminent. Our respect and affection for the Doctrine and Covenants, Temple and church organization is also well placed and should inform our understanding and behavior. But the Book of Mormon was intended to be the primary means for the Lord to impart understanding to us.

Much has been written and said about this volume of scripture, but we are only now beginning to understand what we are looking at.

In Eighteen Verses I have shown how little we have done so far with this book of scripture. I have never attempted to be exhaustive in any discussion about the book. In a decade of teaching weekly about the book, where I only went from 1 Nephi 1:1 to Jarom 1:4, the discussion was not exhaustive.

This book was a gift to us. We ought not think the Bible has more to offer than what we find in “the most correct book” because a “man can get closer to God by abiding the precepts [of the Book of Mormon] than any other book,” just as Joseph Smith said.

The primary text of scripture I have used in The Second Comforter, Nephi’s Isaiah and Eighteen Verses has been the Book of Mormon. The primary text used in this blog is the Book of Mormon.

Until we understand that book, I fail to see why we think we should have more. There is more in that book than we’ve noticed. The first step ought be to notice what we have. Then things will be added. However, until we have taken the Book of Mormon seriously, I fail to see why the most important message for us—found within that book—should not be the first thing to be understood.

AUGUST 10, 2010

2 Nephi 29:4–5

But thus saith the Lord God: O fools, they shall have a Bible; and it shall proceed forth from the Jews, mine ancient covenant people. And what thank they the Jews for the Bible which they receive from them? Yea, what do the Gentiles mean? Do they remember the travails, and the labors, and the pains of the Jews, and their diligence unto me, in bringing forth salvation unto the Gentiles? O ye Gentiles, have ye remembered the Jews, mine ancient covenant people? Nay; but ye have cursed them, and have hated them, and have not sought to recover them. But behold, I will return all these things upon your own heads; for I the Lord have not forgotten my people.

If you wonder at the Lord's patience and willingness to forgive you have an answer here. The Lord's respect for and defense of the "Jews" as His "ancient covenant people" is unmitigated by any criticism of them. Instead He points to their "travails, and the labors, and the pains of the Jews" experienced in bringing forth this Biblical record.

The Jews deserve our thanks, our gratitude and our respect for this great work of preserving the record.

Twice the Lord calls the Jews His "ancient covenant people." The Bible is a record of rebellion, persecution of the righteous, and slaying of prophets. It is a record of a fallen people who were often in apostasy, resisting true prophets calling for repentance, and suffering the judgment and condemnation of God. When the New Testament record (also a product of Jewish writers—even in the case of Luke who, though born to gentile parents, was converted to Judaism) came into existence it was the Jews who resisted and persecuted the Lord. Yet He still calls them His “ancient covenant people.” He insists we have been ungrateful to the Jews for their work on the Bible.

This is the Lord speaking in the first person. Nephi is quoting Him. These are the same people Lehi taught would be the only ones “who would crucify their God.” (2 Nephi 10:3). Yet despite that, Christ refers to them as His “ancient covenant people” to whom we owe a debt of gratitude! How merciful is our Lord?

Now, those who produced the Bible text are not merely the believers, true prophets, and victims of Jewish hostility and persecution. The text may have originated with the prophets, but it passed quickly into the hands of the priests and Levites, scholars and Rabbis. These others may not have had the same divine inspiration and association with angels, but they nevertheless attended with strict discipline to preserving the record of the prophets. Even those who directly challenged the Lord included the scribes who worked to preserve the records of the prophets. These “labors” and “pains” and “diligence” have produced gratitude from the Lord!

If He is willing to thank them, how generous is our Lord in His thanks to mankind! How ungrateful are we?

We tend to see those with whom we differ as enemies. But the Lord does not want us to approach religious disagreement in this way. Instead he would have us “recover” them. He says: “ye have cursed them, and have hated them, and have not sought to recover them.” As Joseph Smith’s History recounts, his persecutors ought “to have treated me kindly, and if they supposed me to be deluded to have endeavored in a proper and affectionate manner to have reclaimed me” (JS-H 1:28). That is the only way to obtain agreement—persuasion, gentleness, meekness and love unfeigned (D&C 121:41–42). Instead of “holding a court” against someone, we ought to preach the Gospel to them and teach them the truth with love and meekness. It is clear the Lord is showing by example how our attitudes ought to be displayed with those who persecute and reject us. But, then again, He taught the same thing in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5, 6, 7) and in how He lived (John 8:10–11) and died (Luke 23:34). Oddly we would convict and excommunicate the adulterer, but our Lord would not. Nor does He who holds the greatest claim to condemn the Jews condemn them. Instead He says we ought to have gratitude for their pains, labors and diligence.

What does our ingratitude merit us? It merits us judgment. For the same judgment we apply to them will in turn be applied to us. We will see it used as the basis for His rejection of us: “I will return all these things upon your own heads; for I the Lord have not forgotten my people.”

Being a religious people is fine; but being a self-righteous people has always been perilous. It is no different today. We should use the scriptures to inform our inner life. It is meant for internal use only. External application is likely to cause burning.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · AUGUST 11, 2010 AT 12:44 PM

I believe Christ would have probably excommunicated that woman taken in Adultery, but he probably left it up to the local leaders of the time. We don't have the whole story.

The fact that he forgave her does not mean she had repented, which doesn't happen just because you're caught in the sin. His forgiveness does not mean he can or would withhold needed consequences to help her truly repent & realize the seriousness of her sin so she won't repeat it, like most in her situation do.

Discipline is actually the loving thing to do for the sinner, no matter how much you forgive them. Consequences help the sinner to seek greater spirituality by having to earn blessings & membership back.

Serious sins like Adultery, Abuse & Abandonment are almost impossible to repent from without the help of serious discipline, like excommunication, like Pres. Hinckley said was usually the penalty.

Adultery is such a destructive & vile abuse against the spouse that those who commit such are almost, if not completely past feeling. Usually only the greatest consequences like excommunication will cause that person to repent from such deep rooted devilish desires & actions.

It is also loving to the 'victim' to discipline the sinner/abuser/adulterer/abandoner so the victim is protected & given justice for their loss & pain. Complete restitution & then some, must be required from the sinner to the amount possible or else it's just further abuse on the victim.

If Christ had let the adulteress just walk away & no discipline applied, how would the woman's husband ever feel justice was done for him or he be assured she will repent & recompense him for his pain & loss from her unfaithfulness to him?

Anonymous · AUGUST 11, 2010 AT 1:05 PM

Continued....

This is Christ's Church & despite the fact that Christ continually forgives us, even in the moment of our sins, he still asks his representatives (as Pres. Hinckley said) to usually excommunicate for all forms of abuse, adultery & abandonment (divorce). For that's usually vital to help the sinner repent fully. Light punishment or none at all, is usually an UNloving thing for serious sin, for it is usually extremely hard to repent from such sins without firm consequences like excommunication or else it usually just causes the sinner to repeat the sin & get worse & brings greater abuse on the victims.

What spouse is going to return & repent to their good spouse if not given severe consequences for divorcing them? Or especially if they are allowed to just remarry in the temple to someone else? This only encourages more abuse & adultery & abandonment. Children watch & learn to do the same & not take marriage covenants or even the Church seriously if parents, adults & leaders don't.

The Scriptures teach that if there is no punishment for sin it's as if there is not law against it.

Abuse, Adultery & Abandonment & Addictions are rampant in probably every ward in the Church. A major cause for this is the serious lack of consequences by leaders for those who do such things. This is a huge injustice to the victims but mostly to the sinner himself. How will he ever come to repent before it's too late & he dies, unless leaders apply needed consequences & protection for the victims.

Leaders bring heavy & dire judgments on their own heads when they do not discipline sufficiently those who commit adultery (including porn), all forms of abuse, & abandonment & divorce of a good spouse.

Many non-members I have known have lost any trust or desire to investigate our Church when they see that our Leaders don't discipline for & thus make allowance for these types of serious sins that their own Church would never allow.

A religion or Church is only as good & safe as how it protects, especially women & children (& men too who need it) from abuse, adultery & abandonment(divorce) & how much is applied needed firm consequences for sin.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 11, 2010 AT 7:15 PM

There was a time when I would have agreed with that view. In the early church of this dispensation, the purpose of a church court was to obtain a confession. If someone confessed during the court, or immediately before, they would be forgiven and the court would end. If someone got excommunicated because of a sin, and they confessed the next day, they would be reinstated the next day. Once the confession was made, forgiveness was more or less immediate. Take a look at that early history. It is interesting.

For those who are excommunicated, we rarely see them again. The numbers are overwhelming against their return. So essentially an excommunication means the end of that person, oftentimes also his/her immediate family, and the descendants of those.

Sin is wrong, and needs to result in repentance and change. But for the most part that is between the person and the Lord. When it involves others, it also includes them, too. But we sometimes cause a great deal of unintended consequences to even the unborn when we excommunicate.

AUGUST 11, 2010

2 Nephi 29:6–7

Thou fool, that shall say: A Bible, we have got a Bible, and we need no more Bible. Have ye obtained a Bible save it were by the Jews? Know ye not that there are more nations than one? Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word unto the children of men, yea, even upon all the nations of the earth?

This is a continuing statement made to Nephi by the Lord. Besides the sermons delivered in the New Testament and Third Nephi, this is one of the most extensive revelations to be found given by Christ. Given its length, and the fact it is a quote from the Lord, we are compelled to take note. The Lord is doing all He can to draw our attention to the fact that the Book of Mormon MUST be valued above the Bible. It MUST take its place in latter-day study of God's acts among men.

To say you have enough information from God is foolish. God “created all men,” and as a result He “remembers all men.” He will “bring forth [His] word unto the children of men” in whatever place, time and circumstance as He decides. He cannot be circumscribed by our preferences or false understanding. He can and does exercise the prerogative to speak to whomever He decides.

When the Book of Mormon came forth, all people were startled at the idea God had more to say. They thought it an odd thing for anyone to claim there was yet more scripture. Joseph was persecuted and hated for announcing he had a new volume of scripture.

Now, some 180 years later we think the Lord is bound to talk to a specific person, in a specific way, and that anyone else or anywhere else is beyond the Lord's capacity to accomplish. In our own way, we are also bound to a tradition which excludes the Lord's prerogatives; we just redefine the box we confine the Lord.

He "brings forth His word" without regard to our views, and to "all the nations of the earth." Now "nations" is not the same thing as we regard it today. The "nations" at the time of the Book of Mormon were something we would call "people" or "ethnicity" like the Israelites.

The definition of an "isle of the sea" includes everything that is not part of the great Euro-Asian-African land mass. Although we regard North America as a continent, in the Book of Mormon vernacular it is an "isle of the sea." (2 Ne. 10:20). Further, most of Israel was relocated onto the isles of the sea (1 Ne. 22:4). So when the Lord affirms He speaks to those on the "isles of the sea" He is confirming that there are multiple locations, involving multiple parties, each one of which has received sacred communication from Him. There are, in short, still a great deal of His words which have not as yet come to our attention. They are coming. When they do, we are warned to take care in what we choose to reject.

When I was first investigating the church, this argument was presented to me by the missionaries in one of the first discussions. I have to admit the proposition made such sense to me that I found it completely persuasive. The idea that God would not be in communication with the vast majority of mankind living separate from Palestine during the Lord's life seemed to be a sort of abandonment by the Lord. If He is the God of all mankind, then ought He not speak to all mankind?

The "wise men from the east" were not locals to Palestine. Yet they remained both connected to, and watching for signs involving the birth of the Lord. If them, why not others? The Book of Mormon answers this query. This idea was too persuasive for me to find doubt.

If God does remember all mankind, and speaks to the various nations over time, then the failure to keep the information intact is also explained. The Book of Mormon shows what and how a society's faith fails and is lost. It explains how very careless mankind is with knowledge given by God.

Riddles of history are better answered both directly and indirectly in the Book of Mormon than any other text, including the Bible.

AUGUST 11, 2010

2 Nephi 29:8

Wherefore murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together the testimony of the two nations shall run together also.

Why would anyone complain or murmur because God has spoken? We do. Somehow we get offended at the very idea God can or has spoken further. It is disturbing. It requires us to learn more, and may require us to change. It is inconvenient. It is troubling.

But new information from God should always be welcomed. It should be exciting and delightful, even if it requires us to change.

Not only does the Lord remember all nations, but He “speaks the same words unto one nation like unto another.” Meaning two things: First, the records are going to agree on doctrine, ordinances and practice. There will not be some shocking departure from what we have already learned. But, second, we may find that other records have done a better job of preserving deeper insight into the history or truths than have we.

At one time the record written by Moses contained what is now in the Pearl of Great Price. At one time the record written by Abraham also found in the Pearl of Great Price was among the Biblical record. However, they were lost until they were restored through Joseph Smith. At one time the Biblical record contained the prophecies of Zenos and Zenock, only a small portion of which are still available through the Book of Mormon.

Although the records will agree, that does not mean there will not be significant additions to our understanding as a result of these becoming available. Even the record of the Nephites is sealed, and that of the Jaredites only partially translated (Ether 1:4–5). Joseph and Sidney were forbidden to give the full account of the vision of the afterlife (D&C 76:114–115). So you must not presume that “the same words” will be identical to the teachings preserved in our records. They may include much more.

It is also interesting how the Book of Mormon contains so much more information upon close inspection that it appears to have in a quick read. It is a measure of how seriously we take the Lord’s words as to how carefully we search the text.

As I’ve pointed out, most of the Book of Mormon scholarship is devoted to the question of the book’s authenticity. Word studies, Jewish idioms, internal consistencies, author variances and other examinations of the book have dominated the Book of Mormon library we have produced. I have proceeded from the premise that the book is authentic, that it is what it claims to be, and worthy of respect. Then, based on that premise, I've asked what the book teaches. The result has been more than edifying, it has been at times shocking. I've found that most of the deepest doctrines taught by Joseph Smith can be found in the Book of Mormon. When his revelations reach the greatest heights, the Book of Mormon equals what is revealed.

We tend to view the Book of Mormon as a “basic” version of doctrine, because we all know there are sealed portions yet to be revealed. However, I think that attitude is wrong. Everything in the sealed portion is already in the book we have in front of us. But to find it we must look more carefully at the text than we generally do.

I keep hoping that by showing respect to the text we can accomplish two things: First, please the Lord and remove our condemnation from neglecting this valuable ancient record. Second, increase our respect for the value of doctrine. Without the unique doctrines restored through the Book of Mormon, we may as well be Presbyterian or Methodist.

These verses promise us that the testimonies of differing nations will agree. They will all testify both of Jesus Christ as Redeemer and Savior, and provide the means by which we can come to Him and be saved.

The numerous examples of the Book of Mormon all converge on knowing Christ. Indeed, the text has more examples of Christ ministering through the veil to mortal men than any other record, including His Judean ministry. It is a veritable treasure of Second Comforter experiences. If you want to know Christ, the Book of Mormon is your best guide.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · AUGUST 11, 2010 AT 9:57 PM

As an aside, can you please post a recommended order in which to read your books? I haven't been able to find this information anywhere, but I suspect that there is a sequence that makes the most sense.

I've read The Second Comforter, but am not sure where to go from there.

Thank you.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 12, 2010 AT 7:29 AM

Nephi's Isaiah.

Eighteen Verses.

Ten Parables.

Beloved Enos.

Come, Let Us Adore Him.

AUGUST 12, 2010

2 Nephi 29:9

And I do this that I may prove unto many that I am the same yesterday, today, and forever; and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure. And because that I have spoken one word ye need not suppose that I cannot speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time henceforth and forever.

The assurance to us by the Lord that He is the “same yesterday, today and forever” appears often in scripture (See, e.g., four times by Nephi including 1 Ne. 10:18; 2 Ne. 2:4; 2 Ne. 27:23, and above; Alma 31:17; Mormon 9:9; Moroni 10:19; D&C 20:12; and D&C 35:1, among other places). Why do you suppose the Lord wants us to trust in this idea? What is it about the Lord's "sameness" that is important for us to understand?

Are the Lord's expectations different from one generation to the next? Are His teachings? Are His ordinances? Can we discard what He has given us and be justified? If His expectations are as unchanged as He is, then how important is it for us to study and retain all that He has given by revelation to mankind? How important is it to keep ordinances entirely intact?

If the Lord does not change, and the story of the Nephite people is a story of temporary success followed by ultimate failure, then how relevant is that account for us? Does temporary success in repentance guarantee constant favor from the Lord? When the Book of Mormon follows splinter groups in the narrative, because the splinters kept the commandments of God better, does that preserve a relevant lesson for those reading the book today? If so, how?

If the Lord "speaks forth [His] own words according to [His] own pleasure" then how can we control to whom and when He is permitted to speak? If He reserves to Himself this right, what effect does our system of recognizing an authoritative message from Him have upon His right to speak? Did the revelation given to Oliver Cowdrey that told him that he could not write commandments, but only according to wisdom, and never command Joseph Smith who presided over Oliver, establish a binding precedent on the Lord? (D&C 28:4–6). If so, what limit does that place on the Lord? Does the limitation on someone being sent forth as a missionary to preach the Gospel, and the requirement they be "regularly ordained by the heads of the church" limit the Lord's ability to speak His own words? (D&C 42:11). If so, in what way?

Does the revelation to Joseph Smith informing the Church in 1831 that no one other than Joseph Smith is to receive commandments and revelations for the Church limit the Lord's ability to speak to anyone else? (D&C 43:1–6). In particular, what of the Lord's counsel that this limitation was intended as “a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; And this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me.” (Id. verses 5–6). Does that prevent Him from speaking “according to His own pleasure?”

What about the 1830 revelation given to Joseph Smith that no one other than Joseph Smith is to receive revelations and commandments in the church? (D&C 28:2). Does that limit the Lord's ability to speak according to His own pleasure?

Do the promises given to Joseph Smith apply directly and continually as the binding precedent and complete limitation on the Lord's capacity to speak to us? If so, then can He still speak to individual members of the church but without providing a “revelation and commandment” to the entire church? For example, do we expect only President Monson to receive revelation on the individual members of your own family? How is President Monson supposed to be doing that for the families of some 13 million church members? If that isn't possible, then what about the approximate 2,000 stakes? Do we expect only President Monson to receive revelation about each of these divisions? If the stake presidents have been delegated responsibility, then can the stake president receive all revelation for each family within the stake? Can the stake president alone receive revelation for the families of his stake?

If each person is intended to receive some revelation for themselves, is that an absolute bar to receiving revelation for another? If, for example, someone were not in your ward, not in your stake, not even living in your state, but asked you to give them a blessing because of illness or injury, are you entitled to receive revelation while giving the blessing? Even if you have no connection to this person by family or church calling? Should you proceed with the blessing? If so, would you expect the Lord to assist, give revelation, and even inspire a commandment to the person if it were appropriate?

How hard and fast are the rules we impose on the Lord? Does His statement that He alone will decide when and to whom He speaks according to “His own pleasure” need to be weighed as part of the equation? If He cannot speak to anyone other than Joseph Smith, then did Joseph’s death prevent Him from speaking further? If He cannot speak to anyone other than Joseph’s successors in the office of President of the High Priesthood, then what if the occupant of that office is ill, infirm, or disabled?

Would the “system” govern, or the Lord’s “own pleasure” govern? If it is “His own pleasure” then how can we possibly know when He speaks? What about the Lord’s house being a house of order? Once He has a church established, should we trust He will confine His efforts to that church alone?

I suppose all these questions are answered by the Lord adding to “His own pleasure” that “because that I have spoken one word ye need not suppose that I cannot speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time henceforth and forever.”

In the final analysis, it is left to us to fast, pray, seek the guidance of the Spirit, and to find where the Lord’s own pleasure in speaking is to be found. I do not expect someone other than the presiding authorities to conduct the affairs of the church. Nor would I expect anyone would organize a ward or stake other than someone having authority over that responsibility, regularly recognized by the church. I would not expect to either pay tithing to, nor be asked to pay tithing to, someone other than a Bishop in the church. But, just as Elder F. Enzo Busche encountered gifted sisters with the gift of prophecy and visions, I do not believe revelation is or can be confined to any single office, person, or group (See F. Enzo Busche's book, Yearning for the Living God). While serving in various church leadership positions, including as a General Authority, he encountered gifted women with spiritual capacities who astonished him. But, to his credit, he did not doubt them.

God speaks according to His own pleasure. He cautions you that just because He says one thing at one time, He is never limited in what He may say at another time; even if you think it contradicts His earlier statements. He is living and He has the final decision in what He says and to whom He speaks. We must not forget that principle. Even though we may not like the uncertainty this introduces to our trusted systems. He alone will remain in control.

AUGUST 12, 2010

2 Nephi 29:10–11

Wherefore, because that ye have a Bible ye need not suppose that it contains all my words; neither need ye suppose that I have not caused more to be written. For I command all men, both in the east and in the west, and in the north, and in the south, and in the islands of the sea, that they shall write the words which I speak unto them; for out of the books which shall be written I will judge the world, every man according to their works, according to that which is written.

Within the Book of Mormon, as a new volume of scripture, is the caution that even it is incomplete. What a marvel that is if you think about it. Here's a new revelation telling us that there are other revelations that aren't included in either the Book of Mormon or the Bible.

Everyone nation, from time to time, received sacred messages from the Lord! No matter where they are—east, west, north or south, He's been in touch. They have written it down. The records are sacred, and He watches over them. They will be revealed. And, the good/bad news is that from their content we will be judged.

We are judged “according to our works,” but measured against “that which is written.” Think about that for a moment.

What if they haven't come to light yet? Are they still written? Are they still going to be used to measure us? If we haven't seen these words, why would it be appropriate for them to be used as a measuring stick for our conduct? Was the Book of Mormon's standards binding upon us even before the record came forth?

Why does He assure us He is unchangeable? Why does He assure us He is the same yesterday, today and forever? Is the standard going to change from ancient record to ancient record? If it does not change, then are we accountable for the same standard of conduct no matter when or where we live? How can we be held to account for things that are yet to be revealed?

If we cannot be judged against something we do not know (Mosiah 3:11), how can these words set a standard for judging even before they are published?

I want to propose a concept that appeals to my mind. When we are trying to “prove” a proposition, it is possible to set up an experiment where we control all variables but one, then see what that one variable does. How it acts, or reacts. Life here is like that, I think. A fallen Telestial Kingdom, “or the world in which you presently reside” — to quote an authoritative source — is the same place for Able and Cain, Enoch and Noah, Abraham and Nimrod, Moses and Pharoah, Jesus and Ciaphus, Jacob and Sherem, Alma and Nehor, Joseph Smith and Thomas Sharp. Same place with all of these contemporaries. But with the exception of Enoch and Noah, (who took different routes, but nonetheless were both favored by God) all the other pairs had dramatically different outcomes? Why?

This world is a fallen, but controlled environment. We get introduced here with free will and the capacity to change. Inside that environment of a fallen world, there have been people who have come and lived with all the same limitations that we have, but who have grown to know God. Their lives are proof that it can happen. Their testimonies and records of success are part of the “proof” of God’s fairness and of mankind’s freedom to return to Him.

If the Bible and the Book of Mormon both attest to the fact that it is possible for mankind to overcome by faith and return to God’s presence, then we have the proof needed to see how this life should be lived. We have the evidence of God’s willingness to receive us, and of our own capacity to overcome and return to Him.

Testimony after testimony, experience after experience are recounted in the Book of Mormon. We have enough “proof” that this process is available and works. If we were to have more, in a different record, reaffirming the same thing involving other people, would it add any different proof than is already in our possession? If not, then can we be judged by the same standard without having the specific life stories before us to illustrate in another hundred ways how men have triumphed and men have failed?

Is it possible there are others, some of whom are still living, who may also have recorded unspeakable things? Do their words count? Are they binding upon us for no other reason than to prove that in this contemporary world of sin it remains still possible to return to God's presence?

What interesting things the Book of Mormon raises for our pondering and edification. It is a revolutionary book, in the sense it revolutionizes our understanding of how God deals with mankind.

AUGUST 13, 2010

2 Nephi 29:12

For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the Nephites and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth and they shall write it.

This is more than interesting. The Lord speaks, various people write what He speaks to them. These groups include:

Jews — we get that and it's the Bible, right?

Nephites — we get that too, the Book of Mormon, right?

Other tribes — how many? Who? When? Where? What?

All the nations of the earth — Now it's just too broad. What does "all the nations" mean, exactly?

So, let's take this a bit by bit, going through each one:

1. Jews: We have a Bible. But we DON'T have all the writings of the Jews, do we? We already referred to missing prophets Zenos and Zenok, and there are others. Look in your Bible Dictionary for "Missing Scripture" and you'll tree a list. (I'm pulling your leg. If you look that up it'll refer you to "Lost Books" so go there.)

[That reminds me of a joke I tell: If I get a tattoo it'll say "Leviticus 19:28." But you probably won't think that's funny.]

Anyway, the Jews recorded more both in the Old Testament and in the New Testament than we have currently. So don't get all certain the Bible is the final word from the ancient Jews. It isn't. Never was. There's more coming.

2. Nephites: Clearly more coming. Sealed material has not been revealed, and will be some day. Providing, of course, we were to actually merit the disclosure. So, I suppose that means don't hold your breath.
3. Other Tribes: We got nothing. Not even a number. The one chance we had to get a number was blown by both the disciples in Jerusalem and the Nephites. I've written about this in The Second Comforter. So the only way to triangulate is to either take the allegory of the Olive Tree in Jacob 5 and try to estimate—a risky proposition since it was intended to convey an overall meaning not a number—or we can work backwards from the crucifixion to the approximate 11 1/2 months later when Jesus appeared to the Nephites. Take the time spent with the Nephites, then estimate He's been busy doing that same ministry elsewhere. Divide the time taken to minister into the available time and you get something between 10 and 18 other potential groups out there depending on your estimate of the time used. The record attempts to prevent us from being too accurate because it identifies three days specifically, then resorts to just “many times” to cover what may have been days or weeks (3 Nephi 26:13). However, when you read of the Nephite disciples “journeying and preaching” but coming together in “mighty prayer and fasting” and the Lord's appearance again there, it seems closer to the 10 number than the 18 (3 Nephi 27:1). Well, you work it out. It's just an unknown plural number which might be greater than just a couple. And for these we have no record at all.

4. All nations: Nothing here, either. And no basis from which to compile an estimate.

So, from the foregoing we can see that we have some tiny fragment of the whole, and cannot even begin to construct an outline of what we are missing. But despite our ignorance, the Lord spoke to them, they wrote it, and it is available for some group to eventually read. Apparently not us. We do not even get the rest of the record written on parchment and hidden by John, (referred to in the headnote to Section 7 of the D&C). We only get a part of the information from it (D&C 7:1–8).

So, there's a lot to be had. We don't have it...But what we do have we won't study. Well, maybe there is a cause and effect...

Seems to me, you don't want to talk about it. Seems to me, you just turn your pretty head and walk away. (Joe Walsh, from the James Gang era, before the heaviest toll was taken.)

So the Lord wants us to know there's ever so much out there. That we have a tiny fraction of what was once available. And we just don't seem to care. We'd rather reduce the volume of topics we study and eliminate the "mysteries" from our diet of Gospel study, so as to relieve ourselves of any responsibility for what we already possess. We are beyond dumbing down the Gospel. We're discarding it by the week. Tighter and tighter, until you are left alone, without God in the world. There's a brilliant phrase. It comes from the Book of Mormon. It is found at Mosiah 27:31; Alma 41:11 and Mormon 5:16. Of all the phrases turned in the Book of Mormon this is the most solitary, profound and descriptive of the fall from grace mankind experiences. It is perfect, even if what it describes is perfectly horrid.

Well, enough of this...

AUGUST 13, 2010

2 Nephi 29:13

And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews; and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel; and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews.

Well, happily the Jews “shall” get the Nephite words. Some day. Currently for the most part they don’t want them. And, even if they did, the “words of the Nephites” will include the sealed portion, because they are certainly part of the “words” the Nephites recorded. So this will be future, even if there were Jews interested in taking the offer today.

The Nephites also “shall” have the words of the Jews. However, once again as we have seen, the words include a great volume of material spoken by Christ, recorded by the Jews, and not in anyone’s current possession. So this, too, must be in the future. For now we aren’t even sure of who these “Nephites” are.

The Nephites and the Jews “shall” get the words of the lost tribes of Israel. This is a category, not a number. Remember that. So once again, future event. Don’t know when. Don’t know how many records. Don’t even know how many groups will be included.

But all these records are inevitably to come forth. Just not yet. Why?

Read Mormon’s explanation:

But behold the plates of Nephi do contain the more part of the things which he taught the people. And these things have I written, which are a lesser part of the things which he taught the people; and I have written them to the intent that they may be brought again unto this people, from the Gentiles, according to the words which Jesus hath spoken. And when they shall have received this, which is expedient that they should have first, to try their faith, and if it shall so be that they shall believe these things then shall the greater things be made manifest unto them. And if it so be that they will not believe these things, then shall the greater things be withheld from them, unto their condemnation. Behold, I was about to write them, all which were engraven upon the plates of Nephi, but the Lord forbade it, saying: I will try the faith of my people. Therefore I, Mormon, do write the things which have been commanded me of the Lord. And now I, Mormon, make an end of my sayings, and proceed to write the things which have been commanded me. (3 Nephi 26:7–12)

What if I do believe these things? What if I will accept the things which He offers? What if my faith has been tried and I am found to be deserving of more information? Can a person come out from under the condemnation referred to above, even if the rest of mankind fails to acquit themselves? Alma comes with the reply: “Yes.” (Alma 12:9–11). So, as it turns out, ignorance is voluntary.

Well, shut my mouth! (That’s a pun, you see.)

[Can you do puns in a religious blog? Or will the long faced and dour be offended? Well, they don’t get it anyway. Hey! Why are you reading this if it offends you? Stop it!]

What do you suppose it would take for the Lord to respond to us removing the condemnation that we labor under? How should we go about trying to make that happen? I don’t see it happening, do you? I’m sort of persuaded by Nephi’s pessimism of the gentiles of our day. Even this mild blog discussion I am attempting has provoked ire in many readers. How we fix our collective disinterest seems a monumental enterprise beyond human ability. I fear it would take some great calamity to unfold before we would change. Then again, I think the Lord has already told us that (D&C 1:17; 45:50).

AUGUST 14, 2010

2 Nephi 29:14

And it shall come to pass that my people, which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word also shall be gathered in one. And I will show unto them that fight against my word and against my people, who are of the house of Israel, that I am God, and that I covenanted with Abraham that I would remember his seed forever.

Now we have an estimate of the time when a general disclosure of the records of these various nations will occur. It's set in the time when the people who have survived the great distresses and wars of the last days will leave the New Jerusalem and return to their lands of possessions. That is, post-New Jerusalem, post-destruction of the wicked, and after the time when the Lord has come among them. When they are sent into their respective lands of possessions, then at last the entire record of the Lord's dealings with each nation will be "gathered in one."

So this won't be anytime soon. Well, if soon, it will be after some more dramatic events, which will take our minds off the issue of missing scripture.

What is interesting is the Lord's emphasis on those who "fight against my word." He puts this first. The fight, as He puts it, is against both "my word and my people," but it is the fight against His "word" that He lists first. This is important.

You will recall there were two different reactions to the two parts of Lehi's message. When it was repentance from their wickedness, the Jews mocked him. But when it was a message of the coming Christ, they wanted to kill him (1 Ne. 1:18–19). This is the war against His "word" in a nutshell. The message of hope and redemption found in Christ is what the enemies of God always seek to suppress.

First, distort, suppress and exclude His word. Then it follows that He has no people, because they cannot find their way back to Him.

Remember this is the great fight. It is relentlessly underway. So soon as His word becomes available, there will be forces, enemies, alliances, even good-intentions used to suppress, discard and alter His words. This is the great work of the adversary. This is the fight that gets waged first.

When the victory is won against His word, then the victory against the people is over. There cannot be any "people" belonging to Him if they do not possess His words in clarity, fullness, and with power.

What significance is there then in changing His words? Discarding His revelations? Suppressing His ordinances? Altering what He has revealed? Designating some of His word as "mysteries" that ought to be feared or avoided? Why would Joseph Smith advise us to search deeper and deeper into the mysteries of God? Why would we be told to avoid them today? What has happened in the fight against the Lord's word among us?

The purpose of His word is to establish His people. When people have His word, and obtain the light and truth that flows from it, then they are inevitably turned in their hearts to the fathers. Primarily among those fathers is the one mentioned here:

Abraham. For in Abraham we see a return to the original order which preceded the flood. He inherited what “came down from the beginning” and restored the original ancient order (Abraham 1:2–3). When the “word” and “people” are again here, they are directly linked to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and are heirs to the covenant and priesthood they held. It is a return. It is a resurrection of an ancient order, where men know God and are His friends and companions while living here in this fallen world.

The results of having the Lord’s “word” is to then create a “people” who in turn are linked to “Abraham.” These things all follow in turn. The fight against it is begun at the “word” to prevent the others who follow. If you can choke people off and get them to refuse His “words” then you can prevent them from ever becoming His “people” and realizing the association which brings their hearts to the fathers.

It is a consistent plan and a predictable fight. How’s it going in our time? What good things have we done to preserve His word? Have we kept intact everything He handed us through Joseph? Do we possess all of the word He intended us to have, study and live? Are we thereby made into new creations, His people? Do we show the fruits of being His people? Do the visions of heaven flow over us, and angels minister to us? Do we possess knowledge of God in the sense used in the Book of Mormon? Are we in possession of all the rights and powers conferred upon Abraham?

It is an interesting interconnection the Lord refers to here. Worth reflection at a minimum. Fasting, prayer and seeking as well, perhaps.

CHAPTER 3
2 Nephi 30

AUGUST 15, 2010

2 Nephi 30:1

And now behold, my beloved brethren, I would speak unto you; for I, Nephi, would not suffer that ye should suppose that ye are more righteous than the Gentiles shall be. For behold, except ye shall keep the commandments of God ye shall all likewise perish; and because of the words which have been spoken ye need not suppose that the Gentiles are utterly destroyed.

This is troubling if you understand what is said here. Let's see if we can pull it apart.

Nephi adds this direct comment to his descendants, the forebears of the remnant. Although they are the target of covenants and beneficiaries of the restoration, they too need to keep to the path. Though they are “beloved brethren” to Nephi, they are not given any unconditional promises. No one is. Everything we receive is based on what we do, think and say (See both Alma 12:14 and D&C 130:20–21).

Note that this is not about the actual remnant, but about the Nephites who would be destroyed. These people would have access to Nephi's record until the time of Mormon, when they would be destroyed. You can see the time frame in the word usage, "Ye are" as to the Nephites, in contrast to "the Gentiles who shall be." This message is addressed to the Nephites in a time before the gentile.

What is particularly distressing is the comparison Nephi is making. He is saying that the Nephites, who possess the land of promise, needn't think themselves "more righteous than the Gentiles shall be" because if these Nephite descendants do "not keep the commandments of God" then they "shall all likewise perish." If the Nephites do not keep the commandments, they will, like the gentiles, perish.

This means that Nephi is confirming again his prophecy of the destruction of the gentiles. They are doomed. And the Nephites are similarly doomed unless they are obedient.

Despite this warning we know what happened to the Nephites. They were destroyed. The gentiles will be destroyed also.

In the case of the Nephites and the gentiles, "ye need not suppose that the Gentiles are utterly destroyed." That is, neither all the Nephites have been, nor all the gentiles will be "utterly destroyed."

Well, this is happy news indeed. Some tiny fragment of the gentiles will actually survive the destruction of the coming days! So we ought to rejoice! All is well with us after all! And coming from Nephi we know that we have a promise from one holding sealing authority who will, as I have previously pointed out, seal this prophecy (2 Nephi 33:13-15).

Interestingly Nephi warns his own descendants about their pride and haughtiness. He says that these Nephite descendants, heirs of the covenant, should not think of themselves as righteous. "I, Nephi, would not suffer that ye should suppose that ye are more righteous than the Gentiles shall be." Nephi's prophecy is clear to him, and clear to his descendants. They both regarded the gentiles with pessimism. They (we) are doomed. So they saw us as something dreadful to be compared to. When Nephi confirms they ought not think themselves better than us, he is giving a strong warning indeed. The odd thing is that we read these same records, this same prophecy, and we think we're better than them! We have inverted the picture! We're good, they were bad! But Nephi is using us as the dreadful comparison, the stark warning, the terrible warning that if the Nephites do not repent they will be like us and perish.

When you pick these words apart and see the message it makes you wonder how we could have come to our inverted view. Arrogance and pride really do blind us. Almost completely. What more could Nephi have said to get us to understand? (2 Nephi 32:8).

COMMENTS:

Frustrated · AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 11:59 AM

NEED HELP! When you state that some thought or teaching is found in some specific Snuffer Book, is it possible for you to give a page or at least a chapter heading, particularly if it is from Second Comforter or Nephi's Isaiah. I have found the index 'lacking' in these books. Beloved Enos and even Come Let Us Adore Him weren't so large that I couldn't transfer the whole text into an electronic program for my own use and then I can "FIND" any word or phrase and then use the 'find' in a 'work sheet' on that subject —

I become extremely frustrated, especially with the Second Comforter which has so much and I waste hours, trying to remember or find where a phrase or idea was used and explained. As often as not I give up and go with what I have been able to find elsewhere.

Would it be possible to give page numbers when you refer to any portion of Second Comforter?

Thank You

Frustrated:

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 7:54 PM

Frustrated:

Be careful about making electronic copies. There are copyright laws which prevent making copies without permission to do so.

I do not rely upon the book revenue for myself, but donate it to the Church. But there are others (i.e., publisher, printer, retailer, etc.) whose livelihood is derived from the book sales, and therefore want/need the copyright protection for their life's work.

It is both a civil wrong and a Federal crime to infringe upon a copyright, carrying stiff penalties.

There is no Kindle version available for any of these books because of the inability to protect the electronic distribution from hackers. Therefore making any electronic copy is not permitted at this point.

I offer that as a word of caution only. But I would be careful about this issue.

AUGUST 16, 2010

2 Nephi 30:2

For behold, I say unto you that as many of the Gentiles as will repent are the covenant people of the Lord; and as many of the Jews as will not repent shall be cast off; for the Lord covenanteth with none save it be with them that repent and believe in his Son, who is the Holy One of Israel.

To the extent that gentiles “will repent” they may become part of the Lord’s “covenant people.” They are not the remnant, but they may join in the covenant. If they do, then by virtue of the covenant they become “covenant people.”

What is required for the gentiles to repent?

What covenant must they enter into or receive so they may be numbered among the “covenant people?” Is membership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints the only thing needed to “repent” and become a “covenant people?” If not, then what else would be required?

To the extent that “the Jews will not repent” then they will be “cast off.” Although history has shown how the Jews have been treated (as Nephi put it), “ye have cursed them, and have hated them, and have not sought to recover them.” (2 Ne. 29:5). These difficulties suffered by the Jews are preliminary. The Lord always watched over and preserved them from complete destruction. However, when the Gospel is offered to them in the last days, in the final offering to the last (who had once been first—see 1 Ne.13:42), they will reject the offered renewal of the covenant at their peril. If they reject it, they “shall be cast off” because that will sever the covenant. “The Lord covenanteth with none save it be with them that repent and believe in his Son, who is the Holy One of Israel.”

Although we know the Lord will extend every opportunity to the descendants for the sake of a covenant with those who have become the friends of God, there are limits. God will do all He has promised to do. He will forbear, entreat, beseech, send messengers, labor alongside with His messengers, and do all He can to reclaim the heirs for the covenant’s sake. In the end, however, the heirs must either accept what He offers, or be cast off.

It is extraordinary how long the Lord will extend His hand to reclaim His people. But everyone must choose to follow Him. We have our agency. We cannot be forced to follow Him. Even though He may be longsuffering and patient, He cannot compel any to be saved (Moses 4:1–3). Unless a person is free to choose for themselves, there is no existence (D&C 93:30).

If you remove the right to choose, it is not only agency that is obliterated, but it is existence itself. Though we are utterly dependent on God for our very existence, sustained from moment to moment by Him loaning us the ability to move, breathe and act (Mosiah 2:21), because we are free to make choices we exist. If you destroy the right to choose you have ended the personality of the person. [I have explained this in the beginning of Beloved Enos.]

Well, all of this is of no import if the gentiles do not “repent.” Whenever we brush up against that subject we wind up engaged in discussions about justice, mercy, vengeance and restitution. I’ve written about this process in both The Second Comforter and Come, Let Us Adore Him. Briefly, here are some of the most important points: To be forgiven we must forgive. Not just forgive, but plead for mercy for those who have offended us. The role of accusing is left to “the accuser of the brethren” or Satan (Rev. 12:10). When we accuse others we interfere with their salvation. If we are the one who was offended, and we make no accusation against them, then we become their savior. Satan’s right to accuse is inferior to ours as victims of the offense. We suffer in the flesh the wrongs of others. If we make no claim for justice, surrender those and seek instead for mercy on behalf of others, then Satan’s accusations can have no claim upon them. We mimic Christ, follow His example, and in our own limited way also atone for the sins of others. Joseph Smith was trying to get us to understand this concept when he taught:

If you do not accuse each other, God will not accuse you. If you have no accuser you will enter heaven, and if you will follow the revelations and instructions which God gives you through me, I will take you into heaven as my back load. If you will not accuse me, I will not accuse you. If you will throw a cloak of charity over my sins, I will cover yours—for charity covereth a multitude of sins. (DHC 4:445)

I have explained this at length in what I’ve written in Come, Let Us Adore Him. Christ said this in His ministry repeatedly. He lived it. He showed by His own example the way to obtain forgiveness for every wrong you have ever done. It is in the same way He went about atoning for sins. It is by suffering offenses and returning good. It is by forgiving those who spitefully use and abuse you. It is through loving those who are your enemies. It is by becoming sons and daughters of God. And it can be done in no other way (Matt. 5:38–48). If you do not forgive others, you cannot be forgiven (Matt. 6:14–15). This is why Christ, in teaching us to pray, told us we are only forgiven as we forgive others (Matt. 6:12). It is as we forgive that we obtain forgiveness.

The way is strait and narrow, and cannot permit you to pass through while carrying any burden of accusation, desire for revenge or even just complaint about others. When you lay down what you might justly claim against others and seek nothing for their offenses, then you are able to enter in. To be blessed, we must seek peace with those who would make war against us (Matt. 5:9). When we judge all others with mercy, it is with mercy alone we will be judged (Matt. 7:2).

For the most part, the gentiles will not repent. They will hold courts, use their time judging, exact conditions, set limits, and annotate their permanent records with notes showing what discipline a person has undergone. And happily employ control, compulsion and dominion over one another (D&C 121:37) right up to the time when the trumpet sounds and it is everlastingly too late. Others will justify this failure to forgive, shout praises to the abuse, and claim all compulsion and dominion is necessary to protect us from the evil. Even though our Master told us not to resist the evil, but forgive it (Matt. 5:39).

For the most part, the gentiles will demand they be judged by a law they cannot satisfy. Some few, however, will forgive and plead for the weaknesses and failings of others. They will forgive, and thereby be forgiven. They will obtain for themselves a judgment based only on mercy, for they have shown mercy to others. This atoning act of love and intercession will be the hallmark by which the children of God are identified in the Day of Judgment (Matt. 5:9). Only the peacemakers can be trusted to live in peace with one another. All others are unfit for the presence of God.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 12:05 PM

Does this apply to only the victims? Parents, for example, whose children have been victims of child rape or abuse at the hands of a spouse... do they have any kind of accusatory role? Or are they just pissed off for nothing? If they cannot really “forgive” except in a general way, like people who say over the pulpit “I love you all” are they still held accountable?

I almost feel like this attitude could result in a stance of not feeling obliged to protect one’s family or those dependent on us. Hey, if someone rapes my wife and kids and I forgive them, so much the better for me. And if the wife is mad at me, she’ll just be condemned, that’s all. In some twisted way, the unconditional forgiver is off the hook. He doesn’t have to stand against the evil — he just forgives it all.

Is this getting weird to anyone else?

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 8:06 PM

It does seem weird. When Pope Innocent III was asked by St. Francis to approve the order which was proposed to follow the Sermon on the Mount, the Pope was understandably skeptical. The Sermon was great in theory, but the Pope never thought it possible to actually live it. When St. Francis not only did, but taught others who did as well, the order was eventually approved.

We have Jesus, and we have St. Francis, and recently we had Mother Theresa. So there have been three, I suppose. All of whom were definitely weird. Surely this wasn’t meant to be a real lifestyle. Just theory.

I can imagine 10,000 reasons why it won't work. But so far none of them have actually entered my life. But because I can theorize why it ought not be lived, it makes me comfortable in saying it isn't meant to be.

Good stuff; better stuff, the best stuff just got better.... Or whatever it is that Snapple is saying these days... I'm OK and you're OK. So we're all OK together.

AUGUST 16, 2010

2 Nephi 30:3

“And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed.”

Nephi speaks again prophetically about our time. He makes no distinction between the Jews and “the remnant of our seed,” or Nephite remnant in what he says here. The “book of which I have spoken” is the record of the Nephites. It will come forth, written as a warning to the gentiles. Here is another attempt to establish a time frame for a prophecy. It will be after the record exists, gets brought forth “unto the gentiles” and then is “sealed up again unto the Lord.” We are in that era now. The record exists, even if part of it is sealed. It has come forth, at least in that part intended to be released at the point of this prophecy. And it has been “sealed up again unto the Lord.” We don't have possession of it at present.

I've addressed the cover story that the Angel Moroni still has the plates in what I've written before. Briefly, the Book of Mormon tells Joseph Smith to “seal them up unto the Lord” in detail in three places. This is one of them. The other two are 2 Nephi 27:22 (giving the most detailed instruction to Joseph) and Ether 5:1-4.

All of these instructions are to the same effect. Once the Book of Mormon has been translated, to the extent it is to come forth in our day, the plates are to be “sealed up again” by Joseph. Since he did everything else in the way he was instructed, there is no reason to believe he wouldn’t have sealed up the record and hid it again.

Here Nephi prophesies that “there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written.” Meaning that those words “written unto the gentiles” or what we have in print now, will in fact be believed by “many.” They “shall believe the words.” Nephi has assured us of that. Therefore, it is necessary that some group from among the gentiles distinguish itself by actually believing the words of the Book of Mormon. It will be this group which “shall carry them forth unto the remnant of” Nephi’s seed. Notice that they will “believe” in the book. (That will require them to have a correct understanding of the book’s content, otherwise they would have unbelief.)

Those who do not believe (or have unbelief) in the Book of Mormon will not, indeed cannot, bring the words to the remnant. They aren’t qualified. They would not be able to convert any of the remnant. It will be those who actually believe in and accept the precepts of the Book of Mormon who will carry them forth unto the remnant.

Considering the otherwise direful predictions about the gentiles, this is the one way where hope may come to them. The group that believes in the Book of Mormon will necessarily have to be preserved to fulfill their responsibility to carry the words to the remnant. This is a subset of the Saints, and clearly not all of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. For the church itself, there remains a condemnation because of their unbelief in the book (D&C 84:54–57). This condemnation of the church was repeated by President Benson and again by Elder Oaks.

If, therefore, you would like to be preserved, the manner in which that will happen, according to Nephi’s prophecy, will necessarily require you to abandon the condemnation of the larger church, and become one of those who believe in the Book of Mormon. Not only to say, but to do; as Section 84 above requires.

It is surprising how much information the Book of Mormon has for us. It is even more surprising that with such detail available to us, we have done so little to understand and teach it. The words of this prophecy by Nephi ought to be proclaimed among us. However, very little attention has been given to it.

One of the effects of pride is blindness. We can’t see what our pride prevents us from seeing. We have to come down to the depths of humility (to use a phrase Nephi coined in 2 Nephi 9:42). Interestingly it is only the Book of Mormon which tells us to “come down in the depths of humility.” (2 Ne. 9:42; Helaman 6:5; and 3 Ne. 12:2). Once Nephi coined the phrase, Mormon used it twice in his abridgement. It is a good phrase. It does tell us what we must do.

The great work of the Lord in this day revolves around the Book of Mormon. More instruction, prophecy and promises are contained in that book for our day than any other. You can get closer to God by abiding its precepts than any other book.

Joseph Smith didn’t write it. It was written by ancient prophets, sealed up to come forth in our day, and translated by the gift and power of God.

It is a perilous book. We neglect it at the risk of failure. Don’t let it remain a “sealed book” for you. Anyone can come to believe in it if they are willing.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous — AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 4:26 PM

Seems I recall a while back Denver stating something akin to, “Forget your preconceived notions about the New Jerusalem being in Missouri,” and a promise that a discussion would be forthcoming. Are we still on track for that?

Denver Snuffer — AUGUST 16, 2010 AT 7:57 PM

I sense that finishing one subject in connection with understanding a full topic is imposing upon the patience of some of you. The whole setting needs to be set out, because it runs against a lot of our preconceived notions. We’re headed somewhere, but won’t get there for a while.

I wondered if this ought to be dealt with in a book instead of a blog when we started. Maybe it should be taken up there rather than here.

If you are patient, we’ll get there. But we can’t just leap from one topic to another without leaving out a large segment of the overall picture necessary for the pieces to fit together.

AUGUST 17, 2010

2 Nephi 30:4–5

And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews. And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers.

Once the remnant obtain a copy of the Book of Mormon, from a believing gentile hand, they will realize they are originally come out of Jerusalem. They will realize also that they are “descendants of the Jews.

It comes full circle. Those who were lost have returned again. The “prodigal” will return (Luke 15:11–32). There will be joy at the return.

This will happen as a preliminary to “the gospel of Jesus Christ [being] declared among them.” The Gospel being declared requires a true message, true messengers, authority, and ordinances. That will follow the remnant receiving the Book of Mormon. To what extent the gentiles bring those things and to what extent it will require heaven’s direct involvement, remains to be seen. But when the remnant reconnects, they will reconnect in every respect. The “gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them!”

As a result of these events, the remnant “shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers.” What does it mean to be restored? What knowledge? Which fathers? The Nephites, and Lehi, or to the earlier “fathers” as well? Does this include Abraham, Isaac and Jacob?

What does it mean they will be “also [restored] to the knowledge of Jesus Christ?” What does this “knowledge” involve? What kind of relationship with Christ does this imply?

If we wonder at the “knowledge” the remnant will obtain, we have a parallel given to us: The future remnant knowledge of Christ shall be akin to that “which was had among their fathers.” Meaning they will grow to know what the earlier Nephite disciples and peoples knew. What kind of knowledge does that include?

When the right target receives the right Gospel, the results are dramatic. When the wrong group is entrusted with the Gospel, they tend to let it atrophy, grow dim, and become a social order without the power of godliness. The restoration was intended to cure that problem. But as with any gift from God, we must do more than to “take no thought but to ask.” (D&C 9:6–7). We must pursue knowledge and act with alacrity when it is given.

If we do not do this, then the result is not a blessing, but a cursing (D&C 124:47–48). No matter what we are offered by the Lord, we must act consistent with His will to receive the blessings offered. When we fail to fulfill the obligation He appoints to us, then we fail to obtain what was offered (D&C 124:31–32).

Once they have been given the gospel, the remnant will not fail. Their reconnection will be as a nail in a sure place, not to be moved. Their knowledge will grow into the perfect day, just as it might with anyone who is willing to receive what Christ offers (D&C 50:24). Noon at the summer solstice is a symbol of the perfect day. This year, in contrast, at midnight of the winter solstice there will be an eclipse. This would be a symbol in the heavens of the opposite of the perfect day. When it arrives it undoubtedly is a sign relevant to the time. (Those things are never accidents or mere happenstance.)

The ideas begin to accumulate. Darkness and light. Free will and acceptance of what is offered by God. So many divergent roads that are offered in place of the one that remains strait and narrow, but nevertheless in a straight course before you (2 Nephi 9:41).

AUGUST 17, 2010

2 Nephi 30:6

And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes; and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a pure and a delightsome people.

Once the remnant is in possession of the Gospel, they will “rejoice.” What does that mean? What form would “rejoicing” take as a result of receiving the Gospel?

What does it mean to “know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God?” How would they recognize that?

What are the “scales of darkness” which cover eyes? How would the scales have been over their eyes in the first place? What does it mean to have the scales “begin to fall from their eyes?” Does “begin to fall” mean something about a gradual process, rather than a single quick event? How do scales continue to remain in place, even as they “begin to fall?” What does that imply about the difficulty in overcoming errors because of false understanding or traditions? Even the remnant will struggle to fully remove the “scales of darkness.”

Why are there “not many generations” involved in this process? Do you need “generations” to pass away in order to fully remove darkness?

Why is it not possible to accomplish this in a single generation?

If the Lord’s purposes in redeeming the remnant will take “not many generations” then why do we think we can accomplish it in one? How gradual a process is involved?

What does it mean to become a “pure and delightsome people?” (For many editions of the Book of Mormon, this phrase used to be, “white and delightsome.” It was changed back to the original, “pure” rather than “white” in the 1980 edition.)

Why does purity and being “delightsome” to the Lord go together?

If this process is going to involve “not many generations” then how far away are we from this unfolding?

When we read prophecy like this, we should realize we are looking at unfolding history from the Lord's perspective. We want to know what will happen in our single lifetime. We are impatient. He is interested in having us know the truth.

Nephi's prophecy gives us a perspective that helps put our own time into context. We are in a hurry. History is not. There is a great deal left to do. There is a great deal left to happen. Nephi is letting us see this lengthy agenda.

AUGUST 18, 2010

2 Nephi 30:7–8

And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered also shall begin to believe in Christ; and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ shall also become a delightsome people. And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth.

Nephi has circled back and is reiterating his earlier prophecy, assuring us that this is the order, these are the priorities and this work is indeed universal.

The scattered Jews will begin to believe in Christ, and as they do they will be gathered again. These will also be among the people destined to become “delightsome” as a result of the Gospel.

Again, we have the reminder of the universal nature of this work. Every nation, kindred, tongue and people will be invited. The invitation is to result in a “restoration of His people upon the earth.” That is, the purpose of the creation was to produce God's people. By and large that hasn't happened.

From the rebellion of Adam's children, through the almost universal rebellion at the time of Noah, mankind has been unwilling to become His people. The times when we find a "people of God" upon the earth is the exception, not the rule.

The desire to see Zion return is not the same thing as seeing its return.

I sometimes wonder if people who speak of Zion have any clue of the tremendous gulf between what that will require and who we are as a people. Having a vocabulary is not the same thing as having the heart to produce Zion.

How do people live with one another in peace? Without any poor among them? While seeking the best interest of all, and without ambition. Why would we believe we can get that great task done in a short effort in our day? There is no precedent living in anything like Zion, in this or the last seven generations.

Having the Gospel understood is the first step, of course. As a group, there is such a poor command of the scriptures that we have some considerable study before us. Passing familiarity with some scriptures is not of much use. They are the standard given to us to help reveal the basis for becoming a covenant people.

I notice how the subject of "calling and election" gets mentioned from time to time. It would be better to learn about the fundamentals of the Gospel that we are not living than to attempt to understand what lies at the end of the struggle.

Losing ourselves implies something quite distant from the self-centered worry that grows out of not knowing your standing before God. The first step is to pray in sincerity, asking God to soften your heart that you may believe. The steps Nephi followed are described in first few chapters of The Second Comforter. Those steps are not given to us merely to contemplate. They are given for us to follow.

As we see Nephi wrapping up his two books of scripture, he turns to the distant view of a return upon the earth of a “people of God.” We could have been that people. We even fancy ourselves as being likely to be among such a people. But if we lived that kind of life, we would already associate with such beings here, in the flesh. We would know we have part with them, because we would be associating with heaven now, as they will do then.

There is no one else who you need to look to other than the Lord. There is enough revealed in the Book of Mormon to tell you what you must do to become part of His people. You don’t need me, or a program, or a leader, other than Christ. He has offered the opportunity for each of us to become part of His people.

Well, onward still....

AUGUST 18, 2010

2 Nephi 30:9–10

And with righteousness shall the Lord God judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth; and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. For the time speedily cometh that the Lord God shall cause a great division among the people, and the wicked will he destroy; and he will spare his people, yea, even if it so be that he must destroy the wicked by fire.

Nephi quotes Isaiah to weave a second witness into this end-of-times description of the Lord’s agenda.

Righteousness for the poor. Equity for the meek. Smiting for the earth. Death to the wicked. For the poor, why “righteousness?”

For the meek, why “equity?” For the earth, why shall it be “smitten?” What is the “rod of His mouth” to be used to smite the earth?

For the wicked, it is the “breath of His lips” which will slay. Have you considered what this means? Why His “breath” when that is the mechanism that brings life to Adam, (Gen. 2:7) and the Spirit to His disciples? (John 20:22) Does the word “breath” imply the converse of bringing life, and the removal of the Holy Spirit? If so, how do those ideas affect the meaning of the Lord’s decision to “slay the wicked?” In what sense will they be “slain?”

What does it mean that “the time speedily cometh?” From what point is the measure taken to decide the “speed” of His coming? Is it from Nephi’s prophecy, or from the time in which the prophecy is set?

What does it mean there will be “caused a great division?” How would that “division” manifest itself? Is it first spiritual, then physical? Or is it both from the start? If it is first a great spiritual division, followed at some point in a physical gathering together of these two groups into separate locations, how would it unfold?

How will the wicked be “destroyed?” (Mormon 4:5). Will they also be able to destroy the people whom the Lord identifies as “His people?” (1 Ne. 22:16).

What does it mean that the Lord “will spare His people, yea, even if it so be that He must destroy the wicked by fire?” Is that true? Would the Lord personally intervene to protect His people? Has He done anything like that before? If so, when? Why? Can He still do that today? In a time of tremendous upheaval and destruction, can He selectively preserve His people? (3 Nephi 9:1–13). What protection is there from such forces of destruction?

Have you noticed how things seem to be speeding up? Business cycles that used to take generations now play themselves out in a few years. Political dynasties are crumbling and institutions which were once impervious to change are being forced to change. Cultural norms are changing so quickly that change is itself the new culture. The days seem to be shortening, don't they (Matt. 24:22; JS-Matt. 1:20).

AUGUST 19, 2010

2 Nephi 30:11–15

And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. And then shall the wolf dwell with the lamb; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.”

These words, again borrowed from Isaiah, are familiar to all of us. The time frame puts it inside the larger Nephi prophecy regarding the fulfillment of covenants made to the “fathers.”

What is interesting for us is the narrative of end-of-times peace and return of righteousness. This includes a “people of God” returning to inhabit the earth set inside the Book of Mormon narrative prophecy. The Book of Mormon remnant figure centrally into the progression. It (the book) comes forth, and from that time until the fulfillment of the return of righteousness and peace, the book's involvement is central. The gentiles receive custody of it. Don't do much with it. Some few actually believe it. They will eventually take it to the remnant. The remnant begin to come onboard with their conversion. They increase, the gentiles decrease, the momentum builds. The gentiles ultimately get swept away, while the remnant begin to grow into the fullness of the Gospel in all its rights, ordinances, and return to the knowledge of Christ.

As the culmination of these trends, which begin small, but gain momentum as they roll forth, we see the final product for what it was always intended to become: Zion. Once the stone cut out of the mountain without hands begins to roll forth, it will not stop until it has filled the whole earth.

Among those who are destined to fulfill these events, they will “not hurt nor destroy in all” the Lord’s “holy mountain.” What does it mean to “not hurt?” What does it mean to “not destroy?” Why a “holy mountain?”

The earth itself will be “full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.” What “knowledge of the Lord” is referred to here? How completely does the water cover the sea? Will there be any need for one man to say to another “know ye the Lord” in that day, or will all who remain know Him? (Jer. 31:34; D&C 84:96–99).

We imagine that day, but do not live for it. We think ourselves qualified to be part of that group. But ask yourself, do you make others hurt? Do others who hurt find relief from their pain by what you are willing to suffer, without returning evil for evil, but good for evil? Or do you believe such ideas to be “weird?” Because they are, indeed, for all we do, all we say, all we live and all we are, so alien to us that they are weird indeed.

From inside that culture, looking back at us and our time, reading our foolishness, observing our entertainment, they will think us more than “weird.” They will think us utterly insane. And they will be right. We are the madmen, claiming ourselves to be righteous, while dwelling in raw sewage and celebrating revenge, discord, hatred and anger. We speak of Zion while marketing Babylon. We ask “what will sell” before we undertake any project. We study the trends of the fallen, wicked and perverse in order to adapt our faith, our words, and our conversations to appeal to Babylon. The social statistics of Latter-day Saints run about 7 years behind the larger population.

We’re all headed to hell, but console ourselves that we remain “peculiar” because we are slower in our descent than the larger population. It never occurs to us that a complete break will be needed.

The Lord plans to provide that break. The question then will be whether we join with those who lament the fall of Babylon (Rev. 18:9–11), or among those who will rejoice at the coming of Zion (D&C 84:96–102). Perspective is affected by what our hearts value. Unfortunately, the choice is “either-or,” and not both (Luke 16:13).

Well this is indeed “getting weird”...

AUGUST 19, 2010

2 Nephi 30:16–17

Wherefore, the things of all nations shall be made known; yea, all things shall be made known unto the children of men. There is nothing which is secret save it shall be revealed; there is no work of darkness save it shall be made manifest in the light; and there is nothing which is sealed upon the earth save it shall be loosed.

This is another confirmation by Nephi of what was written before. The Nephites will have the records of the Jews and lost tribes of Israel, and the Jews and the lost tribes will have the records of the Nephites. “The things of all nations” will include these various Divine messages and teachings given to the various nations/people of the earth. The “children of men” in that day will have available to them the records that allow them to see how the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. They will realize that these distant echoes of the Gospel which appear in other faiths, traditions and sacred texts were, at one time, an authentic communication from the Lord or His servants.

So much of what appears to contradict will be found to have a common root. The things that have been sealed and kept from public discourse will become part of the public dialogue. We will not have the same requirement for “secrets” to be kept. But “nothing which is secret” will remain so. It will all “be revealed.”

When the truth is unsealed, so are the conspiracies, the foolishness and the ambitions that have worked to keep the truth from becoming known. None of the “work of darkness” which has been afoot will be kept from public view, but “it shall be manifest in the light.” Whatever excuses men have had to suppress the truth, deny the Spirit, and employ the “arm of flesh” as their guide will be exposed for what they are. They will put on display. The wisdom of the wise will be seen for the foolishness it was. The strength of man’s arm, the studied foolishness gained from social sciences, opinion polling, focus groups and other attempts to figure out where the ignorant are going and jump in front of the trend to feign leadership, will be seen for what it was. The endless praise and adoration given to these foolish and weak political, governmental, business, educational and “moral” leaders will be seen for what it was.

Oh the wisdom of God and the foolishness of men! When men are educated they think they are wise (2 Nephi 9:28). All the studied ignorance of men will be recognized as foolishness, rather than as wisdom as it is now (1 Cor. 3:19). Then the fools will at last shut their mouths and cease to thunder out their errors (Isa. 52:15).

You can almost feel Nephi's relief as he contemplates this outcome. The final vindication of the truth. The final conquest of the foolishness of men. It is consoling to consider that this odd and corrupt world we find ourselves in will at some point finally end. The truth will be vindicated. The errors and evil we enshrine in our institutions and art will collapse. We will emerge from behind the scales of darkness covering our eyes and at last see things as they are in the light of heaven.

...I'm thinking the most common reaction will be "oops" or some four letter equivalent...

You realize you can fix that today, right? You know the Gospel intends to take you out of this fallen world and into that kind of light even now, right? That was what Christ was trying to do all along. That is why He's provided the scriptures (primarily the Book of Mormon for us) to help us catch on before the terrible end is upon us. So you can do something about all this.

Or you can think it just "weird," remain as you are, and enjoy the decline. 'Cuz lotsa folks is do'in just that, ya know...

AUGUST 20, 2010

2 Nephi 30:18

Wherefore, all things which have been revealed unto the children of men shall at that day be revealed; and Satan shall have power over the hearts of the children of men no more, for a long time. And now, my beloved brethren, I make an end of my sayings.

The truth will be revealed. But truth of this nature will involve something else. Satan will have no power. When we gather enough light and truth, Satan's influence and power ends. We find that Satan is "cast out" because he can no longer deceive.

His primary tool is the lie. When there is enough truth, there is no longer any reason to believe or teach a lie. Therefore, he has lost power.

His secondary tool is the lusts and appetites of the flesh. When these are controlled, he is rendered completely ineffective. He is bound.

Once the lies are exposed and the appetites of the flesh are subdued, the hearts of men are freed from captivity. Nephi is describing a future day when this will be the common situation for mankind.

Of course, this doesn't have to be a future day. It is possible to gain enough light and truth today so the lies are exposed to your view. It is also possible to subdue the appetites of the flesh. In any event, the desires, appetites and passions ought to be kept within the bounds which the Lord prescribes. We say that, but we don't often do that. Most people are not willing to actually subdue their desires, passions and appetites. It seems weird to suppress the desire for revenge, to actually turn the other cheek, and to return good for evil. In short, it would appear the Savior's conduct in willingly going to His death without accepting Peter's offer to use the sword in His defense was a bit nutty. At least from the perspective of the damned. (They can't even stop watching pornography. Latter-day "Saint" indeed. What's saintly about the vengeful, lustful, and gluttonous? But that's an aside...)

Binding Satan so he has no "power over the hearts of the children of men" is an interesting phrase. Why "power?" Why "power over the hearts?" Why "children of men" rather than sons of God? (See the dialogue between Moses and Satan where Moses refers to himself as a "son of God" but Satan calls him a "son of man" in Moses 1:12-13). Isn't that interesting?

Why is it that such power over the hearts of the children of men will be lost? It is as if entry into a Telestial World will bring about the binding of Satan, even before becoming a “son of God,” and beginning the final journey into the Lord’s presence. This is interesting—as if Nephi understood the Temple itself (2 Nephi 5:16).

Satan’s power is lost for a “long time” but not forever. Why? How will Satan be loosed again? (Rev. 20:7; D&C 43: 31; D&C 88:110). I’ve described this event and the reasons in “The Great Competition” in Ten Parables.

The final phrase is because Nephi was through with his message for a while. He may have intended to take his writing up again, but the final phrase indicates he was done for the time. We cannot tell how long it was between the last verse of Chapter 30 and the first verse of Chapter 31. When he takes up his writing again, he is clearly ending his ministry. How long he took to compose his final thoughts is undisclosed. But this will be an old man, finishing his mortal warning to us.

Let’s take a look at it...

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · AUGUST 20, 2010 AT 8:07 AM

Denver,

You said, “It is as if entry into a Telestial World will bring about the binding of Satan...”

Did you mean Telestial or Terrestrial? It makes sense to me if you meant Terrestrial, but I am confused if you really meant Telestial since you have often mentioned this world now is a telestial kingdom and clearly Satan is not even close to being bound in such a world (unless we do it individually, as you always point out). Am I missing something of a critical teaching you are trying to convey and the temple, too? Or was this a mistype? Would love your help.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 20, 2010 AT 10:20 AM

That's right, should be "Terrestrial" instead.

CHAPTER 4

2 Nephi 31

AUGUST 20, 2010

2 Nephi 31:1

And now I, Nephi, make an end of my prophesying unto you, my beloved brethren. And I cannot write but a few things, which I know must surely come to pass; neither can I write but a few of the words of my brother Jacob.

Don't make any mistakes, Nephi was a prophet. He knew he was a prophet. He also knew his testimony and explanations were indeed prophesy. So, in case you were wondering, here he removes any doubt. He is "making an end of my prophesying unto you." And he identifies "you" to mean his "beloved brethren." Who would that be? Could gentiles be included as his "beloved brethren?" What would a gentile have to do or be in order to qualify for that description? They why aren't you doing that?

Why "cannot" he "write but a few things" further? Is there a limit put upon his prophecy for us? (1 Nephi 14:28). Would he have liked to have said more? Does he assure us what he did write is true and complete as far as permitted to be written? (1 Nephi 14:30).

What does it mean that he knows it “must surely come to pass?” How can he know that? What does it mean about the information we have in his record? How closely was the information given in conformity with what the Lord wanted him to reveal? How seriously should we take the record or prophecy of Nephi?

Why does Nephi refer again to his brother Jacob? What did Nephi and Jacob have in common in their faith and knowledge? (2 Nephi 11:2–3). What does this imply about the validity of their testimony, their prophecy, their commission to deliver words of warning? What level of attention should their words attract from us? If we give them strict heed, will they lead us in the way of life and salvation?

As he ends his record, an aging and dying prophet, whose journey began on another continent is pleading to us to save ourselves. He has been such a significant source of faith in moments of despair, that when the Lord was reminding Joseph Smith of faith in troubled times, He drew directly from Nephi’s life. Joseph was in Liberty Jail, abandoned by force of arms by his people, who had been evicted from Missouri. The governor had ordered the extermination of Mormons if they remained. Joseph’s people had been killed, mobbed, evicted, driven in the snow from Missouri, their property pillaged, their women abused, and their houses burned. In a dungeon cell, Joseph was lamenting his plight. He felt abandoned by the Saints, and by God. As he pled for relief, the Lord told him to face adversity without complaint, because it would ultimately be for his good. When the Lord spoke and reminded Joseph of moments of despair over which faith and hope triumphed, one of the moments used was taken from Nephi’s life:

if the billowing surge conspire against thee; if fierce winds become thine enemy; if the heavens gather blackness, and all the elements combine to hedge up the way; and above all, if the very jaws of hell shall gape open the mouth wide after thee, know thou, my son, that all these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good. (See, 1 Nephi 18:13–16)

It was no accident that the 116 pages were lost, compelling the use of Nephi's full record to begin the Book of Mormon. It was a "wise purpose" indeed (Words of Mormon 1:6–7). These words were always destined to come to us unabridged, from the hand of Nephi unaltered, translated by the gift and power of God into our language by Joseph Smith. Now they confront us, inform us, elevate us, warn us and deliver to us the means of obtaining the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

AUGUST 21, 2010

2 Nephi 31:2

Wherefore, the things which I have written sufficeth me, save it be a few words which I must speak concerning the doctrine of Christ; wherefore, I shall speak unto you plainly, according to the plainness of my prophesying.

Nephi has been pondering for over four decades about the great revelations given to him in the Arabian Peninsula (2 Nephi 4:16 and 2 Nephi 5:34). His creation of, and inscription on the plates were after these long deliberations and reflections.

When he says "the things which I have written sufficeth me," he is putting a punctuation mark on his plates. He is saying he has finished his ministry, finished his prophecy. He has refined and set out his message in a deliberate, careful way. These books of Nephi are not internet blogs undertaken daily. They are not rapid-fire responses, nor stream-of-consciousness statements. They were planned for the ages. Born from pondering, inspired by revelation, described as prophecy by the author, and filled with light and truth if considered with care by any reader. Nephi's pronouncement that they "sufficeth me" is a powerful statement by an aging prophet.

Years of preparation and reflection allow him to "speak plainly" to us. There's no need to be vague. No reason to hide our plight from us. He wants us to understand. When he attempts to "speak unto you plainly, according to the plainness of my prophesying," we read into it the wrong definitions, associate his words with others who will never read the book, and consider ourselves blessed and vindicated instead of condemned, and called to repentance. We do that a lot. What good is it to read things which tell you to be proud? Why follow a religion that tells you you've no reason to repent? Everyone but you is going to hell, right? (Alma 31:17-18). Because so long as you remain affiliated with the broad mainstream of your church, God will save you. And if there's any hint of error, He will beat you with a few stripes and all will be well. Nephi has already condemned that as an error, hasn't he? (2 Nephi 28:8).

If his words were plain and intended to be taken at face value, why read into them justification for yourself and your sins? Why think they condemn everyone but you? Why are they speaking in disparaging terms about those who will never have the book? Why did Nephi write a book condemning only those who will never read it? Surely, if he was in fact "plain" in his meaning, then we ought not read anything into it other than what it says and how it says it. It must be a message to us.

If it is addressed to us, then we have more than one "wo" pronounced upon us by Nephi. We have been warned. We need to change what we are doing. The gentiles with whom we are identified (D&C 109:60) are collectively condemned. We need to separate ourselves by our behavior from theirs. We need to repent.

Now, just in case you think, as a recent comment has asserted, that the Lord has sent another message vindicating us as a collective gentile body/church in D&C 1:30, I would remind you that revelation came from the Lord in 1831. In the following year the Lord gave another revelation that put the church under condemnation (D&C 84:54–58). We know that condemnation was not lifted, because of President Benson and Elder Oaks.

More troubling still is the Lord's threat to reject the gentile church altogether in January of 1841 if the church did not follow His strict appointment and complete building a temple in the time He provided (D&C 124:31–32). The warning was given that even if the temple were built, we would still be condemned if we failed to do what He said (D&C 124:47–48).

Did we keep the appointment given us? The Nauvoo Temple was not completed before Joseph Smith died. The endowment was not completed by Joseph, but Brigham Young was told he had to finish it (See this postdated June 30 titled 1 Nephi 13:33–34). Did we keep the appointment? Have we been able to avoid being rejected as a church? Have our covenants been fulfilled?

Why do we repeat endlessly the praise from 1831 but ignore the threatened rejection that came in 1841? From January of 1841, until Joseph's death in June of 1844, we had three and a half years to complete the Nauvoo Temple. Was that "sufficient time" to do what was required of us? If so, we did not complete it. Why was Joseph taken? Was that any indication about when the "sufficient time" expired? If so, what then? Where would that leave us?

Is our best hope to be found in the messages and warnings of the Book of Mormon? Can there be gentiles found who will believe its message? How carefully ought we study it?

Did you know the church had almost no use for the Book of Mormon until Hugh Nibley's efforts? (You know that if you've read Eighteen Verses.) Hugh Nibley, by his efforts beginning in the 1950's, practically discovered the Book of Mormon for the church. He's gone now.

Even though Moses was taken from ancient Israel, and with him the authority of the priesthood, (see D&C 84:25–26) the ancient Israelites remained the Lord's people. He still worked through them and sent them messengers from time to time. These messengers were rarely the High Priest. Although in Samuel's case he displaced the High Priest (1 Samuel 3:1–21). They were sent from time to time. Their qualifications were private, as the Lord told Moses they would be (Numbers 12:6). I have no doubt Hugh Nibley was sent to us. If you've paid close attention, his departure has created an intellectual collapse at the center of the faith, with various egos contending to be noticed. They aspire to put upon them Hugh Nibley's mantle. They are not made of the same stuff, called with the same calling, nor endowed with the same capacities.

I doubt we'll see someone like him again. Perhaps we may someday see someone with an equally important message, but among those born in this dispensation, there is none to compare to Brother Nibley.

Well, now we're off-point again. So back to Nephi...

AUGUST 22, 2010

2 Nephi 31:3

For my soul delighteth in plainness; for after this manner doth the Lord God work among the children of men. For the Lord God giveth light unto the understanding; for he speaketh unto men according to their language, unto their understanding.

This raises an interesting side issue. Nephi's explanation of how God speaks to different people "according to their language" is something worth explaining. We have a great example in the visit of John the Baptist to Joseph and Oliver found in JS-H 1:68–70 and Oliver's account in the footnote there. The language they quote from John the Baptist is phrased differently by each of them, although both are quoting the angel. Angel's leave an impression. Notwithstanding Joseph Fielding Smith's teaching that memory from such things fade with time, my experience tells me quite the contrary. Such things are distinct and memorable. Often, if you need to hear a quote, the person who received it can quote word-for-word what they were told many years later; particularly when the quote is a declarative statement of what is to be or what is conferred. When, therefore, Joseph and Oliver give two different accounts of the quote, I understand this not to be a contradiction, but an example of the thing Nephi is referring to in this verse.

The communication of angels is not usually verbal in the traditional sense of verbal communication. That is, no air is being vibrated. Rather, the form the communication takes is for the angel to "speak" by delivering to the mind of the person spoken to the concept or declaration to be understood. Then the person, receiving the concept or declaration into their mind, is obliged to convert into words the message received. If the vocabulary of the recipient is German, they will use German to reduce the message to words. If English, they will use English. If their vocabulary is rich and complex, the words may be more exact. If their vocabulary is simple, the words may be simple.

However one comes into the presence of God or His angelic ministers, once there, the thoughts that come to the person will conform to their understanding, their vocabulary, their manner of phrasing. The underlying purpose is always the same: to make the communication plain to the understanding of the person visited.

It is also true that the Lord “giveth light unto the understanding” and does so according to the heed and diligence we give to what we have already received (Alma 12:9, see also D&C 50:24). We cannot understand some things even if they are explained to us if we do not have the necessary light to permit that understanding. Light and truth attract one another.

When we approach God, we do so by degrees not merely by study. We find ourselves gaining light that quickens our understanding. What we cannot understand at first, gains clarity only after a period of living true to the things we already have.

The commandments are not something we follow to please God, but something we do to understand God. Living true to what we believe He expects of us, allows us to gain an appreciation for what kind of Being He truly is. In that sense, the commandments are not so much burdens to bear, but revelations to understand. The greatest understanding, of course, does not lie in strict conformity to the letter of any law or commandment, but the insight obtained from the underlying principle you discover as you follow it. Commandments should soften or break your heart, not harden it. When a commandment hardens the heart of the follower, they have misunderstood the commandment altogether. This was the case with the accusers of Christ, who followed the underlying intent with perfection, while breaking the superficial requirements regularly.

None of it will become “plain” to the follower until they have done and understood what the commandments were attempting to reveal to them. When, however, you encounter a Nephi, you have someone who now sees the issues plainly. It was meant for us all to see them plainly.

AUGUST 23, 2010

2 Nephi 31:4

Wherefore, I would that ye should remember that I have spoken unto you concerning that prophet which the Lord showed unto me, that should baptize the Lamb of God, which should take away the sins of the world.

This puts us back into the narrative Nephi wrote much earlier in his first book. He described this in 1 Nephi 11:27. Although the Lord’s mortal ministry was future, and separated by more than half-a-millennium, Nephi witnessed it. The Lord is able to make witnesses of His mortal ministry even of someone who lived at another time and place, as He has done with Nephi.

During that vision, Nephi saw more than the Lord’s mortal ministry. He was shown the entire history of the world through the end of time. However, Nephi was only permitted to bear selective testimony of what he saw. Others were given responsibility for testifying to portions of what Nephi saw, but was not permitted to record. He saw it all. He was to record only some of what he saw. He was told at a certain point that the responsibility for recording it became John the Beloved’s and not Nephi’s (See 1 Nephi 14:19–28).

Nephi saw it, John the Beloved saw it, and others, including Isaiah, also saw it (1 Nephi 14:26). I've explained this in Nephi's Isaiah.

Here Nephi returns to the Lord's baptism to begin an explanation of "the doctrine of Christ" (2 Nephi 31:2) so that Nephi's testimony refocuses the reader on the path required for salvation. Since Nephi's primary reason for writing is to save others, he cannot finish without a final direct appeal for all to understand the "doctrine of Christ."

What is the difference between "the doctrine of Christ" and the "Gospel of Jesus Christ?" How do they relate to one another?

Here Nephi has linked together four distinct thoughts: First he has 1) already described the prophet which 2) the Lord had shown to Nephi. This was the earlier vision described above. That prophet 3) should baptize the Lamb of God during the Lord's mortal ministry. The Lord, who is the Lamb of God 4) should take away the sins of the world.

This is a specific time and setting. It involves a specific event and two persons: John the Baptist and Jesus Christ. Nephi has seen the event, and reminds us of it as a baseline from which to reconstruct the "doctrine of Christ."

Remember that the Jews who confronted John the Baptist did not ask him what ordinance he was performing. They did not ask why he was performing the ordinance. They only asked what authority permitted him to be performing an ordinance which they already understood and undoubtedly already practiced. Why would John baptize if he were not Christ, or Elias (in that context meaning Elijah), or another returning prophet who already had the authority (John 1:19-28). The inquisitors already understood the ordinance.

Baptism was a pre-Christian ordinance. Because of historic interests which conflict with one another, both the Jews and the Christians downplay or ignore that truth.

Look at the wording above and ask yourself: Why, when the vision is shown to Nephi, is Christ identified as “the Lord?” Then, when Nephi beholds His baptism, why does he refer to Christ as “the Lamb of God?” The same person, at first identified as “the Lord,” and then identified as “the Lamb of God.” Why these two identities? Why would it be so clear to Nephi that the Lord holds these two identities that he would use them in this single verse to make Christ’s identity and deeds clear to the reader? How do the different names/titles help us to better understand Christ?

Why is a pre-Christian prophet commissioned to know and write about these things? Why would the Nephite descendants from the time of this writing through the time of Moroni all be entitled to know about this event? What importance is it for us to understand this about Christ?

Well, let’s push further into the “doctrine of Christ” to see what it may persuade us to do or believe.

AUGUST 23, 2010

2 Nephi 31:5

And now, if the Lamb of God, he being holy, should have need to be baptized by water, to fulfil all righteousness, O then, how much more need have we, being unholy, to be baptized, yea, even by water!

This is a missionary proof text, used to persuade everyone to get baptized. They used it on me. It worked. I got baptized.

How undeniably essential is baptism as a result of this argument? Does it seem to you that if Christ Himself needed to be baptized that without it it would not be possible for anyone to please God? If Christ needed it, then undoubtedly all of Christ's inferiors need it as well. The only exception seems to be those children who are not accountable, and for whom Christ's atonement will be applied because of the justice and mercy applied to such unaccountable young souls (See Moroni 8:20–22). They need no baptism. But all of us do. Without it we have no hope for redemption.

It is indisputable from this verse that baptism is essential. But the question remains "why?" Why would this ordinance be required for residing in God's presence in the eternal worlds? We know, of course, that all such matters were ordained before the foundation of the world, and cannot be changed now (D&C 130:20–21). But that does not answer the question of "why?"

Have you ever inquired to know why? It is not answered in scripture. It is only implied. Sometimes the best place to look for an answer is to go back to the beginning. Reading the account of Adam's baptism (who was the first to receive the ordinance in mortality) we find a few things. By the water we keep the commandment (Moses 6:60). The first man was taken by the Spirit and baptized, put under the water and brought forth out of the water again (Moses 6:64). After he had been buried in the water and brought forth again, he was told he had been born again of the Spirit (Moses 6:65). Before any of the ordinance happened, however, Adam was told this:

behold, all things have their likeness, and all things are created and made to bear record of me, both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are in the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath: all things bear record of me. (Moses 6:63) Did you catch that?

Just before Adam's baptism the Lord explains to Adam that the reason for "all things" being as they are is "to bear record of me [meaning Christ]." Baptism is designed to bear testimony of Christ. How so? In what way does baptism tell us about Christ?

Christ died, was buried, and on the third day arose from the dead (D&C 20:23). He said He would do that before His crucifixion (Mark 8:31; Luke 18:33). His disciples did not understand this prophecy (Luke 18:34).

Baptism is a reenactment of Christ's death and resurrection. Once you have been placed under the water you are cut off from the breath of life. If you remain under the water for too long, you will die. While there, you are only able to survive by holding your breath. You retain the power to live, if you return to the surface soon enough, but your life is dependent upon the one performing the ordinance. They must lift you back to return you to life. Just as Christ needed the power of His Father, we also need the power of the officiator to raise us back to life. It is as if the life of Christ has been beautifully choreographed. Christ was sent to lay down His life and take it up again. That is what He did. As Joseph Smith explained in the King Follett Discourse:

The scriptures inform us that Jesus said, as the Father hath power in himself, even so hath the Son power—to do what? Why, what the Father did. The answer is obvious—in a manner to lay down his body and take it up again. Jesus, what are you going to do? To lay down my life as my Father did, and take it up again. Do you believe it? If you do not believe it you do not believe the Bible. The scriptures say it, and I defy all the learning and wisdom and all the combined powers of earth and hell together to refute it. Here, then, is eternal life—to know the only wise and true God; and you have got to learn how to be gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, the same as all gods have done before you, namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, until you attain to the resurrection of the dead, and are able to dwell in everlasting burnings, and to sit in glory, as do those who sit enthroned in everlasting power.

First we receive an ordinance which shows us the way by symbols. We are shown the way back to redemption and resurrection, but must see it with the eyes of faith, before we behold it as it truly is (Ether 12:19). If we are to rise from the dead and have eternal life in Christ, we must first enact that event through the ordinance which points to the reality of our future rise from the dead.

Ordinances are the preliminary act, designed to bear testimony of the real event. They are not the real thing, but a “type” of the real thing. They must be seen through the eyes of faith (Ether 12:19) to allow us to gain the faith necessary to obtain the real thing. Before you are resurrected in a whole, complete and glorified fashion you must first voluntarily agree to enact that future event, looking forward in faith to that future day. Before you enter into the Lord’s presence, you must first enact that in the Temple, looking forward in faith to that future day.

All things point to Christ. However, only those who have the faith to see within them the underlying reality with the “eyes of faith” will obtain to the final promises and covenants intended for all of us to obtain.

AUGUST 24, 2010

2 Nephi 31:6–7

And now, I would ask of you, my beloved brethren, wherein the Lamb of God did fulfill all righteousness in being baptized by water? Know ye not that he was holy? But notwithstanding he being holy, he showeth unto the children of men that, according to the flesh he humbleth himself before the Father, and witnesseth unto the Father that he would be obedient unto him in keeping his commandments.

Although Christ was the one mortal upon whom death could make no claim (He being holy), He nonetheless obeyed the same conditions as everyone else. Notwithstanding His holiness, His right to face judgment and not be condemned, He set the example. No one else could face the judgment and pass. Therefore, everyone other than Him would require baptism for repentance and remission of their sins. He did not. He determined to obey anyway so everyone could see the strait path by which they can obtain hope.

He was flesh. He was mortal. He could (and did) die. Though death could not claim Him, He was to die. Baptism is the great symbol of death and resurrection, and He is the resurrection. He lived the symbol as well as the reality, so all others could have part in that victory. The symbol to point the way. The reality to open the way. We are in turn “shown the way” by what He did.

He also “witnesses” before “the Father that he would be obedient unto Him.”

Think about the command of understanding Nephi is exhibiting here. He is telling us that Christ’s mortal ministry would include these very specific events for these very specific reasons. This was what he was permitted to tell us. What other information was within his knowledge which he was forbidden from sharing? Does this level of understanding by Nephi tell you something about what can be learned from the Lord if you are diligent in following His path? Why, if you can see what may be available, would you not be willing to do whatever is asked of you in order to receive something similar in your own life?

Well, the foundation of the “doctrine of Christ” begins by seeing Christ’s example, learning of the necessity of baptism and obedience to the will of God. That is where everyone must begin. If you start right, you are likely to continue in the right way. But if you do not begin aright, then you are not likely to have any ability to return and find the right way. You cannot enter in by some other way. If you enter in the right way, you will begin to recognize the True Shepherd’s voice (John 10:1–5). This is the beginning. It is as important to the doctrine of Christ as all that will follow.

AUGUST 24, 2010

2 Nephi 31:8–9

Wherefore, after he was baptized with water the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove. And again, it showeth unto the children of men the straitness of the path, and the narrowness of the gate, by which they should enter, he having set the example before them.

This is an interesting cause-and-effect. Once Christ was baptized, “the Holy Ghost descended upon Him” as a result of the baptism. Now, true enough an ordinance was instituted by which hands are laid upon a person, post-baptism, where the “gift of the Holy Ghost” is bestowed. This practice was instituted by Christ (Acts 8:14–17). However, in the case of Christ’s own baptism, no hands were put upon Him. He was baptized. The Holy Ghost descended upon Him.

It is clear that baptism is a gate through which all must pass. Immediately after the ordinance, the Holy Ghost must become the companion of those who are redeemed.

Christ set the example. We are obligated to follow the example.

Receiving baptism without also receiving the Spirit renders the event incomplete. Nephi will explain the essential nature of the Holy Ghost in the redemption process in a few more verses. It is clear that the Holy Ghost is the instrumentality by which redemption itself comes. The Spirit is the guide which will lead back to the Lord's presence. Without the guide, the doctrine of Christ is incomplete.

The water is something that we must pass through to keep the law. It is the companionship of the Spirit which makes you justified, by leading you to do what is right. It is the resulting application of Christ's blood on your behalf that will sanctify you (Moses 6:60). You cannot receive sanctification without first receiving baptism and then also the Holy Ghost.

If there is no other way, and all must comply, then the way is both "strait" and "narrow."

Christ's example is the only one for us to follow to obtain hope for our own salvation. He is the "prototype of the saved man" (Lecture 7, Lectures on Faith, paragraph 9). If it was necessary for Him, it is the more necessary for us.

Baptism is one thing, accepting the Holy Ghost is another. The one is objective, and openly visible when the act happens. The other is internal, involving welcoming a member of the Godhead into your life.

I remember kneeling on an Atlantic beach in the cool sand at the setting of the sun on the day of my baptism. The Atlantic is cold in September, and I was chilled from the ordinance, still wet while kneeling, and shivering as the elders began the ordinance. When, however, they said: “receive the Holy Ghost” I remember becoming warm, beginning at my scalp and flowing downward until my entire body was warm and calm. It was palpable. It was physical. To me the experience was no less dramatic than the descent of the Holy Ghost “in the form of a dove” on the day of Christ’s baptism. It was every bit as objective, as physical and as memorable as any other distinct event in my life.

More importantly, I began to experience the fruits of that event immediately. What followed for me, within the hour of my baptism, was akin to what Joseph and Oliver experienced (JS-H 1:73). Within days I found also that the scriptures began to have far more distinct and clear meaning than ever before, again just as Joseph and Oliver found (JS-H 1:74).

It was clear to me that the Holy Ghost imparts something altogether more significant than what I alone could do, understand, or accomplish. It expanded capacity, enlightened and informed the mind, and led to understanding things which were unknown and unknowable before.

This process is not just mandatory. It is a far superior way to experience life than to live alone, without God in the world (Alma 41:11). It is a blessing, a gift. The “gift of the Holy Ghost” is, without question, the great “gift” coming from God to aid us in our return to Him.

Discoveries in Chiasmus

August 24, 2010

COMMENTS:

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 25, 2010 AT 1:47 PM

There will be a volume of the talks published by, I believe, by either Mill Creek Press or Cedar Fort Press. Not entirely sure which will publish it, but I do know all the talks will be published in a single volume.

AUGUST 25, 2010

2 Nephi 31:10–11

And he said unto the children of men: Follow thou me. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, can we follow Jesus save we shall be willing to keep the commandments of the Father? And the Father said: Repent ye, repent ye, and be baptized in the name of my Beloved Son.

Notice the “prophetic-perfect” tense, where Nephi speaks of the Lord’s future conduct as if it were in the past. This is what happens when a prophet speaks in prophecy. To the prophet, the events are in the past because he was shown it before writing it. Although the event has not occurred yet, the prophet remembers it in his mind and to him it is a past event.

This “remembering” the future makes the mind of the prophet akin to the mind of God.

Nephi again addresses his “beloved brethren” in this plea. Can we “follow Jesus” and not keep commandments? Is “be willing to keep the commandments” the same as “keeping the commandments?” Are all commandments to be kept? What about those that create conflict? How did Christ resolve the conflict between the commandment to do good and honor God on the Sabbath, with the commandment to do no work on the Sabbath? Are some commandments objective and without conflict (like baptism) while others may conflict with each other? Can you keep them all? Do you think you even know them all? How do you resolve conflicts? How do you make up for the wrongs you do in ignorance? (Mosiah 3:11).

Notice the quote Nephi reports from “the Father.” Again, Nephi is telling us something about his associations. He says the Father has stated: “Repent ye, repent ye, and be baptized in the name of my Beloved Son.” You can search all the scriptures and you will find this quote appears in this one place. Nephi is quoting the Father. Where did Nephi get the quote from if it does not otherwise appear in scripture?

What does that tell you about Nephi? What does it tell you about the Father’s view of baptism? What does it tell you about the actions of Christ and the will of the Father? Why does the Father refer to Christ as “my Beloved Son” while speaking of baptism?

With what emotion does the Father express Himself about Christ? Does that emotion attach to any of those who do as Christ did? Does it please the Father when we are baptized? Why?

What is God's work? (Moses 1:39). How does baptism relate to this work? How do we "follow Christ" without seeking to do everything He did? Can we do all He did? Why did Joseph say we must go from one exaltation to another? What does Joseph refer to when he explained:

you have got to learn how to be gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, the same as all gods have done before you, namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, until you attain to the resurrection of the dead, and are able to dwell in everlasting burnings, and to sit in glory, as do those who sit enthroned in everlasting power. (King Follett Discourse)

This was long after Joseph received the Vision of the Three Degrees of Glory found in Section 76. Section 76 was received February 16, 1832 while the King Follett Discourse was given April 7, 1844. Remember that all of what was seen in the vision was not recorded by Joseph:

But great and marvelous are the works of the Lord, and the mysteries of his kingdom which he showed unto us, which surpass all understanding in glory, and in might, and in dominion; Which he commanded us we should not write while we were yet in the Spirit, and are not lawful for man to utter. (D&C 76:114–115)

Why would some things be known to a prophet but "not lawful" for him to reveal to others?

What does the idea of "following Christ" imply, if it were taken to its fullest extent? Why would that require someone to go "from one small degree to another?” What would be involved for someone to pass “from exaltation to exaltation,” as Joseph mentions in this discourse in April, 1844? How fully must we follow Christ?

If it is God’s work to bring to pass immortality and eternal life for His children, then must God work out salvation for His children to confer upon them immortality and eternal life? If another becomes “like God” will they undertake the same work? Will it require the same price to be paid? Is there another way?

AUGUST 25, 2010

2 Nephi 31:12

“And also, the voice of the Son came unto me, saying: He that is baptized in my name, to him will the Father give the Holy Ghost, like unto me; wherefore, follow me, and do the things which ye have seen me do.”

Notice that immediately following the quote from the Father, Nephi adds a quote from the Son. Here Nephi makes it clear that the Father said to Nephi what is quoted in verse 11, because he adds, “And also, the voice of the Son came unto me, saying...” As soon as the Father stopped speaking, the Son added the comment he now quotes.

This contradicts what is an often referred to Mormon legend. Our legend is that the Father does nothing other than introduce the Son. This comes from a misreading of the Joseph Smith Translation of John 1:18. This verse is rendered in the JKV as follows:

No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.” In the JST is changed to read: “No man hath seen God at any time except he hath borne record of the Son; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

This is the basis for asserting the Father doesn't ever speak, apart from introducing and bearing testimony of the Son. It is clearly a false notion, however, as the Father has many quoted words in the Book of Mormon. The fact the myth exists is, once again, evidence of how little we have as a people studied the Book of Mormon.

Well, returning to this verse, we find that the promise of the Holy Ghost is made by the Father! That is, Christ is saying when the Holy Ghost is sent, it is a gift from "the Father." Indeed it is! The Father of our spirits (Heb. 12:9) has given us all that spirit which dwells within us (D&C 130:22).

First the Father tells us to be baptized and follow Christ. Then Christ adds to it the plea: If you do that you will receive the Holy Ghost as a gift from the Father. So "follow me, and do the things which ye have seen me do."

How seamless the will of the Father is with the desire of His Son!

How eager are both the Father and the Son for us to come to them!

How consistent is the message we receive from both the Father and the Son!

There is no other record in all scripture that puts together the promises of the Father and the plea of the Son like Nephi has done here!

How great a prophet was Nephi! How trusted and familiar must he have been with both the Father and the Son to be able to deliver this message to us!

Let it sink in. Let it be understood. Then, realize Nephi was a man just like you and I. He suffered, toiled, was rejected, fled and worked in obscurity to follow God against the active opposition of his own brothers. His knowledge and experiences are open to all.

If you have not realized before, now you should realize why Nephi forms the bedrock example in The Second Comforter to lay out the process of returning to God's presence. Among prophets, Nephi was a pillar of light, whose understanding reached into heaven itself.

Perhaps we should have been giving him more attention for the last 180 years. Well, it's not too late for you to begin to do so now.

AUGUST 26, 2010

2 Nephi 31:13

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I know that if ye shall follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism—yea, by following your Lord and your Savior down into the water, according to his word, behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost; yea, then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and then can ye speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.

Now we get the explanation of what it means to “follow Christ.” It is not merely the act itself, but the underlying intent of the act. To follow Him requires:

- Full purpose of heart. What does that imply or require?
- Acting no hypocrisy. How so?
- No deception before God. Can a man deceive God?
- Real intent. What does “real intent” include?
- Repenting of your sins. How does one repent of their sins?
- Witnessing unto the Father: How do you witness to Him?
- Willing to take upon you the name of Christ. How?

The only way I can think to touch upon Nephi's meaning is to get personal about this process. It is by how I have lived that I have come to understand Nephi's meaning.

I remember as the missionaries were teaching me that I came to the conviction that the restoration of the Gospel had indeed happened. It was not a happy thought. I did NOT want to become a Mormon. It seemed like a terrible change to attempt to make, in what was an otherwise content life at the time. As a lifestyle some of it seemed to have merit. Not drinking, smoking and living a higher moral standard certainly made some sense to me. But the association with Mormons had no appeal to me at the time. I thought them shallow and artificial in many ways, and did not want to become immersed in a society that seemed to be either a pretense, or if not, then living a standard I could never attain.

I reluctantly accepted baptism, not because I wanted to become Mormon, but because I truly believed it was the restored Gospel of Jesus Christ. However humiliating it may be to associate with a social group I had practically nothing in common, it was the right thing to do before God. I told God that I was doing this because of Him, and that I doubted I could live these standards, doubted I could be happy among these odd people, that I did not know if they were really sincere, but that I was. I intended to try to leave such sins behind as I understood I was committing, and to attempt to become part of the artificial life-form known as "Mormon." But I doubted my capacity to continue on to the end. In all this I was absolutely sincere, but completely hopeless about what it would result in over the long run.

I was, in fact, willing to take upon me these obligations as a matter between me and God. However badly it may turn out between me and other Mormons, I expected that as between me and God it would be better than alright. I thought it would please Him.

So I was baptized.

Oddly, upon baptism things changed. A great deal, in fact. What seemed unlikely for me to be able to do under my own capacity, became almost second-nature. These people who I feared I could never fit in with became my brothers and sisters. It took a surprisingly short time and I found that what I feared most was the lightest of burdens to carry. Associating with other Mormons was delightful. I found that I loved the Mormons and I loved being one of them. It ceased to be “them” and “me” but turned into “us” and “we.”

And, by damn, we are a peculiar lot. We’re the oddest people on the planet. Peculiar doesn’t even begin to capture our quirkiness, phobias, longings, hopes, aspirations, misunderstandings, convictions, genius mixed with stupidity, juxtapositions of truth and error, traditions and deep doctrines. We’re a cacophony, really. But underlying it all is a hope that we are on the right track and a conviction that we’re going to please God even if it requires us to offend Him.

I appreciate the faith restored through Joseph at a whole different level than the one which brought me into the fold. It is true. Abidingly and without any failing, the faith restored through Joseph is the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The sad truth is, however, that faith has not been preserved as Joseph brought it back. Even from the time I was baptized in the waning four months of President Lee’s administration until today, the faith has undergone a radical revisionism. Today it isn’t even what President Kimball presided over. It is becoming increasingly altered, bureaucratized, regimented and turning into a religious product managed by an increasingly menacing middle-management which prefers rules and regulations to the Spirit and truth. They manage it as if it is another Fortune 500 company whose product line is religion and religious paraphernalia. The Spirit increasingly withdraws from our councils, our conferences, our private as well as public conversations, because it is grieved, and not many people seem to notice as it does so.

The faith I joined still exists. But it is covered by layers of sediment making it progressively more difficult to breathe life into it. That original faith, the one that attracted me, was always meant to connect the believer to Christ. Directly, and without intermediaries. Each Saint was to be a prophet, because the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, according to John the Beloved.

But I began this process “acting no hypocrisy” and I will finish it remaining so. My “real intent” is before God, and the resistance, opposition and criticism of men will not alter that. Indeed, it cannot. As soon as I respect the opinions of men more than the “full purpose of heart” required of me, I cease to be “willing to take upon me the name of Christ.”

I understand Nephi’s words. I live them. I cannot do otherwise at this point. It is for that reason, therefore, that I have been privileged to receive “the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost;” which has permitted me from time to time to “speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.” It has not been easy. It is certainly not what I wanted when missionaries interrupted a content life, and introduced this inconvenient faith to a reluctant 19-year old. It was not what I expected when the journey began before baptism, nor what I thought would then follow immediately after I was baptized. I find now, as I survey the altered and altering faith practiced by the Church I belong to, there are increasingly more troubles in living and acting with:

- Full purpose of heart
- Acting no hypocrisy
- No deception before God
- Real intent
- Repenting of my sins
- Witnessing unto the Father
- Willing to take upon me the name of Christ

But that will always remain a matter between the Father, the Lord and myself. Nephi lived these things, too. It was for that reason he understood them and was able to set them out with clarity in writing. Light and truth, which is intelligence, only come as a consequence of living it.

I will never stop being Mormon, nor forsake the faith I have accepted. I love associating with the Saints. I'm also glad to not be a part of leadership. I wouldn't want the condemnation that accompanies leading these people in the course that we are currently set. It is better to practice the faith as I understand it, explain it to those who care to listen, support those who try to keep my ward family at peace with one another, and raise my children to respect the light and truth.

I am content. More than content, I am filled with joy and hope for what lies ahead for myself and all those who have the testimony of Jesus.

AUGUST 26, 2010

2 Nephi 31:14

But, behold, my beloved brethren, thus came the voice of the Son unto me, saying: After ye have repented of your sins, and witnessed unto the Father that ye are willing to keep my commandments, by the baptism of water, and have received the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, and can speak with a new tongue, yea, even with the tongue of angels, and after this should deny me, it would have been better for you that ye had not known me.

Nephi first gave us his personal testimony and witness of the principles. Having done so, now he adds the testimony and promise of Christ. Christ's promise and covenant are slightly different than Nephi's formula. But the two are nevertheless in complete harmony.

The "voice of the Son" declares to Nephi, and Nephi testifies to us, that "after ye have repented of you sins" and you have "witnessed unto the Father that ye are willing to keep [Christ's] commandments" by receiving "baptism of water" and then have received "baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost" you will speak with "a new tongue."

How can a man speak with a "new tongue?" What does "a new tongue" mean?

Think of Isaiah's meeting with the Lord in the Temple. He confessed how unworthy his speech had been, and how much regret he felt at having been a man of "unclean lips." (Isa. 6:5). His lips were unclean because of the low, mean, vulgar and unworthy things that occupied daily conversation. Or, as Joseph put it:

How vain and trifling have been our spirits, our conferences, our councils, our meetings, our private as well as public conversations—too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending for the dignified characters of the called and chosen of God, according to the purposes of His will, from before the foundation of the world!
(Letter from Liberty Jail)

To speak with a new tongue is to speak worthily of sacred things. It is to correctly weigh the truth of a matter, know by the power of the Spirit that what is said is true and in conformity with God's will and then to speak it. It is to render sacred the vessel by the things it holds.

To speak with a new tongue is to be able to speak with the tongue of an angel because you have become an angel; or a companion of angels anyway. It is to elevate your thoughts, and then what proceeds forth from your mouth, because of what is in your thoughts. It is to reveal truth by the things you are authorized or commissioned to speak. It is to have a right to speak in the name of the Lord by His consent, His authority, His will. It is to "know, nothing doubting" that He is your Lord (Ether 3:19). It is to say, without hypocrisy, without guile, without hesitation and in truth, that the power of salvation is found in Christ and that you are His. That He has entrusted to you words of life, and that salvation can be found only in Him and His words. It is to have the Word of God within you.

Can an angel fall from grace? Only by being cast out of heaven (2 Nephi 2:17). When an angel falls he becomes a devil. For these it would be better if they had never known Christ, for they have decided to crucify Him anew. Because after having had the Holy Spirit make great things known unto them they have turned against the Lord by their knowing rebellion against Him (D&C 76:35). They are sons of perdition, and the heavens weep over them (D&C 76:26, 31-32). These are they who know the battle is and always has been the Lord's, and they either align themselves with Him or against Him.

You cannot speak with the tongue of angels without having knowledge of certain things given you. The clarity with which you can declare truth is distinct from what others say or claim to know. Light and truth, which is intelligence or the glory of God

(D&C 93:36), is not a mystery but an understood and appreciated experience where darkness has fled and God's own glory has been upon you (Moses 1:11).

This is what the Gospel of Christ was intended to confer. Not just belief, or faith, but knowledge and understanding. The journey back to God's presence was always the outcome intended by the Gospel. The Gospel message is and always has been that you should receive further light and knowledge by conversing with the Lord through the veil. Not through an intermediary, but in your own behalf, face to face.

The entirety of the process may be reduced to just a few words: You are intended to receive baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, which purges you from all sin. After being made clean, every whit, which is suggested by "fire" then through the instrumentality of the "Holy Ghost" which dwells within you you may be brought into remembrance of all things.

These then are the words of both Nephi and Christ. They agree. They are the two witnesses of this doctrine and truth. Therefore, it is so.

AUGUST 27, 2010

2 Nephi 31:15

"And I heard a voice from the Father, saying: Yea, the words of my Beloved are true and faithful. He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved."

The dialogue continues. It is clear the conversation being reported by Nephi is one where both the Son and the Father spoke to Nephi, and contributed to the dialogue. A question was posed about whether Nephi heard this in connection with his vision of Christ's mortal baptism by John the Baptist. He certainly beheld that event (1 Nephi 11:27). However, the testimony and teaching of both the Father and Son regarding baptism, as reported by Nephi in this final sermon, are separate from that event. They are an independent revelation and explanation to Nephi, where both the Father and Son taught the importance of baptism.

We also have the important condition set out of “enduring to the end” as a requisite for salvation. A while ago there was a question about the concept of “enduring to the end” and The Second Comforter. They are directly linked. You cannot have a great season of concentrated effort, followed by abandonment of purpose. If it is in you to abandon the journey, then you will never qualify to receive these blessings. The Lord knows the intent of the heart. The preceding verses describe how the Lord measures the heart. You cannot deceive Him.

The Lord also knows whether it is in you to “endure to the end.” Whether the end has come is irrelevant to Him. He beholds all things, past, present and future (D&C 130:7). Therefore, He knows if you are willing to “endure to the end” before your life has been lived.

Enduring to the end, or the fixed purpose to always serve God so that you may always have His spirit to be with you, is essential to salvation. You claim this is your determination every time you take the sacrament (D&C 20:76–79). Whether you take this commitment seriously or not determines whether you are destined for salvation or not. It also determines if you are qualified to receive His personal ministry and comfort.

The Father declares: “Yea, the words of my Beloved are true and faithful.” The reason Christ is the Father’s “Beloved” is directly related to His words being “true and faithful.” That is, Christ only does and says what He knows represents the Father’s will. He has done this “from the beginning” (3 Nephi 11:11). He represents the “Word” of the Father because you can find in Christ’s words and deeds the very word of the Father (D&C 93:8).

It is this that qualified Christ to be the Redeemer. His words are faithful and true. So are Nephi’s. The words are the Lord’s though they were delivered by a man.

Nephi, having been true and faithful in all things, was able to converse with the Father and the Son through the veil and receive from them further instruction, counsel, warning, and comfort because of the things he learned. This is the pattern for all of us. This is the culminating message of the Gospel of Christ.

AUGUST 27, 2010

2 Nephi 31:16

“And now, my beloved brethren, I know by this that unless a man shall endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God, he cannot be saved.”

What does it mean to “endure to the end?” Is it to put up with all the difficulties of mortality? Are we simply supposed to overcome boredom, irritation, trials of our patience, and the offenses caused by others? Is that what it means to “endure?”

What about “endure to the end in following the example of the Son of the living God?” Is that something different?

What if you see errors and mistakes all around you? Is it “enduring” to keep your mouth shut? Do you need to speak up?

What about the changes that have been made or are being made which alarm you? Is it “enduring” to stay silent in the face of things that suggest this is harmful?

When I first went through the Temple, it was the understood and longstanding practice of the Saints to hold prayer circles in their homes, invoking the “True Order of Prayer” as taught in the Temple. President Kimball sent a letter to the Stake Presidents terminating that practice. I have a copy of that letter. It said that prayer circles were no longer to be practiced outside the Temple—by anyone in the church.

Then in 1990 the True Order of Prayer was altered again, with the elimination of penalties. Thereafter the name changed to the “Order of Prayer,” rather than the “True Order of Prayer.”

Those who went through the Temple before 1990 would know about how to conduct a prayer circle involving the True Order of Prayer. But they were instructed not to do so outside the Temple. Those who went through after 1990 would not know how to conduct a True Order of Prayer circle, because they were not instructed in the Temple in anything other than the Order of Prayer.

It was still possible for those who knew the pre-1990 form to communicate the process in the Temple to others. However, recently there has begun a practice of hushing any discussions seen taking place inside the Celestial Rooms of the Temples.

It is as if those who are in control are opposed to keeping the earlier information, and working to keep it from being preserved by others. Is it “enduring to the end” to watch these changes and say nothing? Or is it “enduring” to actually endure, to preserve, to persevere against opposition and to keep as an enduring feature of the faith, information you received if you went through the Temple before 1990? Does a person who, in all sincerity before God, believes that Isaiah’s prophecy warned against this (Isa. 24:5), “endure” if he remains silent? Or must he speak up? If so, how and to who? Which is enduring? Which is enduring to the end in following the example of the Son of the Living God? What example did Christ set in relation to this kind of a conflict? Did Christ submit, or resist authority? If He did both, how does one endure while appropriately weighing those things they will submit to, and those things they will resist?

What about Nephi's warning that you "cannot be saved" if you fail to do the right kind of "enduring" to the end? If salvation itself hinges upon solving this riddle, then how carefully must you weigh what you resist and what you submit to?

It is for this reason we work out our salvation before God as Nephi has explained, acting no hypocrisy, with real intent, having faith in God, but also with fear and trembling (Mormon 9:27, also Philip. 2:12).

Indeed, God has given us a test worthy of a God. And only those worthy of becoming among the gods will be able to solve the riddle. Because only they will humble themselves, come with a contrite spirit and broken heart to offer upon the altar a sacrifice worthy of being accepted. Others will proceed in ignorance and arrogance to proudly proclaim: "I know my culture is true!" "I know all is well in Zion!" "I follow a broad and safe mainstream into a great and spacious building where there is peace, pride, success, prosperity and assurance that I am saved while all around me there are those who will be cast down to hell!" Or similar such nonsense... Warned over Evangelical gibberish, with a vague Mormonesque vocabulary applied to it. Having a form of godliness, but without power. This new form of ungodliness will not be lacking in body, parts and passions, for the image of the idol raised will be the very image of the person looking in the mirror. They will think themselves destined to rule and reign over principalities, dominions, heights, depths and others. They are their own idols! What irony it all invokes! It must make the devil look up to heaven and laugh still. (Moses 7:26). Perhaps we ought to see some humor in it as well....Or, since we're speaking of the loss of men's souls, maybe it can never be humorous. Only tragedy. Only disappointment. Only foolishness.

Where is the hope? Is there none? Yes, in repentance! Changing our course! Remembering God again! Restoring what has been lost! Returning and repenting! That's right! And Nephi has invited us to do just that.

So "enduring to the end in following the example of the Son of the living God" is not easy. Even understanding the meaning of these words is challenging. Thank you Nephi. You have proven yet again how prayerful we all must be. Let us, therefore, repent!

AUGUST 27, 2010

Spencer W. Kimball 1978

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS
OFFICE OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH 84143

May 3, 1978

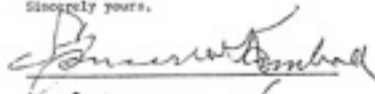

TO ALL STAKE PRESIDENTS AND BISHOPS:

Over the years special permission has been given from time to time for special prayer circles to be held either in the temples of the Church or in special rooms designated for that purpose in stake, ward, or other buildings.

Because of the increasing number of requests for such prayer circles, viewed in light of the rapid growth of the Church, and because of the complications that holding prayer circles in temples on Sunday have created and their tendency to take the participants away from their families and their other Church responsibilities, the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve has decided that all such prayer circles, whether held in the temples or outside the temples, be discontinued immediately.

However, recognizing the value of these prayer circles in developing spirituality, commitment, and unity among those participating in them, we suggest that in lieu of such prayer circles, stake leaders may wish to consider the following: (1) that periodically stake leaders and their wives attend a temple session together in connection with which arrangements be made with the temple presidency for the prayer circle held during the endowment session to be composed of several stake leaders and their wives; and (2) that periodically stake leaders and their companions be called together in a special meeting where opportunity be given to those present to express themselves by way of testimony or exhortation.

Sincerely yours,

The First Presidency

AUGUST 27, 2010

2 Nephi 31:17

Wherefore, do the things which I have told you I have seen that your Lord and your Redeemer should do; for, for this cause have they been shown unto me, that ye might know the gate by which ye should enter. For the gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water; and then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost.

You must “do the things which I have told you I have seen that your Lord and your Redeemer should do.” You must “follow Him.” There is no other way nor name given under heaven to obtain salvation (Mosiah 5:8).

It was for this reason Nephi was “shown” these things. The Lord and His Father taught Nephi so he could in turn teach others, including us. The message was intended to save many, not just Nephi. But we must give heed to the message when we hear it.

The “gate by which ye should enter is repentance and baptism by water.” You must repent first. Then, having repented, receive baptism by water. When this is done, “then cometh a remission of your sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost.”

Without the “fire” to purge the sacrifice upon the altar, it is not cleansed. It cannot become holy unless exposed to that fire.

But note—this is automatic. It is not by the laying on of hands. The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost is not required in this teaching. Nephi, with elaboration from the Father and the Son, is teaching that this is an event that follows the process of “repentance and baptism by water.” That is, the ordinance of baptism, when accompanied by repentance and done right, is the reason for this event.

Laying on of hands is for “the gift of the Holy Ghost” so there may be a companion and guide for a person. This is an ordinance. It is also the moment one is confirmed a member of the church. But it is not necessarily co-equal with receiving “fire and the Holy Ghost” as described here. There is nothing that excludes it from being coincidental in time, however. They may happen at the same moment. That is, after baptism, and while receiving the laying on of hands, one may receive both the gift of the Holy Ghost, and also fire and the Holy Ghost. As a result one is renewed in the manner described in this chapter. They are not co-equal.

Laying on of hands does not appear to be an ordinance in the Book of Mormon until the coming of Christ in 3 Nephi. The only potential exception is found in Alma 31:36, where Alma “clapped his hands upon them who were with him” and they received the Holy Ghost. This is similar to the Lord “breathing” the Holy Ghost upon His disciples (John 20:22). They were instructed to lay on hands, and would perform that act rather than breathing upon those who were to receive the Holy Ghost. The ordinance is different from “clapping” or from “breathing” and involves the process we follow in the church today (D&C 33:15).

The baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost promised here is given without man’s involvement, comes from heaven, is promised by both the Father and the Son. It is a signal of redemption, purification and holiness. It is included in the “gate” for entering into God’s presence. For God is a “consuming fire” and those who enter into that presence must be able to endure that fire (Heb. 12:29; see also Deu. 4:24). Without the capacity to do so, a person would be consumed by the flames (Lev. 10:1–2). The fire and the Holy Ghost are also given as a sign to the recipient that they may know it is safe for them to enter into God’s presence and not be consumed. In earlier versions of the First Vision, Joseph described the “pillar of light” as a “pillar of fire” which gradually descended. He wondered if the trees would be consumed as it descended, but seeing they were not he thought it safe for him to be exposed to it as well. When it fell upon him, the vision opened up and he saw the Father and the Son.

Christ also entered into this glorious light on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–2).

We are to do as Nephi instructs, “do the things which I have told you I have seen that your Lord and your Redeemer should do; for, for this cause have they been shown unto me, that ye might know the gate by which ye should enter.”

We live below the standard Christ set for us. We needn't. Have faith. Press forward feasting on His words. You can and will find Him there.

COMMENTS:

Eric · AUGUST 28, 2010 AT 11:05 AM

No need to post this however, I think that your premise is incorrect unless I misunderstand the following scriptures.

D&C 20:

41 And to confirm those who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, according to the scriptures;

42 And to teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the church;

43 And to confirm the church by the laying on of the hands, and the giving of the Holy Ghost;

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 28, 2010 AT 12:20 PM

Eric:

Your point deserves a response: Section 20 was given at the organizational meeting for the Church on April 6, 1830, instructing on the manner for conducting ordinances in the Church. As of that moment, no one would thereafter become a Latter-day Saint without conforming to the system put into place, including laying on hands for the Holy Ghost. If, therefore, after that time anyone was to receive the blessings, they would receive it in that formalized system.

Nephi is writing in another day, under a different system. They are operating under the Law of Moses during Nephi's time. Yet the higher law was nonetheless accessible because they received and handed down the higher priesthood among themselves. Hence Alma's teachings about the higher priesthood. (You can't teach about what you don't understand. You can't understand what you have not experienced. At least not in the manner in which Alma is able to understand and expound upon it).

After April 6, 1830 anyone who receives "fire and the Holy Ghost" will have been baptized and confirmed into The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. However, these are still not co-extensive. Meaning it is possible to be confirmed into the Church and yet not have received the experience. Hence the importance of Nephi's teachings in helping to illustrate the difference between the experience and the ordinance which we now perform.

You must seek for and obtain this experience. Ordinances turn keys, or point you toward the event. But the event is between you and God, not you and an officiator.

AUGUST 29, 2010

2 Nephi 31:18

And then are ye in this strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life; yea, ye have entered in by the gate; ye have done according to the commandments of the Father and the Son; and ye have received the Holy Ghost, which witnesses of the Father and the Son, unto the fulfilling of the promise which he hath made, that if ye entered in by the way ye should receive.

This is the path to "eternal life." It is "strait and narrow," but it is the way to eternal life. What is eternal life?

Why is the path "strait and narrow?" Is it to deprive you of something, or is it to direct you toward the only path where abundance can be obtained? If you become connected to the “true vine,” are you then able to “bear fruit?” (John 15:4–7). If you bear fruit, what can you ask of Him that He will not give to you? (John 15:7). What does that mean? Have you read Beloved Enos? If so you will understand what is being discussed.

By doing as the Father and Son have asked, you “receive the Holy Ghost.” What does it mean to have the Holy Ghost dwell within you? (D&C 130:22). How does a spirit dwell inside a person? How does that spirit become “Holy” and the third member of the Godhead? If the scriptures say, and Christ taught that those who receive God’s word are gods, what does it mean? (John 10:34–36).

Did you notice the Father and Son promise the Holy Ghost, and when you receive it the Holy Ghost bears witness of the Father and Son? The first promise to you the last, and the last bears witness of the first. In one eternal round, the doctrine of Christ includes all members of the Godhead combined into a witness that will come to you, take up residence within you, and make you a vessel of the promises fulfilled. You are to return home, and take your abode again. Or, more correctly, permit Them to take up Their abode with you (John 14:23).

You become the record of God’s dealings with mankind. You become the promise of God’s presence, for you fulfill “the promise which He hath made.”

You receive the “record of heaven” or, more correctly, the Record of Heaven, for it is a proper name and title (Moses 6:61). When it has come to you, then this Record of Heaven will abide with you. You will be the one who possess the “peaceable things of immortal glory.” You will know “the truth of all things” for it will reside within you (Moses 6:61). You will understand wisdom, for she will be with you. You will know mercy, possess truth, and be capable of performing judgment, for the judgment you judge will not be yours but will be given to you (3 Nephi 27:27). God will dwell within you.

When He appears to you, you will see Him as He is, for you will be at last like Him (1 John 3:1–2). If you can understand this, then you will purify yourself to receive it (1 John 3:3). For the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost will purge and purify, refining you with that holy fire (Mal. 3:2).

This doctrine of Christ will bring you in contact with God. You were meant to return to the Family you came from. It is the homecoming you have always felt was needed. You do not belong here. There is something higher, something more holy calling to you. It is not found in an institution, or program, or award, or office. It is only found in God, who is your home.

The doctrine of Christ is the doctrine of God's return to be with you and abide with you. It is Him coming to sup with you. He has been knocking at the door all these years seeking entry into your life (Rev. 3:20). If you let Him come in, He will prepare a throne for you (Rev. 3:21–22). Only those who have descended will be permitted to rise. Only those who humble themselves can be exalted (Matt. 23:12). While all those who rule rather than serve, will be disappointed. These are they who declare themselves worthy to be followed and insist they can use compulsion. They pretend to be on the Lord's errand while they are on their own. They crave dominion over others but will be cast down. They will be denied priesthood, and be left begging for water to cool their tongues for the torment of it all (D&C 121:37 and Luke 16:23–24).

How much better is it, then, for us to repent? It seems foolish to do otherwise. I find I'm persuaded by Nephi.

AUGUST 29, 2010

Don't Over-think Things

There are some brilliant comments from some of you. Profound comments, even. But you must be careful about over-thinking things. Doctrine is not to be understood as an academic or scholarly undertaking. (Remember the chapter in Eighteen Verses on Moroni 10:5.)

It is supposed to be understood in the doing (John 7:17). When you have done it, as Nephi has, then you will be able to explain the doctrine. To attempt to have a command of the doctrine without having done the will of the Father is to always be left without understanding. It is also not necessary to be able to fully expound the doctrine before doing it. It is necessary to take action consistent with the invitation offered to you.

Your mind can work at cross purposes. Remember the chapter on "Becoming as a Child" in The Second Comforter. In order to go forward you must go back. Simplicity is at the heart of God's offer to commune with you.

COMMENTS:

krichens · AUGUST 29, 2010 AT 6:37 PM

Yes we shouldn't overthink things but it's easier to know when you are overthinking vs not thinking enough once you are on the other side. Its like learning a new software program, if you don't know the program then the documentation doesn't make sense; but once you learn the program the documentation now makes sense but you don't really need it because you know the program.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 29, 2010 AT 7:37 PM

That software analogy is really on point. Experience leads to understanding. But understanding alone cannot ever give you experience.

Anonymous · AUGUST 29, 2010 AT 8:36 PM

So if understanding can never give us experience than how can those people who are raised in the millennium ever really understand evil? & how to fight it & stay strong around it, if they never experienced it around them?

Will the faithful from the 1st 6000 years of history be stronger & more valiant in eternity than those people in the millennium because they stayed righteous amid evil & had more experience with evil & thus learned more?

Anonymous · AUGUST 29, 2010 AT 9:37 PM

Anon @ 8:36...

I've wondered the same thing and also in relation to the doctrine that children under 8 who die are automatically saved/exalted in the Celestial Kingdom. Why would someone ever give a healing blessing to a child, then? Wouldn't that be such a disservice? Or even against the Lord's will, since what more can you have then exaltation?

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 29, 2010 AT 9:44 PM

Read "The Great Competition" in Ten Parables. None will escape testing.

AUGUST 30, 2010

2 Nephi 31:19–20

And now, my beloved brethren, after ye have gotten into this strait and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for ye have not come thus far save it were by the word of Christ with unshaken faith relying wholly upon the merits of him who is mighty to save. Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life. in him, “Once on the narrow path, are you done? Have you “arrived?” Is there “rest?”

No, you are on the path, but you cannot turn back. If you even look back, you risk moving on an uneven path (Luke 9:62).

You could not get this far if you hadn't followed “the word of Christ” and therefore you can only continue by following the word of Christ along the journey.

Your path is not just based on Christ's words, but also “with unshaken faith in Him.” What is “unshaken faith?”

What does it mean to rely “wholly upon the merits of Him who is mighty to save?” Can you take any pride in what you have done? Can you boast of something about yourself? (Mosiah 2:22–25).

What does it mean to “press forward with a steadfastness in Christ?” How would “steadfastness” be lived? What is a “perfect brightness of hope?” I've defined that kind of “hope” in Eighteen Verses.

How does any person come into possession of “a love of God and of all men?” Would that come from within, or as a gift from God? Moroni prayed for the gentiles to receive grace that they might obtain charity (Ether 12:36). The Lord replied that if the gentiles lack charity it would not cause any loss to Moroni, for he was saved (Ether 12:37). [Once again reflecting the pessimism which the latter-day gentiles are consistently viewed by the Book of Mormon.]

Why “press forward?”

What does it mean for us to be “feasting upon the word of Christ?” Is “feasting” something more than participating in a gospel doctrine class discussion once a week? What would it require for you to “feast” upon the “word of Christ?” Is scripture study alone enough? Would you need to receive anything directly from Him to be included in the “feast?” How would that be obtained?

Did you notice once again we are reminded we must “endure to the end?” Once again, you must determine how “enduring” is to be accomplished, and what “enduring” will require.

If, however, you do these things then “behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.” Notice the promise of eternal life comes from the office of “the Father.” It is because this final step comes from the authority to make you a son. His office is the only one which can declare “this day have I begotten thee.” (Psalms 2:7).

AUGUST 30, 2010

2 Nephi 31:21

And now, behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God. And now, behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. Amen.

This is “the way” to salvation. Nephi adds: “and there is none other way.” What does it mean there “is none other way?” Does that mean any religious system, institution, process, explanation or additional doctrine cannot save you? Is it true that you either enter in through this method or you cannot be saved? Is the purpose of the other rites, rituals, ordinances and teachings merely to bring you into this one true “way and there is none other way?” Or do you need to look for additional things, helps, ordinances, confirmations, and blessings to be conferred?

What of the other Gospel rites? They did come from God, didn’t they? How are we to understand the relationship between other ordinances, even “higher ordinances” and this “doctrine of Christ” being explained by Nephi?

Clearly the “doctrine of Christ” is intended to give you the underlying basis for all salvation. There is no other “name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God” apart from Jesus Christ. He is the one who, by His obedience and sacrifice, put power into the plan of salvation. We know this to be true from everything declared by the prophets of God. But what about “this is the way; and there is none other way.” What does that mean? Does it exclude other ordinances or processes? Does it make the Law of Moses no longer binding upon Nephi and his posterity?

Clearly following Nephi’s ministry, his descendants did not abandon the Law of Moses (See, e.g., Jarom 1:5; Alma 25:15). And so, if there is “none other way,” it did not mean that the Nephites were to abandon practice of the ordinances then in effect. Nor does it mean that we abandon the ordinances now in effect in our day.

It is not that the ordinances are essential, but that the purpose of the ordinances are essential. The underlying meaning is essential. The “doctrine of Christ” becomes possible to understand, live and receive as you follow the ordinances. They are “helps” to bring you into this correct path. You will honor them, conform to them, seek for them, in order that you may inherit the blessings of the “doctrine of Christ.”

Why are ordinances instituted? They are to bring you to the point where you inherit in your body and spirit these great blessings of the “doctrine of Christ.” They prepare you. Their effect is to qualify you, instruct you, advance you toward this goal of receiving the blessings found in the doctrine of Christ as expounded by Nephi in this chapter. Once ordinances have been adopted, it is then unlikely you can ignore them and receive what is promised by the “doctrine of Christ.” How can you refuse what is offered and still accept the underlying gift? How can you mix ingratitude and gratitude?

Is it important, therefore, to keep the ordinances intact? If changed does some of the communication involved in preparing you to receive the “doctrine of Christ” lose something?

For example, without the shedding of blood there can be no covenant. Christ’s blood is the culminating event which shed blood to activate a covenant between God and man. However, even after Christ’s sacrifice, we are still required to offer sacrifice, and even the return of animal sacrifice will happen at some point in this final dispensation. The Law of Moses was fulfilled and will not return. However, the sacrifice of blood by animals which was before the Law of Moses will return. As Joseph Smith taught:

These [animal] sacrifices, as well as every ordinance belonging to the Priesthood, will, when the Temple of the Lord shall be built, and the sons of Levi be purified, be fully restored and attended to in all their powers, ramifications, and blessings. This ever did and ever will exist when the powers of the Melchizedek Priesthood are sufficiently manifest; else how can the restitution of all things spoken of by the Holy Prophets be brought to pass. It is not to be understood that the law of Moses will be established again with all its rites and variety of ceremonies; this has never been spoken of by the prophets; but those things which existed prior to Moses’ day, namely, sacrifice, will be continued. (TPJS, p. 173, DHC 4:212)

When the penalties existed in the Temple ceremonies of our dispensation, we were reminded of the shedding of blood required for a covenant. When removed, we lose some of that memory. How would penalties involving the shedding of blood prepare people for the return of animal sacrifice? Would it help remind them that shedding blood is required to establish a covenant? Even this final Dispensation of the Fullness of Time could not be an effective covenant without the shedding of blood to seal the testament or covenant (D&C 135:3).

Does the Gospel of Jesus Christ require the sacrifice of all things? (We've explained this before in relation to The Lectures on Faith.) If so, then how do we obtain the blessings we desire from the hand of God without being willing to make a similar sacrifice? If it is required, then how do we qualify to receive this baptism of fire spoken of by Nephi that will purge us from all sin and permit us to speak with a new tongue? How is this sacrifice made apart from the irrevocable commitment made within yourself to "endure to the end" by laying upon the altar everything you have, even your own life if necessary, to build up His kingdom? How, in a fallen world filled with sin, in a day where there is no sacrifice or consecration being made by others; how do you do that? What does the "doctrine of Christ" allow you to do without regard to the sins and errors you find all around you? Even if all the world is content to remain Telestial, or some few encourage only a Terrestrial law be followed, can you still find and live the "doctrine of Christ?" Does Nephi's teachings require you to be anything or anyone special or noteworthy in this life? Can you do this in private, between you and God? Can you follow the "doctrine of Christ" by what you think, ponder, pray, say, do and believe?

This statement, which concludes the exposition on "the doctrine of Christ" is concluded using the names of "the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. Amen." Although only a few will recognize this, it is a formula used when using the sealing authority. If you are aware of this, then you would realize what Nephi has done is declared that he possesses the Patriarchal Priesthood authority, which invariably includes the power to seal. He will mention “sealing” his testimony again before he concludes. But if you know this is a formula employed in connection with this authority, you will recognize it. Within the ordinances of the church, we use this formula when baptizing and again when sealing a marriage in the Temple. All other intermediate ordinances are done “in the name of Jesus Christ.”

COMMENTS :

Steve • AUGUST 30, 2010 AT 3:44 PM

Denver said:

For example, without the shedding of blood there can be no covenant.

Steve:

I wonder what this says about the loss of the penalties. Without the penalties and at least the promise of shed blood, are there no covenants made in the endowment?

Similarly, without the anointings in the initiatories, are there no true ordinances performed there?

Sad. I live in sad days. I hope for hope to return.

Denver Snuffer • AUGUST 30, 2010 AT 4:10 PM

That's what the Book of Mormon allows. And that is why the Church was under condemnation: for not remembering the covenant found in the Book of Mormon. So, really, if you awaken to this opportunity (which few gentiles are going to do) the opportunity is yours.

We'll keep going and see what glories the Book of Mormon is able to bestow. :)

Anonymous · AUGUST 30, 2010 AT 8:01 PM

Denver:

The baptismal ordinance done in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is virtually always done by one not holding the sealing authority. Notwithstanding you say using the name/titles of the Godhead indicates one who holds the sealing power. I am perplexed.

Denver Snuffer · AUGUST 30, 2010 AT 8:11 PM

Baptism has been specifically authorized to be performed “in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” That authorization came from the Lord, by revelation (D&C 20:73). That authorization is important and allows the formula to be used. Then, in the Temple, it is once again prescribed for use. I point it out deliberately, and knowing that the authorization of the formula is deliberate, noteworthy and important to consider as a matter of meaning.

CHAPTER 5
2 Nephi 32

AUGUST 31, 2010

2 Nephi 32:1–2

And now, behold, my beloved brethren, I suppose that ye ponder somewhat in your hearts concerning that which ye should do after ye have entered in by the way. But, behold, why do ye ponder these things in your hearts? Do ye not remember that I said unto you that after ye had received the Holy Ghost ye could speak with the tongue of angels? And now, how could ye speak with the tongue of angels save it were by the Holy Ghost?

It is the program of the Gospel that communication and understanding of God's will should be obtained through revelation. That revelation comes from contact with, and communication by, the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is able to tell you "all things" (Moses 6:61; Moroni 10:4).

You don't need another source once you are in contact with the Holy Ghost. It possesses the "record of heaven" (Moses 6:61).

Nephi is assuring us that we can come into possession of the fullness of truth by the means he has been explaining as the "doctrine of Christ." As a central, active part of that doctrine, the line of communication between you and God is opened. It is another reminder of counsel found in Deuteronomy 30:11–14:

For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

Forget all the cultural assumptions and extras you hang on to. Leave them all behind and keep it simple:

You were a spirit before you were born (Abraham 3:22–28). You were there when some were chosen to be “rulers,” or in other words, teachers (2 Nephi 5:19). You have within you a spirit that was in that group. You saw and participated in what went on, and have that somewhere still inside you. It is kept from you by the “veil of flesh” now covering your spirit (Heb. 10:20). Somewhere within you lies the “record of heaven.” Or more correctly, the Record of Heaven (Moses 6:61). If you gain access to it, it has the capacity to teach you the “truth of all things.” (Moses 6:61). Within it is such an abundance of truth that the things of God are not hidden from you, neither far off. It is not in heaven, so that you ask: who will go to heaven to bring it to us. It is not beyond the sea that you should ask who can go to bring it to us? But it is very close to you, in your own mouth, in your own heart, that you can do what is asked of you (Deut. 30:11–14, above).

Hence the saying of Christ that the Comforter will bring things to your remembrance (John 14:26).

Christ taught the kingdom of God is within you (Luke 17:20–21).

Why is it that the body is animated, with power of thought and communication, alive and vital while there is a spirit within it? But when the spirit departs, what then of the body? The power to live and breathe and move and do according to your will is gone at that point. But from whence came that power? (Mosiah 2:21). If it is God who is “lending you that power” then how closely are you connected to God? How immediate is His presence within you?

If you can gain access to God, will you need to go out, or will you instead need to go within?

Our minds are corrupted. I’ve spent time dealing with the corrosive influence of cultures from Babylon to today in Nephi’s Isaiah. All that must be “ground to dust” and blown away (Daniel 2:34–35). That will occur within you. You are the battleground where the conflict is being fought. You are potentially the Temple of God (1 Cor. 3:16).

Awake and arise! Come to yourself and realize who you are. This “doctrine of Christ” will teach you all things you must know for life and salvation. But you ought not look to another to find what you already have. You must instead repent and return to God, who is your home.

AUGUST 31, 2010

2 Nephi 32:3

Angels speak by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore, they speak the words of Christ. Wherefore, I said unto you, feast upon the words of Christ; for behold, the words of Christ will tell you all things what ye should do.

Nephi makes these three things equal:

1. The power of the Holy Ghost to give words, which

2. Are the same as what angels would speak, which in turn
3. Are the same as the words of Christ.

Holy Ghost/words of angels/words of Christ. They are all the same as “the words of Christ” which will “tell you all things what ye should do.”

If you will “feast upon the words of Christ” then you will know “all things what ye should do.”

How do you unlock this power that potentially exists inside you? What tools have been given to us to receive access to this great inner record of truth?

Why are we given ordinances? If we will follow them and receive them, what do ordinances allow the Lord to open up for us?

You know if you are doing as you should. You cannot lie to yourself. You cannot deceive yourself about whether you will follow God with full purpose of heart, acting no deception, repenting of your sins, and with real intent (2 Nephi 31:13). If you do these things there is a law irrevocably decreed which permits you to receive what is offered (D&C 130:20–21). You actually know if you have offered the correct sacrifice (Lecture 6, in Lectures on Faith discussed here). Just as you know when you are unworthy before Him (Mormon 9:4–5), you also know when your confidence before God grows naturally inside you and you follow the path to return to the light (D&C 121:45–46). It is extraordinary and even miraculous, but it is also absolutely natural.

The conditions were set before the foundation of the world and all you must do to obtain these blessings is to follow the path. You KNOW if you are in the right way. You cannot lie to God, and as we have seen in the discussion of the preceding verses, God is within you.

Do you keep the commandments? Why? Are you doing so with real intent, following the “doctrine of Christ” or just to be “seen of men?” (Matt. 6:1, 5). When you do these things in secret, your Father (and you) know it and then come the rewards of having your heart right with God (Matt. 6:4, 6).

At the end of the long search into all the universe to find God, you will discover the search leads you back to what was inside you all along. You came from Him, and He is with you. But to find Him you must return. The scriptures and teachings of Christ are filled with this journey and the battleground has always been within you. You need to remember. The Holy Ghost, the third member of the godhead, dwells inside you, provided you will receive it.

The laws irrevocably decreed are the very principles which permeate life itself. You are not separate from this “doctrine of Christ” but a living embodiment of it. If you live it, you will prove it. You are here to be proven (Abraham 3:25). What have you determined to prove with your life?

Nephi spoke in plainness to us. He could not find simpler language to describe this process. I have tried to be plain using other scriptures and language. But the great lesson can be reduced to this: Do what you have been taught. When you do it, the light will increase within you. That light is truth. It is intelligence, or light and truth, or the power of God (D&C 93:36). All you must do to activate that light, gain that intelligence, and behold the glory of God is to keep His commandments (D&C 93:28). If you want to receive a “fullness” then the immediate door through which you pass is to keep the commandments (D&C 93:20).

Most importantly, you must:

follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ. (2 Ne. 31:13)

You alone will know if you have done this. Or rather, you and the Lord will know. When you are satisfied that there is no hypocrisy and no deception between you and God, that you have come to Him with real intent and repenting of your sins, witnessing through the ordinances (baptism and sacrament) that you will take upon you the name of Christ, then you qualify. If you do not, then you are not qualified.

I am completely satisfied that the people who gain such access, receive the blessings, or obtain a hope in Christ are ordinary people. They are not distinguished by their great intellect or powerful positions. They are typified only by the singleness of their heart and true devotion. There is not a whit of difference between what they believe and how they live. They do not excuse themselves from doing what they know to be right, even if it is painful, uncomfortable, or something they would never do on their own. They invariably do what the “words of Christ” bid them to do. No matter the price, they will follow Him; not a leader. Indeed, almost all of His servants are at odds with leadership. You know how completely He was at odds if you have read Come, Let Us Adore Him. To follow Him is to have that same contention between you and the larger religious community of any age or dispensation. Stop trying to please men and start following Christ.

I do not know what more can be said than Nephi has been saying. Let’s press on.

SEPTEMBER 1, 2010

2 Nephi 32:4–5

Wherefore, now after I have spoken these words, if ye cannot understand them it will be because ye ask not, neither do ye knock; wherefore, ye are not brought into the light, but must perish in the dark. For behold, again I say unto you that if ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do.

Comprehension of the “doctrine of Christ” is not based on command of a vocabulary or mastery of an argument. It is based on gathering light. Light is gathered by heed (obedience) and diligence alone (D&C 130:19). By following the light you have received already, you grow in light (D&C 50:24). This process leads to the “perfect day” where the light has chased away all darkness. This is how we, like Christ, can grow from grace to grace until we also receive a fullness (D&C 93:20).

If you do not do this, then you may acquire a vocabulary with which to discuss the subject, but you will not have the light to comprehend it. Light can be shining all around you, but if you do not acquire light within yourself by your actions, you cannot comprehend the light (See, e.g., D&C 6:21; D&C 10:58; D&C 34:2; D&C 39:2; D&C 45:7; and D&C 88:49).

If it perplexes you, then ask God for understanding. He will tell you what to do. Follow His instruction. In this way you qualify to receive further light and knowledge by conversing with the Lord. He knows perfectly what you lack, and by the Holy Ghost within you will tell you what you must do.

If you will not humble yourself and ask for this to be made known to you, then you cannot be brought into the light. Then the only result will be to perish in the dark.

If you will follow the steps with the required real intent, acting no deception before God as you do, then you will receive the Holy Ghost. It will be unlocked to tell you what you lack and what you need to do. This inner light is a powerful source which can literally tell “you all things what ye should do.”

It is in the doing that you find the learning. It is in the act of following Him that you learn to be like Him. Obedience is the means by which you gather light. The commandments are revelations of the inner person you ought to become. They are how you grow in the flesh to comprehend God in the Spirit. Your body is a veil that keeps you from Him. By subordinating the will of the flesh to the will of the Spirit, you gain light and truth.

Do it to understand it.

Once you understand you will be able to tell when someone speaks with the power of the Spirit words of eternal life, or if they are, as Nephi puts it: “perishing in the dark.” There are many who claim to speak on the Lord’s behalf who declare false, vain and foolish things. While they will be held to account for that, the point is not to condemn them. They may yet see the light, and repent and return. The point is that you must avoid being misled by those who would lead you astray. The few humble followers of Christ are warned that they will be taught the precepts of men and must use caution to avoid being misled (2 Nephi 28:14). We’ve discussed that already.

The proportions and the balances required to see things aright are too fine, too subtle and too difficult to put into words. They are harmony. Nephi’s teachings are woven into one great whole.

There are not isolated strains to be taken from the great whole and then given undeserved importance. They must fit together. You can only accomplish that when you see the whole by the light of the Holy Ghost within you.

Nephi is both pleading and warning in these two verses. He wants you to go to the source and be directed from there. To have the words of Christ available to you. To hear the words of angels as you draw near to the light. If you do not, then it is because you refuse to follow the steps he has described.

You must act to know. Without following through in your heart (which you cannot ever deceive) you can't draw near to the light. The discussion in The Second Comforter walks through line upon line that walk back into the light, and ultimately into Christ's presence. It is a modern manual to find Him.

SEPTEMBER 1, 2010

2 Nephi 32:6

Behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and there will be no more doctrine given until after he shall manifest himself unto you in the flesh. And when he shall manifest himself unto you in the flesh, the things which he shall say unto you shall ye observe to do.

This is the totality of the matter: the doctrine of Christ. Receive the Comforter and it will tell you what you must do.

It will in turn lead you to The Second Comforter. He will then take you further still.

What does it mean that Christ "shall manifest Himself unto you in the flesh?" Is this speaking of the time when Christ appeared to the Nephites (3 Nephi 11:1-41, where He did declare doctrine)? Or is this speaking of Him appearing to each individual? (John 14:23 and D&C 130:3) Is it both?

What does it mean that “the things which He shall say unto you shall ye observe to do?” What takes primacy—your culture, respected peers, leaders of society or government or church, or the Lord and His sayings? Why?

What does it mean that “no more doctrine” will be given until Christ “shall manifest Himself unto you in the flesh?” Was there more doctrine given to later Nephite prophets before Christ appeared in 3rd Nephi? What about the very next writer-prophet of the Book of Mormon and his testimony of revelation from Christ? (See Jacob 1:4, 6; Jacob 4:6; Jacob 7:5) Was his ministry one that included the Lord “manifesting Himself unto [Jacob] in the flesh?” (See 2 Nephi 11:3)

How and what is to be revealed? Although you may receive Christ “in the flesh,” does it mean you may tell others all things you learn as a result? Or are you constrained and limited in what and how you measure to others? Who decides what is appropriate to include in your testimony, you or the Lord? (Alma 12:9–10)

If “what He shall say unto you shall ye observe to do,” then what of criticism? What of those who will not accept your testimony? What if your testimony of Christ is dismissed as merely your “claims?” What if things done in meekness and humility are misconstrued and said instead to be done to get notice and popularity? Should you expect to be without criticism?

What does it mean that “the things which he shall say unto you shall ye observe to do?” Does it mean others will even understand why you do what you do? Does it mean it will be welcomed? Does it mean you will have some credential the world will recognize? Or will only those who hear the Master’s voice respond? (John 10:27) If it is the Master’s voice which should be heard, then how do you avoid introducing your own voice in His place? What if the words are a rebuke or warning? Should you hesitate? (3 Nephi 30:1–2)

If you only have your testimony to offer, how likely is it to be persuasive in this world where rank, position, acclaim and popularity define influence? What if, as Bob Dylan penned: “All I got is this red guitar, three chords and the truth.” What then? Is the truth resilient enough to endure in this hurricane of deceit and worldliness? It will, even if only with a few.

At your core, you love and respect Jesus Christ. When given the choice before your were born, you accepted and agreed to follow Him. That is why you are here. If you followed Him then, you ought to be willing to follow Him now. If you can find Him. I believe that anyone who can find the Master’s words, no matter how unlikely a source by which they come, will follow them. The only means authorized to declare them is through persuasion, gentleness, meekness, love and pure knowledge (D&C 121:41). As it turns out, that is enough. Those who have kept the Light of Christ shining within them will recognize His voice (John 10:27).

SEPTEMBER 2, 2010

2 Nephi 32:7

And now I, Nephi, cannot say more; the Spirit stoppeth mine utterance, and I am left to mourn because of the unbelief, and the wickedness, and the ignorance, and the stiffneckedness of men; for they will not search knowledge, nor understand great knowledge, when it is given unto them in plainness, even as plain as word can be.

Nephi has reached the limit of what he can say. He has alluded to The Second Comforter, or the appearance of Christ to you in the flesh, but then his message ends. He “cannot say more.” But he has told you that when Christ appears to you that you should do what Christ tells you to do.

Then Nephi laments our unbelief, wickedness, ignorance and stiffneckedness. You have already been told that in the vocabulary of the Book of Mormon the word “unbelief” means that you do not understand correct doctrine. You accept false notions, or your understanding is so incomplete as to make it wrong.

What is “wicked” about not following the “doctrine of Christ” so that you can receive the tongue of an angel? What is wicked about not pressing forward in the light of the Holy Ghost to the point where you receive Christ in the flesh? Why would that failing be “wicked?” (D&C 88:33).

Why are we “ignorant?” Is it because of our lack of learning or sophistication, or instead because of it? Studied ignorance is the most indelible kind. It prevents someone from ever casting away unbelief. It enshrines unbelief.

These conditions are all culminated by “stiffneckedness.” Meaning that we are not only in error, but we are decidedly committed to remaining so. We won’t budge. Won’t humble ourselves and ask the Lord to remove our scales of darkness. We just remain devoted disciples of unbelief, leading in turn to our wickedness, borne upon the shoulders of our ignorance. What a spectacle we are when seen in the light of the Holy Ghost—that is, through the eyes of a prophet like Nephi.

What is interesting is this comment comes at the very end of Nephi’s ministry. It is an aged prophet carving his last message targeted to the last day audience of first gentiles, then secondarily the remnant, and finally the Jews. And to this latter-day audience beginning with us, Nephi is rebuking us. It must be because of his love for us. It must be motivated by the love of Christ, because it follows immediately after explaining to us the “doctrine of Christ.” So whether it seems to be the case or not, this is a loving, kind, light-filled warning from someone who knows what we lack.

Soberly, however, this rebuke should be compared to the rebuke he leveled at Laman and Lemuel. He told them to stop debating the meaning of a revelation given to their father, and start asking God for answers. Compare Nephi’s earlier warning and rebuke to his brothers with this verse addressed to us:

And they said: Behold, we cannot understand the words which our father hath spoken concerning the natural branches of the olive-tree, and also concerning the Gentiles. And I said unto them: Have ye inquired of the Lord? And they said unto me: We have not; for the Lord maketh no such thing known unto us. Behold, I said unto them: How is it that ye do not keep the commandments of the Lord? How is it that ye will perish, because of the hardness of your hearts? Do ye not remember the things which the Lord hath said? —If ye will not harden your hearts, and ask me in faith, believing that ye shall receive, with diligence in keeping my commandments, surely these things shall be made known unto you.
(1 Nephi 15:7–11)

We read that and think ourselves better than Laman and Lemuel because we identify ourselves with Nephi. Nephi, on the other hand, sees our day, and identifies us with Laman and Lemuel. What a profound disconnect our arrogance causes between Nephi’s meaning and our reading.

He is being as plain as words can be. And we are being as obstinate and obtuse as unbelief, wickedness, ignorance and stiff-neckedness can cause. You can feel the irony.

SEPTEMBER 2, 2010

2 Nephi 32:8

And now, my beloved brethren, I perceive that ye ponder still in your hearts; and it grieveth me that I must speak concerning this thing. For if ye would hearken unto the Spirit which teacheth a man to pray ye would know that ye must pray; for the evil spirit teacheth not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray.

Again we are called “beloved brethren” despite having just reminded us of our unbelief, wickedness, ignorance and stiffneckedness. His motive is our welfare. He doesn’t care a whit about flattering us. He wants us saved.

Still you wonder if this can be true. Still you doubt and think it too much. Still you are left not knowing if the message comes from the Lord. But those doubts are because of your failure to pray. You just won’t listen to the Spirit which teaches everyone they must pray. “For if ye would hearken unto the Spirit which teacheth a man to pray ye would know ye must pray.”

Nephi knows this because he is a man of prayer. Nephi, as a man of prayer, is struck by the foolishness of deciding matters without prayer. To him it is amazingly obvious that prayer will rescue you from doubt. But Nephi knows why you won’t pray to know the truth of things.

You want an authority to tell you.

You want the truth to become popular so it is easy to find.

You want certifications, scholarly support and widespread recognition of the truth.

You want someone whose position you respect to tell you what is true. And until they do, you feel confident you don’t need to study it out and pray to know for yourself if it is true.

But Nephi catches you in the act and tells you this is because you are listening to “the evil spirit” which is the one who “teacheth not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray.” So you are following the spirit. But it is an evil spirit you follow.

God’s Spirit will always teach you to pray and to ask Him about the truth. And if you ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, He will manifest the truth unto you. He can tell you the truth of all things if you will ask and permit the Holy Ghost to respond (Moroni 10:4–5).

If the only way to find the truth is to search prayerfully for it before receiving a witness from the Holy Ghost that it is indeed true, what happens to you as a result? Do you gain a testimony of the process? Do you grow in light and truth by what you have experienced? Was this always meant to be direct between you and God? Is the method itself necessarily always to involve God?

Nephi is a prophet. And he’s working to make others like him. That’s the way it is, you see. Those who have something are eager to have others join them. They are not interested in praise or recognition. Instead they are interested in seeing other souls redeemed. Hence Nephi’s blunt message and plain words. They are merciful indeed.

SEPTEMBER 3, 2010

2 Nephi 32:9

But behold, I say unto you that ye must pray always, and not faint; that ye must not perform any thing unto the Lord save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.

Another significant reminder by a prophet of what is needed.

The great passage from Alma on prayer is an echo of Nephi (Alma 34:17–27). Nephi said it first.

What is involved with “performing anything unto the Lord?” How much of what we do in our daily responsibilities ought to be performed “unto the Lord?” (Rom. 12:1).

Do not “perform any thing” for the Lord until you have “in the first place” prayed to consecrate your performance. Here Nephi teaches you how to live the law of consecration. You don’t need others to join you. You don’t need a city to live where all things are held in common. You only need your own pure intent, acting no hypocrisy, consecrating your performance to the Lord for the welfare of your soul.

If you “must not perform any thing unto the Lord” before praying and consecrating it “for the welfare of thy soul,” then how should you proceed? How much thought should you take about the Lord and your relationship with Him daily? How careful should you be about your words, thoughts and works? (Alma 12:14). It is again, a reminder that we should always remember Him, and keep His commandments which He has given us, that we may have His Spirit to be with us (D&C 20:77).

What does it mean to “pray always, and not faint?” What does “praying” have to do with “fainting?” What does it mean to “faint?” Can you “faint” in your spiritual life? Is a physical “faint” merely an example of what happens to us in the spirit? If so, what must you do to avoid becoming “faint” in your prayers?

How many of your prayers have ended by your mind drifting away? No certain conclusion to the prayer, just a distracted mind becoming occupied by something other than the prayer being offered? Is that to “faint?”

What does “fainting” tell you about your vulnerability? What precautions do you need to take to be able to “pray always” and not be vulnerable to “fainting?”

Is the primary difference between the outcome of the lives of Nephi and Jacob on the one hand, and Laman and Lemuel on the other, how they regarded prayer?

What does having prayer as a priority say about an individual?

CHAPTER 6
2 Nephi 33

SEPTEMBER 3, 2010

2 Nephi 33:1–2

And now I, Nephi, cannot write all the things which were taught among my people; neither am I mighty in writing, like unto speaking; for when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost the power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men. But behold, there are many that harden their hearts against the Holy Spirit, that it hath no place in them; wherefore, they cast many things away which are written and esteem them as things of naught.

Nephi would like to teach us (his readers) all he taught those who lived with him and heard him speak. But he could not. Even the things he was able to etch in the metal record he left was incomplete when compared to the body of teachings he preached to his people.

There is also a significant difference between speaking and writing. When you speak there are many tools of speech—emphasis, movement, presence, and radiation of the Spirit to help the speaker measure the effect of the message on the audience. When Nephi taught by the power of the Holy Ghost, he was able to see how his audience was receiving it. He knew when it penetrated “unto the hearts of the children of men.”

Writing was another matter. Particularly when it would be translated from one language to another before the gentiles would receive the words. The distance and language between Nephi and his audience is so great that Nephi came to the sad realization that a reader who is not already prepared to have the Spirit with them as they read will miss the power of the message.

In their presence Nephi could use the power of the Holy Ghost to affect the spirit of those who were listening. However, a reader separated by language and culture, and more than two millennia would have to have the Spirit first before being able to understand his message.

It was the recognition that many gentiles would read this record without possessing the Spirit that made Nephi acknowledge the gap between his spoken ministry and his written one. Those with “hard hearts” may be affected by his presence and preaching. Those with “hard hearts” who only have his written record, however, are going to “cast things away which are written and esteem them as things of naught.” They won’t recognize that they were from God, written by a prophet who knew God, and were the result of a commission to preach given by God. Instead they will think him “a thing of naught.”

Nephi’s message will mean far more to those who are prepared. For those who are not prepared, the message will be meaningless. Nothing. A thing of “naught” to be “cast away.”

That is always the case. The Lord commissions someone with a message and the audience has a role in receiving the message. Powerful public ministries do not convince everyone. Even Nephi failed to convert Laman, Lemuel and the majority of those who were living together at the time of Lehi's death. Then, immediately upon Nephi's death, there were struggles in the society he helped found.

The process of salvation is always a work between God, His children, appropriately sent messages, and adversity and opposition. Nephi is reminding us how vital having the Spirit is to the success of understanding his written message. We should ask ourselves often if our hearts are open to receiving truth, no matter how it comes to us, and no matter how it may challenge our presumptions, pride and foolish traditions.

What a terrible thing it will be for some to realize they "esteemed as things of naught" the very words which might have saved them had they given heed.

SEPTEMBER 4, 2010

2 Nephi 33:3

But I, Nephi, have written what I have written, and I esteem it as of great worth, and especially unto my people. For I pray continually for them by day, and mine eyes water my pillow by night, because of them; and I cry unto my God in faith, and I know that he will hear my cry.

Nephi's single-minded focus was life-long. Now, as he writes advanced in age, with a retrospective knowledge, and prophetic foreknowledge of revelation, he confirms what he has written is "of great worth." When a prophet like Nephi appraises the work as "of great worth," it is important to realize that your disagreement with the assessment is a reflection on you, not him. It is a reflection of your own level of understanding rather than on the work itself.

Are Nephi's two books "of great worth" to you? Why? Can you articulate the reasons they have this "great worth" in everything you think and do in your daily life? How have they changed you? If there is nothing you can point to of value, then perhaps you have not yet found the "great worth" Nephi believed his writing to hold.

Why "especially unto [Nephi's] people?" Who are Nephi's "people?" Why would they be more valuable to them? Why would they have a special value to them, above the value to the gentiles?

When Nephi says he "prays continually for them," who is the group he identifies as "them?" Why does he pray for "them?"

Why does Nephi cry into his pillow at night because of "them?" Who are they and what did Nephi know would be the end of "them?" (See 1 Nephi 12:19; 1 Nephi 15:5).

Nephi knew his cries to the Lord would not go unheard. He knew the Lord would keep a covenant made with Nephi concerning "them." (1 Nephi 13:30). The remnant of Nephi's seed would not be utterly destroyed. Nevertheless, the future destruction would be near absolute, leaving only a remnant.

Despite this foreknowledge, Nephi nevertheless reports he made it a practice to nightly "cry unto my God in faith, and I know that he will hear my cry."

Nephi kept faith in the face of certain destruction of his descendants. Hope in the face of looming apostasy by his seed. Charity toward those who would reject the Lord.

He has ceased to be exclusively a prophet, and has risen to the role of intercessor and advocate for the unworthy. He has become covenantal father, and presiding Patriarch over a lineage whose redemption will come through his covenant with the Father. He has joined the ranks of the "fathers" toward whom hearts must turn in order to avoid cursing at the Lord's return (Malachi 4:6).

The circle has closed and the eternal round is completed. Nephi has godly feelings and godly empathy for a doomed posterity. We behold at last the veil removed. We see such nobility of character, and greatness of soul that we are compelled to accept his role as teacher and ruler. He has taught righteousness all his days. Though his older brothers refused to acknowledge or accept him, we should not. His parting message suggests, however, that more of those who will read his record have the same spirit as Laman and Lemuel than will have the necessary spirit to recognize and “esteem of great worth” what he has provided to us.

It is almost too great to take in for the few who are the humble followers of Christ. However, they can avoid being led into error by recognizing in Nephi the teacher and ruler who was sent to deliver a message of salvation to a doomed people. For those who now live under the same prophetic doom, (3 Nephi 16:15; 3 Nephi 20:16; 3 Nephi 21:12) Nephi represents a lifeline offered to those humble enough to accept his message. They will gladly recognize their plight, awake and arise and become people of prayer.

COMMENTS :

Manu Forti · SEPTEMBER 4, 2010 AT 9:03 PM

You are going to weep for the Church when you read this.

<http://www.foxnews.com/politics/2010/09/04/mormons-new-ad-campaign-seeking-dispel-myths-pr-romney-run/>

Mormon leaders have launched an expansive ad campaign in some battleground states designed to re-brand the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as “normal,” igniting speculation that the church is laying the groundwork for Mitt Romney to re-emerge next year for another presidential bid without an anti-Mormon stigma.

It is as you've been saying.

Now I'm bummed, alarmed and sad.

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 5, 2010 AT 9:45 AM

We just have to hope that it's true that those ads had nothing to do with Romney & that the leaders of the Church do not support him in his run for President.

The Zang Family · SEPTEMBER 5, 2010 AT 3:00 PM

Why does everything have to be laid at the feet of the leaders? There are departments at headquarters that do what they will with sending out advertisements, etc. All bad press is good press, and the General Authorities don't always micromanage. People do what they want and often stamp the First Presidency stamp of approval on their efforts, in my opinion.

Can this unwieldy beast of a Church be so tightly managed that every mistake can be quashed by the President of the Church?

Was Joseph able to stop W. W. Phelps' over-the-top publications in Missouri?

Could Joseph or should he even have stopped Sidney Rigdon's Salt Sermon?

We are not compelled to say everything sent forth from Salt Lake is good, especially when Christ Himself said He wasn't good before He finished His preparations. Are we better as a Church than the Master Himself?

When we all come in a unity of the faith, and can be truly called Zion, then we may say all is holiness to the Lord. Before then, we may express our opinions about what is righteous and what is not, what is helpful to the cause of Zion and what does violence to it.

If Salt Lake is resorting to opinion polls for their programs, what are they supposed to think when for every idea that comes out we say "Yes, sir!" to?

What if they try two pilot programs in different areas of the Church that are diametrically opposed in doctrine the one to the other. If both congregations fall in line and say "this is the Lord's will!" can the Lord's will be opposed to itself? I think not.

Don't you think this blind yes-man culture we've adopted frustrates these leaders to no end? How can they lead zombies? We are like lemmings ready to fall off the precipice at the whim of a twenty-time passed over rumor that we think some leader had a hand in implementing.

O be wise, what can I say more?

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 5, 2010 AT 5:48 PM

The Church (bowels of COB) is planning a reality TV program using a "Mormon" family or group. It's the hot new idea that's supposed to be breaking through to give the Church new recognition and acceptance. It's the top recommendation of the marketing geniuses doing the recommending, and I hear it has been given a green-light to proceed.

I can't begin to explain all the reasons this idea repulses me. But my opinion doesn't matter one whit.

I do remember the BYU co-ed who appeared on MTV's Real World a while back. She was expelled from BYU for her conduct during and after the program, wound up making headlines for a while in the embarrassment of expelling her, and her parents had some critical things to add to the whole affair.

Reality TV has been one way to get the Church noticed already. But it doesn't teach doctrine, doesn't advance the name of Christ, doesn't preach the truth, and backfired once already.

I'm hoping at some point the Brethren tire of this foolishness, fire the entire infrastructure of social-science based employees, and return to preaching the Gospel.

But, then again, why would they ever stop listening to the "experts" they have hired. That infrastructure is the very basis for Elder Holland's claim in General Conference that the Brethren are "in touch" better than even the top Fortune 500 companies. Not something they're likely to dismantle. Until their failure has become so undeniable, so complete, so vast in scope that they realize it has always been a blind alley.

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 5, 2010 AT 8:08 PM

Elder Holland gives the impression he (and the other Brethren who repeat such things) are so "in touch" because of their prophetic call and position as an Apostles. Their presentation seems to strongly suggest that. Akin to Nephi who saw our day and it's pitfalls and thus was VERY in touch. I had NO idea their being in touch was padded with the hiring of the best marketing guru's available. I'm disillusioned. Was it blind to assume their "in touchness" was due to being apostles of the Lord? Due to revelation? But it's actually due to hiring social science experts??

I hope and pray their ability to be in touch in reality has more to do with divine revelation than buying into the advertising experts.

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 5, 2010 AT 8:14 PM

Go back and re-read Elder Holland's talk. He makes no apology for it, and is not at all vague or unclear. It is because of the opinion polling and information gathering systems which are better than most large corporations have for their systems. Just allow him the privilege of speaking exactly what he means. Don't read anything into it.

We have a lot of problems of imposing models of thought upon the truth. Stop doing that with the scriptures. Stop doing that with the Brethren. Allow them the privilege of just being straight forward in their meaning.

SEPTEMBER 5, 2010

2 Nephi 33:4

And I know that the Lord God will consecrate my prayers for the gain of my people. And the words which I have written in weakness will be made strong unto them; for it persuadeth them to do good; it maketh known unto them of their fathers; and it speaketh of Jesus, and persuadeth them to believe in him, and to endure to the end, which is life eternal.

Nephi makes a practical application and provides us with an example of his teaching of "consecration." He knows the Lord God will "consecrate" his "prayers for the gain of [Nephi's] people." Notice that the benefit of that consecration is not for the welfare of Nephi's soul, but the welfare of others. Once again Nephi follows his teaching, and then elevates the purpose from "the welfare of [his own] soul" to the welfare of others (2 Nephi 32:9). His concerns are selfless, sacrificial and intercessory. He has become a man of charity and full of love for others. These whom he calls his "beloved brethren" and his "people" are, in fact, those who will destroy and supplant his own descendants. Although a "mixture" of his seed will be there, these people for whom he is consecrating his petitions to God are the Lamanite victors over his posterity. If you have read Beloved Enos you will see the elements of redemption playing out in Nephi's words similar to how they play out in Enos' words. Charity is the end result of this consecrated life.

Nephi's words were "written in weakness" but he knows the Lord God will make them "strong unto them." Who is "them?" How does the Lord God make "words strong" to someone? What power communicates the strength of Nephi's words?

What does Nephi mean by "it persuadeth them to do good?" Why is persuading to do good part of the way to recognize words from God?

What does Nephi mean "it maketh known unto them of their fathers?" Which "fathers?" Does the reference to "their fathers" help you identify who "them" is referring to?

Why do words which will become strong always focus upon "Jesus, and persuade to believe in Him?" Can words which speak of something else, or other programs, initiatives, organizations and events ever "become strong?" Must the message focus upon Christ before it is possible for it to "become strong?"

Why must you "endure to the end, which is eternal life?" What end? We've asked that before, but not answered it. How long must the enduring last, if it is to result in "eternal life?" Will it be a great deal after this life before you have learned enough to be saved? Will you need to endure then, as now, for eternal life to be yours?

What else were you going to do after this life? Planning to play a harp and sit on a cloud somewhere with Captain Stormfield? Or were you planning to be engaged in a good cause, enduring to the end of all time and all eternity, worlds without end?

We encounter so much doctrine in Nephi's writing. It is almost impossible to understand this writer-prophet without some effort to learn the doctrine ourselves. Perhaps we de-emphasize doctrine at the peril of losing the very message Nephi wrote.

SEPTEMBER 6, 2010

2 Nephi 33:5–6

And it speaketh harshly against sin, according to the plainness of the truth; wherefore, no man will be angry at the words which I have written save he shall be of the spirit of the devil. I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell.

Nephi's writings "speaketh harshly against sin. "This is because of "plainness of the truth." If you're going to speak plainly about sin, the words are necessarily harsh, because there's no other way to be plain about it. Warning against sin and pride is offensive (2 Nephi 4:13).

Those who become angry at the truth have "the spirit of the devil" in them. That is, they are under the devil's influence and deceived. Nephi understood this principle because of his older brothers' reactions (1 Nephi 16:1–2). So when someone becomes angry at the truth, they are in darkness.

Christ gave this as one of the signs of the deceived. They argue against the truth and become angry (3 Nephi 11:29).

Those who are Christ's, however, join with Nephi in glorying in plainness, even if it cuts or requires repentance. They appreciate the plain direction which allows them to follow in the true path. They appreciate truth, even when it condemns their acts and requires them to change. They glory in Christ, preferring Him to unbelief, traditions of men, and the arm of flesh.

Nephi knew Christ had redeemed his soul from hell, for He had declared it to Nephi. The reason Nephi understood the fullness of Christ's Gospel, could declare the doctrine of Christ, and was a prophet given a commission to teach was because he had been taught by the Lord (2 Nephi 11:2). The return to Christ's presence was not merely a spectacular event to write in a journal, or a bragging point to claim among others. Indeed, much of what Nephi obtained from the Lord was never recorded for us or Nephi's posterity. The return was to obtain light and truth, or intelligence, which is the glory of God. It was to be ministered to by the Perfect Teacher. This, in turn, made Nephi the great minister he became.

The Greatest Servant teaches servants to serve. They are not chosen to be idolized. They are not chosen so a band can strike up "Hail to the Chief" when they enter a room, as everyone rises in adoration and respect. Nor are they chosen to wear silk robes, with subservient sycophants kissing their ring in adoration, hoping for favors. They are chosen instead to serve, while being discarded, challenged, rejected and scorned. Yet in this they only follow their Master, who came not to be served, but to serve. Christ disparaged us gentiles because we submit to abuse and call our abusers our benefactors (Luke 22:25-27).

We hardly understand the Gospel of Jesus Christ at all because we utterly reject its principles. We won't live them to know if they are true. Then in our ignorant darkness we judge the light. All the while Nephi's words invite us to choose a different route, act with real intent, with full purpose of heart, repenting of our sins to find our way back into the light. Instead, we cling to the false traditions of our fathers, claiming for ourselves the prerogatives of God Himself, believing we are better than others, and failing to see the burden of sin we carry in our blind ignorance.

Nephi may have gloried in plainness, but we glory in positive messages telling us we will be saved in our sins. Nephi may have gloried in Jesus, but we use His name to endorse our products and ratify our false teachings. Nephi may have urged the plainness of truth itself, but we market based on focus group tested and opinion polled results so our product line should get good market acceptance.

Nephi's way would work better, you know. The truth attracts those who seek truth. No matter how utterly it may fail in market testing, truth sells. Truth attracts. At least it attracts the Master's sheep, and we'll never be able to save any others anyway. So we should offer the truth to make a clarion call to those sheep. When we dilute it with the theories of marketing, the arm of flesh, salesmanship and branding, the sheep have no idea that there is any truth under the slick presentation. How can you hear the Master's voice in such a cacophony of Wall Street gibberish? Truth alone wins, prevails, succeeds against all opposition and will have its final vindication in the triumph of the Lamb!

I appreciate Nephi's plainness and preference for the truth. I think I may join him in that view. I suppose, however, it'll make some folks angry.

SEPTEMBER 7, 2010

2 Nephi 33:7–9

I have charity for my people, and great faith in Christ that I shall meet many souls spotless at his judgment-seat. I have charity for the Jew—I say Jew, because I mean them from whence I came. I also have charity for the Gentiles. But behold, for none of these can I hope except they shall be reconciled unto Christ, and enter into the narrow gate, and walk in the strait path which leads to life, and continue in the path until the end of the day of probation.

It is necessary to read all three verses to see what Nephi is saying. What distinctions does he make? Is his charity to his people unequivocal? Is his charity to the Jews unequivocal? Is his charity to the gentiles equivocal? Why?

Does the condition that appears in the final verse apply to the preceding group (gentiles) or to all three groups? How do the remarks made by Nephi in the prior verses we have looked at modify or explain which group the final limitation should be applied?

What has Nephi foreseen or said to suggest he has hope for his own people? What has he done to seek charity by his consecrated petitions for his own people? What has he said about the future inheritance of the covenant blessings for both his people and the Jews?

On the other hand, how little promise has he shown for the gentiles? How conditional are their latter-day rights? How much failure has been prophesied regarding the gentiles?

Since we've been discussing this for months, I am not going to repeat it. You can look to see the scope of Nephi's declarations for his people, for the Jews and for the gentiles. After you've done that, it becomes plain that Nephi has:

Charity for his people.

Charity for the Jews, from whence he came.

Charity for the Gentiles, but he cannot hope for the gentiles except they shall be reconciled to Christ, enter into the narrow gate, walk in the strait path, and continue to do so until the end of the day of probation.

We are reminded again of the Savior's own prophecy of the failure of the gentiles (3 Nephi 16:10). We are reminded of the Lord's promise to take the fullness from us in 1841 if we did not complete the construction of the Nauvoo Temple within the allotted time given (D&C 124:32). If we failed, we would be rejected. We did not complete the Nauvoo Temple in the three and a half years allotted after that revelation while Joseph was alive. Then Joseph was taken, much like Moses was taken (D&C 84:25). What the Lord threatened we would lose permanently at the end of our appointment was the fullness of the priesthood, which He had already removed from us in 1841 (D&C 124:28). So the gentiles sit in a precarious position indeed.

You must answer for yourself the questions posed by Nephi's teaching:

- Have we been reconciled to Christ?
- Have we entered into the narrow gate?
- Do we walk in the strait path?
- If so, have we done so as a people until the end of our days of probation?

To be able to restore again that which we lost before 1841 would require someone truly mighty in Spirit. Fortunately, we have been promised that lifeline will be extended to us again at some point (D&C 85:7). However even he will not be able to help a gentile who has not been diligent having their name written in the book of the law of God.

The mothers who minister to their children in patience and love will undoubtedly be among those whom the Lord will remember in that day. The first parable, The Busy Young Man, is about those little acts through which we find our Lord. The Weathered Tree is about the enduring power of a mother's love, and how like the Lord's own sacrifice, this often under appreciated calling has been and continues to be.

Mothers oftentimes do not take time to study because they are too busy engaged in the actual work of charity, love and service. Some may not be able to construct a scripture-based explanation or exposition, but they recognize truth by the light acquired within by their fidelity to the Lord's system of conferring light and truth.

I have been far more impressed with mothers in Zion than with the tattered remains of what is now called Zion by the gentiles. The pride and foolish traditions which claim authority while lamenting the lack of power are the expected results of the latter-day gentile stewardship according to Nephi.

The good news, and the thing we should rejoice over, is that Nephi does extend to us gentiles an opportunity to be saved. All we must do to join in the blessings is to:

- Be reconciled to Christ.
- Enter into the narrow gate.
- Walk in the strait path.
- Endure to the end of our days of probation.

So we do have a choice. No matter what failings have occurred or things we lack.

It was Lifehouse who sang an anthem to yearning:

Desperate for changing,
starving for truth,

...

Letting go of all I've held onto,
I'm standing here until you make me move
I'm hanging by a moment here with you

...

Forgetting all I'm lacking
Completely incomplete
I'll take your invitation
You take all of me..

I like that song. It is strangely applicable to the condition we find ourselves. But our yearning of course ought to be for the Redeemer who alone can save us.

COMMENTS:

Matt · SEPTEMBER 7, 2010 AT 11:11 PM

The sealing wherein one is made both a king (queen) and a priest(ess)" was not even introduced until 28 September 1843 (see, for example, p. 306 in The Words of Joseph Smith, by Ehat and Cook) so how can you argue it was taken away in our dispensation in or prior to 1841?

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 8, 2010 AT 6:23 AM

D&C 124:28. It isn't an "argument." It is a quote from a revelation in January 1841.

SEPTEMBER 7, 2010

2 Nephi 33:10

And now, my beloved brethren, and also Jew, and all ye ends of the earth, hearken unto these words and believe in Christ; and if ye believe not in these words believe in Christ. And if ye shall believe in Christ ye will believe in these words, for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men that they should do good.

After the conditional statement warning the gentiles of their need to be reconciled to Christ, Nephi speaks to his “beloved brethren” and the “Jews,” but omits specific mention of the gentiles. Instead he refers to “all ye ends of the earth.” This would include all those who are neither Jew, nor Israelite, nor gentile. This is a lot of people who are called “heathen” because they have little direct prophetic mention. Nephi, for example, only refers to them once in his writings (2 Nephi 26:33). In that single reference Nephi promises all, if they will repent and return to Christ, can be saved. All are invited. All can come. Everyone may learn of Christ, find Him and be saved.

There is a distinction between God’s absolute willingness to accept all who will come to Him, on the one hand, and the prophetic foreknowledge of who would accept the invitation, on the other. The opportunity is open for all. There will be few who will accept.

Nephi’s testimony is based on Christ and employs both Christ’s doctrine and teachings. He assures us as readers that if we are willing to accept his writings we are, in fact, accepting the words of Christ. If you believe Christ, you will believe Nephi. For almost everything Nephi has written comes directly or indirectly from Christ. To believe in Nephi’s words is to believe in Christ, and to believe in Christ is to accept Nephi’s words.

Think about that for a moment. Nephi does not leave you wondering if the message will save you or not, whether he has some special inside information or not, or whether he has seen the Lord or not. He is direct and does not require you to guess. He has not adopted any equivocal or carefully studied words or phrases to tell you about Christ. He is blunt, even plain. His words offend those who are unwilling to surrender their sins and repent. He says what he has written “are the words of Christ.” This means that before he taught, before he wrote, before he concluded his testimony, he consulted with and obtained approval from Christ.

There is nothing vague in Nephi’s warnings, nor unclear in his message.

He openly invites the gentiles to repent. He does so repeatedly. He tells us that with the exception of only a few, we are condemned and will fail in our dispensation. As to those few, he warns us that we will be prone to err because of the things we are taught (2 Nephi 28:14). He offers us a clear, light filled body of teachings that will clarify for us the body of doctrine that will save us. However, we must take his warnings seriously and study them with care.

Imagine how much effort and thought went into preparing to carve into the metal plates. Imagine the amount of thought he employed before undertaking the final, permanent etchings to complete his ministry. His brother commented about how arduous the process was during his writing on the same plates (Jacob 4:1).

Nephi saw our day, and knew how difficult it would be for us. He wrote a message to be preserved and available no matter who would lead us, no matter what messages we would hear, no matter what confusion would develop. He gave us a message to announce the conditions of salvation over the heads of any foolish, vain or false teachings. They are a lifeline extended to the gentiles, as well as his beloved mixed blood descendants (the remnant), and the Jews.

Nephi knows his words will teach anyone who accepts them “to do good.”

The gentile problem is not in reading his words, but in “believing in them.” Gentile interpretation almost always involves unbelief. We do not let his words hold their “plain meaning” but want to construe them, read into them praise, and remove from them the blunt warnings given us. We want to make ourselves justified by the words that warn, condemn and challenge us to do more. Our unbelief separates us from Nephi’s message even as we read his words.

It does no good to argue with him. It does no good to juxtapose his words of counsel and warning with other words of comfort and reassurance. He is alarmed by our condition and warns us to flee from error. We want to read into these words other ideas Nephi never intended.

When we began back with Alma, Chapter 13, it was with the idea we would let the words speak for themselves. We were going to try and see what was being said apart from our own desires or hopes. We’ve been trying to let Nephi have his own words and meanings as we’ve been looking at his teachings, as well.

An inspired teacher will not offer their own words and pretend they come from Christ. They are not going to dare speak in the name of Christ if they offer only their suppositions, hopes, and understanding. They know, as Nephi, that to do so is to take the Lord’s name in vain, and to preach for doctrines the commandments of men. It is often the case, however, that men will urge their own views hoping to make them more convincing, while using the name of Christ. Surely every such teacher will be held to account before Christ for every idle word spoken in His name without His authority or approval.

Nephi knew this doctrine. Nephi understood how weighty a matter it was to use the Lord’s name in connection with teaching doctrine. Nephi writes in the full confidence that the Lord has approved his message, inspired his words, and will vindicate them to those who will believe them.

Personally, I would hardly dare to teach doctrine if I did not know what I say to be true. Nephi's example is perhaps more important in this respect than in any other. He is surely worthy to be called a "teacher and a ruler" by all of us (2 Nephi 5:19).

SEPTEMBER 8, 2010

2 Nephi 33:11–12

And if they are not the words of Christ, judge ye—for Christ will show unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar; and ye shall know that I have been commanded of him to write these things, notwithstanding my weakness. And I pray the Father in the name of Christ that many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom at that great and last day.

You judge. You decide. If you don't believe, Christ will vindicate Nephi's teachings, and you will learn just how wrong your judgment was. For Nephi will be at the judgment bar with Christ. You will stand "face to face" with Nephi as you stand before Christ. You will see, along with all those who abuse and treat true messengers as "things of naught," that you have rejected Christ when you rejected His words delivered by one authorized to speak in His name. Nephi invites you to judge his words with the confidence of knowing that he was given power to say all he said. And he had the Lord's confidence because he didn't say anything about what the Lord instructed him not to speak about.

You will one day know Nephi was "commanded of [Christ] to write these things." Nephi was commanded despite his "weakness."

In this context “weakness” is a relative thing. Because Nephi had seen the Lord his perspective allowed him to measure himself against perfection. It allowed him to assess the difference between the Lord as Teacher, and Nephi as servant. The holiness, majesty and power of God were known to Nephi. He had already had the experience of seeing the absolute standard of holiness in Christ. For most people this will come at the last day, and will result in them understanding, for the first time, that they should have repented (Mormon 9:3–5). Nephi had already been able to reconcile himself to Christ. Therefore Nephi knew of his own “weakness” and of the power of redemption found through Christ.

Nephi’s prayer was for the redemption of all. He hoped that “many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom at that great and last day.” Nephi knew he had been redeemed. Yet he identifies with all of us who read his words, and hoped all may be saved.

The measure of a prophet’s ministry is in the salvation of others. Nephi does not celebrate his own redemption. He agonizes over the salvation of others. He labors for the redemption of “many...if not all” of the rest of mankind. This is the pattern. Redemption causes the redeemed to work for the salvation of others. Perhaps it might be better put that the reason someone obtains the kind of redemption Nephi obtained is because they are of a character to work for the redemption of others. There is no reason to withhold the promise of eternal life from them, because others will be redeemed as a result of their redemption. They will labor, preach, teach, intercede, seek, pray, and work tirelessly to bring others to the tree of life. They become a fellow-servant with Christ and labor alongside Him in the work of redeeming others. This is one of the reasons for the parable of “The Busy Young Man” in Ten Parables.

Nephi is working directly toward redemption of others. There is no secondary or indirect route being taught. There is no attempt to get some kind of “activity” started, or to introduce a program to do anything apart from bringing you to repentance. He wants you to approach Christ directly through the power of the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, which will teach you all things you should do. He wants you to hear and speak with the tongues of angels. He does not want to entertain, distract, or emotionally move you. He wants you to come to Christ. Nephi only tells you the minimum about himself, giving only such information as may be relevant to his message concerning Christ. To the extent he is able, Nephi consistently draws your focus to the Lord.

There is great understanding of how a true friend of Christ lives, acts and thinks found in Nephi’s writings. They are a urim and thummim into what you find in a man of God. Imitations will always exist. But the real thing is going to be far more like Nephi than Joel Osteen. More sleeves rolled up and fewer cuff-links.

I do hope we may all join Nephi and are saved in the kingdom at that last day. I hope we recognize how great Nephi’s teachings are, and how they address our day with the message we need to hear and heed.

SEPTEMBER 8, 2010

2 Nephi 33:13

“And now, my beloved brethren, all those who are of the house of Israel, and all ye ends of the earth, I speak unto you as the voice of one crying from the dust: Farewell until that great day shall come.”

When Nephi paraphrased Isaiah 29 in the 2 Nephi 27, he appropriated Isaiah’s words to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. He adapted them making a paraphrase rather than a quote. (I explain the reasons for this in Nephi's Isaiah). Here he uses the Isaiah materials again to identify who he (Nephi) is: “the voice of one crying from the dust.” The primary audience for his writings will be those who come to read the book in the last days; when mankind will be in possession of the record which has been printed and distributed to the masses.

Nephi's primary audience for his teachings are those who, like us, live in the last days after the Book of Mormon has come to light. Although Nephi's descendants would have access to these same records, their greatest work and worth would be in the last days. Hence Nephi identifying himself as a “voice of one crying from the dust.”

There is also a secondary meaning. Because Nephi was mortal, he was made of the “dust of the ground.” (Moses 3:7). He was a man testifying to the truthfulness, as a witness in mortality, of the great things which exist beyond the veil. He is one of us, and yet able to tell us of things to come. Therefore, his witness is given in mortal weakness, but with the power of God behind it. His own strength is dust. The power of Christ to redeem, however, is without limit.

Three distinct groups are addressed in the message: Nephi's descendants, called his “beloved brethren.” They are “brethren” rather than “children” because they would descend primarily from his brother's seed who would overcome his. But there would be a mixture of his among them. So they were his “brethren.”

The second are called “those who are of the house of Israel.” These are the Jews, or others who keep their identity with Israel. Not the gentiles, who have been lost and must gain covenant status one by one, and thereafter live true to the covenant in order to be redeemed. “Those who are of the house of Israel” have been previously identified and discussed by Nephi in the Nephi 28.

The final group is “all ye ends of the earth.” That is, the gentiles, heathen, and those who are not otherwise included even in prophetic mention. All mankind. All the ends of the earth may receive what is offered and attain to covenant status, if they repent, acting no deception, without hypocrisy, following Christ. And all are included in the broad sweep of Nephi’s invitation to come to Christ.

His “farewell” is “until that great day shall come.” That day is when you see the Lord in judgment with Nephi there beside Him. At that time you will be “face to face” with Nephi, accounting for your heed or neglect of his message. He just mentioned that in the prior verses. He now bids you good-by until that moment. So you should look forward to meeting Nephi at this point. Although you need to take his message seriously if you intend to enjoy the moment.

What other prophets have warned us that their message will confront us in the presence of Christ while he, the prophet-messenger, is there with us at the moment of judgment? Nephi is in a very small group of qualified messengers whose words should be taken with soberness and respect. He is a towering figure when measured by the correct standard. We seldom encounter such a man. When we do, we would be well advised to take counsel from him.

What more can he have said to alert us to the importance of his message?

SEPTEMBER 9, 2010

2 Nephi 33:14

And you that will not partake of the goodness of God, and respect the words of the Jews, and also my words, and the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God, behold,

I bid you an everlasting farewell, for these words shall condemn you at the last day.

From Nephi's perspective, if you deny his message, reject what is taught, and walk away from his teachings, then you "will not partake of the goodness of God." You have been offered fruit from the tree of life, and you're just unwilling to "partake of that goodness." It is ingratitude and foolishness (D&C 88:33).

This word "partake" hearkens back to the tree in Lehi's and Nephi's dream. (Lehi's version is found in 1 Nephi 8). People prefer to go join in a crowd inside a building. The building is a symbol of man's work. The "arm of flesh" is used to build such structures. No matter how "great" or "spacious" such work may be (1 Ne. 8:31), it is nonetheless the product of human labor. In the dream, those who enter into the building do so to join the multitude in mocking and scorn of those who choose the tree instead (1 Ne. 8:33). In contrast to this, the tree bearing fruit is a product of nature—God's product. Man's labors do not produce trees. Without God, trees do not exist. Man cannot take credit for either the tree or its fruit. It is a gift given to him.

Now the gift must be obtained by coming to the tree. You cannot partake of its fruit while standing at a distance. You must go to the tree, take the fruit in your hand, and "partake of the goodness of God" before you are able to realize how "delicious" this goodness truly is (1 Ne. 8:10–12).

So Nephi's invitation to "partake of the goodness of God" is a reminder at the end of his record of the visions he received at the beginning of the record. Come, partake, be saved.

What would you need to do in order to "respect the words of the Jews, and also [Nephi's] words?" Why does he add "and the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God?” Does this mean that if you have “respect” for Nephi’s words and the Bible, you will receive other words? Words from “the mouth of the Lamb of God?” Does it suggest you will speak directly with Christ? That part of the fullness of this process is to once again speak to and hear from “the Lamb of God?” Will it result in Christ speaking to you in the flesh? (2 Nephi 32:6).

Why will Nephi’s words “condemn you at the last day?” Why does Nephi bid an “everlasting farewell” to those who won’t “partake of the goodness of God?”

Is Nephi uncharitable? Are his words harsh, unkind or intemperate? Should he be praising us more and condemning us less? Is this a “hard thing” he has spoken to us? (1 Nephi 16:2). If it is not harsh, unkind, or intemperate, then should this kind of warning be given by anyone who is concerned for the salvation of your soul? Why? If your messengers don’t challenge you to repent, but instead use smooth words, reassuring you in your present course, would their message conflict with Nephi’s message? What would you make of such a conflict between their praise and reassurance, and Nephi’s stark warnings?

SEPTEMBER 9, 2010

2 Nephi 33:15

“For what I seal on earth, shall be brought against you at the judgment bar; for thus hath the Lord commanded me, and I must obey. Amen.”

Another reminder of Nephi’s status. Not only does he preach the words of Christ, but he also has the authority and power to “seal on earth” his message. He obtained this directly from the Lord. He is a trusted servant, acting in the similitude of the Savior Himself. Holding the power to seal, he proceeds to do so. Those with eyes to see will realize this is an important punctuation mark on the final statement he leaves for us in his message.

The power to seal and “the Lord commanded me, and I must obey” go hand in hand. One simply does not receive this kind of authority if they will begin to freelance. They are to use it only in the manner the Lord would use it. Although the power is theirs to use, they are governed by their character to use it only according to the Lord’s command. Nephi, for example, received this acknowledgment when given the power to seal: “that all things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will.” (Helaman 10:5; see 10:4–5 for the more complete explanation).

When Joseph Smith received this power it was given in connection with his calling and election made sure. It happened between 1829 and 1832, the exact date is unknown. It was reduced to writing in 1843 in D&C 132. It is my view that the revelation making mention of it was not a single event, but rather as many as five different revelations related to the same subject, all of which were dictated at the same time and included in Section 132. I’ve explained this earlier in a series of posts about Section 132. Go back and look here, here, here, here, here, and here if you don’t remember it.

Joseph received this power, and this fullness between 1829 and 1832. However, by 1841 Joseph was no longer able to use it because it had been “taken from [the church].” (D&C 124:28). It would not affect Joseph individually, for his calling and election was made sure (D&C 132:49). But if “taken,” it would affect the church.

Nephi’s power to “seal” his writings at the command of the Lord, and his own obedience, now make his words binding on all of us. They become covenantal. Hence the reference to remembering “the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon” (D&C 84:57). It is not merely interesting doctrine, nor even prophecy, but has reached covenantal status by virtue of the priestly seal placed upon it by Nephi. We ignore it at our peril. We define it as just a volume of scripture at our loss. It was intended to be studied and followed as the means to reassert a covenant between ourselves and God. By following its precepts we can return to God's presence where we are endowed with light and truth, receive intelligence and understanding. Each of us is invited to make that return. Nephi lived it, and as a result was able to teach it. We should do the same. That is, live it to be able to understand and then teach it. It is the doing that leads to the understanding.

There is a great deal of what Nephi taught that we have not considered. Now let's talk about the remnant.

CHAPTER 7

The Remnant

SEPTEMBER 10, 2010

Remnant, Part I

When I started, I doubted a blog was an appropriate venue to address a topic like the “remnant” of the Book of Mormon. This is still an experiment.

If you’re new to this blog, you need to go back and start reading sometime in April. Then you’ll have the foundation for understanding this topic as we move forward.

Undoubtedly there will be those who don’t bother to read what has been written previously. They will make comments here about something that was thoroughly discussed in earlier posts. Just grin and bear it. For the most part, I will be ignoring it.

I’ve tried to remain focused even when there have been questions good enough to answer. But to start answering even very good questions is to hijack the topic and run afield. There have been occasional asides, but that’s because of human weakness and the inability to resist temptation.

We are trying to fit our traditions about the remnant and their role into the framework of the Book of Mormon. From what we’ve seen so far, it should be clear that we, the Latter-day Saints, are identified as “gentiles” in the Book of Mormon. We are not ever identified as the “remnant.” As a result, the prophecies about the “remnant” are not prophecies about us. They are primarily descendants of the Lamanites, but have some mixed blood of Nephi as well. They are grouped by the Lord into several different clans, and remain identified as “Nephites, and the Jacobites, and the Josephites, and the Zoramites...the Lamanites, and the Lemuelites, and the Ishmaelites.” (D&C 3:17–18). These are those who, though diminished in numbers, are still with us. They retain both a separate identity before the Lord and prophetic inheritance from previous covenants. They are not us and we are not them.

There are two great books which discuss two different views of where the Book of Mormon geography took place. One is by Sorenson, titled An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. The other is Prophecies and Promises by Meldrum and Porter. Sorenson says Central America, Porter and Meldrum say North America.

It is not necessary to resolve the question of Book of Mormon geography in order to have a discussion of this topic. The place could be either Central or North America. The result of the last genocidal wars was that the fighting spread into the Finger Lakes region of New York, with Moroni ultimately placing the plates in the Hill Cumorah, where Joseph Smith recovered them. Therefore, there were descendants of these people located in the North American area by the time the Book of Mormon record ends. Furthermore, during the time between 400 A.D., when the record ends, and the time of post-Revolutionary American in 1805, when Joseph Smith was born, there were many undocumented migrations of people we know nothing about other than what anthropology tells us, which is not much.

So when we get to Joseph Smith and his comments about the “descendants of the Book of Mormon” he is speaking at a time disconnected from the events in the Book of Mormon. I take Joseph’s comments at face value, and presume them to be correct. When Joseph talks about the ancestors of the American Indians being the Book of Mormon people, I accept that.

Also, I think it is better to let the words of prophecy speak for themselves and not impose our own beliefs or traditions on them. We tend to see in the words meanings that are harmonious with our own preconceptions. It is better to abandon those preconceptions and see if the words give us any better or different explanation of what is to happen. That way we are not misinformed by the traditions of men, even if they come to us from very good men.

I do not judge what others believe, explain or teach. They are entitled to their beliefs. But each of us are entitled to believe and take at face value the words of prophecy in scripture, even if they collide with some other notions. I think it better to abandon the ideas which collide with scripture than it is to wrestle the scriptures to conform with the ideas. But you can do as you choose. I really do claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of my own conscience, and believe it my duty to allow all men the same privilege. I will let them worship how, where, or what they may. That’s not a hollow statement for me. I believe in complete freedom of conscience for you and for me. We are accountable to God only for what we believe. Until the COB correlates that out of the Articles of Faith by editing instead of by conduct, I will continue to believe in, and practice the principle of freedom of belief. [That is why so many comments critical of me appear in this blog and why relatively few of those praising me are allowed through.]

So, with that brief introduction, we turn to the trail we've been on for some time. The remnant....

lc · SEPTEMBER 10, 2010 AT 1:54 PM

sorry for my ignorance, but can someone tell me what the acronym COB means?

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 10, 2010 AT 4:51 PM

COB or C.O.B. = Church Office Building, or the large 33-story office complex downtown housing all the minions working full time for the church.

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 10, 2010 AT 9:00 PM

It is a 28 story building – not 33.

SEPTEMBER 10, 2010

Remnant, Part II

The first statement about the existence of the Book of Mormon in our day was made by Moroni to Joseph Smith. Moroni stated, among other things:

he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Moroni; that God had a work for me to do; and that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people. He said there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fulness of the everlasting Gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. (JS-H 1:33-34)

The “former inhabitants of this continent” would necessarily be North America.

The remnant came from people who frequently received a place called “this land” in the prophecies. For example:

we have obtained a land of promise, a land which is choice above all other lands; a land which the Lord God hath covenanted with me should be a land for the inheritance of my seed. Yea, the Lord hath covenanted this land unto me, and to my children forever, and also all those who should be led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord. (2 Nephi 1:5)

The relevant “land” is one which the ancestors of the remnant were promised would be choice above all other lands. A land of inheritance for the remnant. And one to which people would be “led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord” to later occupy. This is a reference to Nephi’s earlier vision wherein the unfolding history of the Americas were shown to him. That included the following:

There would be a man separated by “many waters” who would be wrought upon by the Spirit of God and make the journey across the “many waters” to the remnant “seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.” (1 Nephi 13:12). This identifies Columbus, whose original landfall was in the West Indies of the Caribbean. However, the prophecy continues with greater details, increasingly focusing on a North American setting.

After the original discovery by the man wrought upon by the Spirit of God (Columbus), the same “Spirit of God...wrought upon other Gentiles” who also made the migration across the “many waters.” (1 Nephi 13:13). Again it is not unequivocal because migration included and still includes both North and South America.

When the gentile waves of immigration overtake the promised land, they are humbled, fleeing from captivity (1 Nephi 13:16), and the power of God was upon them (Id.). They were delivered by the power of God out of the hands of all other nations (1 Ne. 13:19). These gentile people are then lifted up by the power of God above all other nations, upon the face of the land which is choice above all other lands, which is the land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance. (1 Ne. 13:30).

That description seems to identify the United States, for there is no historic basis for saying Canada, Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, Cuba, Columbia or Peru are or ever have been “lifted up by the power of God above all other nations.” The United States, however, as the world’s single recognized “superpower” has fit this description. If it is the area of the United States being identified, then this is the “land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance.” Or, in other words, this is where one should expect to find remains of the remnant who inherited and will inherit again the land as their promise from the Lord.

The gentiles who inherited the area of the United States waged a continuing campaign to dispossess the native people, succeeding in causing them to dwindle, but not be utterly destroyed (1 Ne. 13:30–31). It is in the United States, beginning in upper New York State that the gentiles are given the chance to remove the “awful state of blindness” through the restoration of the Gospel (1 Ne. 13:32, 34). The coming forth of the Book of Mormon was a North American event, coming to the gentiles who are occupying the land covenanted to the fathers and upon which we would find the remnant (1 Ne. 13:35–36).

There is enough, therefore, in Nephi’s prophecy to identify the area where the remnant would initially be found. That area is inside the United States. This is where the remnant would initially be swept away, smitten and afflicted by the gentiles. But they would not be utterly destroyed. A small fraction of them would be preserved, so the promises could be realized (1 Ne. 13:30–31).

So they were here. And some of them remain still. So, when we begin to identify who they are, the initial proof of their identity is found in Nephi's prophecy and our own history. I do not think it was intended to be particularly difficult to see what was prophesied or who was involved. But we need to pay some attention or we miss the information lying before us.

Joseph Smith also made statements identifying the former occupants of the area that is now the United States where the Book of Mormon people were situated. From his mother, Lucy Mack Smith, we have the following description of what Joseph told the family during the four years he was being educated by Moroni in the annual visits to the Hill Cumorah before obtaining possession of the plates:

During our evening conversations, Joseph would occasionally give us some of the most amusing recitals that could be imagined. He would describe the ancient inhabitants of this continent, their dress, mode of traveling, and the animals upon which they rode; their cities, their buildings, with every particular; their mode of warfare; and also their religious worship. This he would do with as much ease, seemingly, as if he had spent his whole life among them.

The reference to “this continent” being a reference to North America.

There are other references by Joseph Smith, as well. In looking at this I am not trying to identify where Book of Mormon events occurred. Instead I am only interested in the subject of whether at the time of dispossession of the land, the people who were dispossessed were descendants who had promises extended to them in the Book of Mormon. It seems evident that is the case. It seems almost undeniable that the promised people who are yet to receive the benefit of an earlier covenant with Lehi and Nephi, Jacob and Enos, include those who were occupants of the area of the United States during the early years of American conquest.

SEPTEMBER 11, 2010

Remnant, Part III

To understand our own history and prophecies, we have to look at the events taking place during the time of the revelations. The composition of people and geography were dynamic, and changing. They were anything but static. So when you look at events at a specific moment in time, you have to look at the composition of the land and people to understand what was occurring. If you miss it by a decade, you miss what was revealed.

From the beginning of the United States the Indians were a political problem in need of a solution for both State and Federal government. Various conflicts and battles resulted in temporary solutions. By the time we reach the end of the 1820's, a more general solution was needed. Andrew Jackson came to office with a plan to deal with the problem.

Andrew Jackson wanted the Indians removed from the eastern portion of the United States, from Maine to Florida and from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. He wanted them all relocated. Congress responded and passed the Indian Relocation Act of 1830, forcibly removing all Native Americans to the area owned by the United States and acquired from France in the Louisiana Purchase. The land used for the relocation was just beyond the western border of Missouri. In fact, the border town of Independence was located immediately adjacent to, and in the center of the relocated Indian tribes. You couldn't get any closer, and you couldn't be any more in the center than in Independence, Missouri.

Joseph Smith, expressing that “one of the most important points in the faith of the Church of the Latter-day Saints...is the gathering of Israel (of whom the Lamanites constitute a part)” seemed pleased that the American government was assisting in a gathering of the Lamanites, anticipating that it would facilitate their reception of the gospel. He even included in his history a positive statement expressing President Jackson's views on the Native Americans (History of the Church 2:357–60).

By 1831, after the relocation was well underway, the closest a white man could get to the Indians was Independence, Missouri. When you left Independence heading west, you would encounter the line dividing the land and establishing the territory the Federal Government exercised control over for the benefit of the tribes located there. It was for this reason the revelation given in 1831 refers to the “line running directly between Jew and Gentile.” (D&C 57:4). The “Jew” being the American Indian tribes located across the border, and the “gentile” being the Americans, including the LDS missionaries at the time.

In 1830 the first missionary to the “Lamanites” was called. Oliver Cowdery was told, among other things, the following:

And now, behold, I say unto you that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings thou shalt cause my church to be established among them; and thou shalt have revelations, but write them not by way of commandment. And now, behold, I say unto you that it is not revealed, and no man knoweth where the city Zion shall be built, but it shall be given hereafter. Behold, I say unto you that it shall be on the borders by the Lamanites. (D&C 28:8–9)

Later the same month, Peter Whitmer was told to join Oliver in this first mission to the Lamanites. That revelation states:

Behold, I say unto you, Peter, that you shall take your journey with your brother Oliver; for the time has come that it is expedient in me that you shall open your mouth to declare my gospel; therefore, fear not, but give heed unto the words and advice of your brother, which he shall give you. And be you afflicted in all his afflictions, ever lifting up your heart unto me in prayer and faith, for his and your deliverance; for I have given unto him power to build up my church among the Lamanites. (D&C 30:5–6)

Both Oliver and Peter Whitmer were assigned to find these Lamanites, preach the Gospel, and at some point a place where the city of Zion would be built would be revealed. So the Lamanite conversion and revealing of the city of Zion were to happen together. The remnant being required for Zion to be built.

You will recall we discussed earlier how the gentiles will only “assist” in building the city. The remnant will do most of the work (3 Nephi 21:23, discussed already). So this mission was to locate the relevant group, and also locate the relevant spot where the remnant would construct the city of Zion.

In addition to Oliver and Peter, Parley Pratt and Ziba Peterson were called to serve this same mission. They went to Indians in New York, passed through Kirtland, and wound up in Independence at the end of the journey some time later. The Kirtland detour resulted in a large conversion, including Sidney Rigdon. Kirtland was the largest LDS congregation.

Well, the asides are interesting, but the point is that the search for Lamanites began in New York, and moved along until its end in a location center of the relocated tribes. It is immediately next to the boundary separating the Indians and whites, or in the language of revelation, “the Jews and gentiles.”

By the following year, Joseph came to visit the area. With the large relocated group of Lamanite nations across the border, and Independence the site from which all of them could be reached, Joseph received this revelation in July, 1831:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land, which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints. Wherefore, this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, if you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence is the center place; and a spot for the temple is lying westward, upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse. Wherefore, it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints, and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile; And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance. (D&C 57:1-5)

At that moment in time we had everything in one convenient place. A land to build Zion, the remnant next door, central location, approval from God, and the permission to proceed with establishing a temple.

People, places, opportunities and events would all change between the early 1830's and the mid 1840's. Dramatically. And so we will follow a few of those events and the accompanying revelations which reflect the dynamic changes among both the Saints and the Lamanites.

SEPTEMBER 12, 2010

Remnant, Part IV

You should already be familiar with the history of the problems the Saints experienced in Missouri. Independence was hostile, and the Saints were driven away from Jackson County into surrounding areas. By 1833 the possibility of building in Independence was lost. A revelation assured the Saints that the place for Zion was not moved. The consoling revelation states:

Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion; for all flesh is in mine hands; be still and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered. They that remain, and are pure in heart, shall return, and come to their inheritances, they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy, to build up the waste places of Zion— And all these things that the prophets might be fulfilled. (D&C 101:16–19)

Zion was intended to be built in the center of the last part of Lamanite land available in 1831. The fact that the gentiles were expelled does not mean the site for building Zion was automatically changed. The Lord reiterated Zion wasn't changed. The gentile children may be scattered, but the site would remain. More importantly, the Lamanite children were being scattered as well. The picture was changing on both sides of the line separating "Jew from gentile" in the years following the 1831 revelation.

By 1838 the conflict between Mormons and Missourians had escalated to the point that it was called the "Mormon War." The election battle at Gallatin on August 6, 1838 is at one end, and Joseph Smith's surrender at Far West in November, 1838 at the other.

Missouri was lost to the Saints. The natives voted to expel them, and Governor Lilburn Boggs signed the Extermination Order on October 27, 1838 requiring Mormons to be exterminated or driven from the State of Missouri; a curious piece of Americana that was not rescinded until some 137 years later on June 25, 1976 by Missouri Governor Christopher Bond.

The immediate aftermath of the Extermination Order was the battle at Haun's Mill, ultimately leading to the surrender in November by Joseph Smith. He was subsequently tried by a military tribunal and sentenced to death, but the death sentence was not carried out.

Joseph spent the winter of 1838–39 in the Liberty Jail, and in March, 1839 wrote a letter from which we have taken three sections of the Doctrine and Covenants, Sections 121, 122 and 123. The possibility of building in Missouri was lost, at least for the time.

The Saints moved to Commerce, renamed it Nauvoo, and started a new city. This one was also identified not only as "Zion" but as the "cornerstone of Zion." (D&C 124:2). So, although "Zion" was not to be moved, by 1841 the "cornerstone of Zion" was now in Nauvoo. This is not a contradiction. Zion has never been moved. But the Lamanites were moving, the Saints were moving, and the opportunity to locate it in the places where it could have been constructed earlier were no longer relevant.

We read the words of Section 101 to mean that the location remains in Independence, Jackson County. It is possible, however, there is another meaning. That is, the location hasn't changed, although temporary opportunities existed earlier. It wasn't built earlier, and will be built, but when it is built, it will be at the place always prophesied for its construction. Zion was to be located on the top of the high mountains (Isa. 40:9). Jackson County has no mountains, no mountain range, no possibility of fulfilling the promised environs for establishing Zion (Isa. 2:3). Make the descriptions “spiritual” if you want, but a mountain setting is clearly required for the prophesied Zion (Psalms 133:3; Isa. 52:7; Joel 3:17; Micah 4:2; 2 Ne. 12:3; D&C 49:25; among others).

Zion was always intended to be built upon the mountain top (Isa. 30:17). Even a valley location in Salt Lake cannot answer to the description given in prophecy. A valley floor is not the “top of the mountain” upon which the beacon will be set. Zion has never been moved. Nor will it. In the same revelation which confirms Zion will not be moved, the Lord spoke of the Saints profaning the land earlier identified as Zion.

For all those who will not endure chastening, but deny me, cannot be sanctified. Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances. They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. (D&C 101:5–7)

So the location identified for building Zion was lost. It was lost because of the jarrings, contentions, envyings, strifes, lustful and covetous desires. This caused the land to be “polluted” and rendered it unfit for Zion. It is true, however, that in the same revelation making purchase of land in Jackson County was approved (D&C 101:70–71). There is no doubt a glorious future for Jackson County. But that will be by and by. There is a gathering in the tops of the mountains which must precede that. If there is not a gathering in the mountains first, then ancient and modern prophecy will fail. There is to be a gathering within the boundaries of the everlasting hills (D&C 133:31–32). Zion will flourish upon the mountains (D&C 49:25). There aren't any places in Missouri that qualify for this preliminary gathering.

If jarring and contending can pollute Zion, are we ready for it now? If envy and strife will make it unacceptable, how prepared are we to gather to Zion now? If lustful and covetous desires will make it unfit for an inheritance, are we above those weaknesses now? So, how soon ought we expect the establishment of Zion to get underway?

All of this is an aside to the subject of the remnant. But it is an important aside. The remnant will build the city of Zion. In 1830, when the earlier inhabitants were relocated to the area immediately adjacent to Jackson County, had the city been built it would have been there. It wasn't time. It also wasn't the place. So, although the future of that place may be glorious at some point, the city of Zion to be built by the remnant, would necessarily be built where the remnant is located. Their location, if it answers to the description of prophecy, would be mountainous, in the top of the mountains, and a suitable place for refuge during a time of upheaval. We'll follow the events of the 1840's with that in mind.

SEPTEMBER 13, 2010

Remnant, Part V

A few additional statements by Joseph Smith and others add weight to the identity of the existing American Indian population at the time of the prophecies given to Joseph Smith.

When Joseph and Oliver went to seek answers about baptism on May 15, 1829, they explained the motivation for the inquiry.

They report they were inspired “after writing the account given of the Savior’s ministry to the remnant of the seed of Jacob, upon this continent.” (Messenger and Advocate, Vol. 1, p. 15, October 1834).

“The Book of Mormon is a record of the forefathers of our western Tribes of Indians,” Smith wrote to N. C. Saxton, editor of a Rochester, New York, newspaper. “The land of America is a promised land unto them,” where they would be instrumental in building a New Jerusalem.” [Taken from Ronald Walker’s paper: “Seeking the Remnant”; one of the first publications to take the role of the remnant found in the American Indians as a serious matter of study.]

On their mission to the Lamanites, Oliver and Parley were interviewed by newspapers as they went on their journey. The Telegraph published in Painesville, Ohio, on 16 and 30 November 1830, made the following mention about Oliver’s interview:

He proclaims destruction upon the world in a few years. We understand that he is bound for the regions beyond the Mississippi, where he contemplates founding a ‘City of Refuge’ for his followers, and converting the Indians, under his prophetic authority.” Cowdery also reportedly spoke of an about-to-rise Indian prophet, who would bring these events to pass.

Parley Pratt’s autobiography discusses the Mission to the Lamanites. He describes how the missionaries didn’t even hesitate in their mission after their tremendous success at Kirtland. They changed the entire center of gravity for the Church by the Kirtland conversions. But they retained their focus on the target of the remnant, whom they had been sent to teach. This was the first organized missionary effort after the organization of the church, and the target was the Lamanites. The priority and focus was remarkable, when you consider the abundance of potential white converts all around the tiny start-up church. It gives some indication of how important Joseph regarded the Lamanite remnant to be as an obligation for the restored church.

Winter did not slow their journey toward the western frontier and border with the relocated American Indian tribes. Here's a brief excerpt from Parley's writings:

We halted for a few days in Illinois, about twenty miles from St. Louis, on account of a dreadful storm of rain and snow, which lasted for a week or more, during which the snow fell in some places near three feet deep....In the beginning of 1831 we renewed our journey; and, passing through St. Louis and St. Charles, we traveled on foot for three hundred miles through vast prairies and through trackless wilds of snow—no beaten road; houses few and far between; and the bleak northwest wind always blowing in our faces with a keenness which would almost take the skin off the face....We often ate our frozen bread and pork by the way, when the bread would be so frozen that we could not bite or penetrate any part of it but the outside crust.

After much fatigue and some suffering we all arrived in Independence, in the county of Jackson, on the extreme western frontiers of Missouri, and the United States. (Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 40)

Parley's account continues and explains how two of the missionaries took employment as tailors in Independence while the others crossed the boundary and "commenced a mission among the Lamanites, or Indians." (Id. p. 41). They taught the Shawnees, then the Delaware, including the chief over ten tribes of Delaware. The sermon delivered to the gathering called by the chief, delivered by Oliver Cowdery, is set out on pp. 42–43 where it is clear Oliver understood the Delaware were descended from the Book of Mormon people. The chief replied: “We feel truly thankful to our white friends who have come so far, and been at such pains to tell us good news, and specially this new news concerning the Book of our forefathers; it makes us glad in here—placing his hands on his own heart.”

Although the Indian reaction was favorable, the Indian Agents were alarmed at the Mormon success. In particular they did not want the upstart religion to gain a foothold among the relocated Indians, and began to interfere with the missionary efforts.

Of interest to us, however, is Oliver’s mention of the Rocky Mountains as the ultimate destination of the missionary effort, to be “with the Indians.” (The Telegraph, Plainsville, 18 January 1831, cited by Walker, above, on p. 9). Walker writes:

Smith gave a revelation requiring Sidney Gilbert to open a store in western Missouri that would allow ‘clerks employed in his service’ to go unto the Lamanites and ‘thus the gospel may be preached unto them.’ He also issued a confidential revelation that presaged the introduction of plural marriage. This latter statement promised that the elders would intermarry with the native women, making the red man’s posterity ‘white, delightful, and just. (Seeking the Remnant, p. 10, Citations omitted)

This early focus on the duty to find and preach to the remnant was not a passing concern. It was far more central to the early efforts than we realize as we review the events today. Today the view of the Lamanite remnant’s role is, if anything, superficial. To the earliest converts, they were central. They would remain a focus of interest throughout not only Joseph’s life, but also into the early part of the western migration. Indeed, the western movement of the church itself was related to locating the remnant.

Now there are a number of prophecies given in the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants which relate to why the remnant were a priority for Joseph Smith and the early church of this dispensation. The further we get from those times, however, the more we seem to forget the underlying reasons. We have become so successful as an organization, and prosper in every economic, political and social measure that it is hard to remember things. When Presidential candidates, the leader of the United States Senate, the Ambassador to China, business and educational leaders are members of the church, we do not relate as well to the promised cataclysms. Where once we may have welcomed destruction to end our persecutions, now we fear what we would lose. Our former poverty made us fear nothing in the destruction of the world, but now we have a great deal to lose and therefore we want to continue as we are. We have even redefined the term “remnant” to mean us, the Latter-day Saints, as if redefining it will remove the prophetic threat posed to the gentiles (See “Children of the Covenant”, May, 1995 Ensign, the General Conference talk by Russell M. Nelson; in particular the interpretation given in footnote 15). The careful distinctions between the remnant of the Book of Mormon on the one hand, and the gentiles on the other, has been forgotten, or altogether lost in our modern teachings. But that does not alter what Nephi or Christ meant in their prophecies that we still read in the Book of Mormon text.

We’ve worked to establish a basis for understanding the distinctions for several months now. With that foundation we will continue our search for understanding where we find ourselves in history, what group we are identified with and what we should expect in the coming calamities.

Onward, then...

SEPTEMBER 13, 2010

Remnant, Part VI

Another principle that must be included in the mix of understanding the prophecies concerning the remnant is timing and patience.

When you speak of bloodlines and blessings, it is not possible to follow the details of interconnections across generations with any amount of accuracy. Even Joseph Smith, while certain of the remnant's existence and importance, was not certain of their identity. They needed to be found. Although some groups showed promise, they were not, and have not, been identified.

There were rumors of a people in the southwest, who made rugs, that may be the group.

There are those who are convinced the Hopi are the people. Hugh Nibley has spent time with the Hopi and written a great deal about them. He seemed satisfied they were likely the chosen remnant. He studied their year-end dance festivals and believed they contained elements of sacred narrative identifiable with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I have LDS friends who have spent time among the Hopi who have the same view.

I do not believe it is necessary to identify who the remnant is. It is important to realize there is a prophetic destiny of a remnant, and to have a little humility about the limited gentile success which has been prophesied. But to go further than that is not always wise.

Everything in the Lord's plan is timed. You cannot change the timing. If, for example, you hurry to get where you think Zion will be established, and arrive before the burning and cleansing of that land, then you may have found the right spot, but you arrived at the wrong time. You will be killed, burned off the land as it is purged and prepared. The Lord alone controls timing. And timing is as important as any other portion of the Lord's plan.

Also, to identify the remnant beforehand is ill-advised. They will be identified in the ordinary course of events. They will fulfill their prophetic destiny. As it unfolds, it will be natural, appropriate and in accordance with the hand of God. There will be no need to force Zion.

Those who are the remnant may well be Hopi. Or, they may come from Hopi blood, if that is indeed the remnant bloodline. But during the time between the closing of the Book of Mormon history and the opening of American history, how many from that bloodline departed or were captured and carried away to another place. If only one left and migrated into Canada, later to intermarry and leave descendants, who have now intermarried and live in Alberta, Montana and Idaho, then they may have long ago lost any identity with the Hopi. But they may still be heirs according to the bloodline that is theirs.

How do we know the remnant does not now include businessmen in Mexico City, families in Peru, a physician in San Francisco, or a housewife in Florida, all of whom have the blood of the remnant within them, but they are without any knowledge of it? Nor can we know if there were intermarriages and migrations which make northern Mexico and Arizona filled with people who are the remnant, heirs of the promises, and destined to one day return to the faith of Christ.

Who knows but what the in-migration of those regarded as “illegal aliens” currently inside the United States are not in possession of the blood that qualifies them as heirs of the promises.

They exist. They are known to the Lord. There may be great areas and people, as well as disbursed and assimilated individuals who are among those who are heirs. It is not important to “find” them in one sense, but critical that they be found in another. They will self-identify. That is, those in whom the promises will be fulfilled will act consistent with the promises. They will become known as they engage in the prophesied conduct. They will convert. They will become reunited through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. They will shake off the dust of history, arise and become glorious. They will blossom as a rose and build the New Jerusalem. We will not control that. It will be them awakening, not us attempting to assimilate them into our culture and society. The Indian Placement Program didn’t work because it was not the means by which they are to be found. Pushing our culture on them will only create errors their return is intended to cure. And so the timing and means are critical for this to unfold in accordance with the Lord’s plan.

If you were to know for certain exactly who was to fulfill the prophecies, and to visit with them today, you may be profoundly disappointed. Until the time is right, they won’t be ready either. They will awaken on time. But until that time, you cannot rouse from slumber those who are not ready to awaken. That it WILL happen is certain. But the time is as important as any other component of the event.

Do the remnant people even know they are the Lord’s and heirs of promises in the Book of Mormon? Probably not. They, the remnant, are to learn of these things from the gentiles (2 Nephi 30:3). Therefore it is unlikely they will know anything about it until the record of the Book of Mormon is delivered to them by the gentiles. So if they are to learn about these things from the gentiles, the first step will be educational. Gentiles need to become converted to the beliefs of the Book of Mormon, then bring these correct beliefs to the remnant. The remnant may have a glorious destiny, but not until after first the gentiles who believe in the words take them to the remnant and teach them.

Even if you knew the Hopi were the right people, that does not accomplish what the promises foretell. The remnant must be taught the truth. That will be taught by believing gentiles. We don't have many of those yet. So to deliver a copy of the Book of Mormon to a Hopi and expect that to result in spontaneous combustion producing light, truth and glory is at best a naive notion and at worst absolute foolishness. It won't happen that way. The right people must be brought the right message by a believing gentile, preaching the fullness of the Gospel to them. When that happens, Nephi's prophecy may begin to unfold. We lack qualified gentile ministers at present. They labor under condemnation for not taking the Book of Mormon seriously or remembering the covenant made within it. So the first step is to convert a few gentiles.

Nevertheless, this is an important subject and worth taking time to understand. But with this, as with almost everything else in the Gospel, having it measured correctly and weighed in proportion is the only way to understand. So we proceed step by cautious step to try and dismantle false and corrupt notions, and to assemble the true ones. You must be patient to understand the Lord's plan. And therefore we proceed patiently in this subject, as well.

Patience is more than a virtue. It is critical to participating in the Lord's plan.

COMMENTS:

John C · SEPTEMBER 13, 2010 AT 6:34 PM

I read Ronald Walker's paper, "Seeking the Remnant". I was amazed how seriously Joseph and others sought to teach the Lamanites and gather a remnant. Their efforts were inspiring but nothing of long-term significance seemed to have come from it all (as far as I can tell, I may be wrong). I wonder why Joseph tried to push the issue that Denver is now saying has to be in the Lord's own time. What am I, Joseph or Denver missing?

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 13, 2010 AT 6:41 PM

Joseph tried, as did Brigham. But now we are not even aware of its importance. We're not pushing it because we don't remember it. Joseph pushed because he was aware of it.

Remember that, had Joseph lived to be 85 years old, he would have seen the Lord's coming; though he was uncertain which coming that would have been (D&C 130:14-15).

Our efforts matter. But the first step is to gain knowledge so we can do our part. We're a long way from that. We can't control the others nor even contribute to them until we have first prepared. We aren't aware of that need as yet; at least in the way in which we need to be aware. Then we need to act consistent with that awareness and acquire some understanding so we can teach the truth. Right now we're a long way short of that capability. When the truth is taught, people have some difficulty recognizing it and oftentimes will argue against it.

SEPTEMBER 14, 2010

Remnant, Part VII

When Joseph had made a sufficient "offering" and "acknowledgments," the Lord gave another opportunity for the Saints to receive again what had been taken from them, that is the "fullness of the priesthood." (D&C 124:1, 28).

To be permitted to undertake this, however, there would be a limited time appointed. After that appointment, the church would be rejected (D&C 124:31–32). The time is not specified, but the work was to be undertaken by sending “swift messengers,” (D&C 124:26) and gathering all the Saints together with their gold, silver, antiquities, and precious things to construct this Temple (D&C 124:26–27).

The Saints gathered to Nauvoo and by 1844 the population had swollen to 12,000. There were shops, brick homes, stores, and a Masonic Hall constructed in Nauvoo. There was a gunsmith shop, a university, library and wide streets. Unlike other frontier towns with adobe and log homes, Nauvoo boasted brick houses and affluence. This community was superior to anything else along the western boundary of the United States at the time.

When Joseph and Hyrum were killed on June 27, 1844, the Temple walls were not completed and no portion had been dedicated. After Joseph’s death, the Saints rededicated themselves to finish the Temple. The exterior walls were completed in December, 1844 and the final sunstone put into place with some considerable difficulty.

On March 16, 1845 Brigham Young asked the Saints to rededicate themselves to building the Temple, promising them blessings if they would redouble their efforts to complete the building.

On the following day 105 extra laborers showed up to help (History of the Church 7:385–87). It was not until 24 May 1845 that the capstone would be laid.

Joseph was dead for 18 months before the endowment was administered in the Nauvoo Temple on December 10th, 1845. Those who had been given some instruction regarding the Temple in Joseph’s brick store, used what they had learned before Joseph’s death to perform the ceremonies. A portion of the attic was temporarily dedicated for this work, even though the structure was incomplete. The final endowments were performed on February 7, 1846. On February 8, 1846 the Twelve prayed in the Temple to be able to finally complete and formally dedicate the Temple. The following day the Temple caught fire, damaging the area that had been used for the endowment requiring repairs to be made. A week later Brigham Young's party departed Nauvoo with the Temple still incomplete, but Nauvoo was a magnificent city that showed enormous culture, prosperity and success.

If you have visited Nauvoo since the beginning of the Church-sponsored Nauvoo Restoration, Inc. work, you know how amazing the city was when abandoned by the Saints. It was a tribute to labor, dedication, and perseverance. The Temple was incomplete and still under construction not at all ready for dedication, but the city was a marvel. As the church leadership departed to the west, they left instruction to complete the Temple even though it would not be used.

Finally, on April 29, 1846 the Nauvoo Temple was complete enough to dedicate. The following day a private dedication service was conducted by Wilford Woodruff, Orson Hyde and about twenty others. The prayer was offered by Joseph Young, Brigham's brother. The next day a public dedication service was held with those attending charged $1.00 entrance fee to help pay those who had worked in completing the structure. In this dedication ceremony Elder Hyde offered the prayer and included the following:

By the authority of the Holy Priesthood now we offer this building as a sanctuary to Thy Worthy Name. We ask Thee to take the guardianship into Thy hands...

The following Sunday Elder Hyde explained that the Temple needed to be completed for the church to be accepted by the Lord with our dead. He commented that the work had only been accomplished “by the skin of our teeth.” (Wilford Woodruff's Journal 3:43)

By September, 1846 a mob overran Nauvoo, and the caretakers gave the keys to the Temple doors to the mob. The mob was eventually shamed into returning the Temple to the caretakers and on October 20th the keys were returned to Brother Paine. The trustees of Nauvoo then tried to sell the Temple, but the best offer received was $100,000. A Missouri newspaper reported that the Temple was sold in June, 1847 to the Catholic Church for $75,000, but that the sale failed because of a defect in the title to the property.

On October 9, 1848 the Nauvoo Temple was destroyed by an arsonist.

In March, 1849 the French Icarians purchased the hollow shell of the destroyed Temple. On May 27, 1850 a storm blew down the north wall and made the structure so dangerous that it was further torn down to make it safe. Pieces of the blockwork were then sold and some of them were transported to be used in building projects outside the community, including to St. Louis. By 1865 the city removed what little remained. The site was then used for saloons, slaughter houses, hotels, grocery and drug stores, pool halls and private houses (“The Nauvoo Temple”, The Instructor, March 1965).

From the time of Nauvoo until the present day, every President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints either lived in Nauvoo between January 1841 and June 1844, or descended from those who lived there during the time. (Although some were called on missions and abandoned families who resided there for some of that time.)

Church history takes the view that Nauvoo was a triumph, and the Saints succeeded in accomplishing all that was required of them, and more. The stories of heroism, sacrifice and devotion that focus on the Nauvoo era are endless. Those families who trace their genealogy to ancestors in Nauvoo at that time defend the notion that they are specially favored as families, and are among the noble and great chosen to lead others in mortality because of their great devotion and sacrifice.

The promise of a remnant holding authority and performing a central work in the establishment of Zion, as prophesied by the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, would be a dramatic change in course for the church. This is something that will occur in any event. Indeed, coalitions, conspiracies and man's arm will be powerless to prevent it. Unlikely history is the stuff of scripture.

Prophecies will be fulfilled. Despite vanity and foolishness, error and unbelief, prophecies will be fulfilled

SEPTEMBER 14, 2010

Remnant, Part VIII

We've seen some of what the remnant is defined to mean. We've seen the definition in the Book of Mormon excludes gentiles. We've seen the converted gentiles comprising the Latter-day Saints are still defined as gentiles after conversion.

We've seen that the first formal mission called after the establishment of the church was sent to the Lamanites to find the remnant. We've seen how the mission went no further than the boundary where the Indian Nations were relocated by the US Government in 1830. What we haven't discussed is the interest Joseph Smith had in locating the remnant throughout his life.

When he was fleeing Nauvoo in late June, he intended to go to the Rocky Mountains. That was the location chosen precisely because it was where he hoped to find the remnant. He was talked into returning by those who claimed it was cowardly for him to flee. They used the Lord's analogy about the false shepherd who would flee when the flock was in danger (John 10:11-13). He reportedly said "if my life is of no value to my friends, it is of no value to myself." He returned. With that, Joseph's attempt to locate and identify the remnant came to an end.

However, before his final surrender, his intention was to go to the Rocky Mountains to locate the remnant.

The following entry appears on June 22, 1844 in Vol. 6, page 547 of the DHC:

About 9 p.m. Hyrum came out of the Mansion and gave his hand to Reynolds Cahoon, at the same time saying, 'A company of men are seeking to kill my brother Joseph, and the Lord has warned him to flee to the Rocky Mountains to save his life. Good-bye, Brother Cahoon, we shall see you again.' In a few minutes afterwards Joseph came from his family. His tears were flowing fast. He held a handkerchief to his face, and followed after Brother Hyrum without uttering a word.

In his final public address Joseph said, among other things:

You will gather many people into the fastness of the Rocky Mountains as a center for the gathering of the people...you will yet be called upon to go forth and call upon the free men from Main to gather themselves together to the Rocky Mountains; and the Redmen from the West and all people from the North and from the South and from the East, and go to the West, to establish themselves in the strongholds of their gathering places, and there you will gather with the Redmen to their center from their scattered and dispersed situation, to become the strong arm of Jehovah, who will be a strong bulwark of protection from your foes. (“A Prophecy of Joseph the Seer”, found in The Fate of the Persecutors of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 154, 156)

There is a well known quote that speaks volumes when considered as a whole:

I want to say to you before the Lord that you know no more concerning the destinies of this Church and Kingdom than a babe upon its mother’s lap. You don’t comprehend it. It is only a little handful of Priesthood you see here tonight, but this Church will fill North and South America—it will fill the world. It will fill the Rocky Mountains. There will be tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints who will be gathered in the Rocky Mountains, and there they will open the door for the establishing of the Gospel among the Lamanites.... This people will go into the Rocky Mountains; they will there build temples to the Most High. They will raise up a posterity there, and the Latter-day Saints who dwell in these mountains will stand in the flesh until the coming of the Son of Man. The Son of Man will come to them while in the Rocky Mountains. (Millennial Star, Vol. 54 (1852), p. 605)

We’ve seen how the primary effort to build the city of Zion will be the remnant’s, and the gentiles will merely “assist” in the construction.

To see the remnant’s role is more important than to understand their identity. Their identity will come. But their role is distinct and important. We are not them, and they have a destiny appointed them by covenant and promise. We cannot substitute ourselves for them. Nor can we fulfill the prophetic promises without them.

CHAPTER 8

3 Nephi 20

Christ had some specific teachings about the remnant we have not yet examined. We'll turn to that to add to our understanding of the remnant role:

3 Nephi 20:11

“Ye remember that I spake unto you, and said that when the words of Isaiah should be fulfilled—behold they are written, ye have them before you, therefore search them—”

Christ is speaking and will turn to the future destiny of the Nephites. By the time this statement was made, however, the Nephites were mingled with all other bloodlines. There were shortly to be no more “ites” but only one people (4 Nephi 1:17).

The destiny of the future remnant will unfold in conformity with words spoken by Isaiah. They are adequate to foretell the future of the events involving the people on this, the American land. But we are supposed to “search them” to be able to get an understanding of what will unfold.

There is a plan. It was all foreseen. It will happen as the prophecies describe. However we need to trust the language and not impose other ideas upon the words.

SEPTEMBER 15, 2010

3 Nephi 20:12

“And verily, verily, I say unto you, that when they shall be fulfilled then is the fulfilling of the covenant which the Father hath made unto his people, O house of Israel.”

Isaiah’s prophecies concerning the Israelite covenant will happen at the same time as the fulfillment of the covenants for the Nephite remnant. So things will develop simultaneously for all the chosen people. Not just locally, but globally.

Notice the reference to the “Father” and to “His people.” Why is it the “Father’s people” in this scripture? What significance is there to the covenant being fulfilled for the Father’s people? Are they different from others? Can others have a covenant with Christ? Why is it the Father’s people who will see the fulfillment of their covenants in this final, winding up of history?

How are “O house of Israel” and the “Father’s people” related? Are they the same? Why or why not?

Why would all covenants come to a fulfillment at the same time? What is there of general historical development which requires all of these to be fulfilled simultaneously?

How would you prepare for the time when the fulfillment of all the covenants are to occur? Is there some kind of storage you should be assembling? What about things that put “oil” in a “lamp?” How would you go about getting that put together?

If the judgments of God will begin on His own house (D&C 112:24–26), then how do you prepare to avoid that judgment?

There is an upside to every prophecy, even in those predicting calamity. The upside consists in two things: First, avoiding the judgment by being prepared for it (D&C 38:30). Second, recognizing it so as to not be alarmed or lose faith because of it (D&C 1:3).

When you see the distresses which are to come, recognize them as signs given by the Lord and take comfort (Luke 21:8–13).

Christ uses Isaiah as His source because Isaiah was inspired in what he wrote. We also have a record of his prophecy. Therefore, the Lord could speak in the first person and have us quote Him. However, He pays tribute to His own prophet by quoting the words of Isaiah. This is meekness indeed. Our Lord is not and never has been prideful. He is meek, and willing to let others have credit, share in triumph, and be treated as equals. How unlike Him are the gentile leaders who love to lord it over one another, holding each other as subservients. Christ, however, made Himself a servant of all (Mark 10:42–44). He puts that same meekness on display again here, as he quotes from Isaiah. This shows the Lord’s respect for Isaiah.

Interesting the things which become apparent the closer you look at our Lord. Interesting how much the Book of Mormon adds to the picture of our Lord. What a great volume of scripture we have been given.

Well, back then to our main topic...

SEPTEMBER 15, 2010

3 Nephi 20:13

And then shall the remnants, which shall be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth, be gathered in from the east and from the west, and from the south and from the north; and they shall be brought to the knowledge of the Lord their God, who hath redeemed them.

Notice “remnants” is plural. This is Christ speaking, and the scope of the message is universal. It is not local. It includes local events, to be sure. But the time of this fulfillment will be global. All the “remnants” will be affected.

It will not matter if the particular “remnant” is anywhere “upon the face of the earth” they will be “gathered in.” Why would they necessarily be “gathered?” What is the purpose of “gathering?”

Why “gather” merely to then return them to their lands of inheritance? (See discussion of 3 Nephi 21:27–28 here).

Which is more important, to gather physically or to gather “to the knowledge of the Lord their God?”

How could people gather “to the knowledge of the Lord their God?” What kind of “knowledge of the Lord God” will be involved? Do you get that knowledge by supporting men in their callings? Do men and their callings even matter? Can you grow in knowledge of God by following, even memorizing, a handbook; following, memorizing talks and inspirational literature? What does a person need to follow, to do, to abide by in order to gain “knowledge of the Lord their God?” What about those who testify to you about programs and personalities, but never preach about Christ and Him crucified?

Do true messengers speak about one another, or about their Lord? How can a man, any man, save you? Who alone has the capacity to redeem you? Is “knowledge of the Lord their God” related also to knowledge that He “hath redeemed them?” Can you “know” Christ and not acquire in the process of knowing Him the knowledge that He “hath redeemed” you?

Do you come to understand He has redeemed you by also coming to know Him?

Do Joseph’s remarks about the Lord coming to visit with the remnant in the Rocky Mountains explain how both those coming from the four corners of the compass will gain “knowledge of the Lord their God” and also know He “hath redeemed them?”

Do you begin to see a pattern of consistent prophetic foreknowledge of the last days? Do Christ's words in this message of the Book of Mormon give any greater reason to believe in the promises?

If these promises are made by Him, should you expect it possible for you to go ahead and "gather in" to Him even before there are others willing to do so? Can this "gathering in" occur in your lifetime, for you? If God is no respecter of persons, then what would you need to do today to obtain the same blessings others will receive as they "gather in" in perhaps greater numbers in the future? Is it possible to do that? Are you willing to try?

It seems to me this doctrine is important in a macro sense in understanding prophetic promises and future gatherings. But it is perhaps more important in the micro sense, in that anything promised to anyone in any age is always available on the same principles to anyone willing to abide them at any time (D&C 130:20–21). Do you really believe these teachings of our Lord? Then why not act on them?

I know these things are truly within the reach of almost all of you. The overwhelming majority of readers of this blog have lived better lives than I have. You are almost all better qualified than I was. I believed these things, trusted the Lord, acted on His promises. As a result, I am among those who has been "gathered in" and I "know the Lord my God," having been "redeemed by Him." It is more than possible for you.

SEPTEMBER 16, 2010

3 Nephi 20:14–15

And the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land, for your inheritance. And I say unto you, that if the Gentiles do not repent after the blessing which they shall receive, after they have scattered my people—

Christ is speaking to a group of people and their descendants when making these remarks. The Father has commanded Christ to confirm to the Nephites they are given this land. “This land.” So now the question of where Christ was while making these comments becomes important.

Where were they at the moment Christ spoke to them? That affects things, doesn't it? Was it Guatemala? Or the United States?

There are two ways of trying to determine the answer to this question. One would be to study the internal content of the Book of Mormon and try to reconstruct a location based on the clues there. This has been done with varying results. The two leading works on the two leading theories have been referred to in this post. There is another theory that the area was in the Gulf of Mexico. The land was completely reformed, broken up, and altered as a result of the upheavals of the 3 Nephi destruction, and the land no longer appears as it did once. It is now underwater. You can work and justify a number of locations based on the content of the Book of Mormon.

The other way is to take other sources that presumably knew, and accept what they said about the location. I've already quoted from both Moroni and Joseph Smith about the location. Both have placed the events in the area now known as the United States. Moroni's description of the Book of Mormon, and its people, was as follows: “He said there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang (JS-H 1:34). I presume Moroni knew, and that Joseph had no reason to misstate what he said. It would appear that the continent referred to by Christ using the words, “this land” was North America. And the promise from the Father, made by covenant, was with “the former inhabitants of this continent.”

So the remnant was (at the moment Christ was speaking to this audience, and confirmed this covenant of the Father) located in North America. This does not mean they weren't mobile and subsequently moved about. This does not mean they did not disburse and occupy other portions of the North and South American landmasses. This does not mean that other migrations of these people which scattered them elsewhere into the world have not occurred. Even if you confine everything to a North American venue for the entirety of the Book of Mormon account, there is still a gap between 400 A.D. when the narrative draws to a conclusion and the 1820's when the record comes to light again. Nothing closes that gap.

So if Moroni's comments to Joseph Smith can be trusted, then originally the people from whom the remnant came were people who lived on “this continent” at some time in history.

The gentiles are mentioned again here. They are reminded of the blessings they have received. They are reminded they were given the responsibility of scattering the remnant and disciplining them for the remnant's failings. But, once the gentiles are blessed, once they have scattered the remnant and destroyed most of them (leaving only a remnant of what was here before), then the gentiles are warned. They must repent. Without repentance the fate of the gentiles will be a similar holocaust of destruction, scattering and treading down; leaving only a remnant of the gentiles still upon the land.

So the roles will reverse. At first, the gentiles dominate and the remnant recedes, at last the remnant will dominate and the gentiles recede.

The remnant's role and the gentiles' pride are interconnected with one another. It is for this reason, if no other, the subject of the remnant is important to know something about.

So, we continue.

SEPTEMBER 16, 2010

3 Nephi 20:16

Then shall ye, who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, go forth among them; and ye shall be in the midst of them who shall be many; and ye shall be among them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he goeth through both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

The descendants of Christ's audience remaining after the holocaust of gentile destruction (i.e., the "remnant of the house of Jacob") would be used by God to deliver judgment upon the gentiles. First the descendants are to be reduced to a remnant by the gentiles, but then the fortunes would be reversed. Initially the gentiles would be the very embodiment of the "wrath of God" to "scatter" and "smite" the descendants (1 Ne. 13:14). Following that, the gentiles are favored of God and "prosper." This land becomes the temporary land of inheritance for the gentiles, as well (1 Ne. 13:15).

But the gentiles would occupy the land on condition. They would need to serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ (Ether 2:12).

Ultimately, they will need to repent, or they will fill the measure of their own cup of wrath by rejecting the fullness of the Gospel. The gentiles would not continue in their humility, but would be offered the fullness of the Gospel, reject it, then turn to their own pride, even more proud of themselves than any comparable people upon the earth. As Christ describes the latter-day gentiles, they will be full of mischief, lyings, deceits, hypocrisy and priestcrafts. Indeed, they will be full of all this and will also reject the fullness of the Gospel offered them by the Lord (3 Nephi 16:10).

When they do, Christ will “bring the fullness of my Gospel from among them.” (3 Nephi 16:10). Upon removing the fullness, and the gentiles being filled with their pride, priestcrafts, deceits and hypocrisy, the Lord will use the remnant who remain to return judgment upon the gentiles in the same manner the gentiles had earlier returned judgment upon the remnant (3 Nephi 16:15).

As Christ states above, using the words of Isaiah, “a remnant of the house of Jacob” will “go forth among them; and ye shall be in the midst of them who shall be many; and ye shall be among them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he goeth through both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.”

We’ve discussed the “beasts of the forest” and the “flocks of sheep” before. Both categories of gentiles will be swept away. None can deliver them from this coming judgment. The remnant will be the Lord’s instrument of judgment upon the gentiles, and the gentile pride, priestcrafts, lyings, deceits will all come crashing down upon them in judgment. Their idols will be trodden down and torn in pieces, for they are their own idols imagining in their own hearts themselves to be greater than any other people. Their image of themselves as high and lifted up will be brought down low, into the dust. (Compare Isaiah 14:12–17). How like their master Mahon these gentiles have become. But then rejecting the fullness of the Gospel when it has been offered to a people always carries a heavy price.

The remnant will be doing the work of the Father in that day. For the judgment is the Lord's and not the remnant's. The remnant are only the means by which the judgment is delivered.

Cleansing precedes the blessing. And this blessed land will be Zion. But not while occupied by filthy people who idolize themselves, reject the fullness, support priestcrafts, lyings, deceit and hypocrisy calling it righteousness, truth and beauty. They cannot see their own condition, and will not trust the Lord to reveal it to them. They will say the Lord does not speak any more, and we have enough of the revelations of God (2 Nephi 28:27–29). They will say God has finished His work of restoring truth, given His power to men, and now we must follow men to be saved (2 Nephi 28:5).

But the Lord will prove that He had more to say when the gentiles learn, too late, they trusted in the arm of flesh rather than in the Spirit which saves (2 Nephi 28:31). At that day, despite all the gentile petitions for relief from that God whose fullness they rejected, none will deliver.

The interplay between the gentiles and the remnant is a fascinating subject, with prophetic details given so as to allow us to appreciate the peril we find ourselves as gentiles in these last days. It is good we Latter-day Saints know we are safe and are part of a great, saved and favored community to be preserved against the coming judgments, isn't it? It is good we do not need to repent much if at all to be saved, because as we hear so very often: All is well. All is well.

And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed. (Isa. 6:9–10)

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 17, 2010 AT 7:30 PM

I cannot think of a single relationship that works well or is anywhere near the place of God when based upon the principles of fear. What parent wants their children to do as they say because they are afraid of them? The only ones I can think of are the ones that lack the understanding of the power of love. How can you say you have truly helped someone come to the Lord when you have only made them afraid of Him? Why is it that the Nephites time and time again turned to the Lord only to forget Him when times were good? And what exactly did the City of Enoch do that was so different? A lot of people follow a “list” compiled mostly of opinions and never come to know the Lord. Why? Because of fear. Fear that they’re doing the wrong thing (which can only make one second guess and weaken faith) and fear that they’re not doing enough (which creates distraction and a belief in unworthiness as long as there is still a list to follow). There is a calling to some to preach repentance, but why is it that repentance must be beaten into everybody with fear? The goodness of God and the message of the atonement ought to be the motivating factors in the process of repentance otherwise complacency will ALWAYS follow when blessings are had. An eye single to the glory of God can only come from a deep, sincere love of the Lord and His truths. I cannot see how fear as the motivating factor will ever bring anyone to truly know the Lord as it only works as long as fear based repentance is being preached.

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 17, 2010 AT 8:26 PM

This is not about psychology. In fact using the tools of psychology to understand the invitation to come to Christ won’t help.

Repentance is love. It is coming to Him. But coming to Him by learning of Him. It is not fear; though approaching God is indeed fearful. That fear in the approach arises from your own inner worthiness before Him. It is unavoidable because none of us are worthy apart from Him. Therefore the dread of being before God will remain until He removes it by an act of His mercy.

The Lord and His prophets teach plainly what we all understood and all agreed upon before the world was begun. The plan we have is tried, true, and is the path by which all those who have ever ascended to heaven have made that ascent.

Focusing upon whether one's motivation is based upon fear or love is unhelpful. Focusing upon what the Lord says, and then what is meant by what the Lord says, is helpful. The inner man must change. The change is mandatory, and comes from knowing Him and learning of Him. But until the moment of relief is granted by Him, there will always be discomfort because of our fallen state and tendency to sin. This is why He is a "Comforter"—because He removes from us the discomfort we feel from sin. But we surely do feel (ALL of us feel) dread and fear because of what we lack as we approach the throne of grace. He "Comforts" us by freeing us from that terrible burden. But such freedom comes on His terms, based upon the eternal plan for removing sin, or it does not happen at all.

SEPTEMBER 17, 2010

3 Nephi 20:17–19

Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off. And I will gather my people together as a man gathereth his sheaves into the floor. For I will make my people with whom the Father hath covenanted, yea, I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass. And thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth. And behold, I am he who doeth it.

The remnant will be the instruments of Divine retribution against the gentiles. It will be the remnant's "hand" which "shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries." And it will be "all [the remnant's] enemies [which] shall be cut off." So, who will be the remnant's "adversaries?" Who will be their "enemies?"

The Lord promises to "gather my people together" — and the only ones He has called His people are the Nephite audience, never the gentiles (See 3 Nephi 16:8–9; 3 Nephi 20:15, 27; 3 Nephi 21:2). The Lord's people to be gathered, the promised inheritors of the land, the chosen and covenant people are the remnant. This prophecy is about them. The gentiles are only included to the extent that a few of them will repent (3 Nephi 16:13; 3 Nephi 21:6).

The "sheaves into the floor" is a harvest image. It is an end-of-times view, because it involves harvest time. "Gathering the sheaves into the floor" is a reference to latter-day Zion, where a group is first "gathered" before the burning of the fields that always follows.

Again the Lord calls the remnant "my people" while clarifying that His people are those "with whom the Father hath covenanted." To covenant with the Father is to receive a Father. The Father does not covenant with strangers. His covenants are with His household. So this is the Family of God.

The "iron horn" and the "brass hoofs" are also symbolic images. What does a "horn" represent? In the context of judgment, does the "horn" hold additional meaning? Why is the horn said to be "iron?" What do the hoofs represent? In the context of judgment do the "hoofs" have additional meaning? Why are they "brass?" How stern and unrelenting will the judgment be? How complete will it become for the "people" to be "beat in pieces?" How terrible will the pouring out of judgment become?

Why would judgment be so severe upon a people who claim to be godly? Think about the introduction to Joseph Smith at the time the restoration of all things was offered (JS-H 1:19). Compare that to the statement made by the mortal Christ when the Pharisees were confronting Him about violating the rituals and practices of the religious hierarchy at the time (Mark 7:5–9). Christ offered them the fullness of His Gospel and they rejected it. The judgment which followed was unlike anything that went before. Christ warned them it would be so (Matt. 24:21). Nevertheless, they refused to accept the fullness offered them, continued on in their religious traditions, and were besieged by Roman legions and slain en masse. The account from Josephus is difficult and shocking to read. Mothers cannibalizing their infants to satiate their hunger pains. It is as if hell itself opened upon Jerusalem.

Rejection of the fullness of Christ's Gospel carries terrible consequences. We have seen it before. And, when it was rejected before, it was done in preference to traditions from men. The arm of flesh and a religion multiplied the commandments of men until every aspect of life was controlled by religion. How one dressed, what they ate, how they observed the Sabbath, what things were considered clean and unclean, how to appear in public in order to conform to the right look, vocabulary and conduct. These were very religious people. I've discussed them in Come, Let Us Adore Him. I assume you're familiar with that.

Thank goodness we are not like them. We have the fullness, don't we? We are safe and in the right path and none can molest us or make us afraid. For we are the chosen people.

Well those other people (not us) who rejected the fullness of the Gospel, those are the ones who will be broken into pieces. Then their "gain" and their "substance" will be consecrated to the Lord. So they will live the law of consecration after all! Only it will be postmortem. That is, once killed, the Lord can use their gain and substance to provide for His people.

Lest any forget the author and finisher of our faith, He speaks to us anew to remind us who is responsible for these deeds: “And behold, I am he who doeth it.”

The Lord is, after all, the same yesterday, today and tomorrow. When He invites us in meekness to come to Him, we should realize that failure to come risks the judgments that have always been terrible to bear. Those Old Testament events we have a difficult time associating with Christ will become associated with Christ again. Just as His New Testament judgments were His and terrible to behold. He is the same. We should expect that when the time ends and we have not met our appointment, we actually do risk rejection and judgment.

SEPTEMBER 17, 2010

3 Nephi 20:20

And it shall come to pass, saith the Father, that the sword of my justice shall hang over them at that day; and except they repent it shall fall upon them, saith the Father, yea, even upon all the nations of the Gentiles.

Again the reminder is made to the gentiles. We who are associated with the gentiles (D&C 109:60) are numbered among “all the nations of the gentiles.”

So this is Divine judgment, aimed at the gentiles who were offered, and then rejected the fullness of His Gospel. These are those who will be receiving the “sword of [His] justice.” Even now, the “sword of [His] justice...hangs over us.” For we are “at that day” now. So the sword “shall fall upon them, saith the Father” unless we “repent.”

How does one repent when they have rejected the fullness? Would it have been easier to have accepted it when first offered?

When did we neglect receiving it? If taken, how was it taken? How do we obtain it anew?

These seem to be important issues. They seem to involve the very subject of life and death, both mortally and eternally. Why, if so important, do we go about telling one another “odds are you’re going to be exalted” when such alarms as these exist in Christ’s own words in the Book of Mormon? What foolishness have we been given in place of the “plain words” of truth which Nephi and Christ Himself taught?

Do we get angry at the truth like Laman and Lemuel? (2 Nephi 1:26). Do we take the truth to be a hard thing? Why do we get angry at the truth? Do we accept truth and welcome it, or think it is a terrible thing when we hear it? (2 Nephi 28:28). Do those who are offended at the truth really have the spirit of the devil? (2 Nephi 33:5).

The key for gentile survival is repentance. Time and time again the words “repent” or “repentance” are used to let the gentiles know there is an escape. But that escape does not come from receiving a hollow form of godliness without any power (JS-H 1:19). What is “priesthood” if there is no power in it?

Well the Book of Mormon continues to invite listening gentiles to repent. Over the heads of all responsible for failure, the Book of Mormon preaches repentance and truth. It preaches against priestcraft which teaches gentiles to worship man and rely upon the arm of flesh, the Book of Mormon invites gentiles to come and receive pure religion and knowledge of their Redeemer.

The Book of Mormon is the cornerstone of our religion; the cornerstone of the religion of Jesus Christ. It is the most correct book. A man can get closer to God by abiding its precepts than any other book. We have had it warning and inviting us for 180 years and we still have not actually either learned its precepts nor begun to abide by them.

The times of the gentiles are drawing to a close. If there is to be any significant gentile repentance, it must happen soon or the sword of the Lord's justice, which hangs over us, will surely fall on us.

So this topic of remnant destiny and gentile destiny are intertwined. It is little wonder why Joseph found reason to send the first missionaries to find them; and sought to flee to the Rocky Mountains himself to find them the last week of his life.

Our current proximity does not matter, however, if our hearts are far from the Lord's invitation to repent.

SEPTEMBER 18, 2010

3 Nephi 20:21–22

And it shall come to pass that I will establish my people, O house of Israel. And behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob; and it shall be a New Jerusalem. And the powers of heaven shall be in the midst of this people; yea, even I will be in the midst of you.

The Lord will establish His people, including all of the “house of Israel.” The plan is global. But when it comes to the Americas, His people are those in the audience at the moment He was speaking to “this people.” And the land of promise for them is “this land.” Meaning that wherever it was that Christ was speaking involved two things: The ancestors of the remnant, and the land of promise.

Now the statement gets interesting because Christ refers to a covenant He made personally with “your father Jacob.” Which “Jacob” is this referring to? And, if the Old Testament father whose name was changed to Israel, then why refer to him by his earlier name (“Jacob”) rather than by his new name (“Israel”)? I’ve described the reasons for distinguishing between these two names for a single man in Nephi’s Isaiah. It is relevant here and I’d remind you of that discussion.

In Jacob’s final blessing to his sons, he blessed Joseph as one “separate from his brethren” to inherit a land “unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.” (Gen. 49:26). The covenant between Christ and Jacob affected this blessing given Joseph. It is in the “utmost bound of the everlasting hills” that Zion or the New Jerusalem is to be built. And it will be Jacob’s posterity, the remnant visited by Christ, who will build it. Christ’s visit to these people reaffirms the prior covenant, and reconfirms the Lord’s intent to fulfill His covenant with Jacob. It is for Jacob’s sake this is done. Covenants between the Lord and His sons are always fulfilled; for the Lord takes His word very seriously. His word cannot be broken (D&C 1:38). But, as I have explained in Beloved Enos, these are the words of His covenants. It is not merely vain words spoken using His name as authority by those whom He did not authorize to speak such words (Matt. 7:22–23).

Since the statement involves global gathering of all the “house of Israel,” it would appear this reference to “Jacob” is a reference to the global, overall covenant for the entire collection of remnants (plural) throughout the world, wherever they are scattered. However, the crowning portion of the covenant, the capstone which Jacob was given for his posterity in his covenant, was the promise of the New Jerusalem. When that New Jerusalem has come again, it will be “unto the fulfilling of the covenant which [Christ] made with your father Jacob.”

Implicit in the return of a New Jerusalem is the redemption of a worthy assembly of Jacob's posterity. It is the culmination of history. It is the final redemption of a people among whom the Lord may take up His residency.

This New Jerusalem will involve "the powers of heaven" being "in the midst of this people." Also, the Lord "will be in the midst of you." For the Lord to take up His residence with people requires them to be saved, clean every whit, and to receive at last the "fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ." These are not pretenders who claim, but do not do. Even penitent harlots and publicans are preferred to the self-righteous who claim to be something they are not (Matt. 21:28–32).

Why are "the powers of heaven" mentioned first? Must the "powers of heaven" precede the Lord's presence? Is that why they are mentioned by the Lord first, and His dwelling among them is mentioned second? What does that suggest about the manner in which we proceed into the presence of the Lord? How do we experience the "powers of heaven?" What is that power? Is a "form of godliness without any power" a sufficient substitute for the "powers of heaven?" (JS-H 1:19).

Do the "powers of heaven" invariably precede and in turn lead to the Lord's presence? Why?

Reading these words you begin to see how our Lord is consistent and determined. His covenants matter. For the sake of those who have obtained a covenant with Him, He will always deliver what He promises. For those who break their covenants with Him, there is no promise. He has always been the same (Lev. 26:15–17).

Read again the words of condemnation given against us, which remain in effect still today:

- 49 And the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth under darkness and under the bondage of sin.*
- 50 And by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin, because they come not unto me.*
- 51 For whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin.*
- 52 And whoso receiveth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me.*
- 53 And by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groaneth under sin and darkness even now.*
- 54 And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received—*
- 55 Which vanity and unbelief have brought the whole church under condemnation.*
- 56 And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all.*
- 57 And they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written—*
- 58 That they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom; otherwise there remaineth a scourge and judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion. (D&C 84:49–58)*

It is not that we haven't been warned. It is that we just will not allow the warnings to inform us. We prefer to pretend rather than to do. We certainly have a form of godliness, but we lament even in General Conference about the lack of power in that form.

SEPTEMBER 19, 2010

3 Nephi 20:23

Behold, I am he of whom Moses spake, saying: A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul who will not hear that prophet shall be cut off from among the people.

If there were any doubt about who was meant in Deuteronomy 18:15–19, Christ clarifies it here. He, Christ, was always meant to be the ultimate Law-Giver. He is the one who must be followed. He may send prophets, but it is Christ alone who is to be followed. Those who draw attention away from Him and turn attention to themselves will always lead astray. For the Lord alone can save. No man can.

We've been trying to make the matter clear for some time. Not merely in this blog, but by my writing and your reading the six books I've written before beginning this effort. The Lord alone is the one to whom each of us must look for hope and salvation. He is the one with whom you can covenant to receive salvation.

In the middle of this prophecy of remnant return and gentile holocaust, comes the reminder again of the Lord's primacy. Look to Him. Him alone. He is the one raised up to save mankind. He is the gentile hope.

The judgments the gentiles have merited by their refusal to accept the fullness of Christ's Gospel is not an impediment to you, if you will come to Him. It was always meant to be a singular event anyway. There is no collective salvation. Each person comes to Him one at a time. Even when He redeems a group, He visits with them individually (3 Nephi 11:13–17).

Those who will not “hear Him” will be “cut off from among the people.” What does it mean to “hear Him?” How do you go about accomplishing that?

What does it mean to be “cut off from among the people?” What “people?” Why is being cut off from those people a curse? Where are you sent if you are not among the Lord’s people? How do you go about rectifying that—joining in to be among those who “hear Him” and are part of His people?

Can you do it now? Do you have to wait till some distant future time or place? Why aren’t you doing more about it now, then?

SEPTEMBER 20, 2010

3 Nephi 20:24

“Verily I say unto you, yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have testified of me.”

The Lord chose and established Israel. He would remain committed to them, although they went whoring after other gods.

Moses held the fullness of the priesthood. He conferred blessings upon others. Although Moses was taken from Israel, the blessings of the priesthood remained. Moses blessed Joshua, and Joshua held the blessings of the priesthood for so long as he lived. But the fullness of the priesthood, that portion which permitted a man to see God face to face, was taken with Moses (D&C 84:20–25).

When Joshua died, both the priesthood that left with Moses, and the blessings from that priesthood were lost. What remained thereafter was a lesser form of priesthood called the Levitical or Aaronic Priesthood. This continued to be ministered from Moses until Jesus Christ.

The prophets, however, were something different. They came through diverse families and from unexpected places. They were not part of the leading Levitical families and not even from that tribe on occasion. Their priesthood was not reckoned by what was then on the earth, but was given to them directly from heaven itself. Joseph Smith taught:

All priesthood is Melchizedek, but there are different portions or degrees of it. That portion which brought Moses to speak with God face to face was taken away; but that which brought the ministry of angels remained. All the prophets had the Melchizedek Priesthood and were ordained by God himself. (TPJS, pp. 180–81)

The men who held the higher form of priesthood, the fullness that made it possible for them to behold God face to face, were “all the prophets from Samuel and those that followed after.” Having this form of priesthood they could behold God face to face and live (D&C 84:22–23).

The power to see God face to face is not real if the man does not actually behold God face to face. It is powerless. It is theory. It is a notion and not a reality. This priesthood the revelation speaks about is not a theoretical idea, but an actual, real power which allows the person holding it to behold God and live. Therefore, when Christ states that “all the prophets from Samuel and those that followed after” had “testified of [Christ]” this is more than rhetoric. They became prophets by reason of the Lord having appeared and spoken to them; having testified of Himself to them. Therefore their status as prophets and their witness of Him were coequal. They sprang from the very same thing—the same event. This, then, formed the basis for their service as the Lord’s prophets. They knew Him. They could testify of what they knew, heard and saw, rather than what they believed to be true from what others had said. God had made Himself known to them.

Christ was confirming that these prophets had testified of Him because He was the one who had called them. He was the one who qualified them. He was the one whose witness and message they bore to others. The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy! (Rev. 19:10). Here He confirms again that those prophets sent by Him have testified they know Him. They do not testify of themselves, but of Him. They do not point to themselves, but they point to Him. They do not promise salvation through themselves, but invite others to come to Christ and be saved. They will understate rather than overstate their calling and standing before God.

SEPTEMBER 20, 2010

3 Nephi 20:25–27

And behold, ye are the children of the prophets; and ye are of the house of Israel; and ye are of the covenant which the Father made with your fathers, saying unto Abraham: And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. The Father having raised me up unto you first, and sent me to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities; and this because ye are the children of the covenant— And after that ye were blessed then fulfilleth the Father the covenant which he made with Abraham, saying: In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed—unto the pouring out of the Holy Ghost through me upon the Gentiles, which blessing upon the Gentiles shall make them mighty above all, unto the scattering of my people, O house of Israel.

These verses connect a single doctrine. That doctrine is at the heart of “turning of the hearts of the children to the fathers,” which is the result of any restoration of the Gospel. The definition of “children of the prophets” is that one has accepted, believed, and followed the Lord's true messengers. They become children of Abraham and receive priestly authority sealing them into the family of God, joining the "fathers." From the time of Abraham until today, all who are redeemed have become a part of his household.

The phrase "turning the hearts of the children to the fathers" is a reference to the restoration of sealing authority, allowing a connection between man living on the earth, and the fathers (Abraham, Isaac and Jacob). In this dispensation, that restoration occurred when Joseph Smith was given the sealing authority and priesthood whereby he could ask and receive answers (D&C 132:45-47). As discussed earlier, this was sometime between 1829 and 1833, though I think it was more likely the earlier date as I have explained. Coincident with receiving this authority, Joseph's calling and election was made sure (D&C 132:49). I have explained this in Beloved Enos. This priesthood, having the hearts of the recipients turned to the fathers, and the promise of exaltation, are interconnected.

Abraham not only held this authority, but received the promise that all who received the Gospel after him would become his descendants. From the time of Abraham to the present, every saved soul has had their heart turned to him, become his son or daughter, and receive that same priesthood (Abraham 2:10-11). When Joseph received this, he was not merely sealed up to eternal life, but he became part of the family of Abraham. If you remember the diagram of the celestial kingdom referred to earlier on this blog, you know Joseph became one of those who was grafted into the family tree, and would then in turn preside over others who were sealed up to eternal life thereafter.

The sealing authority used by Joseph in December, 1832, was to seal others up to eternal life (See D&C 88:2-4). This promise had been previously conferred upon Joseph in that portion of Section 132 referred to above. In fact, Joseph's use of that authority in December, 1832 on behalf of others is evidence that the promise to him recorded in Section 132 was necessarily received earlier than December, 1832. If it had not been received earlier, there would have been no need to make the statement in D&C 132:49 to Joseph, because of what is in Section 88. Why tell Joseph his calling and election was sure in 1843 if it had happened already in 1832? This is another reason you can know Section 132, although recorded in 1843, was in fact a revelation received by Joseph much earlier. It was reduced to writing in 1843 at Hyrum's request.

The reference to "turning the hearts of the fathers to the children" made by Elijah was not because Elijah conferred those keys upon Joseph in the Kirtland Temple (D&C 110:16), for they arrived years earlier than 1836. Elijah was confirming that the keys were now all returned so the hearts of the children could turn to the fathers, and in turn the father's hearts to the children (D&C 110:15). And, so as to signify he was a true messenger, Elijah also showed a sign by his hand to Joseph whereby Joseph could recognize a true messenger (D&C 2:1).

In Christ's statement to the Nephite audience, He confirmed that they were "the children of the prophets" because they followed the prophets' teachings. Therefore, because of their obedience they were "of the house of Israel" and had realized that status because "of the covenant which the Father made with your fathers." That covenant was given "unto Abraham" promising to Abraham: "And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed." All those after the day of Abraham who received this priesthood and sealing would become the seed of Abraham. They become heirs of the promise, and children of Abraham. They are sealed up to eternal life and therefore their hearts have turned to the fathers.

Christ was sent to these Nephites because, “The Father having raised me up unto you first, and sent me to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities; and this because ye are the children of the covenant.” Realizing the promises, and being visited by the Lord are also connected. When enough are ready to enter into this order, have their hearts turned to the fathers, receive the covenant, then the Lord will bring again Zion.

SEPTEMBER 21, 2010

3 Nephi 20:27–28

...unto the pouring out of the Holy Ghost through me upon the Gentiles, which blessing upon the Gentiles shall make them mighty above all, unto the scattering of my people, O house of Israel. And they shall be a scourge unto the people of this land. Nevertheless, when they shall have received the fullness of my gospel, then if they shall harden their hearts against me I will return their iniquities upon their own heads, saith the Father.

The reason the gentiles received access to the Holy Ghost was to fulfill the purposes of the Father. The remnant would reject the Gospel, and as a result merit judgment. Judgment would come through the gentiles. For that to occur, the Holy Ghost needed to inspire gentile successes.

The Spirit would be responsible for such great gentile success that they will be made “mighty above all, unto the scattering of my people.” That is, no other people will be able to prevail against the gentiles of North America while the Holy Ghost was with the gentiles. They will be a “scourge” upon the remnant as a result of the Father’s judgments implemented by Christ, using the Holy Ghost.

The Spirit will entitle the gentiles to be offered the fullness. They will qualify by their acts and obedience. When you receive light and stay true to it, you are offered more light. The gentiles will accept and pursue more light, and will merit an opportunity to receive the fullness of the Gospel.

Gentiles did have the fullness of the Gospel, which requires the fullness of the priesthood that was offered while Joseph Smith was here. It was given sometime between 1829 and 1832, and removed before 1841 (See prior post and 132:45 and D&C 124:28).

When the gentiles were offered the fullness, they displayed little interest in it. Joseph remarked:

I have tried for a number of years to get the minds of the Saints prepared to receive the things of God; but we frequently see some of them, after suffering all they have for the work of God, will fly to pieces like glass as soon as anything comes that is contrary to their traditions: they cannot stand the fire at all. How many will be able to abide a celestial law, and go through and receive their exaltation, I am unable to say, as many are called, but few are chosen. (DHC 6:184–185; see also D&C 121:40)

When the Saints were given a final opportunity to receive the offered fullness extended to all, they needed to show their willingness to accept it by completing the Nauvoo Temple within a short time. They were given long enough to complete it, and if it was not completed in that appointed time, they would be rejected (D&C 124:32). We have seen how the Saints proceeded to build Nauvoo and their own homes rather than the Nauvoo Temple from 1841 to June, 1844 when Joseph and Hyrum were killed (See “The Remnant Part VII”). When Joseph was taken, the Temple walls had not yet been completed to the second floor.

When the Twelve prayed in the Temple on February 8, 1846 that the Lord would bless the Saints to be able to complete the Temple, the Temple caught fire the next day.

Repairs and further work allowed a dedication to finally take place at the end of April, 1846, nearly two years after Joseph's death. The dedicatory prayer petitioned the Lord to "take guardianship into Thy hands," but by September the keys to the Temple doors were handed to a mob which had overrun Nauvoo. It was the position of Elder Hyde that the Saints performed as they were required "by the skin of our teeth," thereby escaping rejection by the Lord. (This was discussed in "The Remnant Part VII").

The prophecy of Christ, as commanded by the Father, foretells that if the gentiles do reject the fullness, then the Father will "return their iniquities upon their own heads." Meaning that the gentiles will, by reason of their rejection of what was offered them, merit condemnation for ingratitude (D&C 88:33-35). They remain "filthy still" because that which would have cleansed them was not received in gratitude. It was rejected. When a people reject the Lord, the Lord, being governed by law, must reject them.

This is the reason the coming judgments are necessary. Where much is given (and we were offered everything) then much is expected (Luke 12:47-48). When everything is rejected, then the punishment merited reflects complete rejection of the Lord. You must keep this in mind as you read the judgments Christ prophesies upon the gentiles.

And remember also that no matter what the collective gentile conduct may be (or fail to be), the Lord approaches each of us individually. The Book of Mormon is intended as the final opportunity for gentile salvation. The church is under condemnation for failing to remember its contents and take them seriously (D&C 84:54-58). That scourge needn't be applied to you, if you will "repent and remember the new covenant" offered to you. There is, for any gentile who will repent and take the covenants offered in the Book of Mormon, an opportunity to yet become associated with the remnant and an heir of the preservation and salvation offered to them.

As we survey the condition of the gentile church today, there seems to be less and less made of the Book of Mormon's contents. The Correlation Department's teachings are insubstantial and becoming even less so. However, you have the Book of Mormon in front of you. You don't need anyone to prepare a manual for you. You have the text itself.

I am hoping what I've written, particularly in The Second Comforter, will show you how the Book of Mormon teaches you the return to the fullness. Nephi's Isaiah informs you of the Book of Mormon's prophecies of our days and our failures. Eighteen Verses shows how Book of Mormon doctrinal teachings address every major dilemma of our day. Beloved Enos shows what the fullness will confer upon you. I believe whatever merit the Lord has conferred upon me arises out of my serious study of the Book of Mormon. Though everyone may treat this covenant lightly, I have not. I would encourage you, therefore, to do the same, and prayerfully study the most correct volume of scripture we possess. It is a lifeline extended by the Lord to us. However, it cannot do you any good if you fail to act on its contents. Do the works, and you will know the doctrine. I suspect our universal failure to know doctrine today is because we do not live as we should. Understanding doctrine is tied to living it. The more you live it, the more you will comprehend it (John 7:16-17). The less you live it, the more elusive it becomes to you. Until at last, you become like Deseret Book, incapable of offering anything other than romance novels, "inspirational" mush, and historical fiction, all with a veneer of Mormon vocabulary. Kitsch and superfidiality, more distracting to the reader than edifying to their soul. Making one think there is some good being accomplished by participating, all the while forfeiting the days which might have been better spent.

COMMENTS:

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 21, 2010 AT 6:33 AM

Perhaps a silly question. Denver is very well read in scores of material besides just the Book of Mormon. Another blogger who says he/she has received the second comforter talks about taking 20 years to read original manuscripts and materials from the beginning of the church. We all have access to so much information it can be overwhelming. If my study is limited to the scriptures, especially Book of Mormon, and I do my best to observe the things it admonishes me to do, will that alone qualify me to receive the second comforter? Do I have to know the history and make correlations and recall from memory where things are found from a kazillion sources? A simple yes or no will do.

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 21, 2010 AT 7:08 AM

@Anonymous 7:33

No.

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 21, 2010 AT 2:20 PM

Michael C,

It probably depends on who Woodruff got the sealing keys from. Was it Joseph Smith? Taylor I believe still had the keys from Joseph when he was Pres, as he received the power in his mortal life from a man who conversed with God (Joseph)... but once Taylor passed on (without obtaining C&E made sure), whoever he gave it temporarily to while he lived, it goes away. That's my current thinking anyway. I wish sealing power would pass on no matter what... but I think that each man has to still obtain a fullness from the Lord or His angels for him to be able to pass it along to others, then they have to do the same. We can't carry the key without the connection with heaven to allow us to pass it on or use it.

Other comments –

We cannot bind anything on earth and in heaven without true sealing power. I cannot seek another person who doesn't have it, even if I think he does, to seal my family and expect it to be binding later. They have to actually hold the power. So the things we do in the temples... if they are not done with valid power, are types and shadows, practice for a future time when power is granted. We need temples, like the one talked about in Zion to have true power (fulness) in them. Israelites still did their rituals once a yr. They thought they could still enter the holy of holies, a mel portion. And half of our endowment is Aaronic, so I think it's still valid if the individual is just. Zacharias held this authority and was officiating in the temple, low and behold an angel appeared. He held the keys to that. But even if we maintain more than we can, they still teach us some important truths, truths that are found on this blog and in scriptures. I think it's safe to assume if the Lord says it's possible that if we reject Him, then he said He would reject us and our work for the dead, it is possible. Luckily, current and future redemption can be made for those who earn it.

Please respond Denver. What do you think or want to relate?

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 21, 2010 AT 5:21 PM

If you are true and faithful the time will come when you will be called up, chosen and ordained kings and queens, priests and priestesses, whereas now you are only ordained to become such. The realization of these blessings is dependent upon your faithfulness.

CHAPTER 9

The Remnant Continued

SEPTEMBER 21, 2010

Remnant, Part IX

The interplay between the latter-day gentiles and the remnant has been illustrated repeatedly in the Book of Mormon prophecies. We have seen Nephi's prophecies of the event, and Christ's affirmation and expansion on the event.

Gentiles would be offered the fullness and would reject it. Then the gentiles would take the gospel to the remnant who would receive it. The remnant would then blossom with the gospel, ultimately establishing the New Jerusalem. When the New Jerusalem is built by the remnant, a few gentiles who had received the fullness would be able to "assist" in bringing again Zion (3 Nephi 21:23–24).

We have at least a reasonable basis for fearing the gentiles rejected the fullness by not building the Temple in the "appointed time." Inside this Temple, the fullness was to be revealed (D&C 124:28, 32). Joseph Smith, who possessed the fullness, was taken 3 1/2 years after the revelation warning to act with speed in building the required Temple. When he died, the walls had not yet been completed to the second floor.

If we assume the worst, and the fullness was taken by the failure to complete the Temple in the permitted time, what then? Do the gentiles have no further use? Are the gentiles without a role in the latter-day events? That is hardly the case. The gentiles continue to occupy a central role in the latter-days, despite their failures.

The gentiles will bring the Gospel to the remnant (1 Nephi 15:13–14). The gentiles will be commissioned to preach, teach, baptize, lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, carry the Book of Mormon forward throughout the world, and preserve truths which will enable others to be saved. The gentiles will shoulder a prophetic burden they alone will be able to bear off in the last days.

When Moses was taken, along with the higher priesthood he possessed, the Lord did not cease to recognize ancient Israel as His people. They were indeed His people, and the ones with whom He worked. He cared for, and watched over them, although we know in hindsight they were a hard hearted and foolish people who rejected something far greater than what they kept. If we rejected a fullness by our own failures, that does not mean we are cut off. We are the Lord's people. We have a form of priesthood, and the right to organize and preach the Gospel throughout the world. We are being watched over. We are the means through which the Lord will bring to pass all of His latter-day plans.

You should also not worry that our collective limitations apply to individuals. That has never been the case. There have always been those who have risen up, shed their sins, repented and come to the Lord individually and been redeemed. That pattern appears throughout scriptures. The Book of Mormon is a product of one family, led by one man who repented in a generation scheduled for destruction. He led his family, preached the Gospel, had sons who accepted the invitation to receive from the fruit of the tree of life, and established a righteous branch of Israel. The Book of Mormon at its foundation is a testimony that the Lord is ever willing to receive any who will come to Him.

The gentiles are integral to the Lord's work. We should never fear that The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is meaningless, irrelevant or without God's watchful care. It is the means by which people are invited to come to Christ today.

In Eighteen Verses I describe the phenomena of building a new religion inside the original one established by revelation through Joseph Smith. This new, false religion is designed to interfere with the Gospel, enshrine worship or adoration of a priestly class instead of the worship of Christ. The Correlation Department's effort to correlate teaching has created a new ambition to correlate power and control over everything. Part of that involves the adoration of a person, or as I explained it in Catholic terms—the cult of personality. This is a tried and true pattern for compromising the Gospel and rendering it a means for controlling and dominating socially, politically, religiously, and ultimately dictatorially.

The way the adversary works is always the same. It is not to destroy the work of God by annihilation, but to co-opt it and make it his. Satan wants to supplant God as the god of this earth. Therefore, anytime God has a work underway, Satan is eager to rush in and become the one the Lord's work follows. The “arm of flesh” as opposed to the “Holy Ghost” is the difference between following in the single, strait, narrow path which alone will bring people back to God, and the altered and compromised path that will take you elsewhere.

I thought President Uchtdorf's analogy about the airplane being only one degree off would become 500 miles separated from its target at the equator was particularly apt (“A Matter of a Few Degrees”, May, 2008 Ensign). This is how men and institutions fail. How can mortal man be vulnerable to err, and committees of mortal men are not? It is an almost universal truth that committees multiply errors, not decrease them. And who of you have ever sustained the Correlation Department?

We are fools to believe that the same pattern of compromising the truth that resulted in the apostasy of the church established by Christ will not relentlessly press against the restoration of our day. I know there are quotes saying otherwise—that the church cannot be led astray—but I cannot believe them, try as I might. Joseph, Brigham, John Taylor, President George Cannon all said the exact opposite. Even when Wilford Woodruff was claiming he would “not lead the church astray” he did not mean what we have attributed to his words. He was saying, in effect: “Don’t worry, the Manifesto is a lie. We’re not really abandoning plural marriage.” The Manifesto did NOT stop plural marriage and it was not a revelation. He referred to it as “beating the Devil at his own game.” Meaning it was intended to mislead the public. It was a press release designed to stop the persecution of the church and the threatened legislation to dis-incorporate and confiscate the Temples. Criticism by the eastern press resulted in it becoming part of the Doctrine & Covenants. Plural marriages continued from then until after President Joseph F. Smith testified before the Senate in the seating of Senator Smoot in 1905.

When the excommunications of the Apostles Taylor and Cowley in 1911 happened, it was not based on the Manifesto, but on the letter of President Joseph F. Smith actually ending the practice. The fundamentalist groups know this history and use it to persuade others that their current practices are justified. Their practices today are wrong, as I’ve discussed in Beloved Enos. But their use of history to trouble the unaware has been effective in many cases. [Now this is entirely a side issue and I'm not interested in pursuing it at this moment. I'm only mentioning it in the context of another thought.]

So ask yourself which is better:

Presume that no man can err who becomes a President of the LDS Church in direct contradiction to what Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor and George Q. Cannon taught?

Presume that without the ratification of the Holy Ghost bearing testimony to you that a matter is true, no man can be trusted and your salvation is based on what God alone tells you to be true?

If you believe the first, your religion is new, post-Correlation and will damn you. I do not intend to disassociate with you, and will gladly let you practice your faith if you will permit me to practice mine. If you believe the second, you are a Latter-day Saint who accepts accountability for what you believe and will work out your salvation with fear and trembling before God. You believe as I do, that Joseph was the means through which the Lord initiated a work for the salvation of mankind, and that work continues today. You believe in revelation and in God's continuing hand with us still today. You accept such good things as come through The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, rejoice in them, pay tithing to them, and are blessed by what things the church continues to preserve and practice. However, you are not deluded into worship of men. The gentiles include both. The gentiles will be instrumental to the Lord's work in the last days, whether they are Saints or Brethrenites. The remnant will come to the faith, receive the Gospel and become acquainted with their fathers through the Book of Mormon delivered by gentile hands (2 Nephi 30:3-5). Without faithful gentile Saints, the work of the Father will not happen. Therefore, no matter the condition we find ourselves, we have an obligation to the Lord and to the prophets who went before, to so live as to bring these things to pass.

SEPTEMBER 22, 2010

Remnant, Part X

First, a slight detour because of comments or complaints. I am a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is the only church I have ever joined. I owe to that church my knowledge of the truth. If you've read my original explanation of this blog, you would know that already. If you've read the books I've written, you'd know that already. I haven't changed my position. I'm still what I was all along—a faithful, active Latter-day Saint.

It is from the church I have received the ordinances of baptism and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

It is from the church I have received the scriptures, other ordinances, and authority.

I pay tithing to the church, attend regular meetings with other members, and receive the Sacrament weekly. I raise my children to attend and be faithful to the church. I am grateful to the church for its programs for children.

I listen to General Conference, and attend a large gathering on the BYU campus with my sons every six months during the Priesthood Session of Conference. I drive my children by the conference center during conference to see the protesters and read their anti-Mormon signs. This reminds my children that, although we are in the majority here, we are not liked by the majority elsewhere.

I have no intention of ever leaving the church. I see no reason to ever do so. I know the church welcomes me and my family. I know they are grateful that I attend, pay tithing and support the programs as we are asked to do.

I mention that only to make certain that some of those who read here are not misled. I have no ambition to lead the church or any person other than my family. I am grateful others are called to do so. I pray for them and do not think I could do any better job than is being done. On the contrary, I think I would make things worse.

I love my fellow Latter-day Saints. Even those with whom I have deep disagreements over doctrine. I enjoy associating with people who can discuss some of the important issues facing us, even if we hold very different views of what the solutions should be. At the end of the day, in order for the church to survive, it needs to have a mechanism to bring debate to an end and make a decision. That mechanism is in place and I respect it. If it were to be altered, it would likely break the entire system. The system is essential for the church's survival.

I sustain President Monson and do not think anyone other than him has final decision-making authority in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Think about what it would mean if his decisions could be vetoed endlessly from his office down to the lay members. This would cease to be a meaningful organization.

We have tremendous problems facing the church at present. I think they are all due to the abandonment of a pattern originally restored, in favor of innovations recommended by social sciences. The Correlation Department has accelerated this metamorphosis of the church and now leads it. The possibility remains that the church will return to an earlier pattern, but that seems quite unlikely at this point. To paraphrase Deseret Book: "Doctrine doesn't sell now." Doctrine does not matter as it once did, and as a result, the gentiles are not even aware of the content of the scriptures, the messages addressed to us, the responsibilities which have been laid upon us, and the warnings about how we are proceeding. The prophetic pessimism of the Book of Mormon prophets is not found in the modern messages. In fact, the feel-good messages seem to be denounced by the Book of Mormon and foretold as a sign of our own erring.

As a single, private member of the church, the only tool available to me approved by scripture is persuasion. If what I write does not persuade, I own no office, hold no calling, and command no position from which to insist you trust, believe or accept what I write. Oddly, no priesthood position in the church, from the least to the greatest, is entitled to insist you trust, believe or accept what they say (D&C 121:41). I see very little demanding when it comes to actual presiding authorities. But I see a lot of that being urged vicariously, on behalf of presiding authorities, and in their names. It appears that between the Brethren who preside, and the common members, there is a disconnection wherein the Correlation Department has inserted themselves. Into that arena they have brought increasingly more intolerant and strict rule-making. I think there are talks every General Conference intended to work against that mischief. But, alas, the COB is a difficult beast to ride. It will take a grizzly bear to wrestle it into submission, I suspect.

In any event, the gentiles must fulfill their own destiny. Although there will be failings, limitations, foolishness and apostasy by the gentiles rejecting what is offered them, they will perform a great act. They will be the means of bringing back the remnant. There will be those who believe the Book of Mormon, teach correctly to the remnant about their own fathers, and assist in bringing about the New Jerusalem.

This interplay between gentile and remnant destinies is very real, and requires a work of the gentiles not yet completed.

I do not know how much further to pursue this topic. There are prophecies Joseph made about the Rocky Mountain gathering. There is the controversial “horse-shoe prophecy” about the travel of the Saints before the New Jerusalem would be founded. There is Joseph’s finger on the map pointing where he suspected the New Jerusalem would be built. And the fellow who saw the pointing who speculated it was around where Snowflake, Arizona is presently located.

However, the map had no borders, no states, and Snowflake didn’t exist at the time. So a finger on a map could be hundreds of miles away from Snowflake. I’m not inclined to do much with that right now. I’m more inclined to take up some other stuff and leave the remnant alone for the time being.

As I said when this started, it was going to take a while. I’m thinking it might be better to change topics for a while and turn attention to some other things. The remnant will reappear in its own natural order as we move along in any direction we take. Their appearance is so widespread in latter-day prophecy that it is unavoidable. Many of you hadn’t noticed it before. Now you have some background and ought to be able to pick up the matter on your own and see it for yourselves.

Text of the supplemental readings mentioned

A Remarkable Prophecy By President John Taylor As Told by Edward Lunt, An Ordinance Worker in the Mesa Temple:

He said that faithful Latter-day Saints would go to the south and would form a circle something like a horseshoe, before they return to Jackson County, Missouri. Said he,

Those only will be privileged to help build Jackson County who will be found willing and glad to obey the counsel and advice of the authorities who will be placed over them, and who will seek counsel that they may be guided and protected from dire want and distress.

President Taylor also said that we will assist the Lamanites in building the New Jerusalem in Jackson county. He said that the vision to him appeared so terrible that he besought the Lord to close it up, but he saw that those who would keep the commandments and adhere to the authorities of the church would be the ones who would survive and not be destroyed. And that the lord would protect them as he did the children of Israel.

Journal of Mosiah Hancock:

Placing his [Joseph Smith's] finger on the map (I should think about where Snowflake, Arizona, is situated, or it could have been Mexico) he said,

The government will not receive you with the laws God designed that you should live, and those who are desirous to live the laws of God will have to go south. You will live to see men down arise in power in the Church who will seek to put your friends and the friends of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Many will be hoisted because of their money and the worldly learning which they seem to be in possession of; and many who are the true followers of our Lord and Savior will be cast down because of their poverty.

CHAPTER 10

3 Nephi II

SEPTEMBER 22, 2010

3 Nephi 11

I have always wanted to do something with Christ's sermons to the Nephites. It seems to me that we've been running through prophecies and warnings which serve one purpose, and leaving another one neglected. Balance requires us to return to another important purpose of the Book of Mormon. Namely, testifying that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior and Redeemer of Israel and the whole world.

So for that part, we'll turn attention to Christ's Nephite sermons.

I've already dealt with what I have termed the "Ceremony of Recognition" involved in Christ's initial appearance. That is covered in The Second Comforter and won't be repeated here. So I'm going to skip to verses:

3 Nephi 11:18–20

And it came to pass that he spake unto Nephi (for Nephi was among the multitude) and he commanded him that he should come forth. And Nephi arose and went forth, and bowed himself before the Lord and did kiss his feet. And the Lord commanded him that he should arise. And he arose and stood before him.

The Lord has appeared, is identified and recognized by those who were at the Bountiful Temple. (This is probably an open air temple much like what we find in the Parowan Gap. If you consider the entirety of the description, it is not likely a closed structure like we build.) And those who are there have engaged in an Hosanna shout (3 Nephi 11:17). When the ceremony has ended and the place has become sanctified by His presence, and the body there recognizes and accepts Him as who and what He is, the stage has been set for a further ceremonial event.

Christ speaks to Nephi. He calls his name. Important stuff. Being called by name by the Son of God! Now we're seeing something really important. For those whose names are called by God are not merely being addressed. They are, the instant the Lord calls out their name, "called." That is, the Lord will never speak one's name to them unless He calls them to a work. So when we read that the Lord speaks to Nephi we know the Lord has both called Nephi's name and called the bearer of that name to do a work. Nephi knew it. The crowd knew it. All present would have understood that Nephi just became the chief prophet of those present.

Nephi is told to "come forth." It instantly puts us in mind of Lazarus being called forth from the tomb (John 11:43). Like Lazarus, who rose from the dead by the speaking of those words, Nephi now goes forth to a new life. Resurrected from his prior status and put into a minister's role by the Lord of all mankind.

Called, commanded to "come forth," and endowed immediately with the Lord's anointing voice, which bestows power and authority upon a man, (see, e.g., D&C 132:46) Nephi arises from his kneeling position and steps forward.

Every knee remains bowed except Nephi's. For a brief moment, as he walks forward, he alone, of all those assembled in the crowd, is the one who stands in the presence of the Lord (cf., Luke 1:19). Others kneel, Nephi stands. It is honor, glory and privilege being displayed in this ceremony. Christ as King and Lord calls, His chief servant rises while all others remain kneeling. We are getting informed about the Lord and His ways in detailed ceremony conveying vast information in passing movement. It is too wonderful for words.

Nephi knows what he must do. For the servant who has been called to stand above his peers must then descend below them. Pride is unthinkable when in the presence of such a meek and humble figure as our Lord. It is required that the balance be restored. Nephi, who has been made to rise, must on his own choose to descend and abase himself. Those who seek their own glory will fall, while those who seek to humble themselves will rise again. So Nephi does what any person filled with light and truth would do in these circumstances. He comes to the Lord, falls below all, and descends to kiss the Master's feet. He kneels again, bows to the ground. And in an ultimate sign of humility, he kisses His feet, which on any other being is the symbol of uncleanness itself. Nephi can do nothing more to show his own submission to the Lord. He can do nothing further in ceremonial activity to say he is nothing and the Lord is everything. He can show no greater respect and gratitude. Here is a servant indeed. A chief servant to the Servant of servants! A Master and servant whose hearts are alike. Nephi is, above all else, showing to us all how we ought be.

The gentiles love those who rule over and exploit them (Matt. 20:25). But Christ's true followers do not crave chief seats. They desire to serve. They will hold others up, even if it requires them to descend below to lift them. Nephi is not a gentile, nor one who would ever exercise unrighteous dominion over others (D&C 121:39).

The ceremony now requires the abased to respond to the Lord's command again. Nephi is commanded to "arise." It was not enough to "come forth" to the new life. Now, having been chosen, Nephi must also "arise." It is a terrible burden. How can man "arise?" How can a man assume his position alongside His Lord? How can one who feels more suited to kneel and kiss his Master's feet, rise up and look his Lord in the face? It is all too much. One hardly can bear the burden and difficulty to "arise" when it is the Lord's own countenance you must confront. Too much. Too difficult. Too heavy a burden to lay upon mere man. How does Nephi dare to respond to the command to "arise?"

Through the swirling anxiety following the command, Nephi doesn't have the strength to do so until the realization that "arising" is the Master's will. It is the Master's command. It can be done through faith in Him. For He gives no command without having prepared the means to accomplish it (1 Nephi 3:7). It must be possible for Nephi to actually arise. Though a lifetime's dread and remorse says to remain on your knees, it is the Master's will that you nonetheless arise. And so you begin the dreadful effort, and your trembling knees respond. To your own surprise you find it possible to arise and look into the face of Him who is compassion itself. There can be no pride in this, for rising is by His command, and not by your own will. You may want to join in Moses' chorus that "for this cause you know man is nothing!" (Moses 1:10). But it isn't necessary to voice the thought. It is enough to understand the thought.

No man assumes this honor for himself. He must be called by God to stand in His presence. And so Nephi arose, and stood before His Lord.

SEPTEMBER 23, 2010

3 Nephi 11:21

“And the Lord said unto him: I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people when I am again ascended into heaven.”

Notice the Lord does not touch Nephi. He speaks the words. The Lord’s word is sovereign. If the Lord speaks it, it is so. It is not necessary for the Lord to lay hands on the servant He has just called, only that He speak the words of commission which give the servant “power.”

Notice that it is “power” and not authority. It is the “power” to baptize “this people” which is granted Nephi. Why would “power” be required for a man to be able to baptize? What if the man possessed “authority” to baptize, but lacked any “power” in his priesthood? Is “authority” anything if it lacks “power?” What is the difference? Can a church spread about the “authority” to do ordinances if that church lacks “power” to do so?

Why are “that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven?” (D&C 121:36). If indeed all rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, can a man who has never felt, experienced or had any connection with heaven hold any power? Hold any priesthood? What connection did Nephi have with heaven the instant the Lord spoke to Nephi the words: “I give unto you power”?

Why is it that “the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness?” What about ambitious men who view holding an office in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as entitling them to direct, preside, control and dictate to others? What are the “principles of righteousness?”

Now, I ask those questions not to give people reason to rebel against those who preside over them. It is not for us to weigh, measure or respond with accusations against those in positions of authority. I feel a great sympathy and pray for them. However, I offer it as a self-governing, introspective question to anyone who has any calling, family position or power over another person. Whether it is in church, or at work, or in the family, or elsewhere, the way we deal with others ought to be informed by the same standards as use of priestly authority. But these things are for internal use, not as a measuring stick to be applied critically against others.

Often we are able to see clearly the errors of others, but are completely unable to see our own glaring errors. This is why I have said repeatedly that the Gospel is for internal application only, and not for external use in judging others.

In the case of Nephi, he already held power, did he not? He had preached the Gospel, used words having such power that listeners could not disbelieve them, raised his brother from the dead, and cast out devils (3 Nephi 7:17–19). Despite all this, Nephi was called forward to receive from the Lord power to baptize? Why? Why if he already had such great power as to be able to raise the dead, did he need a new grant of power to baptize?

Does the possession of authority in one dispensation (Moses') continue into another dispensation (Meridian of Time)? When a new dispensation of the Gospel opens, does authority need to be conferred by angels (or the Lord) in the new dispensation? Without a commission from Christ, could Nephi continue his ministry into the new dispensation? Why not? Did the end of the prior dispensation of carnal commandments require a new delivery of power to those serving into this era of a new covenant? (Hebrews 8:13).

Does the Lord's reference to "when [He is] again ascended into heaven" reveal anything to Nephi? To us? Does it confirm the Lord's status, power and right? Does it confirm, also, the Lord will be leaving the Nephites again? Does it reestablish what they saw when He first appeared, that He now belongs to heaven? Do we need to keep that in mind as well?

SEPTEMBER 23, 2010

3 Nephi 11:22

“And again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise; and he gave unto them power to baptize. And he said unto them: On this wise shall ye baptize; and there shall be no disputations among you.”

Space was limited and the mechanics of writing was difficult for Mormon. Therefore, in his abridgment of the account, for all others “the Lord called,” and the ceremony was repeated for each. In the process, He “said likewise” unto each of them. Every individual person was acknowledged by the Lord as having conferred upon each of them “power to baptize” by the Lord.

None of those who received this power had any doubt about their authority to act in this ordinance in the Lord’s name. None of them lacked the “power” to baptize others. None of those who were present, and still kneeling during the ceremony, or who overheard the Lord’s words had any doubts about those who held a commission from Christ to baptize them. Finally, none of those present would have any doubts about the need to be baptized by this newly bestowed power.

Although every one of them had been baptized previously, it becomes apparent that once new power to baptize has been given by Christ, that power ought to be used. It is not given to be neglected. Nor can power endure through neglect. So when given, the power is to be used, and all who were present are candidates for baptism.

Then comes the instruction from Christ as to the manner for performing the ordinance. “On this wise shall ye baptize...” begins the instruction. If the Lord provides the power and then gives the instruction, can the ordinance be changed? What if someone else says they hold the keys, and we all accept the person does in fact hold the keys, can such a person change the manner of baptism? If there is a potential convert who is infirm, ill or elderly and is unable to be baptized in the prescribed manner, can the ordinance be changed in form to accommodate the need? That is exactly how the ordinance was changed after the New Testament times. A reasonable need, and accommodation for that need, resulted in an exception. Then the exception became the rule, and the original manner was forgotten.

If the Lord's instruction regarding the manner of baptism in this verse cannot be changed, even by one holding keys and authority to do so, then what about other ordinances? Can other ordinances be changed by one who holds keys if they choose to do them differently? Why not? What happens when the one in a recognized position to perform ordinances decides to make changes to the ordinances?

Assume for a moment the Lord instructs Nephi on how to perform baptism, but Nephi decides thereafter to make a change to it. How would that reflect on Nephi? How would that reflect on the Lord? How would it reflect on the Lord's instruction? What about Joseph Smith's statement: "Ordinances instituted in the heavens before the foundation of the world, in the priesthood, for the salvation of men, are not to be altered or changed." (TPJS p. 308) If the Lord gave Nephi the "power" to baptize, does that carry with it the "power" to change it as well?

Well, the purpose behind the Lord giving instructions was that "there shall be no disputations among you." Does the instruction given by the Lord end as soon as we begin to see "disputations among” followers? Can an opinion poll that shows a majority of those who practice the ordinances don’t relate to them anymore and want to see them altered, create a “disputation” that allows the instruction from the Lord to be altered?

As stupid as these questions may seem, there are people who are genuinely confused by them. So I ask them. You must decide if the Lord’s instructions deserve respect and ought to be followed. Apparently men of good faith, honest hearts, and sincere desires can by reason of their status alone, contradict the Lord’s instructions and people won’t even blink. That’s the beauty of the claim that Rome makes to having Peter’s keys and the ability to seal on earth and in heaven. The Catholics can change anything and no one doubts they had the authority to do it. To allow the possibility that God would not support the Pope would be to entertain the unthinkable. So don’t even hold that thought.

COMMENTS :

Anonymous · SEPTEMBER 23, 2010 AT 7:06 PM

Denver said:

You must decide if the Lord’s instructions deserve respect and ought to be followed. Apparently men of good faith, honest hearts, and sincere desires can by reason of their status alone, contradict the Lord’s instructions and people won’t even blink. That’s the beauty of the claim that Rome makes to having Peter’s keys and the ability to seal on earth and in heaven. The Catholics can change anything and no one doubts they had the authority to do it. To allow the possibility that God would not support the Pope would be to entertain the unthinkable.

You’re reaching here Denver. You cite a scriptural example that is instructive, but in no way leads logically to the conclusion that in our day, “men of good faith, honest hearts, and sincere desires [are] by reason of their status alone, [contradicting] the Lord’s instructions.”

We know the Lord gave Nephi power to baptize. We know the Lord told the Nephites the manner he wanted them baptized. Practically everything else you wrote was your own speculation.

Denver Snuffer · SEPTEMBER 23, 2010 AT 7:12 PM

This post was about baptism. However, now that it's been turned into the endowment here's what I understand:

It was not until the 1870's that the endowment was reduced to writing. The first changes were not made to the endowment until 1904. When the first changes were made they were (are) in the handwriting of Joseph F. Smith, the then-president of the Church. Those changes were a by-product of criticism about the oaths of vengeance respecting the killers of Joseph and Hyrum. These oaths were exposed during the Senate Hearings for seating Senator Smoot, and as a result the decision was made to remove the oaths.

I believe if you look at the original documents, that is what you will find. If you have better information, I would welcome it. However, I do not believe it is correct that after the form was reduced to writing in the 1870's that any changes were made until President Joseph F. Smith.

Also, I am unaware of any announcement of a revelation at the time of any of the changes. As I recall, we were all instructed that those who held the keys were making changes to the ordinance. There was no mention (so far as I can recollect) of any revelation. I may be mistaken about that, and someone else can correct my memory on the point. However, there is a formula which gets recited about those holding keys have approved the changes, and they are announced as having been approved. No sustaining of the changes, no claim of revelation to justify them, no comment or mention of God's involvement. Just the holders of the keys have made changes.

Now, again, this post is about the changes to baptism made by the Catholic Church. But the comments have gone into the changes to the endowment.

SEPTEMBER 24, 2010

3 Nephi 11:23

Verily I say unto you, that whoso repenteth of his sins through your words, and desireth to be baptized in my name, on this wise shall ye baptize them—Behold, ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them.

The candidate for baptism must first qualify themselves by “repent[ing] of his sins.” That’s an interesting pre-condition in the Lord’s instruction. Until one has determined to abandon their sins, they are not fit for baptism. They first decide to lay things behind, move forward in following the Lord, determined to serve Him. This decision to make a change must come “through your words.” Meaning that before someone can repent, they must first learn the conditions for repentance and following the Lord.

This is much like the instructions given by revelation to this dispensation about how baptism is to be performed. We were told,

All those who humble themselves before God, and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church. (D&C 20:37)

After having made the decision to be baptized with a broken heart and contrite spirit, confessing before the church that you have repented of your sins (or be willing to change and follow Christ), determined to endure to the end, a person receives from the Spirit of Christ a witness that changes their behavior. Their works show they are penitent. At this point a person is ready for baptism. Until then, they are not ready and the ordinance is not appropriate.

Now the instructions in Section 20 are more complete than the abbreviated statement in Christ's instructions to His Nephite disciples, but it is to the same effect. When this pattern is followed, people are converted and follow Christ. Their baptism matters and will change them. When these instructions are not followed, the ordinance is relatively meaningless and people drift off into inactivity. I believe today the numbers evidence that approximately 10% of those who are baptized are actually converted. The rest are just names and numbers used as membership statistics to be reported and proclaimed each April in a worldwide conference.

The Gospel of Christ is quite exact and it works whenever it is tried. It is tried today in about 10% of the cases of those who are baptized by our missionaries.

Perhaps the ordinance ought to be offered to more of our adults as they come to recognize that they may not have actually been prepared to receive the ordinance when given to them. No matter, there's always the Alma exception. (That's when in the course of baptizing someone else, you go ahead and take the covenant yourself. See Mosiah 18:13–15). Clearly Alma was baptizing Helam at the time, and added himself for good measure; he (Alma) feeling the need for the ordinance himself. He went ahead and was baptized again for good measure. This seems to be a precedent that would allow for others to do likewise—perhaps when performing a vicarious baptism for the dead. I leave the Alma exception for your own consideration, and will stop short of advocating such a thing. I just notice things and share what I notice. I'm not trying to convince anyone to do anything.

In Christ's instructions, and in Section 20, the heavy lifting of repentance precedes baptism. Then, after determining to change and follow Christ, leaving behind the foolish errors of the past, the person is fit to be baptized. At that point the baptism symbolizes the new life being undertaken. The presence of the Holy Ghost then ratifies the purging of the repentant, now baptized convert. But that comes next in Christ's teaching.

SEPTEMBER 24, 2010

3 Nephi 11:24–25

And now behold, these are the words which ye shall say, calling them by name, saying: Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Christ prescribes the exact words to be used in the ordinance. However, the instruction we use today is slightly different in wording, but identical in meaning: Instead of: "Having authority given me of Jesus Christ" we say instead: "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ." (D&C 20:73).

After giving these disciples "power to baptize" Christ's instructions require them to say they have "authority" (in 3 Nephi) or today, hold a "commission" (in D&C 20). Is there a difference between "authority" to baptize and the "power" to baptize?

Why does the authorization come from Jesus Christ, but the ordinance get performed "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?" The power to do the ordinance comes from the Son, but the ordinance is in the name of each member of the Godhead. Why?

Though they are one, the names show they occupy different roles and hold different responsibilities. (As to following and being sanctified by different laws and receiving different kingdoms, see D&C 88:21–26). We are in the fallen world where the primary means God communicates with man is through the Holy Ghost (D&C 14:8). When, however, a person rises up through the merits of Jesus Christ to receive Him as a minister, they are living in a Terrestrial law and inherit Terrestrial blessings (D&C 76:77). When He has finished His preparations with the person, and can bring them to the Father, the person is brought to a point where the Father can accept and acknowledge them as a son (See D&C 76:54–59, 92). They are then begotten of the Father (Psalms 2:7). Through each of these steps, does baptism matter? Does one receive the companionship of the Holy Ghost without baptism? Do they come to Christ without baptism? Do they inherit what the Father has without baptism? Is baptism critical to the association with each member of the Godhead?

The point at which the person's journey is completed, and they may enter into the rest of the Lord is when the Lord declares by His own voice that the man's offering has been accepted and they are sealed up to eternal life. I've explained this on the blog as to Joseph Smith. I've explained it for Enos and others in Beloved Enos. The Gospel is the same now, as always before. Therefore, no matter how you will receive blessings of the Lord in the afterlife, it will be through the Gospel of Jesus Christ and by the ordinances instituted for claiming blessings. These were established as law to govern man's conduct here even before the world was (D&C 130:20–21).

Note also the person cannot receive the ordinance without also having their name stated. Why do you suppose it is necessary to first call out the name of the person before they receive an ordinance? Why would the Lord's instruction require a person to be "called" first? Though they are submitting to the ordinance voluntarily, why call their name?

Does it matter if the full legal name is used? We do that in the church, of course. But does it matter? If the Lord called Joseph by name at the time of the First Vision (and He did, see JSH 1:17), what name do you suppose was called? Was it “Joseph Smith, Jr.”? Or was it “Joseph”? Or was it that name used by his most intimate friend at the time?

Whenever a name is given by an angel in an appearance to parents, the name is always the first name, or the name their friends would call them (See, e.g., Luke 1:13; Luke 1:31). Similarly, when the Lord calls a man’s name, He uses his first, given name (See 1 Samuel 3:4; Exodus 3:4). The Lord does not use formal names, but uses intimate names when addressing His servants.

We call the person to be baptized by name. Our practice is to use the full, legal name.

SEPTEMBER 25, 2010

3 Nephi 11:26

“And then shall ye immerse them in the water, and come forth again out of the water.”

The manner of baptism is clearly by immersion. To perform the ordinance, they must be put under the water and then “come forth again out of the water” to follow the instruction given by Christ.

The purpose of baptism is to follow Christ’s example (John 10:27, John 14:15). It symbolizes the death of the old man of sin, and the resurrection into a new life in Christ (Romans 6:4). That symbol cannot be mirrored by sprinkling. It must involve immersion.

In immersion we are placed below the surface of the water, in the same way as the dead are buried below ground.

In immersion the breath of life is cut off while under the water, and restored anew when you “come forth again out of the water.”

In the case of the officiator, they are the one who immerses and then brings the recipient up out of the water. Performing this ordinance puts the officiator in the role of the Lord who holds the keys of death (Rev. 1:18) and resurrection (2 Nephi 2:8).

Those who are baptized, and those who officiate, enact, by symbol, some eternal truths regarding the plan of salvation. In the very moment the ordinance is performed there is a renewal in symbol of life, innocence, forgiveness and resurrection. The earth itself is blessed by such things as baptism and other ordinances. The earth itself is defiled when the ordinances are not kept exactly as prescribed (Isa. 24:5; Moses 7:28).

The earth knows that God ordained the ordinances of heaven and earth (Jeremiah 33:25). As regular and reliable as the movements of the sun and moon are, so too should the ordinances of the Lord be kept in their appointed ways (Jeremiah 31:35–36).

The heavens and earth rejoice when the ordinances are kept. They symbolize eternal hope, man’s acceptance of God’s plan, and a presence of righteousness in a fallen world. Our own participation in ordinances are vital to our own renewal, and the renewal of all creation through redemption of each individual soul.

The baptism ordinance, like all those that follow after, is intended not merely to fulfill an initiation rite. It is intended to communicate light and truth into the mind of the individual who is performing and receiving the ordinance. It is meant to enlighten.

I have discussed previously the meaning of “come forth” used by Christ in restoring life to Lazarus (John 11:43) and therefore won’t repeat it again here. It is no accident the Lord employs the same meaning here as there. We are rising from the tomb of sin which imprisons us into the new life awaiting us in Christ.

The Lord is more than brilliant. He is filled with light and truth. The closer you draw to Him, the more light and truth you begin to receive from Him.

SEPTEMBER 25, 2010

Comment Chaos

It has become apparent that this has changed in the last week from a teaching blog into a discussion blog. As a result, comments are now disabled. There won't be any comments on this blog from now on. Existing comments will not be taken down; but no new ones will be added.

As the next few verses are discussed, it will become apparent that adding or deleting from the doctrine of Christ is forbidden. I cannot, in good conscience, violate the very doctrine I am expounding even as I expound upon it.

It is true that this blog has never vouched for the reliability or accuracy of comments made by others. It is also true that I have freely allowed criticism against me to be published without any defense or challenge to the critics. The decision has nothing to do with criticism of me. It has to do with the fact that the overall content of this blog has become primarily comments and distantly the things I have been interested in explaining or teaching. As the posts become dwarfed by the comments, the whole purpose of this blog is compromised.

SEPTEMBER 26, 2010

3 Nephi 11:27

And after this manner shall ye baptize in my name; for behold, verily I say unto you, that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; and I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one.

The ordinance of baptism is to be done in the names of all three members of the Godhead. And, correspondingly, Christ wants us to understand the unity that exists between these three. They are “one” with each other.

The “oneness” of God the Father, His Son, and the Holy Ghost was discussed by Christ in His teachings of the New Testament. The Intercessory Prayer recorded in John 17, includes His expansion on the idea. There Christ taught:

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world. (John 17:20–24)

This unity between the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is a point of doctrine raised by Christ in this teaching. It is important for us to understand that the message we receive from the Holy Ghost will be the same as the message we would receive from Christ. It is also important for us to rely on and have faith in Christ and the Holy Ghost so that we may trust them to bring us to the Father.

It is also a model for us to follow. We are supposed to drop our fears and worries, shed our ambitions and desires, and come together in unity until we are “one.” The non-competitive, fully cooperative manner the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are “one” is the model of Zion itself. Divisions and strifes are unthinkable between the members of the Godhead. In contrast, among us they are unavoidable.

The ideal is always the standard. We push toward perfection. The Father lives in absolutes. Therefore we strive for the absolute, all the while struggling with our relative and incremental improvement. We are in the process of being “added upon” (Abr. 3:26). The Father, on the other hand, dwells where there is nothing but perfection (D&C 1:31). So for us the Mediator and the Savior establish the bridge between where we are forbidden to enter in sin, and the borrowed cleanliness which momentarily lets us enter in.

We are to become “one” with Them. It is a distant goal, to be accomplished after being “added upon” for a long time. Joseph taught in the King Follett Discourse:

Here, then, is eternal life—to know the only wise and true God; and you have got to learn how to be gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, the same as all gods have done before you, namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, until you attain to the resurrection of the dead, and are able to dwell in everlasting burnings, and to sit in glory, as do those who sit enthroned in everlasting power... When you climb up a ladder, you must begin at the bottom, and ascend step by step, until you arrive at the top; and so it is with the principles of the gospel—you must begin with the first, and go on until you learn all the principles of exaltation. But it will be a great while after you have passed through the veil before you will have learned them. It is not all to be comprehended in this world; it will be a great work to learn our salvation and exaltation even beyond the grave.

To become “one” will be to reach the end of a long journey. We can have promises of that end. We can receive covenants that will bring us there. But our arrival will “be a great while after [we] have passed through the veil” for “it is not all to be comprehended in this world.” Moses was told that, also (Moses 1:5). We may be initiated, but to enter in will be “a great work to learn our salvation and exaltation even beyond the grave.”

So the ideal of “one” with the Father, Son and Holy Ghost for us is distant, to be sought, to be kept before us, but not to be obtained until some time later. But to be “one” with each other is another matter. Being “one” is required of us for Zion to return. Zion is required for the Lord to dwell among us again. He is going to return to a Zion, no matter how few may be involved. He will come even if only two or three gather in His name (Matt. 18:20). Zion may be small, but it will nonetheless be Zion before He can visit with her.

SEPTEMBER 27, 2010

3 Nephi 11:28–30

And according as I have commanded you thus shall ye baptize. And there shall be no disputations among you, as there have hitherto been; neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine, as there have hitherto been. For verily, verily I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another. Behold, this is not my doctrine, to stir up the hearts of men with anger, one against another; but this is my doctrine, that such things should be done away.

The Lord's elaboration on "disputations" and "contentions" is important and consistent enough that all 3 verses should be considered together.

First, He clarifies that baptism must be done as He "commanded you." Deviations are not permitted and should not be asked for, or entertained. That is the thing about ordinances. When given, they are to be kept in exactly the manner they come from Him. When we change them we risk breaking the covenant between Him and ourselves (Isa. 24:5).

The Book of Mormon is silent about the "disputations" which existed among them over baptism. However, when Christ says there has "hitherto been" disputes, we know they existed. It becomes apparent from later passages that one practice which caused some of the argument was the issue of baptizing infants. There were likely others, as well. The Lord wants that to end. Perform the ordinances as He sets them out, and stop arguing about the manner.

The reason arguments arise is because men stop gathering light by righteous behavior. When they lose light they cease to understand the truth. They stray from the correct practice of the ordinance because they are unable to understand its importance. They see no reason to continue the ordinance in one form when another seems to work just as well. The result is a change to the ordinance. It is ever the same. By the time the change is made, the ones making it are unaware of any importance associated with the ordinance they change. They discard what they view is meaningless. It would require a good deal more light and truth for them to understand the importance of what was given them. But that light and truth has passed away from them because of their conduct.

Into the darkness the devil enters with arguments over the ordinances: Why do it that way? It really doesn't mean anything. It is arcane and outdated. It doesn't really matter as long as you still have faith in Christ. [That particular lie is very effective because it allows the person to presume they have faith, when in fact they haven't the faith sufficient to obey Christ.] People will get more out of the changes if we make them. People will have greater peace of mind if we baptize their infants. We'll save more souls, because by baptizing them when they're infants we include everyone who would die before getting baptized. Our numbers will increase. We'll look more successful by getting more followers by adding their numbers into the group. What we change isn't important, anyway. If it were important, we would know that, and since it doesn't seem important to us, it must, in fact, not be important. Those who rebel at change are not really faithful. This shows inspiration; it's faith affirming. Change is proof that God is still leading us... And other such arguments and persuasions from our adversary.

On the other hand, Christ is saying to keep the ordinances unchanged. And further, don't even begin to dispute them. They are off limits for argument, dispute and discussion. When you open the opportunity to dispute over the ordinances, you are allowing the devil an opportunity to influence the discussion and change the ordinances.

Disputes lead to contention, contention leads to anger, and anger is the devil's tool. So don't start down that road. Accept and understand the ordinances. If you are perplexed by them, then let those who understand speak, exhort, expound and teach concerning them. As they do, you will come into the unity of faith and become one. Perplexity cannot exist when there is light and truth. Light and truth comes from understanding the ordinances, not changing them. So do not begin the process through dispute. The purpose of discussion is not to dispute, which leads to contention, which leads to anger.

When the Gospel and its ordinances turn into something angry and contentious, then the Spirit has fled, and souls are lost. It is the devil's objective to prevent you from practicing the ordinances in the correct manner. But, more importantly, it is his objective to prevent you from becoming one. When he uses arguments over ordinances to cause disunity, he is playing with two tools at the same time. First, changing the ordinances brings about cursings, and second, encouraging contention and anger grieves the Spirit, and prevents the Saints from becoming one.

As a result, disputes or discussions over ordinances, which could lead to changing them, should not be entertained. As soon as the ordinances are open to dispute, reconsideration, alteration or to being changed, then you are opening the door to this whole process. It culminates in the souls of men being lost through apostasy. Once the ordinances are changed, the earth is cursed (Isa. 24:5) and Israel is scattered rather than gathered (Jere. 31:36).

The devil knows this, even if men do not. Men are urged to take steps they presume have little effect, all the while being lied to by the enemy of their souls.

When men arrive at the point they are angry in their hearts with one another, they are not united by love as they are intended to be. These are the end results of the two paths. One leading to love and joy (Hel. 5:44), and the other to anger and wrath (D&C 76:33).

Disputes over ordinances are caused by the devil. Ordinances that preserve symbolic truths and have the power to save are turned into tools for the devil by disputations. It is a complete victory when discussions about changing ordinances are allowed to take place. Even good men are taken in by such disputes.

SEPTEMBER 27, 2010

3 Nephi 11:31–32

Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, I will declare unto you my doctrine. And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me; and I bear record of the Father, and the Father beareth record of me, and the Holy Ghost beareth record of the Father and me; and I bear record that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and believe in me.

When the Lord proclaims there is a “doctrine” belonging to Him, it is important to take note. As He begins His doctrinal statement, He first reminds us again of the unity between Himself, His Father and the Holy Ghost. This reminder of unity has followed the admonition to avoid contention and anger—things which prevent our becoming one with each other.

To understand His doctrine you must first know and understand that the doctrine originates with the Father. Christ has completely accepted and advocates the doctrine. Moreover He embodies it.

The Father’s doctrine is that “all men, everywhere, [must] repent and believe in [Christ].” This is what the whole of creation hangs on: the atonement of the Son. It is through the Son’s sacrifice that the Father's plan became operational. Now, to return to the Father all must do so in reliance upon the merits of the Son (John 3:16).

The Son preaches the doctrine of, and bears witness of the Father. The Father bears witness of the Son. The Holy Ghost bears record of the Father and Son.

When did the Father bear record of the Son? Did you notice that? The FATHER bears record of the Son! I'm not talking about Matthew or Luke's testimony that the Father bore record of the Son, because that is Matthew's and Luke's testimony. I'm not talking about Joseph Smith's record of the Father's testimony of the Son. I'm talking about the Father's testimony. When did you hear the Father bear record of the Son?

The Father does bear record of the Son. But you must go through the Son to get to the Father. When you do, acting in faith according to the conditions established for your salvation, then you will receive the Father's testimony or record of the Son for yourself. But implicit in this statement is the fact that access to the Father is possible by the means provided through the Son. That is a ratification of the fullness of the Gospel. It is an invitation to return to heaven and obtain from the Father a confirmation of your salvation.

The Father's testimony is that our salvation comes through Christ. For us the Father has provided a Savior. If we repent, we can come back into the presence of God and enter into our salvation and exaltation. But it is through the means provided for us: A Savior, who is Christ the Lord.

We are commanded to:

Repent.

Believe in Christ.

To repent is to turn again to Him. To follow Him and leave behind your sinful ways. To abandon the world and worldliness and to choose to always remember Him, that you may have His spirit to be with you always.

To believe in Him is to accept, study, contemplate and ponder His teachings. It is not to just go along with a herd, but to rise up from your position and awaken from your slumber. It is to grow into knowledge about Him. Belief leads to faith and faith to knowledge. But the process is initiated by your belief (correct understanding) of His teachings.

The doctrine continues...

SEPTEMBER 28, 2010

3 Nephi 11:33–34

“And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, shall be damned.”

Imagine the importance attached to the ordinance of baptism! It is an absolute minimum requirement. Upon the proper performance of this ordinance, hangs the difference between being “saved” and “inheriting the kingdom of God” on the one hand, and being “damned” on the other.

[As a complete aside: A few posts back there was a comment about what a burden it would be for “the church” and “the priesthood” if people seek re-baptism to renew commitments. It was made as we approached Christ’s teachings on baptism. The comment was so immediate and so dark in tone and content it has caused me rethink the importance of this idea. Anytime an idea is confrontational and dark, I pause to consider why that is so.

Here's what now occurs to me. What a terrible burden it would be to depart this life without the ordinance of baptism properly performed, by proper authority, in the proper manner, with repentance preceding the event. I would not want a dark and troubled soul to perform baptism for anyone, but a person filled with joy, hope and the Spirit, having a testimony in Christ like Nephi. These people would not find performing such an ordinance troubling.

If there is a hint of doubt held by any baptized member of the church, why would any right-thinking and charitable soul refuse them the right to be re-baptized? Now, I've suggested the Alma exception and how that might be accomplished in a time of reluctance and resistance to re-commitment baptism. But it occurs to me upon further reflection that since the church doesn't recognize or record rebaptisms anyway, why would this concern the "heavy laden priesthood" which has no time for such things? Anyone holding authority, at any place where there is sufficient water to perform the rite, could accomplish it. Since the church doesn't record it, there is no need of witnesses. It could be done in private, at any time, or any place with sufficient water. It could be done by any person holding the office of Priest. It would be good practice for future missionaries if they were given the opportunity. I think the idea is one which ought to be acted upon with regularity, in private and without troubling the busy and overburdened church and priesthood. A close family member could take care of it, and I suspect all involved will soon recognize heaven's approval of the idea.]

Well, back to the subject at hand. Anciently the Jews practiced baptism in "living water." That is, in a naturally renewing body of water, like a river, lake or ocean. Living water was part of the symbol. We have fonts, and there is nothing wrong with that. But I have always cherished my baptism in the Atlantic Ocean.

Well, believing in Christ precedes baptism. In fact, belief in Christ causes baptism. The one results in the other. Without faith in Him, there is no need for baptism. This then makes the first step belief in Christ, and baptism the second step.

I've heard of those who obtain a testimony of Christ in adulthood, but who were baptized many years earlier at age 8. If belief in Christ is supposed to precede baptism, but in fact follows it, does that recommend repeating the ordinance? Does Christ's establishment of an order to these things, by the commandment of the Father, matter? If it matters, then why not try it? If tried and it "tastes good" then you have your answer. And if nothing changes, then you also have learned something, as well.

I was fortunate to be able to follow the proper sequence. I was 19 years old when I came to the church. I try to follow the proper sequence with my own children by teaching them before baptism and testifying of Christ to them in a way calculated to produce faith in Him. I would take no offense, however, if one of my children were to later want to be re-baptized as an affirmation of their continuing belief in Christ. I can't see why anyone would take offense.

What does it mean to "inherit the kingdom of God?" Would that be important to secure while alive? This work cannot be done after death, you know (D&C 138:33). However, if offered the opportunity now and a person declines it, they cannot afterwards receive it and inherit the "kingdom of God." They inherit another kingdom (D&C 76:74).

This is important enough a matter that I rather think the whole subject is worth careful consideration. Christ's teachings have been carefully preserved at great effort and come to us by way of revelation and direct inspiration from God. From a prophet to another prophet in composition, and through a prophet in translation. It holds a power for salvation in the kingdom of God. It is worth prayerful consideration. The outcome is the difference between the “kingdom of God” on the one hand and “damnation” on the other.

SEPTEMBER 28, 2010

3 Nephi 11:35

Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine, and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me believeth in the Father also; and unto him will the Father bear record of me, for he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost.

Belief in Christ necessarily means belief in the Father. To believe Christ is to accept His message of the Father’s primacy and authority.

You see in these three members of the Godhead a full establishment of interconnected roles and responsibilities.

The Father ordains the plan. It is He who presides.

The Son implements the plan. It is He who makes the required sacrifice to save us.

The Holy Ghost activates the plan. It is the “fire” of the Holy Ghost which makes new, cleanses and perfects the man’s understanding.

These three are “one” and united. They provide mankind with the possibility for salvation and exaltation.

Christ “bears record of it from the Father.” This means that Christ is the Father’s messenger announcing the Father’s plan. What of the need for two witnesses? (Matt. 18:16). One of the criticisms of Christ’s message was the absence of additional witnesses (John 8:13–14). Is Christ doing that same thing here with the Nephites?

Does His announcement that He speaks for the Father constitute one, or two witnesses? The Father first bore witness of Christ (3 Nephi 11:6–7). Now Christ bears witness of Him.

The Father’s testimony always affirms the status of the Son as His Beloved, and of our need to “hear Him” (See e.g., Matt. 17:5; JS-H 1:17; see also Matt. 3:17). The Father can, and does, acknowledge others as His (Psalms 2:7). But, unlike the Son who has repeatedly visited this earth, walked upon it (Luke 24:15–16), been handled by people (Luke 24:36–39; 3 Nephi 11:14–15), and eaten here (John 21:13), the Father does not come into contact with this earth in its fallen state (Matt. 17:5; JS-H 1:17). The only time the Father had contact with this earth was before the Fall, in the Paradisiacal setting of Eden—which was a Temple at the time (Gen. 3:8). Whenever there has been contact with the Father thereafter, He has been at a distance from this earth (Moses 7:24; 1 Nephi 1:8; Alma 36:22).

There is a formality with the Father that does not exist with the Son. For example, the Son has eaten with mortal man while He was immortal, both before His ministry in the flesh (Exo. 24:9–11) and after (Luke 24:41–43). As our Redeemer, He is directly responsible for us and has contact with us to perform His redemptive service. The Father, on the other hand, is different in status, responsibility, glory and dominion. The Son can appear to mortal man without showing His glory or requiring any alteration of the mortal who beholds Him (See, e.g., John 20:15–17). To behold the Father, to endure His presence, one must be transfigured (Moses 1:2). Mortal man cannot behold the Father’s works while mortal, for if you comprehend them you cannot afterward remain mortal in the flesh (Moses 1:5).

The primary means to learn of Christ for mortal man is the Holy Ghost. It is this means which brings all things to your remembrance (John 14:26). Once the learning has culminated in preparation of the individual, then the Savior has a continuing ministry (John 14:21). The Savior's ministry is to bring the person redemption.

When this process is complete, then it is the responsibility of those who have been redeemed to cry repentance to their neighbors (D&C 88:74, 81). Indeed, the desire to bring others to receive redemption becomes their primary concern (Mosiah 28:3).

The process then produces those who bear testimony of the Son. If they are called of God, they will use scriptures to testify of Christ. This has always been the pattern ordained by God (Jacob 7:10–11). They may understand the scriptures more clearly, because they have seen the same things as earlier prophets (JS-H 1:74). But their testimonies will draw from the scriptures and the words of their brothers in Christ who went before as they testify of Him.

It is through such signs as these you know the Father and Son are one, and the Holy Ghost and the Son are one, and the messengers sent by them will testify of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. These three are the ones in whom faith must be focused for salvation. Though the heavens may include hosts of others, saving faith must be focused in the Father, Son and Holy Ghost alone. Whenever attention and worship moves from the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, the result is invariably apostasy and false beliefs (1 Cor. 8:5–6; Deut. 16, 17, 18 & 19; 2 Kings 17:13–16).

The doctrine of Christ is to be strictly followed. It alone delivers from destruction. All other paths lead to error, foolishness and the dark, where you will perish (Deut. 8:19).

From following this process we obtain the necessary “fire and the Holy Ghost” which redeems, purges, purifies and changes us into a new creature in Christ.

I have said very little of my personal experiences because of how quickly people turn from following Christ to following men whenever attention is drawn to a man. Mankind is inclined toward idolatry. The church has become a great idol. I do not intend to supplant the Lord, nor to call attention to myself, nor to offer myself as an idol for others. I cannot save anyone. If not for Christ and His atonement, I would have only dread for my eternal state. The doctrine of Christ is what the Father ordained as the means for salvation. Anyone who interferes with the process, or offers another means for salvation, cannot deliver (Mosiah 3:17). Whether it is an institution or an individual, no one other than Christ can save. Hence His title as Savior. For some reason mankind is so prone to error, so quick to leave the path, and so vulnerable to being deceived, that focus must remain on the Son, as empowered and sent by the Father, through the witness of the Holy Ghost, or we go astray. Joseph cautioned: “How much more dignified and noble are the thoughts of God, than the vain imaginations of the human heart! None but fools will trifle with the souls of men” (TPJS p. 137).

SEPTEMBER 29, 2010

3 Nephi 11:36

“And thus will the Father bear record of me, and the Holy Ghost will bear record unto him of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost are one.”

The phrase: “And thus will the Father bear record of me” is referring to the Father visiting “him with fire and the Holy Ghost.”

This means that to the recipient of the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost comes a witness to the person of the Father. When the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost come to you, so does the Father's testimony of the Son.

You cannot receive this baptism and not have a testimony given to you by the Father of the Son.

In the Book of Mormon we read accounts of conversion experiences which include visitations of angels or opening of the heavens (See, e.g., Mosiah 27:11–24; Alma 22:16–18, 23; Alma 19:12–19). These converts' experiences did not come after a lifetime of study or reading a library of scholarly works. Indeed, in some cases the only information they had before the encounter came from the words of a missionary testifying to the truth.

Becoming converted is a question of sincerity, real intent, and asking God. It is not about the library you have read. Indeed, approaching it on purely intellectual terms has never produced a single convert. I've written a chapter on this in Eighteen Verses.

The problem is always obtaining a connection to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. It is not a matter of scholarship. Joseph was anything but a scholar when he encountered God in the First Vision. He was young and ignorant. He read the Bible, believed in God's existence, and trusted the promise by James that if he were to ask God he would not be upbraided but would be answered (James 1:5–6). Therefore he decided to ask, with real intent, trusting in the promise (JS-H 1:12–13).

Because he asked, he met God. Walking into the grove near his home that morning he was a foolish and ignorant boy. Walking back he was a prophet. Though it would be many years following that encounter before he appreciated how far he would have to go to gain knowledge of godliness and the mysteries of salvation.

But all of his study and effort was informed by the scriptures and revelation. In my view, this is how it should be.

Scriptures are an essential anchor of understanding. All truths should find a comfortable setting inside existing scripture. If a notion or teaching is jarringly contradictory of existing scripture, then there must be a very good reason or explanation before it should be accepted. It has been my experience that revelation does not contradict, but opens up meaning of the scriptures. This was Joseph's and Oliver's experience, as well (JS-H 1:74).

When I study other materials, I do so to inform my reading and understanding of scripture, not to supplant it. I spend as much time with scripture study as I do with other writings. Although I could recite things using my own words, I find the language of scripture describes truths better than new wordings and therefore often use the language of scripture even if I do not show them in quotes. I also make frequent reference to scripture in this blog to show the reader that the scriptures are an existing library of material dealing with every part of Christ's Gospel. Since we have scripture made available to us at great effort from God and the prophets, it would be terribly ungrateful for us to fail to study what they have provided.

The "record" we already have of the Father's testimony of the Son, the Son's testimony of the Father, and the Holy Ghost's interaction with mankind is found in the scriptures. Although you may not see it fully without further revelation, it is nevertheless there. I have found the scriptures often open up further revelation. This is how Section 76, the First Vision, Section 138, Section 93, Section 132, and many other revelations have come to us. Search the meaning of scripture, and then ask God for what you do not see through your own effort. Appreciation for what has been given already produces further revelation.

The Father, Son and Holy Ghost are one. And the primary means for obtaining access to their “record” spoken of in this verse, is through the scriptures. Although I may try to shed additional light upon the meaning of scripture, I try to keep the scriptures an integral part of anything I write. (Excepting only the parables, where I felt free to let another tradition inform how and what I have written. And the proverbs; which I titled “Sayings” at the end of The Second Comforter; which was another tradition as well.)

SEPTEMBER 29, 2010

3 Nephi 11:37–38

And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and become as a little child, and be baptized in my name, or ye can in nowise receive these things. And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child, or ye can in nowise inherit the kingdom of God.

Repentance is not likely unless a person is willing to undergo a change to become more “childlike” in perspective and attitude. I’ve written a chapter on this in The Second Comforter. I used that as the basis for my comments at the recent Chiasmus Conference. It is more than just an analogy or good advice. It is a prerequisite. It is the only way you can “inherit the kingdom of God.”

Children are open to change and willing to learn. They welcome new ideas for all ideas are new to them. The world is new to them. They feel their ignorance and are anxious to fill it with information and understanding. They know they are unable to cope with the world they live in unless they obtain more understanding than they have. So they relentlessly search to know more.

On the other hand, adults are generally closed. They believe they already know something, and therefore are unwilling to receive more (2 Nephi 28:29).

Adults learn disciplines of study and then think the Gospel should be viewed by the tools of the scholar. To the economist, all of the Gospel appears to be financial. To the philosopher, all of the Gospel appears to be dialectic. To the lawyer it is a legal system. But the Gospel is separate from the understanding of men. It requires us to surrender our arrogance and foolishness and come as a child to learn anew everything about life and truth. This is why the Gospel always begins with creation, informs of the Fall, and preaches the Atonement.

We must “repent” because the foundation of accepting new truth begins with the realization that we’re not getting anywhere by what we’ve already done. We need to abandon old ways and begin anew. Until we are open to the new truths offered through the Gospel, we can’t even start the journey. We’re headed in the wrong direction and don’t even know it. First we need to realize our direction is wrong. Then stop going that way. When we turn to the new direction, we’ve begun repenting (2 Cor. 5:17).

From repentance comes light and truth. At first, just turning to face the new direction is a great revelation. But you’ve not seen anything until you walk in that direction for a while. As you move toward the light and receive more, the world itself changes meaning and nothing you used to think important remains important (Isa. 65:17).

Becoming as a little child, or repenting, must precede baptism if you are to be saved. Otherwise, you cannot “receive these things” or, in other words, you cannot accept the new truths and perspectives the Gospel will require you to know and accept. Unless these steps are taken you cannot “inherit the kingdom of God” because only such people will be able to enter.

Teachable. Open. Willing to receive more. Able to endure difficulties as a result of the changes which come to them. Patient. Submissive to God. And eager to learn more (Mosiah 3:19).

Not arrogant. Not trying to fit the new truths into your existing framework of false notions (Mark 2:22). Not resisting truth and arguing against it (1 Tim. 6:4–6). Not proud or boastful, secure in your own salvation (Luke 18:11). Not holding a testimony that you will be saved while others around you will be lost because they do not believe as you do (Alma 31:14–18).

How few there will be who find it (Matt. 7:14; 3 Ne. 14:14; 3 Ne. 27:33; D&C 132:22). Most people are simply unwilling to repent. They have such truth as they are willing to receive already, and want nothing more (2 Nephi 28:14–15).

Even Christ is unable to persuade them to accept His Gospel.

SEPTEMBER 30, 2010

3 Nephi 11:39

“Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine, and whoso buildeth upon this buildeth upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them.”

This is the reason for this doctrine. It will allow those who accept and follow it to endure against all enemies. It will allow them to prevail.

Even the “gates of hell shall not prevail against them.” Meaning that death and hell can have no claim upon them. They will not be taken captive either in this world (Alma 12:11) or when they leave this world (Alma 40:13).

When we consider the Father is to bear record of the Son, and the Son bears record of the Father, and the Holy Ghost bears record of the Father and Son, then we realize this doctrine of Christ is designed to put us in contact with all three members of the Godhead. We are to join them. We are to be one with them.

There is no separating us from God when we have the record of each given to us.

It is interesting that the “rock” upon which we build is the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. There is abundant evidence of other “gods” and of “goddesses.” It is beyond dispute that the “image of God” includes both “male and female.” (Gen. 1:27; Moses 2:27; Abraham 4:27). It is inescapable, therefore, that the God we worship includes a Father and a Mother. However, we are only to seek after the Father, Son and Holy Ghost as the “rock” upon which our salvation is to be built.

Oddly enough, mankind prefers a female deity over a male deity. Catholicism has reconciled this preference by the doctrine of Immaculate Conception and the cultic veneration of Mary. Pope John Paul II was an ardent believer in the Cult of Mary and made no secret of that veneration. It is almost beyond dispute that Mary’s status is preferred over Christ’s in the lives of the common Catholic.

In the Old Testament, the goddess Ashtoreth, (in her various iterations) was a leading figure in apostasies of ancient Israel. She was the female consort to Baal (who also had various spellings). The Egyptian counterpart being Hathor, whose image appears in figure 5 of Facsimile No. 2 in the Book of Abraham. The representation there being Egyptian, that is, emerging through the great cycle of life, afterlife and resurrection coming through the womb. An understanding of which Hugh Nibley was setting forth in One Eternal Round. This work was reduced in volume by half before publication. This resulted in problems with the published text. That, however, is another subject not relevant here.

Notwithstanding man's preference for the female god, for salvation we must anchor ourselves to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. They are the "rock" upon which we must build to avoid the gates of hell, despite our knowledge of heaven, salvation and the necessary unity of the sexes before salvation is obtained (1 Cor. 11:11). It is through the union of the sexes that mortals imitate immortality, for all of us will die. Yet if joined together we will continue through the seed forever, as the gods (D&C 132:20-22).

There is also the continuing trouble about polygamy which so often afflicted the discussions on this blog before comments were discontinued. Those who preach on the subject often speak out of the coarseness of ambition and insecurity (for those always go together), and without understanding how a marriage must work to warrant preservation beyond this life.

Ask yourself what kind of a relationship would be godlike? What association between a man and a woman would be something the heavens would want to preserve and continue? Is an ambitious man who looks upon a woman as someone to rule over worthy of heavenly preservation? Is such a man worthy of one wife, let alone several?

Wouldn't you expect the relationship between a man and woman worthy of eternal preservation to evidence such things as equality, respect, kindness, joyful and voluntary interchange of thoughts, and to be grounded in love? Wouldn't you expect such a marriage to be part of heaven, though the parties live as mortals on the earth? Why would you expect a form of marriage, having as its chief output, unhappy but frequently pregnant women, having an absentee husband to be godlike?

Have you read the tenth parable? If you have and still think you need a “brood” of women to become godlike, then you haven’t understood the tenth parable.

Foolishness never was enlightenment. Ambition is unbecoming in a candidate for exaltation. We will keep going into Christ’s sermons to the Nephites and, as we do, you will find He emphasizes how to become like Him through service and abasing yourself. By sacrifice and devotion to the best interests of others. Not by compulsion, dominion and ruling over others.

If you want to prevail against the gates of hell, then Christ’s simple doctrines need to become yours. They need to be how you live and what you do. They are the only rock upon which you can build and have something which will endure the buffetings of hell itself.

If a man hasn’t made a single woman happy, why would he be trusted to have more wives? Why would he want them? What does such a man think the purpose of marriage to be? Gratification? Industrial baby-production? What’s the reason? If happiness is the end of our design by God, then wouldn’t you need to find someone who can live in peace and happiness with another person as their husband as the first step? If that is true, then why isn’t that challenge enough in a marriage between one man and one woman? Until that has been conquered, why should misery be multiplied by adding additional spouses into a failed interpersonal relationship?

Too many people are advocating too many alternatives which distract from the simplicity of what is really needed. There aren’t enough marriages worthy of preservation. Make yours one of them. That is a very good work and challenge enough for all of us at present.

Onward, then...

SEPTEMBER 30, 2010

3 Nephi 11:40

And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock; but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell stand open to receive such when the floods come and the winds beat upon them.

Here is Christ's explanation of why we must focus on these doctrines to be saved. I've heard more words of caution about speaking "more" than I've ever heard cautioning about "less." Both are a problem. It is more fashionable today to speak less about Christ's doctrine, or to circumscribe it into so narrow a meaning as to render it powerless in effect.

First, as to "more." When we "declare more" we are getting ahead of the process. We aren't to worship the "hosts of heaven," nor a heavenly mother. Despite all we may know about Her, that knowledge won't save. Other personages or ministers cannot save either. Gabriel will not. Enoch will not. Michael will not. Only the Son will save; and the Father will bear testimony of Him. Interesting stories about individual spiritual encounters or experiences will not save. They are evidence that heaven is still attending to us, but the details are for the individual. The experiences that will save have already been recorded in scripture for our general instruction. Outside of scripture those individual experiences are only useful to the extent they shed light upon scriptural accounts. If a person can help you understand Daniel's visionary encounters by what they have been shown, then their personal experiences are not as important as the light they may shed upon Daniel's prophecy. Similarly what I've written is helpful only to understand scripture, and not otherwise. Even the account of Gethsemane is anchored in scripture and useful only to the extent it sheds light upon what has been given to us in the New Testament Gospels, Nephi's prophecy, Alma's testimony and D&C 19. I do think my account goes further to explain what occurred than any other writing which has come to my attention. Nevertheless the scriptures are needed as the primary tool for understanding our Lord's atonement. So the definition of "more" would include such things that supplant scripture or suggest anything is more important than the Father, Son and Holy Ghost; but things as may shed additional light on the meaning of scripture.

Interestingly enough, when we "declare less" we are also condemned. It works both ways. It's a two-edged sword. Not "more nor less" is permitted. We sometimes greet preaching "less" with applause, because we want less. But that is no better than missing the mark while preaching "more." Perhaps it is worse, because it represents a rejection of truth. It is active suppression of what needs to be proclaimed.

All of us must be concerned about declaring less. Deleting or omitting is as serious a matter as adding. Either will allow the gates of hell to prevail.

When you adopt creedal Historic Christianity and amalgamate the Father, Son and Holy Ghost into a single cosmic siamese-triplet construct, you are declaring them as less. The disembodiment of God the Father was a lie to supplant and replace Him by another disembodied pretender claiming to be the god of this world.

Christ's teaching here is preliminary to the Sermon that follows. In the coming Sermon we will read a better preserved version of the Sermon on the Mount from Jerusalem, called here the Sermon at Bountiful. But this explanation of doctrine is given by Christ first. The foundation of doctrine of the oneness of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, the conferral of power to baptize, and manner of baptism come before the great Sermon. First we receive the instruction to avoid disputes. These disputes lead to contention that lays the foundation for anger between men. This doctrine is so foundational that Christ covers it before any other teaching. Therefore, you should realize its importance.

We will be captured by hell if we do not understand and follow these teachings. Though they are Christ's very first instructions, we almost never discuss them. You may want to re-read these verses again, and realize their fundamental importance.

Christ is saying it is "evil" to do more or less with His doctrine. It surely is, for ignoring, altering, omitting or enlarging leads to evil.

OCTOBER 2010

OCTOBER 1, 2010

3 Nephi 11:41

"Therefore, go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth."

This is the charge given by Christ to the twelve whom He had called and given power to baptize. It was overheard by those who had been witnessing these events. But the charge is to the twelve.

The obligation to declare the doctrine of Christ, preach repentance, baptize with authority and make known the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is imposed upon the twelve. This burden, therefore, rests on them and is theirs to bear off "unto this people." They are to warn everybody of these obligations. Not just those who were there.

The extent of the duty runs "unto the ends of the earth." From where they were at the time Christ was preaching, to the entire

North and South American continents and all those who may be living there at the time were the assigned mission field to whom the doctrine of Christ was to be declared.

The break between this portion of Christ's teachings and what would follow is interesting to consider. The remainder of His teachings will form the primary message foundational to Christianity. It is the new, higher law which replaces the earlier Law of Moses. Yet this portion, declared by Christ as His "doctrine" is the part to be taken first and declared everywhere. Why?

A fair conclusion to reach is that before you consider the new, higher law you must first:

- Repent
- Be Baptized
- Receive the Holy Ghost
- Have a correct understanding of God the Father, God the Son, and the Holy Ghost

These things precede His replacement of the older, lower law with His new, higher law. It is reasonable to conclude you will not comprehend His follow-on teachings if you have not first repented, been baptized, received the Holy Ghost, and understand the Godhead. Or, even more to the point: You will never be able to LIVE His new, higher law unless these steps are taken first. Until then you may aspire, but you will not be able to live them. They address the heart, rather than just conduct. They go to the deepest convictions inside you, what motivates you, and the reasons for your conduct. Your conduct will follow these precepts when you have been changed. For the required change, the tools discussed first must be acquired.

He will return to the themes of this opening statement, declaring nothing more or less than what He has taught should be given as His (See 3 Nephi 18:12–13).

So we turn from this introductory, first statement of His doctrine to His great foundational Sermon at Bountiful in which the higher law is first given in one, complete statement of what we are to become. It is not merely direction to us. It is also a revelation of what kind of person Christ was. He explains it Himself...

CHAPTER 11

3 Nephi 12

OCTOBER 1, 2010

3 Nephi 12:1

And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words unto Nephi, and to those who had been called, (now the number of them who had been called, and received power and authority to baptize, was twelve) and behold, he stretched forth his hand unto the multitude, and cried unto them, saying: Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto the words of these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you, and to be your servants; and unto them I have given power that they may baptize you with water; and after that ye are baptized with water, behold, I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost; therefore blessed are ye if ye shall believe in me and be baptized, after that ye have seen me and know that I am.

Nephi and the other twelve heard and recorded the words we've been reviewing in Chapter 11. But here Christ makes certain all others who were present also knew the same doctrine. Notice the following:

“He stretched forth His hand.” What does that mean? Why is it noted in the record? Why would the fact that He stretched forth His hand be significant enough to etch into metal plates?

Why does it say Christ “cried unto them?” How loud would He need to make His voice before it would be considered “crying” out to the audience? This suggests that what was covered in Chapter 11 was not loud enough for all those present to hear. But what follows He wants everyone to hear.

The Sermon at Bountiful begins with a new beatitude. “Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto the words of these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you.” A commenter recently suggested this means that any person ever called to any council of twelve is entitled to the same kind of status. Is that correct? Does membership in a group entitle someone to respect? Would receiving power directly from Christ entitle a person to respect? What if someone were to receive power from Christ, but not be included in some presiding group? For example, John the Baptist received power from an angel to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews at eight days old. He was never among a presiding group (D&C 84:28). Paul was given power directly from heaven, calling himself “born out of due time” because he became a witness after Christ’s resurrection and was not among the leadership when first visited (1 Cor. 15:8–10). Which does this apply to: those called to preside, or those called directly by the Lord (as the scriptures testify is sometimes the case)? Or does it only apply to the twelve disciples the Lord was referring to standing before the crowd on that day? Is limiting it to that narrow an application appropriate? Is expanding it to include anyone ever called to preside too broad an application? How are you to decide that question?

Is it appropriate for Christ to couple “minister to you” with “and to be your servants?” Can a “servant” exercise authority over you as the gentiles do? (Luke 22:25–26). Why not?

When Christ says these people have “power to baptize you” and then promises that He, Christ, “will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost” does this promise mean that Christ will send the Holy Ghost if you are baptized by one having power from Him? Always? If it hasn’t happened, does that mean the one who baptized you did not have this “power?” Why or why not? What is the relationship between the power to baptize, and the promise of the Holy Ghost? What role does your own repentance have to play? Christ has previously given the order of things, and included repentance first.

What does the statement mean: “blessed are ye if ye shall believe in me and be baptized, after that ye have seen me and know that I am.” How likely would it be for you to “believe in [Christ] after that ye have seen [Him]?” Do you suspect any of those who were present would not believe in Him? Why?

Would you expect those present to believe in Him after seeing Him descend from heaven, hear the voice of the Father testify of Him, see His wounds, witness Him healing all their sick, and beholding angels minister in tongues of fire to their young children? Would you be able to do so? What about reading the record of the events in the Book of Mormon; is that enough to testify of Him? Can you ask in prayer if these things about Christ are true and get a testimony of them for yourself? Have you done so? Have you acquired belief in Him as a result of praying to know if they are true? Can you then believe in Him? Are you “blessed” for it? Do you “know that He is?” What more do you need to do in order to “know that He is?” Why haven’t you done that yet?

OCTOBER 2, 2010

3 Nephi 12:2

And again, more blessed are they who shall believe in your words because that ye shall testify that ye have seen me, and that ye know that I am. Yea, blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down into the depths of humility and be baptized, for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins.

Some people are given knowledge (D&C 46:13). This would include the Prophet Joseph Smith. Others believe on their words and trust in Christ through what they have learned from witnesses of Him (D&C 46:14). This would include President Thomas S. Monson, who in last General Conference testified he has no question about the testimonies of those who have seen Him. As President Monson testified:

I have read—and I believe—the testimonies of those who experienced the grief of Christ’s Crucifixion and the joy of His Resurrection. I have read—and I believe—the testimonies of those in the New World who were visited by the same risen Lord. I believe the testimony of one who, in this dispensation, spoke with the Father and the Son in a grove now called sacred and who gave his life, sealing that testimony with his blood. Declared he: ‘And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives! For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father.’ The darkness of death can always be dispelled by the light of revealed truth. ‘I am the resurrection, and the life,’ spoke the Master. ‘Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.’ Over the years I have heard and read testimonies too numerous to count, shared with me by individuals who testify of the reality of the Resurrection and who have received, in their hours of greatest need, the peace and comfort promised by the Savior. ("He is Risen!", Sunday Morning Session, April, 2010 Session; footnotes omitted)

Why would someone be "more blessed" because they "believe in the words" of those who have "seen Christ" than those who have seen Him? What is it about believing on the words of those who have seen which is "more blessed" than the ones who see Him?

Notice once again the connection between having seen the Lord and "ye know that I am." Notice the use of "I am" in the statement of the Lord about Himself.

Now note too how the "believing in the words" is not enough, because He adds action to the belief. That is, those who "believe in your words" are required then to "come down into the depths of humility and be baptized" for the "blessing" to have any effect. It is not enough for someone to be moved to believe when they hear a witness of Christ, they must also respond to His invitation to be baptized. Before being baptized they need also to "come down into the depths of humility." The intention and inner meaning are everything. But the outward act confirms the inner change which takes place.

Action is married to belief and intent. Both are necessary.

When it is done in faith, sincerity, complying with the steps the Lord has prescribed, He promises to visit the obedient "with fire and with the Holy Ghost." This is how a person will know they have received "a remission of their sins."

The instructions of the Lord are intended to change lives. Change is repentance. And repentance leads to redemption. He expects our behavior to mirror our beliefs, because if behavior does not model our professed beliefs then we are hypocrites—not converts.

This is why commandments are given to us. They tell us how we can continue to receive and renew a continuing conversion to Christ’s way of life. Commandments are not a burden to bear but a roadmap to follow. They are not a measuring stick to judge and then abuse others. It is a light for us to follow.

These explanations by Christ are beyond the question of “faith verses works” because Christ is telling us we act from our heart in faith, receive ordinances because of our faith, then have our hearts filled again. We proceed from grace to grace. This is how Christ received the fullness, and the only way we may receive the fullness (D&C 93:12–14, 19–29).

The task of knowing God always begins by trusting on the words of those who have seen Him. But it should never end there. Everyone is invited to lay aside their sins, call upon God in faith, obey His commandments, listen to the voice of inspiration and do as you are told, thereby coming to see Him face-to-face (D&C 93:1). This is the reason for the book The Second Comforter. It is a manual for how any person can come back into the presence of the Lord and join those witnesses who can testify they have seen Him.

He lives. And He is the same, yesterday, today and forever.

OCTOBER 3, 2010

3 Nephi 12:3

“Yea, blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.”

The blessing referred to for those who are “poor in spirit” comes as a result of “coming unto” Christ. Any who come to Christ will receive “the kingdom of heaven.” However, to obtain it, you must “come unto [Christ].”

Christ is approachable. But the approach is determined by the Gospel. The earlier “doctrine of Christ” taught in Chapter II tells you how to “come unto Christ.”

Belief on His teachings, then repentance and baptism are all essential prerequisites to coming to Him.

What does it mean to be “poor in spirit?” Does that make you more open to Him? Have you ever had a season in which you felt “poor in spirit?” Were you more open to Him as a result?

Before I converted, though I did not consider myself a candidate to convert, I also felt a hollowness in life. There was something missing. The void inside us was meant to be there. Filling it was always the responsibility of the Gospel. We were all meant to feel “poor in spirit” until we find truth. Then, upon finding truth, we were meant to “come unto Christ” so the void may be filled. Coming to Christ is the return to life and light. It is the journey back to that light from where we originated.

Converting was more of a homecoming than anything else. The Gospel rings true and His sheep hear His voice (John 10:27) because these are things we long ago accepted and decided to follow (Abr. 3:26–27). Each of us needs to be converted. Even if you were raised in the church, you still need to convert. The steps Christ is outlining are the ones each of us are expected to follow. Whether you do so as an adult, or did so earlier in life, we are all required to “come unto Christ” and be converted.

We are not meant to remain “poor in spirit” but to “come to Christ” and move beyond that. Moving beyond it we find ourselves joyfully informed that “ours is the kingdom of heaven.” We cannot claim it for ourselves. But Christ can claim it for us. This is how our poverty of spirit is to be cured. The Lord juxtaposes poverty with the riches of heaven itself. The contrast is designed to make us think, and to make us grateful. We were always intended to have joy. Above all else, Christ is a Deliverer from sorrow (Rev. 7:17).

OCTOBER 3, 2010

An Aside About Alma

In response to a question about re-baptism and power to perform the ordinance, I would add the following:

Alma was one of the priests of King Noah. In hindsight he knew what he did among them was wicked (Mosiah 23:9). It was in the position as a priest in King Noah’s court that Alma received his priesthood authority (Mosiah 11:5). Unlike his peers, Alma was converted by the message of Abinadi, and was moved to repentance (Mosiah 17:1–2). When he repented, he received from God authority to proceed in using his priesthood (Mosiah 18:18). The moment Alma’s authority was conferred came after he repented, preached righteousness, asked if others were willing to receive baptism, and proceeded to perform the ordinance. It was at that moment Alma received power through the Spirit (Mosiah 18:10–14).

This pattern is in scripture for a reason. It is intended to be a guide for us as we ask questions such as: Although the priesthood has been conferred upon me, what must I do to obtain power? (D&C 121:36–37). It is almost always the case that the priesthood is merely «conferred,» and there is no power within it. Through repentance, the powers of heaven are accessed and the priesthood’s power becomes real. Alma is a prime example of this transition from powerless and error-filled pride into repentance and possession of the Spirit of God.

OCTOBER 4, 2010

3 Nephi 12:4

“And again, blessed are all they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.”

This is unconditional. “All” are included. “All they that mourn” will be blessed.

Between sessions of conference Saturday I attended a friend’s funeral. Mourning because of death is the first cause we associate with this promise. Over death, however, He has gained the victory. It was His mission and ministry to bring about victory over death. “And he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death” (Alma 7:12). This done now, though death continues to claim all of us. We know we will have part in His victory. Comfort from that victory will come to us all.

Death is not the only cause of mourning, however. We all experience afflictions, troubles, temptations, and pains while mortal. He has gained the victory over all of these also:

And he shall go forth, suffering pains and afflictions and temptations of every kind; and this that the word might be fulfilled which saith he will take upon him the pains and the sicknesses of his people. And he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy, according to the flesh, that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities. Now the Spirit knoweth all things; nevertheless the Son of God suffereth according to the flesh that he might take upon him the sins of his people, that he might blot out their transgressions according to the power of his deliverance; and now behold, this is the testimony which is in me.

(Alma 7:11–13)

Do you mourn because of afflictions? Temptations? Pains? Sickness? Infirmities? The troubles of the flesh? Sins and transgressions? It does not matter the cause of your mourning, Christ has suffered all these things so that He may understand the troubles of the flesh and, by understanding them to overcome them all. By overcoming them all, He then in turn can share the victory.

Your failures are not going to be reason to punish you. If you repent, they will be lessons from which to learn. The guilt will be removed, you will be comforted, and the lessons will remain. Your mortal trials will confer upon you the taste of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil (Gen. 3:17–19). You will have learned from what you suffer the difference between the two, and have the benefit of Christ’s atonement to remove all guilt (2 Nephi 2:26).

All will be comforted from every offense they have ever suffered. All that remains will be the choices you have made (Moroni 7:16–17). The offenses you suffered at the hands of others will be made up to you. All infirmities you have been plagued with while mortal will be removed (Alma 40:23). Only your choices will remain as either a continuing blessing or continuing affliction. But that is your choice (Alma 41:13–14; Moroni 7:18–19).

Earth’s valuable lessons will remain with you, and inform you eternally with knowledge of good and evil. In this you will have become like God (Gen. 3:22). But the experiences you suffer, which are the means of learning good from evil, will all be removed. You will no longer “mourn” for anything. You will, however, remain accountable for your choices.

This is the perfectly balanced experience. Through it we learn and gain experience (Abr. 3:25–26), but we are only burdened by what we voluntarily impose upon ourselves through our choices (1 Nephi 15:32–33). The promised “comfort” against our mourning will be complete if we have chosen to follow Christ, and incomplete if we have chosen to reject Him. Because He can only remove all the burdens of nature and mortality imposed as a condition of life here, He cannot remove those voluntarily assumed by wrong choice while living here (Mosiah 16:8–13).

The balance between necessary experience and accountability is maintained. Through Christ are all things made possible.

OCTOBER 4, 2010

3 Nephi 12:5

“And blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.”

This earth abides by a Celestial Law (D&C 88:25). Therefore, it is destined to become a Celestial Kingdom because it will be sanctified by a Celestial Law (D&C 88:25–29). The destiny of the earth is glory (D&C 84:101). Therefore, to “inherit the earth” is to inherit a Celestial Glory.

Since this is so, you need to understand the definition of “meekness.” Elder Hales made these remarks about “meekness” in General Conference: “To be meek, as defined in Webster’s dictionary, is ‘manifesting patience and longsuffering: enduring injury without resentment.’ Meekness is not weakness. It is a badge of Christian courage.” (“Christian Courage: The Price of Discipleship”, October 2008 General Conference, Elder Robert D. Hales).

I’ve given another explanation in Beloved Enos. There I explained it is necessary to be meek first before being trusted with great power. The power to seal on earth and in heaven is something which cannot be handled apart from meekness. Without meekness a man cannot be trusted with such a power. When Enos used the power, he did so meekly. He asked rather than pronounced. He petitioned rather than decreed. Though the Lord would hearken to his words, he refrained from acting.

This is because the proper way to use such authority is only and strictly in conformity with the Lord's will. The reason Nephi received the authority was because he was meek. The account of the conferral is also the account of his qualification:

Blessed art thou, Nephi, for those things which thou hast done; for I have beheld how thou hast with unweariness declared the word, which I have given unto thee, unto this people. And thou hast not feared them, and hast not sought thine own life, but hast sought my will, and to keep my commandments. And now, because thou hast done this with such unweariness, behold, I will bless thee forever; and I will make thee mighty in word and in deed, in faith and in works; yea, even that all things shall be done unto thee according to thy word, for thou shalt not ask that which is contrary to my will. Behold, thou art Nephi, and I am God. Behold, I declare it unto thee in the presence of mine angels, that ye shall have power over this people, and shall smite the earth with famine, and with pestilence, and destruction, according to the wickedness of this people. Behold, I give unto you power, that whatsoever ye shall seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and thus shall ye have power among this people. And thus, if ye shall say unto this temple it shall be rent in twain, it shall be done. And if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou cast down and become smooth, it shall be done. And behold, if ye shall say that God shall smite this people, it shall come to pass. And now behold, I command you, that ye shall go and declare unto this people, that thus saith the Lord God, who is the Almighty: Except ye repent ye shall be smitten, even unto destruction. (Helaman 10:4–11)

This is meekness. First, Nephi had conducted his life meekly. He did not fear others. He was not afraid to lose his standing, even his life. He kept God's commandments to him above all else. He possessed an iron will, his face like flint, unwilling to waiver from what the Lord would have him say and do. He could not be tempted to betray the Lord's will. Therefore, the Lord knew by the way Nephi lived his life that he would "not ask that which is contrary to [the Lord's] will." Never.

Therefore, when the Lord had tried him and determined he was willing to serve Him at all costs, he qualifies to receive trust from God. That trust allows the Lord to confer upon the man great power (See also TPJS p. 150:

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, is baptized for the remission of his sins, and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), which is the first Comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness and living by every word of God. The Lord will soon say unto him, 'Son, thou shalt be exalted.' When the Lord has thoroughly proved him and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and election made sure).

Meekness is required to qualify for great power. And you know a man is meek when, having great power, he uses it strictly in conformity with the Lord's will; never varying from the Lord's command, and never pursuing his own agenda. This kind of meekness in men is a rare thing. Nephi, after receiving that power, was instructed that he was to deliver the Lord's message: "thus saith the Lord God, who is Almighty: Except ye repent ye shall be smitten, even unto destruction." It is the Lord's judgment. It is a meek man who delivers it. But such judgments only come after the Lord has a meek soul upon whom He can place this trust. For He has covenanted to always first employ such a servant before imposing judgments upon mankind (Amos 3:7).

Therefore, when the Lord teaches the "meek shall inherit the earth" it is a statement which includes exaltation for the meek. It is one of the Lord's deepest teachings, and most profound descriptions of those who will be exalted and why.

OCTOBER 5, 2010

3 Nephi 12:6

"And blessed are all they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost."

This is not about hunger or poverty. This is about fasting and seeking after righteousness.

You qualify for this blessing by hungering "after righteousness." You qualify by thirsting "after righteousness." In other words, you receive the Holy Ghost in proportion to the hunger and thirst you display to receiving it.

Fasting is a promised means for increasing the Holy Ghost in your life. We read this about Alma when he served as High Priest over the church:

And this is not all. Do ye not suppose that I know of these things myself? Behold, I testify unto you that I do know that these things whereof I have spoken are true. And how do ye suppose that I know of their surety? Behold, I say unto you they are made known unto me by the Holy Spirit of God. Behold, I have fasted and prayed many days that I might know these things of myself. And now I do know of myself that they are true; for the Lord God hath made them manifest unto me by his Holy Spirit; and this is the spirit of revelation which is in me. And moreover, I say unto you that it has thus been revealed unto me, that the words which have been spoken by our fathers are true, even so according to the spirit of prophecy which is in me, which is also by the manifestation of the Spirit of God. (Alma 5:45-47)

Fasting and praying opens the Spirit. It allows you to know a matter through the power of the Holy Ghost. Again, we read this about the Sons of Mosiah who were completing their service as missionaries:

...Alma did rejoice exceedingly to see his brethren; and what added more to his joy, they were still his brethren in the Lord; yea, and they had waxed strong in the knowledge of the truth; for they were men of a sound understanding and they had searched the scriptures diligently, that they might know the word of God. But this is not all; they had given themselves to much prayer, and fasting; therefore they had the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and when they taught, they taught with power and authority of God. (Alma 17:2-3)

They not only searched the scriptures, but they also spent time praying and fasting, that they might show God their earnest commitment to know the truth. The result was the “spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation.” Or, in other words, they were filled with the Holy Ghost.

The Lord speaks in simple formulas. They work; when tried in sincerity, acting no hypocrisy, with real intent, they work. Half-hearted efforts are not so effective. But when a soul, any soul, hungers and thirsts after righteousness, they are filled with the Holy Ghost.

This sometimes presents a problem for those who have medical conditions which prevent them from fasting. In The Second Comforter, I've suggested there are other ways to subordinate the desires of the flesh as a way to "hunger and thirst" while keeping medical needs satisfied. Reducing calories, or doing without some other thing as a form of "fasting" can be substituted. The decision would be between you and the Lord, but there are always ways provided for meeting what the Lord asks, including fasting by those who are medically unable (1 Nephi 3:7).

This sermon is a blue-print of the Lord's new charter for mankind. It is the new, higher way of living. It is intended to result in a new spiritual life for those willing to live it. Therefore you should not dismiss "hunger and thirst for righteousness" as something trivial. If you are among those who does not believe the Lord speaks with them, take these invitations from the Lord seriously. They are designed to reconnect you with God. They have the power to accomplish it.

Also, in the case of the Sons of Mosiah, there was actual "power" which came through this means. These missionaries could teach "with power and authority of God" because of their fasting, prayer and study of scripture.

OCTOBER 5, 2010

3 Nephi 12:7

“And blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.”

The standard applied to us is the standard we apply to others. This is repeatedly set out in scripture:

Alma teaching his son Corianton recorded:

Therefore, my son, see that you are merciful unto your brethren; deal justly, judge righteously, and do good continually; and if ye do all these things then shall ye receive your reward; yea, ye shall have mercy restored unto you again; ye shall have justice restored unto you again; ye shall have a righteous judgment restored unto you again; and ye shall have good rewarded unto you again. For that which ye do send out shall return unto you again, and be restored; therefore, the word restoration more fully condemneth the sinner, and justifieth him not at all. (Alma 41:14–15)

Moroni’s final discussion about the Gospel included these words:

And now, my brethren, seeing that ye know the light by which ye may judge, which light is the light of Christ, see that ye do not judge wrongfully; for with that same judgment which ye judge ye shall also be judged. (Moroni 7:18)

Peter asked a practical question about the extent of forgiving others. He wanted a mathematical limit to be set. The Lord, however, raised the limit beyond an ability to reasonably count: “Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven” (Matt. 18:21–22).

There are others. I'd commend the chapter on the Atonement in Come, Let Us Adore Him for a more complete explanation of this doctrine.

If you want mercy from the Lord, you must give it to your fellow man. If you do not show mercy to your fellow man, the Lord cannot provide it to you. There is a law which binds the Lord to the same standard you set for yourself. It is an irrevocable law. Therefore, the Lord teaches us to show mercy so that we might merit mercy. We are the final beneficiaries of all the mercy we show to others.

It really is true that "what you send out shall return unto you again," to quote Alma. This is called "karma" in another faith. It is a true principle. Perhaps it operates within an larger time frame than just this life, but it operates, nonetheless. Alma knew the truth and was teaching it to his son.

It was Laban's judgment of Nephi and his brothers that got him killed. I've discussed this in The Second Comforter. It was his decision that a robber was worthy of death (1 Nephi 3:13) which sealed his fate. For when he became a robber (1 Nephi 3:25), then the Lord was free to show him the same judgment he had rendered (1 Nephi 4:11). Sometimes what you send out returns to you again in this life.

OCTOBER 6, 2010

3 Nephi 12:8

"And blessed are all the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

This is a remarkable promise. Would you like to see God? Then first purify your heart.

Notice this is not just ritual purity, which had been the focus of the Law of Moses. Christ is replacing earlier ritual based purity with internal purity.

He speaks about the heart, rather than the hands and feet. Christ is speaking about beholding God, unlike the retreat Israel took from the offered opportunity at Sinai (See D&C 84:22–25). He is returning to the time of Moses, when a higher way might have been chosen.

Purity of the heart is a borrowed benefit from the Savior. Man cannot become clean before God without the necessary offering of a sacrifice. The Law of Moses taught this, but Christ would actually bring it to pass (See, e.g., Alma 34:36).

Christ's atonement cleanses us (Alma 13:11; Ether 13:10).

When we repent we turn to Christ and listen to and follow Him. Until then, we are not even facing the right direction in life.

Some reminders of how the heart may be purified:

- Let virtue constantly prevail in your thoughts (D&C 121:45).
- Pray to the Father with a devoted heart (Moroni 7:48).
- Repent and call upon God with a contrite spirit, asking the atonement to be applied to your sins (Mosiah 4:2).
- Fast and pray often, that you may become humble (Helaman 3:35).
- Follow what light you have to receive more light, until you have the “perfect day” in which you are a vessel of light (D&C 50:24; D&C 93:28).

It is also interesting that what must be “pure” is the “heart.” There are so many other things one might measure. But what the Lord looks upon to determine purity is the “heart.”

I've said that there is almost nothing about us that can become perfect in this life. The only thing that can approach perfection, however, is our intent. We can mean to follow God at all times. Even if the dilemmas of life make it impossible to actually do so, we can still intend to follow Him. We may not even know if what we are doing pleases Him, or how to resolve conflicting interests or commandments. We may even be making a mistake, but if our intent is right, our hearts may be pure.

This is also one of the reasons we cannot judge another. They may be weak, foolish and error prone, but if they intend to be doing the right then God alone can measure their heart and decide whether they are approved. It would take a God to know if the person's life, training, understanding and intent are pure before Him. I suspect there are those we look upon as deluded and even evil but the Lord views them with compassion and understanding. He may find their hearts to be perfect even before the heart of the proud who claim they have and follow the truth. Though a person may misunderstand a great deal, still if they have love for their fellow man, relieve suffering where they can, give patience to the foolish and water to the thirsty, they may be perfect before God (Luke 18:9-14).

There are so many illusions here. Some who are regarded as high and lifted up by God, temperate in their conduct, studying how they are seen by others before acting; are in fact wretched, miserable, poor and naked (Rev. 3:14-17). I say with authority that there are some regarded as the very chiefest of the righteous among the Latter-day Saints who are before God wretched, miserable, poor and naked. They cannot survive even a glance from His all seeing eye. Yet they pretend they share in His vision, when they do not.

How few hearts are pure before God. How rare a thing it is to contemplate such a person. How few we produce in this restoration of the Gospel. We remain as a people too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending to be called of God. No wonder we stumble and fall backward and many are taken in snares (Isa. 8:11–17).

OCTOBER 6, 2010

3 Nephi 12:9

“And blessed are all the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.”

More often than not those who are “peacemakers” will be abused. They will at least have to endure aggression and give a soft word in return (Prov. 15:1). There will be no end to the peace which comes from Christ because there was no end to the suffering He was willing to endure (Isa. 9:7).

When we hearken to the Lord’s commandments we have peace like a river flowing (Isa. 48:18). This is because the Lord will fight for you, and you can hold your peace (Exo. 14:14). The Lord will fight Zion’s battles (D&C 105:14).

When a man is right before God, even his enemies are at peace with him (Prov. 16:7). At least until his time comes and his mission is completed (D&C 122:9; John 19:10–11).

When the Lord was taken with violence and crucified, He was at peace (Luke 23:24). He purchased peace through what He suffered. He alone can share that with all (Isa. 53:5).

Through Him, the “peacemakers” have found this peace. This is why they have become His “children” for He has begotten them (Mosiah 27:25).

In a world of violence and abuse, it is peace we seek. But that peace comes only to the children of God and only because they know they are the children of God. At their rebirth, they are at rest from the cares of this dreary world, and informed by a better promise of things to come (See Alma 13:29, and our earlier discussion about that verse; see Moroni 7:3).

Those who bring peace bring hope to this world. This world is filled with tribulation, but the Lord has overcome this world (John 16:33). Many have experienced this peace, become children of God, and then been persecuted, hated, reviled and killed (Hebrews 11:33–35).

Peace is a gift from Christ, and His peace is for this world and for the world to come (John 14:27). But the promise of triumph is hereafter, when the world can no longer make any claim upon a child of God (D&C 122:4 and 135:6–7).

Though a man may declare peace, the world will not be at peace until the Lord slays the wicked (Rev. 19:11–16). Peace, as all other sacred things in our day, must be internal. We live in a day of overwhelming ignorance, foolishness and wickedness. It is not possible to obtain peace except on the terms which allow it. If you live those, you will have peace. But the world will not live them with you.

Patrick Henry put the problem of peace in this world into immortal words:

Gentlemen may cry, Peace, Peace—but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!

The war remains today, but now it is against all righteousness. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against spiritual wickedness in high places (Eph. 6:12). Elder Packer cannot even preach a sermon to a congregation of Saints belonging to a church over which he holds office without the anger and vilification of the homosexual community and others being aroused.

If you are to find peace, and to become a peacemaker here, then it is through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The world will not know peace again until He returns. To be a child of God and know peace is, in our day, to cry repentance and to bring others to Christ.

OCTOBER 7, 2010

3 Nephi 12:10

“And blessed are all they who are persecuted for my name’s sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.”

It is not just persecution, but persecution “for [His] name’s sake” that makes you blessed. When you are doing what you should for His name’s sake, you are likely to provoke persecution. He will later explain this is almost inevitable. It won’t be because you are provoking it by your obnoxious behavior. It is because people will question your sincerity and commitment. The world expects hypocrites. They regard everyone with suspicion. And, let’s face it, most charlatans adopt religion as one of their cloaks. We’ll get to that a little further into this sermon from the Lord.

The kind of persecution which produces the “kingdom of heaven” is, of course, martyrdom. Originally the word “martyr” meant witness, but so many of the early Christian witnesses were killed that it came to have the modern meaning, that is one who dies for their faith.

Martyrs were seen in John's vision below the altar of God (Rev. 6:9). This of course means they were holy because of their sacrifice. The heavenly altar being a symbol of them having shed their blood as witnesses. Joseph Smith and Hyrum joined those who qualified for such a witness (D&C 135:7).

Zenos, author of the Olive Tree allegory (Jacob 5:1), prophet of the three days of darkness upon the isles of the sea (1 Ne. 19:10), witness of the Lord's burial in a sepulcher (1 Ne. 19:10) seven centuries before His birth, was slain for his testimony (Helaman 8:19).

Stephen was killed for his testimony but clearly inherited the kingdom of heaven (Acts 7:55-59).

There are many others, including Able, Isaiah, Peter, Paul and Abinadi.

Blessed are those who are willing to endure persecution for His name's sake. For they are those who are willing develop faith which cannot be obtained in any other way. It is through the sacrifice of all things that faith necessary for salvation is developed. Read again the post on Lecture 6 of The Lectures on Faith on April 21, 2010.

Beginning with faith to follow Him, then enduring persecution as a result, to offering the sacrifice necessary to develop faith, then inheriting the kingdom of heaven, the Gospel of Christ is one great whole.

Sometimes we bring persecution upon ourselves because we are unwise. The Lord will address that. We are to take offenses, but not give them. When we unwisely give offenses and cause persecution, that is not for His name's sake. There is a balance between wisdom and righteousness.

As an aside on the subject of persecution I wanted to add this:

I've thought about Elder Packer's talk and the homosexual community's reaction to it. Elder Packer was right, and he was addressing a community of believers who look to him for teachings like the ones given in that talk. Nobody ought to take offense at that. If you can prevent Elder Packer's teaching in that setting, then you can invade and stop talk in any setting on any subject.

However, nothing in that talk would encourage or justify invading the privacy and causing the shame visited upon the Rutgers University student who committed suicide. The invasion of his privacy was cruel, the act of publicizing it was a calculated act of terrible insult. His grief, despair and subsequent suicide are the fault of those who invaded his privacy and exposed his weakness. It was wrong. Elder Packer's talk was to benefit a community of believers, not to persecute an audience of unbelievers.

I have friends I ride Harley's with who have absolutely no interest in Mormonism. One of my dear friends hates my church, thinks it barbaric and unenlightened. But that does not stop our mutual friendship nor define the areas about which we find common ground. Another person's differing views are only offensive when they demand I accede to them. If they will suspend judgment against me because of my faith, I am willing to suspend judgment against them because of theirs. This ought to define the boundaries of conduct, not militant demands for conceding the argument on questions of faith and belief. I can believe that my friend's lifestyle is corrupt and even immoral. But so long as he does not expect me to join him, I am pleased to be a friend, share what we have in common, and leave our differences for polite disagreement.

There are some sins I simply do not understand. But if my friendship may help someone to understand my faith, then I would sooner be friends with someone of another faith than one of my own. I do not expect many people to accept what I believe. In fact, I think there are very few fellow Latter-day Saints who believe or understand the Gospel as I do. If I were to limit my friends to those with whom I have everything in common, then my wife and children alone would be my friends.

Elder Packer should have the right to speak and preach the truth as he understands it. Those who would censor him are wrong.

If he is mistaken, then point out his error in a kindly way and seek to reclaim him. But condemning, protesting and attacking only shows intolerance and coercion which all of us have a responsibility to resist and condemn. It is wrong when the homosexual community does it, and it is wrong when the church does it. Win the argument with persuasion and strong reasoning. Yelling, condemning and protesting only attempts to silence thought, not to provoke it into correct understanding.

Now I'm off topic...

OCTOBER 7, 2010

3 Nephi 12:11–12

And blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake; For ye shall have great joy and be exceedingly glad, for great shall be your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets who were before you.

If your actions are misjudged, that is only normal. There have been charlatans using religion to cloak their evil deeds from the beginning of time. They are so widespread, so often exposed for what they really are, that humanity has a legitimate skepticism about those who come in the name of the Lord.

From Jimmy Swaggart's prostitutes to Ted Haggard's homosexual encounters, the evangelical world has been rocked by the sexual misconduct of ministers. Catholic priesthood sexual abuse has been so widespread that there is a whole legal industry devoted to bringing and defending claims from victims of that abuse. The LDS Church has quietly settled a number of claims on both coasts and adjusted how membership records are documented and what precautions are taken when calling a man to teach in Primary because of sexual misconduct and associated legal claims.

The Burt Lancaster film Elmer Gantry was based on the Sinclair Lewis novel and illustrated the life and deeds of a false prophet. Indeed, the term “prophet” is rarely used in modern vernacular outside of LDS circles unless coupled with the term “false.” “False prophet” is expected. What is unexpected is the contrary.

So when first reactions are taken, it will always be to sneer, to jeer, to mock and to suspect those who come in the name of the Lord. They are right to do that. Everyone OUGHT to question motives. Everyone OUGHT to think you’re a fraud. They should expect you are like all those others in whom society trusted. No one wants to follow Jim Jones to their death, drinking strychnine laced Kool-Aid in another mass-suicide. That has happened too often already. Indeed, the fruits of such false prophets have been so devastating, so evil, so wrong in spirit and result that only a fool would be eager to trust you even should you have a pure heart and a true message.

The first reaction should be skepticism which will result in an attempt to measure your sincerity. Until you’ve been tested by the world, there is no reason for the world to believe anything you have to say. They will revile you, thinking you just another fraud. They will persecute you as if a charlatan, though you are His disciple. They will say all manner of evil against you falsely, all the while thinking they are only giving you what you deserve.

This is how the world decides if you are following Him. They have seen and heard no end of those who have claimed to follow Him, and you are no different in their eyes. That is, until you have actually followed Him; borne their criticism, returned good for evil, and shown how devoted you are in fact, as Christ will address in coming verses. When you have proven your devotion, then some few will soften their hearts. Others will remain unwilling to admit the truth, even when it is apparent you are His.

This is the way in which Christ lived His life. These teachings are an explanation of Him. And, in turn, it is also an explanation of the lives of any who follow Him. To follow Him, and to learn of His ways always requires experiencing some of what He experienced. While He assumed a full measure of these teachings, we are required to experience some of what He did only to allow us to understand Him. But these teachings are meant to be lived. They are meant to be applied and tested. If you test them, you will discover Him through them.

You will also come to know and understand the prophets who went before. This is a timeless brotherhood. Some of them invariably also come to succor their fellow Saint. This is always the same when the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is lived on the earth.

OCTOBER 8, 2010

3 Nephi 12:13

Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt shall lose its savor wherewith shall the earth be salted? The salt shall be thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men.

Salt is a preservative, but in this case it is for the culinary benefit. It produces “savor.” That is, the taste of the whole is affected by the presence of a little.

You don’t need much to preserve the whole. Abraham’s negotiation to preserve Sodom demonstrated that only a little of the “salt” is required for an entire population to receive the Lord’s blessings (Genesis 18:17–33). Progress is enough in our day (Luke 13:30). As long as the wheat is still growing, it is enough.

How can salt “lose its savor” except through contamination or impurities? When that is lost, the salt cannot preserve. There is no remaining savor. Then the salt is nothing more than common dirt, to be cast aside and trodden under foot.

This is the gentile predicament in the last days. They will, of course, lose their savor. They will reject the fullness offered to them (3 Nephi 16:10). When they do, they will be torn apart and trodden under foot (3 Nephi 20:16; 3 Nephi 21:12).

Notice it is the Lord who “gives unto you to be the salt of the earth.” This condition is a gift from God. Through repentance, or turning to Him, you can receive this. Without repentance you cannot become the salt.

There are no private lives. Every life counts. Your private devotions are more important than your public notice. The salt which preserves may be unknown, likely is unknown, to most people. But if you are the salt, then your private life of devotion to the Lord is saving the lives of many others. The angels want to begin the harvest. They are impatient to begin reaping and cutting down the wicked now (D&C 86:5). There is only time given because of a few who deserve more time to grow in faith before the harvest begins (D&C 86:6–7). Your growth is all that is keeping the harvest from beginning now. Therefore, how you proceed has consequences far beyond your own life.

When wheat is ripe it will be protected. When tares are ripe they will be burned. But the tender plants worthy of preservation are the only ones allowed more time (D&C 86:4). I advocate for them and realize how tenuous a position humanity itself is in at present. But you are the ones in the balance and for whom time is granted. How much longer no one knows, but your sins are not private. Your repentance is critical to all of creation. Do not think your life is your own. All of us have a share in your good works.

Do not think the Savior's words are without cosmic significance. I define "cosmic" to include the cosmos or organized creation here. Even the earth itself longs to be freed from the burden of sin upon her face (Moses 7:48). It is the Lord alone who has granted you time to repent. This current state of the creation we live is affected by the promise held in those who are repenting. As soon as that hope ends, and no further repentance is to occur, then the harvest will begin. Therefore, becoming salt has never been so important as it now is.

OCTOBER 8, 2010

3 Nephi 12:14–16

Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of this people. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light to all that are in the house; Therefore let your light so shine before this people, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven.

Here, again, is a reference to Zion. Zion will be that city upon a hill which cannot be hidden. It will tower over the landscape, elevated both physically and spiritually. It will be the mountain of the Lord in the top of the mountains (Isa. 2:2–3). He will dwell there (2 Nephi 14:5; D&C 76:66; 84:2). I’ve already addressed this and won’t repeat it again here.

What is the “light” which you are to be to “this people?” Who are “this people?” What is to be a “light of this people?”

If you have light, how is it to be shared? Within The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints the obligation to preach, teach, exhort and expound is imposed upon everyone having the office of Priest and above (D&C 20:46). Members of both sexes were commanded in 1832 to teach one another the doctrines of the Gospel (D&C 88:77). If you have light and refuse to share it with others, are you putting a candle under a bushel?

How do you let the light you have shine through “good works?” That is how it is supposed to be shown. Christ’s teaching explains that people are to see your “good works” as the means for your light to shine. How would that be accomplished?

Most interesting of all is that upon seeing your good works, the glory is to be given “your Father who is in heaven.” How would your works reflect on Him rather than on yourself? What would you need to do in order for those benefited by your efforts to turn their thanks to God, rather than to you?

If you were interested in your good works reflecting credit to “your Father who is in heaven” how many monuments would you want built to your memory? How many buildings would you want named after you? How many statutes would you want carved of your likeness and put on display for men to admire?

The light should point to the Lord, who can save. It is nevertheless the case that some have become subjects of adoration or veneration despite their inability to save anyone. Those who are distracted from following the Lord become Telesstial and continue to suffer the deaths of false religion (D&C 76:99–101). These are no better than the liars, adulterers and whoremongers (D&C 76:103–104). They became these vessels of God's wrath because they worshiped men, rather than God. If, therefore, prophets such as Moses, Elias, John, Peter and Enoch have such followers despite preaching that salvation is in Christ alone, then how much worse is it for a man to intentionally cultivate adoration for himself? How much worse is it to deliberately invite this error?

What steps should you take to make certain there are no thunderous celebrations broadcast on television on your birthdays? How quick would you be to reaffirm you are nothing and no-one, and salvation is through Christ and not a man? How clear would you be about your own weakness, foolishness and inability to save another? How often would you point to the Lord who alone can save?

It is not enough to be religious. Hell will be filled with the religious. It is not enough to proclaim you have light if you do not live according to its principles. The sermon we are looking at now is the Lord's careful formulation of the principles which will save. He delivered it often during His mortal ministry. When He was resurrected and ministered to lost sheep, including the Nephites, He delivered the same address to them all.

Above all other sources of information about the path back to God, this is the greatest message of all. Within it are the very steps that are required for life and salvation, spoken by the author of salvation.

OCTOBER 9, 2010

3 Nephi 12:17–18

Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil; For verily I say unto you, one jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled.

The Lord sends ministers with a commission to transition from one dispensation of the Gospel to another. From Adam until Enoch there was an order, but with Enoch that order changed. Wickedness and rebellion required a new approach, and Enoch was commissioned to bring it about (Moses 6:32–34). Mankind was in such a state of rebellion that their time was to end. Enoch gathered together people upon a high mountain where he established a city which would survive the destruction by becoming Zion (Moses 7:17–21).

Soon after Enoch was called, the Lord called another, giving him also a dispensation of the Gospel. He, however, was to remain on the earth (Moses 7:42–43; Genesis 6:12–14). With him a new covenant was made (Genesis 9:8–9).

Both Enoch and Noah were contemporaries, but each had been given a dispensation of the Gospel. The covenant with Enoch did not disannul the covenant with Adam. Nor did the covenant with Noah contradict the covenant with Enoch.

Abraham also received a dispensation of the Gospel (Abr. 2:8–12; Moses also: Moses 1:3–4).

Christ also received a dispensation of the Gospel in the same manner as all those who went before (Matt. 4:11; Matt. 17:1–3).

Christ fulfilled all the law. Not merely the Law of Moses, which indeed pointed to Him (Galatians 3:24), but also every part of the Gospel from Adam to Christ's earthly ministry (Jacob 4:4; also 7:11). All have testified of Him and He has completed His ministry in strict conformity with all that was foreshadowed, all that was prophesied, all that was anticipated of Him. Just how completely He did this is not possible to understand with the current state of our scriptures. But He did fulfill all righteousness, complete every assignment, accomplish every task and live in conformity with every prophesy concerning Him.

Not one matter respecting Him was left undone. From His hair to His feet, all that was foreshadowed or prophesied was done by Him. He turned not His face from those who spit at Him (Isa. 50:6; Matt. 26:57). He let Himself be shorn as a sheep and kept silent as it was done (Isa. 53:7).

He inherited Kingship, but deferred His reign to another time (John 18:36).

He fulfilled, but did not destroy. In this He was like those whom He sent before to complete and open anew. In one hinge point of history a dispensation closes and another opens. Enoch and Noah, Abraham and Moses were all commissioned to open and close. For the Lord, however, He divided the spoil. He sent John to close (D&C 84:27–28), leaving it to Himself to open (John 8:12). Mankind cannot measure humility or meekness, but in Christ was a fullness of both.

Men in their insecurity and vanity want honors, awards, recognition and fame. The Lord has hidden from us most of what He did, most of what He is. He is content to confine the record of His doings to the minimum necessary for our understanding so we may have faith in Him. But the extent of His doings mankind has yet to find out (D&C 76:2). This is more than a tribute to Him. He has understated His accomplishments. He has hidden

His glory from us. He has made less of Himself, that we may not be unable to identify with Him. He is meeker and more humble than mankind understands.

He can be trusted with all power because He will never abuse it (Matt. 28:18). He will use it to serve others (Luke 22:27).

In Christ was all fulfilled. In Him is all fulfilled. In Him dwells the fullness of the Godhead bodily (Col. 2:9). He is the light who came to His own, but we will not receive Him (John 1:10–11).

He was, He is, and He has risen. Above all others and all else, He has risen. And because of this He has made it possible for others also to rise. Everything He has done was in fulfillment of the law, pointing for us the way. Now it is only left for us to follow, trusting in Him.

OCTOBER 10, 2010

3 Nephi 12:19

And behold, I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Behold, ye have the commandments before you, and the law is fulfilled.

This hearkens back to the doctrine of Christ given preliminarily to the audience. Repent. Be baptized. Receive the Holy Ghost. These commandments are the foundation upon which all else is to be built.

To all that He explained before, He has added, “repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit.” Repenting will be accompanied by a broken heart and contrite spirit. When you turn to Him and see clearly for the first time how dark your ways have been, it should break your heart. You should realize how desperately you stand in need of His grace to cover you, lift you, and heal you. You can then appreciate the great gulf between you and Him (Moses 1:10).

If you had to bear your sins into His presence it would make you burn with regret and fear (Mormon 9:3–5). Your own heart must break.

When you behold how little you have to offer Him, your spirit becomes contrite. He offers everything. And we can contribute nothing but our cooperation. And we still reluctantly give that, or if we give a little of our own cooperation we think we have given something significant. We have not. Indeed, we cannot (Mosiah 2:20–21). He honors us if He permits us to assist. We should proceed with alacrity when given the chance to serve.

How patiently He has proceeded with teaching us all. We have the law, we have the commandments. Still we hesitate. Still He invites and reminds us: Repent. Come to Him. Do what was commanded. The law is fulfilled, and He is its fulfillment. Look to Him and be saved.

The heart that will not break does not understand the predicament we live in. The proud spirit is foolish and blind. Our perilous state is such that we can forfeit all that we have ever been by refusing Christ's invitation to repent and turn again to Him.

But we still hesitate. We still hold back.

He really can save you. He has that power. He holds those keys. Even death and hell are conquered by Him (Mosiah 15:7–9). But His victory cannot become ours unless we repent and turn again to Him.

Think of those you have lost to the grave. All those living will likewise be lost unless we come to Christ. We have hope only in Him.

It seems too simple a thing to achieve so great a result. It has always been like that (1 Nephi 17:41). Look to Him and be saved. Keep His commandments. Repent. He can and will lead you from wherever you find yourself at present back into the light. It really does not matter what foolish traps you have surrounding you. So soon as you turn to face Him, He will direct you back safely. Repent and keep His commandments and they will bring you to Him.

OCTOBER 11, 2010

3 Nephi 12:20

“Therefore come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.”

There goes the argument that all you need do to be saved is “confess Jesus.” It doesn’t work that way. You must keep His commandments. If you don’t, then “ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” It is not possible to “come unto [Him]” and “be saved” without also keeping His commandments. It is the only true measure of coming to Him. And “except ye shall keep [His] commandments... ye can in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Entry is barred unless you follow Him. If He needed baptism to enter, then clearly we do as well (2 Nephi 31:5).

There is no space between faith in Christ and behavior evidencing that faith. There is no dichotomy between “grace” and “works” because it is by our conduct we merit grace. Christ received grace by the things He did (D&C 93:11–14). The manner by which we receive grace is through keeping His commandments (D&C 93:19–20).

Grace, or power to move closer to God, is also an increase of light. Light grows only as you move closer to it. But you have choice, and must elect to move closer to the light (D&C 93:27–28; D&C 50:23–25). The great proof text for salvation by confession of faith alone is Romans 10:9: “That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.” This is offered as if Paul had priority over Christ, if the two conflict. However, Paul does not conflict, for in the same letter he teaches:

Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. (Romans 6:16–17)

Righteousness comes by obedience. Obedience requires action. Without conforming conduct to the Lord’s commandments, it is impossible to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Paul understood this, and lived his life accordingly. Who worked more than Paul to spread the Gospel? If his life was filled with works from the time of his conversion to the time of his martyrdom, then does not his example prove the necessity of obedience to the Lord’s commandments? How then are his words twisted to mean confession alone, without obedience, can save? Even if someone were mistaken and in good faith sincerely believed Paul to justify salvation by confession alone, how did Paul become greater than Christ?

The Lord’s instructions are clear and obedience to His and the Father’s commandments are a threshold requirement for salvation. Without obedience to them you cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.

Grace is a gift, but the gift must be received. Only those willing to “receive” it, merit grace (D&C 88:32–35). It is “received” in the way the Lord ordained and in no other way (D&C 130:21).

Only the deceived or the wicked would contradict the Lord’s teaching that “except ye keep [His] commandments” then “ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Yet there are those who both make this claim in the various Protestant denominations, and are trying to advance this position into the LDS faith, as well. We would be better served by forgetting how to make ourselves seem more Protestant, and instead accepting and teaching what Christ established as the sole basis for entering the kingdom of heaven.

OCTOBER 11, 2010

3 Nephi 12:21–22

Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, and it is also written before you, that thou shalt not kill, and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment of God; But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.

Christ is elevating the Law of Moses by raising the expectation for human conduct. He moves from mere outward conduct into the inner soul of the man. You are not doing as you should if all you do is refrain from killing. Instead, you need to remove anger.

The prior obligation (“said by them of old”) focused only on your conduct, now it is your motivation.

You can judge another based-on conduct. They either do or do not do something. The conduct is observable, and therefore capable of being judged. Now, however, Christ moves the battleground inside a person. It is now in the heart. On such terrain as that, man is incapable of knowing, and therefore, of judging.

With anything involving truth and rules of conduct, there are always some reasons to depart from the rule. Christ departed from this rule. So we must consider the departures to understand the rule.

First, however, we need to know and understand the rule. The “judgment” which you are “in danger of” by being angry with your brother is not your brother’s anger, but God’s. The judgment of God is provoked by those who are angry with their brother.

We are not to be angry with our brother because that is the beginning of a whole sequence of events, the culmination of which may be killing. Before killing, however, there are other troubles and offenses along the way. Anger leads to abuse. It leads to discourtesy, dishonesty, and cheating. It justifies miserable conduct because you think it right to give offenses to another. It corrodes relationships and makes society sick.

If you can prevent this at the heart, you can heal society. Refrain from letting offenses turn into anger. Deal with them inside, showing forgiveness and compassion. He will stress this further in subsequent verses.

The terms “Raca” and “fool” are derisive names. Christ is saying that applying derisive names to others is wrong, even damning. He is not preventing you from identifying foolishness. He often spoke of fools and foolishness (See, e.g., Matt. 23:17, 19; Matt. 25:2–8; Luke 12:20; Luke 24:25—after His resurrection; and 2 Nephi 29:4, 6). He would even use the term “foolish” in this same sermon (3 Nephi 14:26). So it is not at all inappropriate to use the term “fool” or “foolish” when discussing foolishness. What is wrong it to regard your fellow man with derision and use terms of derision to describe them.

Even with this rue of conduct, however, Christ applied a derisive term to King Herod. He called him “that fox.” (Luke 13:31–32). This was a term of derision, but appropriately applied to a wicked king meriting derision. He was corrupt, evil and vile. Therefore, with respect to Herod, Christ’s example allows for terms of derision to be appropriately applied to those who merit them. Christ was able to weigh the heart. For Him to make that conclusion was a matter of Divine prerogative. I suppose that we are equally entitled to apply such terms of judgment and condemnation, including terms of derision, if we obtain them by inspiration from the Lord. That is, if the Lord inspires such a term of derision to be used, then it would be appropriate despite this verse. For whatever we do, even if sharpness is involved, is appropriate when moved upon by the Holy Ghost (D&C 121:43). So, also, even killing another can be done when the Lord is the one deciding life and death (1 Nephi 4:10–13).

The tendency is to always think the exceptions allow your anger. I would suspect the best approach is to do as Nephi did. That is, insist upon following the one standard of conduct and always refrain. Always. Then, if the Lord is going to have it otherwise, leave it to the Lord to make that insistence so dramatic, so undeniable, so compelling, that you know it is the Lord’s judgment and not your own. Removing anger from the heart is a difficult enough challenge to last the rest of your life. To start thinking any passing offense justifies an exception because it may be “inspired” is the way of a fool. Do as Christ bids you to do in this sermon. If He wants a different approach, you ought to require that to be made absolutely clear by Him before you depart from this standard.

Remember how often great souls have interceded for their fellow man. I’ve written about that so often in my books I won’t repeat it again. However, intercession for your fellow man, including those who give offense to you, is one of the hallmarks of the saved soul. This is who Abraham was, and why he became a friend of God. I've hesitated to even discuss the exceptions to the rule because everyone wants the exceptions to apply to them. No one wants to comply with the rule. The higher way is, however, found in following the rule. It should be an absolute sacrifice, and a painful one at that, for the exception to be applied in your life. If an inspired condemnation is required at your hand and by your voice, then immediately afterwards you should make intercession with the Lord for those condemned. That is the way of those who know the Lord. Those who have been forgiven much—including those who have been forgiven everything—always love much in return (Luke 7:47).

OCTOBER 12, 2010

3 Nephi 12:23–24

Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, and rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee— Go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I will receive you.

Notice the offense is taken by the brother, not by you. It is presumed that you haven't taken offense against him. If he, however, 'hath aught against thee'—meaning that if you have done anything to cause him an offense, you have steps to take.

Notice that your relationship with the Lord comes second, after you have made amends with any you have offended.

You can't bring "full purpose of heart" when there is a lingering offense you have not attempted to cure. This kind of mental distraction alters you.

If you realize you've offended someone it likely means you know your conduct has been uncharitable. You did something wrong. You hurt another.

Inventory of your conduct is something to be done before approaching the Lord. If you have offended someone you need to take the steps to free your conscience from it. Only then can you bring "full purpose of heart" in approaching God.

When the heart is right, then the Lord can "receive you." When the heart is not right, you cannot be received.

He's said this before, of course. His doctrine in the preceding chapter required repentance before baptism precisely so you could be right in the heart before the ordinance takes place (3 Nephi 11:23).

Other Book of Mormon writers said the same thing as well:

For behold, God hath said a man being evil cannot do that which is good; for if he offereth a gift, or prayeth unto God, except he shall do it with real intent it profiteth him nothing.... And likewise also is it counted evil unto a man, if he shall pray and not with real intent of heart; yea, and it profiteth him nothing, for God receiveth none such. (Moroni 7:6, 9)

Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I know that if ye shall follow the Son, with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism—yea, by following your Lord and your Savior down into the water, according to his word, behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost; yea, then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and then can ye speak with the tongue of angels, and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel. (2 Nephi 31:13)

“But as oft as they repented and sought forgiveness, with real intent, they were forgiven” (Moroni. 6:8).

You bring your whole heart to Him. That He can receive. That He can work with. Less than that, it is not possible for Him to offer you anything. You will invariably reject what He offers. Acting as the hypocrite will neither fool you or Him. Hence Nephi’s counsel in 2 Nephi 31:13 quoted above, and discussed previously in this blog.

OCTOBER 12, 2010

3 Nephi 12:25–26

Agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him, lest at any time he shall get thee, and thou shalt be cast into prison. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence until thou hast paid the uttermost senine. And while ye are in prison can ye pay even one senine? Verily, verily, I say unto you, Nay.

This notion of agreeing with your adversaries is difficult for most people. It requires you to submit to what is sometimes unjust demands. He is saying to submit anyway. Do not rebel against the adversaries in life, but accommodate them.

Give to the unjust what they demand, so that they may see your good works and understand there is a higher way. Without your example, they cannot understand.

Retaliation continues the cycles. Someone eventually needs to lay down their just claim for retribution and simply take the injury without returning anything in return. This was what Christ did. He took everyone’s injuries and returned only forgiveness.

Now He asks for His followers to do some of the same. The failure to tolerate injustice can spiral into continuing the conflict, until there is prison. The prison to fear is not one made by men. But if you are cast into that prison then you cannot come out until you have paid the highest price (D&C 76:84–85, 105–106). It is better to repent because this payment made even God, the greatest of all, to tremble with pain and shrink from the burden (D&C 19:15–18).

It is not possible to pay the price while in prison. The price must be paid by a person while in the flesh (Luke 16:22–26). Any who are consigned to prison dwell in darkness, awaiting deliverance from Him whom they rejected while in the flesh (D&C 138:20–22). They become dependent upon others working to pay the debt on their behalf (D&C 138:33).

The sermon delivered by Christ is the foundation of how man ought to relate to fellow-man. It is the pattern on which it becomes possible to dwell in peace with one another. It is the groundwork for Zion.

We need to look at this sermon as the guideline for changing our internal lives, so we may become a fit and proper resident with others who are Saints. Even Saints will give inadvertent offenses. Even Saints will disappoint one another from time to time. To become “one” in the sense required for redeeming a people and restoring them again to Zion is beyond any person’s reach if they cannot internalize this sermon.

The purpose of this sermon is not to equip you to judge others. It has no use for that. It is designed to change you. You need to become something different, something higher, something more holy. That will require you to reexamine your heart, your motivations, and your thoughts. It will require you to take offenses and deliberately lay them down without retaliation. When you do, you become someone who can live in peace with others. Living in peace with others is the rudimentary beginning of Zion. It will not culminate in a City set on the hilltop until there is a population worthy of dwelling in the high places, in peace, without poor among them (Moses 7:17–18).

Christ's sermon is not merely a description of what kind of person He is. It is a description of what kind of person will qualify to live with Him (Luke 9:23).

OCTOBER 13, 2010

3 Nephi 12:27–29

Behold, it is written by them of old time, that thou shalt not commit adultery; But I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart. Behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye suffer none of these things to enter into your heart;

Here it is again—the heart. It is the intent and not just the act. It is not enough that you stop short of doing the thing commanded in the Law of Moses. Christ is attacking the root cause, the internal trouble which causes the mistakes.

The Law of Moses is not being replaced with a new era of easy grace triggered by confession for salvation. The Head of the new Dispensation, Christ, is instead providing a much higher standard for mankind to adopt in place of carnal commandments.

You must raise your thoughts to a higher level. Sexual appetites and passions must be kept within the bounds the Lord has prescribed. For this new, higher standard, it is not enough to just refrain from immoral acts, but you must purge thoughts. Neither lust of a woman, nor any of “these things” should “enter into your heart.” This uniform standard applies to all: male and female, married or single, without regard to who or what causes your lusts. It is universal.

The raging controversy going on at present over President Packer's last General Conference address entirely misses the point. Whether your sexual attraction is male or female, it is to be confined in thought and deed to the bounds prescribed by the Lord, and the Lord has rather clearly identified the bounds in this sermon.

The heart is where sin begins. So it is the heart which Christ would have us cleanse. All else will follow.

No one knows how formidable an obstacle this is until they have confronted it themselves. Nor can a person who confronts this challenge succeed at the first attempt. C.S. Lewis made such a profound observation on this subject it is worth quoting here:

*No man knows how bad he is till he has tried very hard to be good. A silly idea is current that good people do not know what temptation means. This is an obvious lie. Only those who try to resist temptation know how strong it is. After all, you find out the strength of the German army by fighting against it, not by giving in. You find out the strength of a wind by trying to walk against it, not by lying down. A man who gives in to temptation after five minutes simply does not know what it would have been like an hour later. That is why bad people, in one sense, know very little about badness. They have lived a sheltered life by always giving in. We never find out the strength of the evil impulse inside us until we try to fight it: and Christ, because he was the only man who never yielded to temptation, is also the only man who knows to the full what temptation means—the only complete realist. (CS Lewis, Mere Christianity, Chapter 11)*

Those who would rather settle into a comfortable enjoyment of their sins find discomfort in being reminded they are wrong. So when President Packer reminds them of this, it is painful, and they want him to retract his words. It would be better to consider them, for whether he retracts them or not, it will not change the underlying problem of sin. Only by confronting and overcoming sins within us will we ever become people who will be preserved in the coming harvest.

Imagine, if you can, the idea of impurity being a compound which exists within you. A compound that could be identified by the Lord and burned away. Think of it like the fuller's soap or the refiner's fire, where impurity is removed and something pure and clean is left behind (Mal. 3:2–3). To survive that burning purge there must be so little to burn away that the injury from the burn will not threaten life. It is a useful way to examine what is inside you. And a useful way to reconsider your thoughts.

This leads to the final question: What is the difference between the mind and the “heart?” This commandment addresses the “heart” in you. What is the “heart?”

OCTOBER 13, 2010

3 Nephi 12:30

“For it is better that ye should deny yourselves of these things, wherein ye will take up your cross, than that ye should be cast into hell.”

Each person's cross is individual. Carrying “your cross” is not the same as carrying mine. Therefore, when you “deny yourself of these things” what you surrender and what you take up will be “your cross” and never mine.

It is odd how we are able to spot from a distance the weaknesses of others. We have highly acute sensitivities about others' flaws. But we rarely appreciate the crosses they bear.

How hard a burden a man carries when he disciplines himself to rise daily, and work to sacrifice for his family, is not at all the same across the economic scale. Nor, for that matter, is the daily service carried on by mothers who have deprived themselves of other pursuits to raise sometimes ungrateful children.

But “hell” is where we are cast when we are pained by the regrets of having lived without discipline, having lived selfishly (Mormon 9:4–5). We will stand “naked” before God. All of what we want hidden will be before us, revealed and exposed to view.

The “hell” of it all will be our regret, for we are our own tormentor. The torment of a disappointed mind will be like fire and brimstone to the regretful (TPJS p. 357).

Christ is advising us in a kindly way how to prevent that moment of fear, regret and torment. He is telling us how to escape it. These teachings are not a threat addressed at us, but a caution about the future moment when these teachings apply to us all.

It is as if the Lord wants us to know clearly beforehand what we are going to wish we had done instead. Now, in mortality, while we can still change how things will turn out, He is telling us how to accomplish that. In an understatement, He advises: “it is better to deny yourself” than it will be to indulge. You may find it a “cross” as you do, but if you deny yourself now it will let you escape “hell” in the future. It is kindly advice, without a threat. It is a warning about the road you have taken, and guidance on how you can avoid the collision that is coming.

Whatever the “cross” is you take up in your daily effort to live inside the bounds prescribed by the Lord, it will be worth it. By heeding His counsel, you will become someone better and avoid becoming devilish.

The temptations each of us face are unique to the individual. What is universal, however, is the limit placed upon temptations. They are never too great to resist. There is always an escape provided by the Lord (1 Cor. 10:13). Nor are you given any commandment you cannot obey (1 Nephi 3:7). However, that is not to say temptation is easily overcome. Weakness is our lot (Ether 12:27).

What then are you to make of your cross? If you've tried to deny yourself and failed, does it mean you are hopeless? Is the persistent failure to lift the cross you have been called to bear proof that you are just unable to merit salvation? Does the relentless return to temptation mean you are lost? Are you necessarily doomed because you have not found the escape promised by Paul's writing to the Corinthians?

Life is filled with cycles. When we battle and fail one day, then join the battle again, but fail again; then another, and another and another, what is the use? What do we make of such persistent failure, such continuing weakness? Is the lesson that we are lost? Or is it that we are weak? Weaker than we had ever imagined. Weaker than you could ever suppose man to be (Moses 1:10). Is this evidence that you are doomed? Or is it merely a patient God proving to your utter satisfaction that you are indeed in need of saving grace to rescue you from where you find yourself? Is this the moment when, while filling your belly with husks along with the swine you've descended to accompany, you wake up? (Luke 15:11-17). If you will finally surrender your pride, come forward with a broken heart and real intent, returning to your Father, He will joyfully receive you still (Luke 15:18-24). There is joy in heaven over you when you awaken.

Weakness is nothing, for all are weak. It is a gift, given to break your heart. Your broken heart will qualify you for His company. Whether a leper, an adulteress, a tax collector or a blind man, He can heal it all. But what He cannot do, and you must alone bring to Him, is that broken heart required for salvation.

William Ernest Henley wrote “Invictus”:

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.
In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.
Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the Horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find, me unafraid.
It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll.
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

Orson F. Whitney penned the response in “The Soul’s Captain”:

Art thou in truth? Then what of him
Who bought thee with his blood?
Who plunged into devouring seas
And snatched thee from the flood?
Who bore for all our fallen race
What none but him could bear. –
The God who died that man might live,
And endless glory share?
Of what avail thy vaunted strength,

Apart from his vast might?
Pray that his Light may pierce the gloom,
That thou mayest see aright.
Men are as bubbles on the wave,
As leaves upon the tree.
Thou, captain of thy soul, forsooth
Who gave that place to thee?
Free will is thine—free agency
To wield for right or wrong;
But thou must answer unto him
To whom all souls belong.
Bend to the dust that head “unbowed,”
Small part of Life’s great whole!
And see in him, and him alone,
The Captain of thy soul.

We choose. We live with our choices. It is better to deny ourselves and take up our individual crosses.

OCTOBER 14, 2010

3 Nephi 12:31–32

It hath been written, that whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoso shall marry her who is divorced committeth adultery.

First and foremost, this is a verse dealing with male conduct. The verse is masculine in orientation and word usage, and deals with a male’s prerogative under the law that existed then. So applying this new, higher law, beyond that is not warranted, as will be more clearly seen in the discussion below.

The ease with which a divorce could be granted made the serious nature of the act unappreciated. Today it is still unappreciated. Divorce rates among Latter-day Saints have risen to practically mirror the population at large. We follow all the surrounding social trends, but are a little slower in getting there. We are not “peculiar” any longer. We are just slower.

Christ was re-enshrining the significance of marriage. It should not be easy to end a marriage. But, then again, perhaps the kind of marriage Christ is speaking of is one of a higher order and rarely exists here.

Although there are reasons for every marriage to be treated as sacred and worth preserving, it was always intended for there to be a higher purpose in marriage. It was intended to be an eternal union, inside of which sacred acts mirroring heaven itself take place. Bringing into this world new life by the loving union of two partners is a mirror of heaven. Such things are, or ought to be, most sacred.

But a higher kind of union, where love is the prevailing rule, is not often established here. More often than not, the marriages of this world are corrupted, just as society itself is corrupted.

I hardly dare offer a different view of these verses, because people think they know what they’re reading in them. I’m not sure we have ever seen what Christ is actually speaking about. Though caution would suggest otherwise, I’m going to go ahead with offering a different view.

First, this is always interpreted to be discussing things which are coarse or material, but it comes immediately following a discussion about the inner or spiritual self. This suggests our normal reading of this language may be incorrect. When the focus of Christ’s new and higher law is the inner man, then to read this as applying to outward behavior (fornication/adultery) may miss the point.

Second, notice the contrast between the only justified reason for terminating the marriage (fornication) and the subsequent results (adultery). Two different words are used, suggesting two different meanings are present.

I've consulted with John Hall about the New Testament language in the Matthew account of this sermon, where "porneia" is the typical rendering. There the meaning of the first word which we render "fornication" could be a variety of things including: prostitution, sexual permissiveness or merely a sexual act. But, if the word was "poneria" then it could, by broad measure, mean bad acts (with no sexual connotation at all).

There is a possibility that the correct way to read this could be rendered in this way: "Whoever puts away his wife for any reason other than the lack of marital intimacy..." That would mean the only justified reason to end the marriage is that the marriage has ended within the heart. There is no longer any love in the relation. It has died. It is no longer worthy of preservation, and therefore, the death of the heart justifies the death of the relation.

However, the focus is on the woman's heart. That is, if the woman still retains marital intimacy for the husband, he cannot be justified in putting her away. He is obligated to retain as his wife the woman who loves him. If he puts away such a wife, then he causes her to commit adultery.

This, then, raises the issue of the meaning of adultery. We tend to view it as a physical act involving sexual union with another. But adultery also holds the connotation of unfaithfulness, as in Israel becoming unfaithful and playing the part of an adulteress, worshiping other gods (See, e.g., Jeremiah 3:8). When forced away by the man she loves, a woman is then “adulterated” by the act of the man. He is accountable for the treachery involved in dissolving the marriage which the woman wanted, and forcing her into the relation with either no one, or with another man. Either one is “adulterating” the marriage which she had with him. He is accountable for that uncharitable, unkind, and unjustified treatment of the woman.

On the other hand, when she has lost affection for him, and the union has become hollow and without love, then the marriage is dead and continuation of the relation is a farce. It is not a marriage. In fact, it is a pretense and an abomination unworthy of preservation. It will not endure. It is not eternal and not possible to preserve beyond the grave.

No union that has not been sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise will endure beyond the grave (See D&C 132:7, 18, among other places). The reason for sealing such a marriage by the promise of the Spirit is because it replicates the kind of holy union found in heaven. It is like unto the unions between gods and goddesses. It is worthy of preservation because it is eternal. It is enduring. It is worth preserving into all eternity. It is sealed because the gods recognize on the earth a mirror of what is found in heaven itself. Therefore heaven ratifies and approves the relationship. They do not create such relations in heaven, but instead recognize them here, and approve them for eternal duration. Without such a relationship, the parties are worthy of continuation as angels, but not as spouses, as Christ would put it elsewhere (Matt. 22:30; see also D&C 132:17).

It is true enough that the restored Gospel allows everyone the opportunity to come to the Temple and receive ordinances which hold the promise of an eternal union. But those are relationships where the parties are on probation. They are given as an opportunity to work out your salvation before God. They are given so that if you are true and faithful, the time may come when you are called up and chosen by the Holy Spirit of Promise to be kings and queens, priests and priestesses, whereas now you are only given opportunity to prove yourself worthy to become such.

There are many unhappy Latter-day Saint marriages which exist in name only. The notorious high record use of anti-depressants by women in Utah is driven in large part by unhappy marriages they believe ought to be preserved because of a misunderstanding of these verses. Yet the underlying reality that the union causes suffering rather than rejoicing cannot be escaped. So they alter their natural reaction to the unhappy union by altering the brain with chemicals. Such a marriage cannot endure into eternity. Though the woman may sacrifice herself to preserve her heart's desire to be a faithful, married mother, her unworthy marriage is not what will endure. It cannot be sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise, though she may be otherwise qualified.

Now, to be clear, I do not advocate divorce, particularly where minor children are involved. But I do advocate a higher view of the marital union where the prevailing reason for the union is love. This should be the whole preparation for marriage. Before contracting the union, the parties should look for that spouse with whom they can find heaven on earth. Unhappy marriages might all be saved if the parties would repent. The higher ideal is not impossible for any union to seek and find. That is the right of every party here, if they will but seek after it. If however, after every effort has been made to both find, and cultivate such a union, it proves to be an impossibility, then the parties ought to use the precious time allotted to them in mortality to find a union which will be worthy of continuation. Not at the expense of their children, who are entitled to have both parents raise them. The Holy Spirit of Promise was intended to be shed upon many marriages, rather than a comparative few. Happiness was the design of our creation. When we avoid it by our misconduct and foolishness, we do not please heaven. Nor does gritting our teeth, putting up with miserable relationships, and enduring an unholy union please heaven or merit some eternal reward.

These words of Christ are speaking of a higher way to conduct our lives. To read into them exclusively outward behavior, when the whole import of the sermon addresses the inner-man, is out of context. I think we hardly understand the Lord's meaning. But, then again, perhaps it is best if we do not understand His full meaning until we are ready to see for ourselves what great things the Lord has in store for those who love Him (D&C 76:114–117). Perhaps it is best that man is not capable of making them known.

Now, as to the woman, there is another standard. He does not articulate it here, but can be found throughout scripture. A woman's love of and fidelity to her husband is more often than not a product of her nature. It takes quite a fool to turn a wife's natural affection for him into distrust and bitterness. But there are churlish men, as we know from scripture. Sometimes they marry an Abigail (See I Sam. 25:3).

OCTOBER 14, 2010

3 Nephi 12:33–37

And again it is written, thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths; But verily, verily, I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; Nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair black or white; But let your communication be Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever cometh of more than these is evil.

This revokes the oath making of the earlier Dispensation. When an oath was taken it was to be performed without fail (See, e.g., Numbers 30:2). It was binding. Ancient Israel relied on vows to govern their conduct (See, e.g., 1 Nephi 4:33–37). Oaths were relied on because they bound your conduct before God.

Christ is putting an end to the practice. No further vow-making was to take place. In its place say “yea” or say “nay,” but nothing further to bind your soul before God.

Swearing by men who possess nothing is foolish and prideful. Particularly when they swear by heaven, because it is not theirs to promise. Nor should they swear by the earth, because it is not theirs either. A man cannot even offer his own life, because it belongs to God who gave it. Indeed, there is nothing we own or can offer (Mosiah 2:20–25).

The comment regarding the inability to make a single hair “black or white” is emphasizing how little control we really have over things. Even our own bodies will take a course assigned it by God. They will age, and eventually die. We have our body as a stewardship. It is ours for a season, then we will lay it down. Until then, we serve a probation in which we are given power over these elements we occupy. But that stewardship is one designed to “prove” us, and show what we really are. When we gratify the body at the expense of others, or destroy our bodily temple housing our spirits by indulging uncontrolled appetites, we are unwise. We will lose these bodies before long and then, left with the same spiritual emptiness which caused the cravings in the first place, will find ourselves suffering. Whereas, if you discipline the body, keep it under control and subject to your spirit, then death can bring a release and freedom from suffering. It will be an odd reversal. One known only to those who go through it; at which point it is too late to change the outcome.

Additionally, Christ is suggesting that we speak in plain language, without the rhetoric of grand threats or promises. Speak simply. Speak out of an abundance of humility. Mean what you say, and do not obligate yourself to do what you cannot do.

Live simply, prepare to deal honestly with one another. And leave the heavens out of your promises if you cannot control them.

Do not commit yourself to do anything by swearing to God it shall be done. You have no control over when you will die, whether you will have another day of health to accomplish what you have vowed, or even if the thing about which you committed yourself will continue to be possible. Be humble about what you are given. Be grateful.

These verses address a social standard that needed to be left behind. Coming out of that should be a replacement of plain speaking, humility about what we are able to do, and caution about words we use.

In this reformation alone Christ proves Himself to be a sage. He was more than a wise teacher, He was the Great Teacher. This concept alone makes Him one of the greatest social reformers of the ancient world.

OCTOBER 15, 2010

3 Nephi 12:38–39

“And behold, it is written, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; But I say unto you, that ye shall not resist evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also;”

This is reforming the law of retaliation or lex talionis. When first adopted, the law of retaliation was designed to limit retribution. It was merciful in the context of the time. It prevented taking a life for an eye. The scope of the injury suffered put a limit on the scope of the retaliation permitted. I taught a class on this ancient law in the BYU Education Week some years ago. It is too much to cover in this post in order to fully understand the ramifications of this law.

The popular understanding of that law is quite a distortion. The injury permitted was not actually exacted under the law. “An eye for an eye” meant that the victim was entitled to take the eye of the one causing the injury. In practice the eye was not taken. The value of the eye was agreed upon between victim and perpetrator. They sealed the agreement before two witnesses in the gate of the city. Then the debtor was obligated to pay the agreed sum (called “satisfaction”). If he defaulted the elders could take the eye as penalty for the default in payment, which stood as collateral for the debt.

Payment of “satisfaction” was permitted and given for offenses under the lex talionis except in the case of a limited class of offenses, including murder (Numbers 35:31–32). In such cases it was considered too dangerous to allow satisfaction, and therefore the penalty needed to be carried out.

Here, Christ is replacing that entire body of law by substituting forgiveness and mercy for justice and recompense. The victim is being urged to seek nothing in return for his injury. Instead, the victim is to bear the injury and allow evil against themselves without retaliation for the offense.

This may seem odd, even wrong. However, there is an example of this in the Book of Mormon. Although many lives were lost in the process, it resulted in the salvation of many souls. The Anti-Lehi-Nephites were unwilling to take up arms to defend themselves, instead allowing their enemies to slay them. The result broke the hearts of those who were killing them, and many were converted by this example (See Alma 24:19–27). But the people of God were joined by more than the number who were slain.

The book by C. Terry Warner titled The Bonds That Make Us Free: Healing Our Relationships, Coming to Ourselves explains how the actions of those who forgive are able to break the hearts of those who are forgiven. There is not merely freedom in forgiving others, there is power in it as well. Terry Warner's book is an examination of the principles of sin and forgiveness, and worth reading if you have not done so before.

We gain power by what things we suffer for the Lord's sake. Christ who loved the most, sacrificed the most. Those two things are linked together.

This teaching was not only given by Christ, but it was lived by Him also. In this statement, as in no other, He is defining who He is and revealing what His conduct invariably will be. This is the Lord's standard. This is the Lord's manner. The choice of turning the other cheek is taken from the Messianic standard described by Isaiah (Isa. 50:6; also 53:5). We can also heal others by the things we willingly suffer. We can endure and forgive. As we do righteousness increases on the earth.

Saint Francis Assisi believed this, practiced it. In an age of darkness and apostasy, the Lord spoke with St. Francis, and sent angels to minister to him. He is appropriately referred to as a Saint. He lived the Sermon on the Mount. It is perhaps St. Francis, who above all others, proves a mortal may walk in the Lord's steps.

Christ did it first and more completely than would any other. But St. Francis surely followed.

I have little doubt that the Lord's teachings are impractical in this world. But, then again, we are not called to live for this world, are we? The reason Zion always flees from this world is precisely because the Lord will not permit the world to overwhelm those who would surely be overthrown if not for His grace and protection. He will fight their battles to spare those in Zion from the necessity of becoming warlike (D&C 105:14).

I am amused by the martial inclinations of the Latter-day Saints. When the lamb and lion lie down together I suppose many of the Latter-day Saints expect to be able to hunt them both.

OCTOBER 15, 2010

3 Nephi 12:40–42

And if any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also; And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away.

This is the point Mark Twain quipped included him in the Bible. He suggested “Go with him Twain” is Divine notice given him.

The cloak covers the coat. If someone wants one, give them both. Without conflict. Without retaliation. Give those who demand.

The law allowed a Roman soldier to compel a civilian to bear a load for a mile. Christ said submit, and go a second mile to demonstrate you have not been compelled at all. You have chosen to give the service.

When asked, give. When someone needs to borrow, let them. What a markedly different world this would be.

The results of an entire society behaving in this manner would be Zion itself. There would be no poor. Those with the means would share, those in need would ask. The resulting cooperation and mutual assistance would solve many social ills. But such a society would necessarily be voluntary. To attempt to level the economic circumstances of society by force would be an imprisonment, not a liberation. Government cannot impose it, but men can voluntarily implement it.

In our early post-Nauvoo distress, there was a brief time when we flirted with notions like these. We did some voluntary collective work on providing a social system to benefit everyone. Those ended because of the bickering and turmoil. We went back to tithing, which still today allows us to retain our individual fortunes and limit sharing our individual misfortunes.

The question is what happens when a society continues to suffer from all the ills of our own, but a single individual chooses to live these principles. What then? Can a person really live like this when he or she alone is guided by these principles?

Common agreement is that this sermon's admonitions are impractical. They won't work. They can't be lived by a single person acting alone, or a small group acting together, because a larger corrupt society will overwhelm and exploit them. Therefore, Christ is teaching what cannot be done. At least cannot be done by anyone who is unwilling to try it. Occasionally we get a Mother Teresa or a Saint Francis, but they're Catholic. Surely it can't work with Latter-day Saints who are busy studying Steven Covey's books, polishing their resumes and looking to find a secure middle-management position from which to launch their successful careers. Maybe a handful of good, believing Catholics will found Zion. Then we can come in and help manage the results after it becomes well enough established. After all, we have the true franchise from which Zion will be built. We even own a bank already named for the venture.

It makes you wonder why Christ would preach something which only a handful of Catholics have successfully accomplished in an individual setting.

OCTOBER 16, 2010

3 Nephi 12:43–45

And behold it is written also, that thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; But behold I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good.

Loving the ones you care for, associate with, and live nearby is sometimes easy. Hating those who show you disrespect or cause you injury is normal. Nevertheless, Christ teaches to love enemies, bless those who are trying to do you harm, and pray for your persecutors.

This is the only way to become like Him. He is an intercessor. As I've explained in The Second Comforter, becoming an intercessor for others is part of development, through grace, to become as He is. It is through this that charity becomes a part of your character (Moro. 7:46). And charity is a necessary attribute in character (2 Nephi 26:30; Moro. 7:47).

This treatment of enemies is how you prove your inner self. Only by suffering, do we learn if we are converted. If you receive only praise and adulation, authority and wealth, prestige and acceptance as a result of following Christ, then you've never been proven. It is through the sacrifice of your good name, reputation, position, wealth and social standing that you learn if you truly trust in Christ.

When you actually do sacrifice all earthly things for Him, you will have knowledge that the course of your life is pleasing to Him. Anything less than this will leave your mind in doubt (See Lecture 6 discussed previously).

If you follow this teaching by Christ, you will convert yourself first, then others. No-one can doubt the goodness of a life lived as this teaching commends. Though such a life may not convert others immediately, it will triumph.

Sometimes people die teaching the truth. They surrendered all they were on the altar, thereby coming to know God. This teaching would allow anyone to do the same. You would have to not only accept the idea, you would need to implement it.

Abinadi returned to bear witness of the truth, and then die. Alma was his only convert. But from the moment of Alma's conversion to the end of the Book of Mormon, every character who wrote in the plates descended from Abinadi's single convert.

Abinadi was a hinge character around whom the story of the Nephites would pivot from his life onward. But he had little success, and was killed by those to whom he ministered.

In some respects, dying for the cause of Christ is easier than living it. This teaching, however, shows how you can begin to live it.

It is not designed to be easy. As I discussed in Beloved Enos, sometimes it takes quite a bit of effort to come to terms with what the Lord requires of us. But that does not alter in the least the importance of doing it, or lessen the quality of the results obtained.

Keep in mind the Lord's admonition: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14:15).

Remember also the Lord's statement that the things He is teaching "at this time" are necessary to enter into the kingdom of Heaven (3 Nephi 12:20). These are not just sayings. They are meant to be acted on. It is in the doing of them you will meet Him. When you descend below where you are at present, you will find the Lord. For He is condescending whenever He is seen.

Finally, Christ reminds us that the Lord blesses all with the sun, light, life and abundance. Both good and evil are blessed by Him. Therefore, the petty differences between the good and the bad are so insignificant when compared against an absolute standard of perfection that the relative goodness and relative badness is inconsequential. So inconsequential that for any of us to be redeemed will require the atonement. Therefore, we all owe everything to Him. Only the redeemed come to realize and accept that while here. Everyone will eventually grasp that reality.

Accepting Him is the means for healing us. His open invitation to all can be seen in the sun shining on "both the evil and on the good." Everyone is bidden to come to the throne and receive healing, grace and forgiveness. To merit it, you must first give it. To obtain forgiveness you must give forgiveness. To have Him suffer for your sins, you must first suffer and forgive others of their sins committed against you.

Every balanced life surrenders claims for justice and shows mercy, thereby making a claim for themselves upon mercy.

OCTOBER 17, 2010

3 Nephi 12:46–47

“Therefore those things which were of old time, which were under the law, in me are all fulfilled. Old things are done away, and all things have become new.”

Christ will elaborate on this later as the audience puzzles over what is removed and what remains. But here Christ introduces the concept that the Law of Moses is now “fulfilled.” Importantly, He says: “in me are all fulfilled.”

When He walked on the Road to Emmaus on the day of His resurrection, He began with the Law of Moses and explained: “And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.” (Luke 24:27). I’ve spoken on this and then published the talk in the Appendix to Eighteen Verses. The talk shows how the rites and temple of the Dispensation of Moses testified to the details of His life. It ought to be noted that the thing “under the law, in [Christ were indeed] all fulfilled.” His life was foreshadowed by the rites of Moses. His healing and His ministry, His history and His sacrifice, all were foreshadowed by the Law of Moses.

Since the Law pointed to Him, and He came to live His mortal life in conformity with that Law, it was now completed. The signpost was no longer necessary. The event had happened.

When He says, “Old things are done away” it is not because they are terminated. It is because they were fulfilled. He completed the circle. He lived and died under the Law, fulfilling every jot and tittle of its requirements.

Now it was time to push the meaning of the earlier Law deeper into the souls of His audience. “All things have become new.” It is a new beginning, a new Dispensation, a new message. This message was delivered by the author of the Law of Moses not through an intermediary. This message comes from the Author in person.

Dispensations have their bounds. Beforehand, the prophets give, through prophecy, a limit on the things which are to come. When the prophesied events have unfolded and the measure has been met, then one Dispensation comes to an end while another opens. John the Baptist closed the Dispensation of Moses. Christ opened the Dispensation of the Meridian of Time. He recognizes the transition in this statement.

Whenever things are “become new” again, it is important to recognize the signs of the time (Matt. 16:2–3). Those living contemporary with Christ who did not recognize the signs remained at Jerusalem and were destroyed (JS-M. 1:13–18). It is important that you be on watch, for in the very hour you think it unlikely for Him to act He will act (JS-M. 1:48).

Everything was fulfilled by Christ, and everything prophesied will happen before He comes again. There is no more scrupulous a follower of the prophetic promises than the Lord. He inspired the prophecies, and intends that they all come to pass. In Him have all things been fulfilled, and in Him will all things yet remaining be fulfilled.

OCTOBER 18, 2010

3 Nephi 12:48

“Therefore I would that ye should be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect.”

In the Matthew text Christ unequivocally limited this to His Father (Matt. 5:48). Here “perfection” is achieved by both Christ and His Father.

Assuming the Matthew text is correct, the difference is significant. It is another confirmation that anyone who is mortal, including the Lord, stands in jeopardy every hour (See 1 Cor. 15:30). He simply could not claim perfection while in mortality because mortality is a time of change, challenge and temptation. After all, He was tempted while mortal just as every human soul is tempted (Heb. 4:15). Though He chose to give no heed to it, He was nevertheless tempted (D&C 20:22).

While mortal He looked to the Father in all things (John 5:30). After concluding His time in mortality, achieving the resurrection of the dead, He was given all power in heaven and on earth (Matt. 28:18).

Therefore, if the Matthew text is correct, and the differences are accounted for in what we have just reviewed, then the admonition of Christ for our own perfection is not just an earthly endeavor. It is an invitation to follow Him and His Father into a loftier state, as well (Abr. 3:26). One where the final realization will come only as we are able to endure greater glory than a mortal may possess (Moses 1:5).

It is good we know this commandment is possible to accomplish (1 Nephi 3:7). It is hard to conceive of following the Son in this way. Yet it is He who pronounced it, and He who has promised to share the throne of His Father with all who will come to Him (Rev. 3:21).

I am not perfect, nor anything like it. I have seen Perfection, know what it is, and can confirm I am nothing like it.

A harmonious symmetry of light, majesty, holiness, glory and power are all around Him who is perfection. When I read the ad-

